THE LIBRARY
OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES
SCHOOL OF LAW

REPORTS OF CASES

ARGUED AND DETERMINED IN

THE SUPREME COURT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

COVERING

ALL THE CASES (LAW AND EQUITY) FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT (BAY'S REPORTS) UP TO AND INCLUDING VOLUME 25 OF THE SOUTH CAROLINA REPORTS

ANNOTATED EDITION

UNABRIDGED, WITH KEY-NUMBERED NOTES AND REFERENCES BY THE EDITORIAL STAFF OF THE NATIONAL REPORTER SYSTEM

BOOK 35

CONTAINING A VERBATIM REPRINT OF

VOLS. 14, 15, & 16, SOUTH CAROLINA REPORTS

ST. PAUL
WEST PUBLISHING CO
1916

KFS
1945
.A2
no. 75

COPYRIGHT, 1916
BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

(BOOK 35 S.CAR.)

REPORTS OF CASES

HEARD AND DETERMINED BY

THE SUPREME COURT

OF

SOUTH CAROLINA

VOLUME XIV

FROM APRIL, 1880, TO NOVEMBER, 1880, INCLUSIVE

BY ROBERT W. SHAND

STATE REPORTER

JERSEY CITY, N. J.
FREDERICK D. LINN & CO., LAW PUBLISHERS AND BOOKSELLERS
1881

ANNOTATED EDITION

ST. PAUL
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1916

583319
LAW

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1881, by FREDERICK D. LINN & CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

(14 S.Car.)

JUDGES AND OTHER LAW OFFICERS

DURING THE PERIOD COMPRISED IN THIS VOLUME

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT.

CHIEF JUSTICE.†

HON. A. J. WILLARD. HON. WILLIAM D. SIMPSON.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

HON. HENRY McIVER. HON. SAMUEL McGOWAN.

CIRCUIT JUDGES.

FIRST CIRCUIT,	HON. B. C. PRESSLEY.
SECOND "	" A. P. ALDRICH.
THIRD "	" T. B. FRASER.
FOURTH "	" J. H. HUDSON.
FIFTH "	" J. B. KERSHAW.
SIXTH "	" T. J. MACKEY.
SEVENTH "	" W. H. WALLACE.
EIGHTH "	" THOMAS THOMSON.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL.††

HON. LEROY F. YOUMANS.

SOLICITORS.††

1*st Circuit*—W. ST. J. JERVEY.	5*th Circuit*—R. G. BONHAM.
2*d Circuit*—F. H. GANTT.	6*th Circuit*—T. C. GASTON.
3*d Circuit*—J. J. DARGAN.	7*th Circuit*—D. R. DUNCAN.
4*th Circuit*—G. W. DARGAN.	8*th Circuit*—J. S. COTHRAN.

CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT.

A. M. BOOZER.

† See post p. 191, Simpson v. Willard.

†† Elected November 2d, 1880. The Attorney-General for a term of two years, and the Circuit Solicitors for a term of four years.

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED.

	Page
Alsobrook v. Alsobrook	170
Anderson v. Holmes	162
Bank of Charleston Nat. Banking Ass'n v. Zorn	444
Biggs v. Hubert	620
Bilderback v. Boyce	528
Black v. Childs	312
Black v. Rose	274
Cade v. Perrin	1
Carroll v. Tompkins	223
Caston v. Brock	104
Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. Garland	63
Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. White	51
Clawson v. Hutchinson	517
Clyde, Ex parte	385
Coleman v. Chester	286
Coleman v. Smith	511
Congdon v. Morgan	587
Courtenay, Ex parte	385
Crenshaw v. Thackston	437
Davidson v. Moore	251
Detheridge v. Gilreath	616
Devereux v. Champion Cotton Press Co.	396
Dial, Ex parte	584
Dial v. Gary	573
Dial v. Tappan	573
Dill v. Moon	338
Dougherty v. Crawford	628
Dubois v. Thomas	30
Duncan v. Brown	631
Edgar v. Castello	20
Edmondston v. Aiken County	622
Edwards v. Edwards	11
Featherston v. Norris	624
Fell v. Dial	247
Fickling v. Moore	251
First Nat. Bank of Charleston v. Gary	571
Fripp v. Williams	502
Gadsden v. Whaley	210
Garvin v. Garvin	630
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co.	385
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co.	626
Godbold v. Vance	458
Goldsmith v. Jacobs	624
Harrison v. Bailey	334
Holmes v. Charleston County	146
Ivy v. Clawson	267
Jennings v. Teague	229
Jones v. Massey	292
Kairson v. Puckhaber	626
Klinck v. Black	241
Lynch v. Hancock	66
McElwee v. McElwee	623
Macoy v. Curtis	367
Moon v. Johnson	434
Morgan v. Scruggs	630
Morrow v. Odom	623
Motes v. Madden	488
Norton v. Livingston	177
Oliver v. Grimball	556
Ostendorff v. Charleston County Com'rs	403
Parker v. Jacobs	112
Pegues v. Warley	180
Pender v. Lancaster	25
Pfeifer v. Dargan	44
Riley v. Gaines	454
Robinson v. Amateur Ass'n	148
Roe v. Harrison	625
Scurry v. Coleman	166
Sharpe v. Lee	341
Sheriff v. Welborn	480
Simpson v. Willard	191
Spartanburg & A. R. Co. v. Cathcart	281
Spartanburg & A. R. Co. v. Ezell	281
Spartanburg & A. R. Co. v. Nash	281
State v. Baldwin	135
State v. Brown	380
State v. David	428
State v. Dodson	619
State v. Dodson	628
State v. Gill	410
State v. Glenn	118
State v. Jones	344
State v. McKettrick	346
State v. Weeks	400
State ex rel. Attorney General v. Greenville & C. R. Co.	385
State ex rel. Bright v. Bright	7
State ex rel. Hamer v. Stackhouse	417
State ex rel. McLendon v. Morris	623
Steedman v. Weeks	622
Steele v. Atkinson	154
Steele v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co.	324
Sternberger v. McSween	35
Stokes v. Greenville	629
Sullivan v. Blythe	621
Sullivan v. Jones	362
Sullivan v. Speights	358
Sullivan v. Sullivan Mfg. Co.	494
Talmadge v. Oliver	522
Tarrant v. Gilletson	620
Thompson v. Brannon	542
Vaughan v. Fowler	355
Vermillion v. Mattison	625
Walker v. Kee	142
Warren v. Lawton	476
Williams v. Connor	621
Williams v. McCardell	219
Willingham v. Chick	93
Winsmith v. Dewberry	554
Withers v. Jenkins	597

REPORTS OF CASES

ARGUED AND DETERMINED IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT DURING THE PERIOD COMPRISED IN THIS VOLUME.

HON. A. J. WILLARD, CHIEF JUSTICE.
HON. W. D. SIMPSON, " "
HON. HENRY McIVER, ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.
HON. SAMUEL McGOWAN, "

14 S. C. *1

*(Case No. 893.)

CADE v. PERRIN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Taxation ⇐542.]

A county treasurer, by public advertisement, called for the payment of a railroad subscription tax, and threatened to enforce its collection by levy and sale. Under this call, a tax payer paid, under protest, the amount demanded of him, and then brought action for its recovery under the provisions of "An act to facilitate the collection of taxes." 16 Stat. 785. At the trial, the county treasurer testified that he had been forbidden by the comptroller-general to enter these railroad subscription assessments upon the tax duplicate, and that he collected only as agent for the railroad company.—Held, that the presiding judge erred in granting a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1004; Dec. Dig. ⇐542.]

[2. Pleading ⇐387.]

[Cited in Hogg v. Pinckney, 16 S. C. 395, to the point that when, upon the trial of a case, it appears that the plaintiff is entitled to a remedy, he cannot be turned out of court merely because the cause of action set forth in his complaint does not conform to such state of the proofs.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1301–1304; Dec. Dig. ⇐387.]

Before Thomson, J., Abbeville, February, 1880.

*2

*Associate Justice McGOWAN, having been of counsel, did not sit at the hearing of this case.

The order of the presiding judge fully states the case. It was admitted at the trial that there was no public notice given, that in collecting the tax, the treasurer acted without authority from the comptroller-general; but the defendant testified that the comptroller-general had instructed him, that he, as county treasurer, could not collect the railroad taxes, and must not charge them upon his tax books. The following is a copy of the tax receipt given to plaintiff:

No. 432. Township No. 16.

January 15th, 1879.

Received from G. S. Cade (protest) eight 25-100 dollars for railroad tax, due on the following real estate, for the year 1878, viz.:

50 acres, 4 buildings, } Value $1650.00

Tax, 5 mills,..... 8.25

(Signed) J. W. Perrin,
Treasurer for R. R. Co.

The order of the presiding judge is as follows:

Under an act to alter and amend an act entitled "An act to charter the Greenwood and Augusta Railroad Company," passed December 13th, 1877, (16 Stat. 323,) the commissioners of election of Abbeville county were authorized, upon the petition of fifty landholders of certain townships, to submit the question of subscription or no subscription to the capital stock of said railroad, to the landholders of the townships; and were further ordered to appoint managers to hold elections in relation to the said question in accordance with the laws and regulations of general elections of this state.

Petitions were presented, elections were held, and subscriptions made under the provisions of said act.

In two of the townships, however—Smithville and Bordeaux—some of the landholders paid, under protest, the sums assessed upon their property, alleging the provisions of the said act had been violated in many particulars.

*3

*By the sixth section of the said act it is provided, "the county commissioners of Abbeville and Edgefield, and their successors in office, shall have all the powers to assess and collect the amounts voted for by each township pro rata on the real estate of said townships as now are provided by law for the collection of taxes."

The defendant, J. Wardlaw Perrin, treasurer of the county, instructed by the authorities of the said railroad, on December 25th, 1878, gave notice that after January 15th, A. D. 1879, he would proceed to collect, by levy and sale of land, the railroad tax, as provided for in the collection of state and county taxes.

According to this notice the plaintiffs named, with sundry others, paid their shares of the amount voted, but under protest; and brought their actions in the Court of Common Pleas for the recovery of the sums severally paid by them.

These suits are brought under the provisions of the act of 1878. 16 Stat. 785. The act is entitled "An act to facilitate the collection of taxes."

The plaintiffs state (each for himself) they now bring suit "to recover the sums (money paid to defendant) under the provisions of the late act of the general assembly 'to facilitate the collection of taxes,'" and proceed to state their grounds for recovery.

The act declares "that in all cases in which any state, county or other taxes are now or shall hereafter be charged upon the books of any county treasurer of the state against any person, and such treasurer shall claim the payment of the taxes so charged, or shall take any step or proceeding to collect the same," such person shall pay the same under protest as being wrongfully and illegally collected, and within thirty days may bring suit for the recovery thereof.

The act of 1877, in the sixth section, does not declare the amounts voted for by each township to be taxes; but that the agencies for the collection of taxes may be employed to collect the amounts. The word "taxes" has a technical meaning. Taxes are burdens imposed by legislative authority for the support of government and for public purposes. "Amount" or "assessment" are words of different import; and the latter word means *a certain sum to be collected, not from the public at large, but from a certain class of persons, who, by their own act, have subjected themselves to its payment. As by the act only taxes wrongfully or illegally collected can be recovered, unless the words "amounts voted for by each township" mean taxes, then the act gives no remedy to the plaintiffs. They have not wrongfully or illegally paid taxes, and have thus failed to bring themselves within the description of persons relieved by the act.

*4

Further, the sixth section of said act was repealed or "erased" by A. A. March 12th, 1878. 16 Stat. 482. The townships severally were declared to be bodies politic and corporate. The result of this legislation was, that at said time, the power to enforce payment pro rata of the amount voted for was taken away. Thus, when the notice was given by the treasurer on December 15th, 1878, that a levy and sale to enforce the collection of the parts of the amount unpaid would be made on January 15th next, the proceeding was without authority of law. It was urged for the defence that a payment without law to enforce the collection was voluntary and could not be recovered.

The act provides that when the treasurer shall claim the taxes charged upon his books, or when some step or proceeding is taken to collect the same, the person paying taxes wrongfully or illegally—and under protest—may bring suit to recover the sum paid. The proof is, the treasurer did not charge the sums received on his books of office, but had some book, not official, in which he made his entries, and that the only step or proceeding to collect the same was the notice given by the defendant, as above stated. The plaintiffs have not proved either of the particulars on which their suit should rest.

In the opinion of the court, the plaintiffs have failed to bring their cases within the meaning and provisions of the act of 1878; and the court orders and adjudges that the complaint be dismissed, unless the plaintiffs shall, within thirty days, amend their complaints with such allegations, as they may be advised will fix a liability upon the defendant; and with costs to the defendant in the two cases named in the caption upon amendment made.

*5

*Leave was granted to the plaintiffs in all the other cases of like character against the said defendant to amend without payment of costs.

The plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Lee & Noble, for appellant.

Messrs. W. H. Parker and Burt & Graydon, contra.

July 21st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This action is against the defendant, as county treasurer, to recover back money alleged to have been paid to the defendant by the plaintiff upon an alleged illegal demand made by the defendant as county treasurer. It appears that the money was paid under protest in order to obtain a remedy for its recovery back under the provisions of the act "to facilitate the collection of taxes," approved December 24th, 1878, (16 Stat. 785,) and the action was framed with special reference to the provisions of that act. It appeared by the testimony of the defendant that he had no authority, as county treasurer, to make the demand. That, notwithstanding such want of authority, he gave public notice, as treasurer, as follows:

"I am instructed by the Greenwood and Augusta railroad authorities to extend the time for the receiving of the railroad tax without penalty until Wednesday, January 15th, 1879.

"Persons are notified that after that time I will proceed to collect, by levy and sale of lands, as provided for in the collection of state and county taxes.

(Signed) "J. W. Perrin, Treasurer.

"October 25th, 1878."

It appears that, under this notice, the payment was made by plaintiff under protest.

Assuming for the present that the pleadings admitted of it, the jury would have been entitled, on the evidence in the case, to say whether the defendant had represented that the plaintiff was liable to pay the amount in question as a tax levied against him, and whether the plaintiff believed and acted upon such rep*resentation in making payment of the money now sought to be recovered back, and whether such statement was false, and might have found as matter of fact that such was the case.

*6

The Circuit judge granted a non-suit upon the ground that the case could not be brought within the provisions of the act "to facilitate the collection of taxes." He places his decision upon the ground that the demand against the plaintiff was not a tax in the meaning of that act. That act provides a remedy where any "state, county or other taxes are now or shall hereafter be charged upon the books of any county treasurer against any person," &c. Had there been such a charge against the plaintiff, as the notice given by the defendant imputed, it would have sustained the remedy provided by this act. If there had been such a tax, this plaintiff could have paid it under protest, and have had his action to recover it back. In that case, on receiving such payment, it would have become the duty of the defendant to transmit the amount to the comptroller-general, who would be compelled to refund it in case judgment went in favor of the plaintiff. The action was evidently framed under the idea that a right to demand the tax, as such, existed, in form at least, and steps taken to secure the remedy by the act, including the shaping of the complaint to suit such a case.

It appeared on the trial, through the defendant's testimony, that no such tax, as such, existed at any time, and that he was in fact acting as the agent of the railroad company, enforcing the payment of money claimed to be due to such company. It was a clear case, under the code, for not restraining the verdict to the issues framed by the pleadings, but sending the case to the jury upon the evidence with or without previous amendment of the pleadings. The court would have been justified in holding that the misconduct of the defendant, as disclosed by the evidence, had induced the plaintiff to select an inappropriate form of action.

When upon the trial of a case it appears by evidence admitted without objection, or properly admissible under the pleadings, that the plaintiff is entitled to a remedy, upon the case exhibited, he cannot be turned out of court merely because the cause of *action set forth in his complaint does not conform to such state of the proofs.

*7

The non-suit must be set aside and a new trial had.

McIVER, A. J., concurred in the result.

---

14 S. C. 7

(Case No. 895.)

STATE, ex relatione BRIGHT, v. BRIGHT.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Bastards ⇐86.]

A party arrested under a charge of bastardy gave his recognizance, with a surety, to the State of South Carolina, in the penal sum of $900, conditioned to "pay over to the Court of Trial Justice for the county of Charleston aforesaid, the sum of seventy-five dollars per year, for the support of the following named illegitimate children, now in the custody of their mother, viz.: C., seven years old; E., five years old; and E. L., one year and nine months old, until each of said children become twelve years of age"—Held, upon the objection of the surety, that the recognizance was not a binding obligation, because it was not in compliance with the statute, nor in such form as would practically effect the object of the statute, nor payable to the proper officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. § 217; Dec. Dig. ⇐86.]

[2. Bastards ⇐86.]

A recognizance in such case is not a judgment of the court, binding because not appealed from. State v. Harmon, 3 Hill 275, explained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. ⇐217; Dec. Dig. ⇐86.]

[3. Principal and Surety ⇐46.]

The surety is not estopped from disputing the validity of the recognizance because of payments made thereon by another party, after its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. ⇐91; Dec. Dig. ⇐46.]

Before Aldrich, J., Charleston, December, 1879.

From the brief furnished in this case, no fuller statement is possible than that this action was brought by the mother of three bastard children upon a recognizance entered into May 24th, 1876, before M. R. Delany, trial justice, whereby Saulsberry Bright and Thomas R. Smalls acknowledged themselves indebted to the State of South Carolina in the sum of $900, with condition underwritten, as stated in the opinion of this court; that $6.25 was endorsed as a credit thereon by Delany, trial justice, in June, 1876, and $6.25 as a further credit by Chisolm, trial justice, in August, 1876; that Smalls defended the action; that the verdict was for defendant; that plaintiff moved for a *new trial, which was refused, and that she then appealed to this court upon the following grounds:

*8

1. Because the bond upon which the suit is brought is a judgment of a court having jurisdiction over the subject matter therein contained, and the said judgment, whilst unreversed, cannot be impeached in a collateral way, and the court erred in allowing said judgment to be impeached or questioned by the defendant.

2. Because the court erred in holding that the bond was void, it being "for the support of three illegitimate children," instead of being for the support of one illegitimate child.

3. Because the bond is in accordance with the statute under which it was taken, and which allows one or more children to be provided for in the same bond, and the court erred in not sustaining it.

4. Because the defendant is estopped from denying the validity of the bond, he having, since the execution of the same, made two payments thereon, thereby curing any defects in said bond, and the court erred in not so holding.

5. Because, if the bond is irregular in being for the support of too many children, it is good for the support of the first child therein named, and the court erred in not so holding.

6. Because the bond, if not good under the statute, is good at common law, being a voluntary obligation on the part of the defendant, Smalls, and the court erred in not so holding.

Mr. S. J. Lee, for appellant.

Messrs. G. W. Dingle and T. W. Bacot, contra.

July 21st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action on a bond in the sum of $900, alleged to have been given to provide for the support of three illegitimate children. The condition of the obligation is as follows: "That if the said Saulsberry Bright shall pay over to the court of trial justice for the county of Charleston, aforesaid, the sum of $75 per year for the support of the following named illegitimate children, now in the custody of their mother, *viz.: Charlotte, seven years old; Elizabeth, five years old; and Emma Louisa, one year and nine months old, until each of said children become twelve years of age," &c.

*9

It is very obvious that the bond sued upon is not such a bond as is contemplated by the statute, and, therefore, cannot be recovered upon as such. It is contended, however, that the bond, if not good under the statute is good at common law, being a voluntary obligation, so far as the defendant Smalls, who is a mere surety, is concerned. It may be that under the authority of the case of Commissioners of the Poor v. Gilbert, 2 Strob. 152, that if the bond was voluntarily entered into and it was in such form as would practically effect the object contemplated by the statute, that though not good under the statute, it might furnish a good cause of action as a valid common law obligation. But in this case, even were we to assume that the bond was voluntarily given, so far as the defendant Smalls was concerned, it is clear that the bond is not only not in conformity to the statute, but is not adapted to effect the object of the act. This object is to save the county harmless by securing the payment of a certain specified sum, $25, annually, from the time of the birth of the child until it attains the age of twelve years; but if the child dies in the meantime the obligation to pay ceases. In this case, however, the bond provides for the payment of $75 annually, "until each of said children become twelve years of age," and, therefore, if Charlotte or Elizabeth, one or both, were to die to-morrow, the defendant, by the terms of this bond, would still be obliged to pay the sum of $75 annually until Emma Louisa attained the age of twelve years, while under the statute, the amount which he would be required to pay would be only $50 or $25 per year, accordingly as one or both might die.

This bond also provides for the payment of this money "to the court of trial justice for the county of Charleston," and, bound as we are, to take judicial notice of the fact spread upon the legislative records of the state, that there are several trial justices in the county of Charleston, it would become a very perplexing question to determine which one of them could receive the money and give the defendant a valid discharge. In addition to this these officers are not, like the former boards of com*missioners of the poor, charged with the duty of administering the fund provided for the support of the destitute, and, therefore, while there may have been some propriety in sustaining bonds of this character, made payable to the commissioners of the poor, as has been done in the case above referred to, and others of that class, we are unable to see any reason why a bond providing for the payment to a trial justice, who is in no way charged with the duty of disbursing the poor fund, should be sustained.

*10

Again, it is urged in behalf of the appellant that the bond or recognizance in question is a judgment of the court, and, not being appealed from at the time it was entered into, cannot now be questioned, and to sustain this proposition the case of State v. Harmon, 3 Hill 275, is cited. That case, however, does not decide any such proposition. The defendants there, in answer to a scire facias to estreat the recognizance, insisted that they could not be made liable for the annual payment prior to the time when the party charged had been convicted, while, on the other hand, it was contended that they were liable from the time of the birth of the child. The court, while declining at that time to decide the question as to when the annual payments should commence, according to the proper construction of the act, held that as Harmon had been convicted at a former court, and, in pursuance of the sentence following such conviction, had entered into the recognizance in question, which, by its terms, provided for the payments to commence from the birth of the child, the court would presume that the sentence required the defendant to enter into such a recognizance, and the sentence—not the recognizance—being the judgment of the court, from which there was no appeal, could not afterwards be inquired into. In this case there was no trial or sentence, and there could not, therefore, be any judgment.

Finally, it is urged that the defendant is estopped by the payments made upon the bond from now denying its validity. A sufficient answer to this is that it does not appear by whom the alleged payments were made. If made by the principal obligor, as would be the natural inference, they certainly cannot affect the defendant Smalls, who alone is contesting the plaintiff's right to *recover, the principal obligor having permitted the case to go against him by default.

*11

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 11

(Case No. 896.)

EDWARDS v. EDWARDS.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Pleading ⟸276.]

An order for leave to file a supplemental complaint can be made by a judge at chambers, but notice of the motion should be given to the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ellen v. Ellen, 26 S. C. 101, 1 S. E. 413; Shelton v. Southern Ry., 80 S. C. 78, 61 S. E. 220.

For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 833, 835; Dec. Dig. ⟸276; Judges, Cent. Dig. § 112.]

[2. Pleading ⟸276.]

Where granted ex parte, it is not a nullity, but only an irregularity, to be corrected by motion or appeal, and is waived by an answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 833, 835; Dec. Dig. ⟸276.]

[3. Pleading ⟸421.]

Where a supplemental complaint is served before leave to file is obtained, the defendant, by answering, waives the irregularity, and cannot, at the trial, raise an objection to such service.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1413; Dec. Dig. ⟸421.]

[4. Pleading ⟸279.]

After action commenced in the Court of Common Pleas, a decree was rendered by the Court of Probate, affecting the rights of the parties as pending in the original action. Held, that in such case a supplemental complaint was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 836–841; Dec. Dig. ⟸279.]

[5. Pleading ⟸279.]

Where pending suit in the Court of Common Pleas, the Court of Probate renders a decree which affects the parties and subject matter of the cause in the superior court, but which cannot be enforced by the inferior court, the Court of Common Pleas may be called upon by supplemental complaint to supplement the powers of the inferior tribunal and enforce its decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 836–841; Dec. Dig. ⟸279.]

[6. Homestead ⟸96.]

A and B jointly purchased a tract of land and paid in part, B paying more than A; B then died and A became his administrator; afterwards a re-sale was ordered, titles to be withheld until full payment, and the land to stand pledged for such payment, one half of the purchase money to be paid to A, and the other half to the distributees of B; A became the purchaser. Upon settlement in the Probate Court, A was found indebted to B's estate on account of B's interest in this land, and for rents and profits before the resale. Held, that as against this indebtedness A was not entitled to a homestead exemption in this land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 147; Dec. Dig. ⟸96.]

[This case is also cited in Moon v. Johnson, 14 S. C. 436, as an instance of the review by Supreme Court of the order of the court below allowing a supplemental complaint.]

Before Fraser, J., Abbeville, April, 1879.

*12

*Andrew Edwards died in February, 1870, and J. G. Edwards and Epaminondas Edwards qualified as his executors. Under a power in the will, the lands of testator were sold December 20th, 1870, and E. Edwards and M. L. Edwards, sons of testator, purchased jointly the Home tract for $2339.88, and paid $851.22 upon their purchase, leaving $1488.66 unpaid. Of the cash payment, M. L. Edwards paid $565.62, and E. Edwards $285.60. In December, 1871, Amos W. Edwards and others filed their complaint against J. G. Edwards and E. Edwards, executors, and others, for a settlement of the estate of Andrew Edwards, to which action all the heirs of A. Edwards were parties. Pending suit, in March, 1872, M. L. Edwards died intestate, without wife or children, and E. Edwards administered upon his estate. His distributees were all parties to this action.

In June, 1872, Judge Orr filed his decree, in which he ordered the re-sale of the Home tract by J. G. Edwards, the proceeds to be applied to the debt due by the former purchasers, one-half of the balance to be paid to E. Edwards, and the other half to J. G. Edwards, for the distributees of M. L. Edwards. This tract was re-sold in December, 1872, and purchased by E. Edwards for $2050, of which he paid all except the sum of $208.78, which was balance due to distributees of M. L. Edwards. J. G. Edwards refused to deliver titles, as the decree of Judge Orr had directed that titles should be withheld until the purchase money was paid, and that the land should stand pledged for its payment.

In 1875, the plaintiffs in this action filed their petition in the Court of Probate, demanding of E. Edwards, administrator, a settlement of the estate of M. L. Edwards. The statement of his indebtedness was declared by the judge of Probate, on September 18th, 1877, as follows:

Amount from A. Edwards' estate...	$450 29
Interest on same.....	59 11
Amount and interest, crops of 1871, rent of land for 1872, &c., after deducting all expenses and charges,	676 45
	$1185 85

*13

*The Court of Probate entered its decree for this amount and issued execution, to which there was a return of nulla bona.

There was no appeal from this decree, nor from the decree of Judge Orr.

On March 25th, 1878, J. G. Edwards and others, distributees of M. L. Edwards, filed their supplemental complaint against E. Edwards, administrator of M. L. Edwards, reciting the above-stated facts, and alleging the insolvency of the sureties on the administration bond of E. Edwards, and praying an order for the sale of the Home tract, and the application of the proceeds of the sale to the amount found due by the decree of the Probate Court. This complaint was served upon the defendant March 28th. Defendant filed an answer, denying the insolvency of his sureties and claiming a homestead. The date of this answer or of its service, is not given. On April 8th, 1878, Judge Mackey signed an order at Greenville granting leave to plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint. Neither the defendant nor his attorneys had any notice of the application for the order, nor did they, or any of them, know of its existence until the cause was heard in April, 1879.

In addition to the grounds taken in the answer, the defendant, at the trial of the cause, made the following objections:

1. That the order of Judge Mackey was a nullity, having been granted at chambers without notice to the defendant or his attorneys.

2. That the service of the supplemental complaint on the defendant was irregular and unauthorized.

3. The facts stated do not constitute a case for a supplemental complaint.

4. That the proceedings in the Probate Court is a bar to the proceedings in this court.

5. That the facts stated do not constitute a cause of action against the defendant in favor of the plaintiffs.

The insolvency of the sureties to the defendants' administration bond, was proved.

Defendant is the head of a family, having a wife and children.

His Honor, Judge Fraser, in his decree, after stating the facts, continued:

*14

*It is objected that this is not a proper case for a supplemental complaint, and that Epaminondas Edwards is entitled to a right of homestead in said Home place, on which he lives with his family. Perhaps a new proceeding against Epaminondas Edwards, in the nature of a creditor's bill, might have been properly instituted, but the new position in which the parties before the court in the original proceeding have been placed by the transfer to another tribunal of matters in issue in this court, and which still require the exercise of its powers, makes it proper to bring these matters before the court by supplemental complaint, and it is held that to avoid further litigation it is better to bring the whole matter of the fund, for which execution has been issued by the judge of Probate into the proceeding, that the whole may be disposed of together. If, in this view, there is error, I still feel bound to sustain the form of pleading filed in pursuance of an order of my predecessor, who made the order for leave to file a supplemental complaint for the very matters set forth in this.

On the second point I am bound by the express ruling of the Supreme Court, that a homestead can not be set off in an equity, and that a legal title, which is the subject of levy and sale by the sheriff, is necessary to support it. In this case, Epaminondas Edwards has no legal title, and is not entitled to it until the shares of his surviving brothers and sisters in the proceeds of the sale of the Home place is paid over to them in pursuance of the order of Judge Orr.

The decree concluded with an order for a sale of the land, the proceeds of which, after payment of costs, was to be applied to the payment of $1185.85, with interest from September 18th, 1877; and the remainder was to go to the defendant.

Defendant gave notice of appeal, the grounds whereof are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Burt & Graydon, for appellant.

Messrs. Cothran & Perrin, contra.

July 21st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This appeal is from a decree under an original and supplemental complaint. The first ground of ob*jection to the decree is that the order allowing the plaintiffs to file a supplemental complaint is a nullity, on the ground that it was made ex parte by a judge at chambers. The motion for leave to file a supplemental complaint can be made before a judge at chambers. Code, § 417, Subd. 2. It was an irregularity to take an order ex parte for leave to file the supplemental complaint. Section 200 of the code says: "That the plaintiff and defendant may be allowed, on motion, to make a supplemental complaint, answer or reply," &c. The allowance is not a matter of course, but must depend in part on the consideration to be given to the existing pleadings and proceedings in the cause, so that the opposite party has a direct interest to be heard, and should have notice. It is a misapprehension to call an order a nullity because made at chambers, and without notice to the party, where such notice is required. In order to justify the treatment of a judicial order as a nullity it must appear that there was an entire want of judicial power to make such order. If the power exists, but has been improperly exercised, that constitutes an irregularity that may be corrected, according to circumstances, by motion or on appeal. The Circuit judge was competent to exercise the powers properly belonging to the Court of Common Pleas, at chambers, in making an order of the nature of that in question, and the character of their powers precludes the order of a court, in a case within its jurisdiction, from being disregarded as a nullity. The proper course for the defendant was to move the court to set aside the order as irregular, which he failed to do. Irregularities, not involving the merits, are deemed waived where the party having an opportunity to object thereto fails to do so in time, or where he does some act recognizing the objectionable proceeding as valid, such as interposing a pleading or proceeding that pre-supposes a valid proceeding of the nature of that alleged to be irregular. In the present case the defendant filed an answer to the supplemental complaint, an act that could not be called for except where an order allowing a supplemental complaint existed. This was a complete waiver, as it does not appear, and cannot be inferred, that the merits of the defence were in any way prejudiced by the allowance of such order to file a supplemental complaint.

*15

*16

*But it appears, in addition to this, that on the hearing of the cause the defendant was heard upon the propriety of the allowance of leave to file a supplemental complaint. From this it appears that the defendant has not been in fact deprived of a hearing of the matters affected by the ex parte order, and the only question that can be considered at this time is whether the conclusion of the decree that it was a proper case for a supplemental complaint was correct in point of law, which will be presently considered.

The second objection has been disposed of by what has just been said. The third objection is that the Circuit judge erred in not holding that the service of the supplemental complaint on the defendant was irregular, having been made prior to the granting of the order allowing such supplemental complaint to be filed. It does not appear that any motion was made to set aside the service of the supplemental complaint prior to the service of the defendant's answer thereto. The answer was a clear waiver of any irregularity in the service of the supplemental complaint. Nor does it appear that any motion was made for that purpose prior to the hearing. Such an objection cannot be taken on the hearing, and it was properly disregarded by the Circuit judge.

The fourth objection involves the question whether this is a proper case for a supplemental complaint. In deciding this question it is not necessary to hold that the case was one in which relief could be had in no other mode. Even where relief might be had on a motion or petition as to matters occurring since the commencement of the action, still where the nature of such matters is such that certainty and convenience would be promoted by a supplemental complaint, the authority of the court to allow a supplemental pleading for that purpose cannot be doubted. In the present case the original complaint was filed by an executor joining the distributees against his co-executor for an account of assets coming into the hands of the latter. The defendant became the purchaser, with one of the distributees, of certain lands of the decedent, ordered to be sold under such complaint, but did not fully comply with the terms of such purchase. M. L. Edwards, the joint purchaser with the defend*ant, died after the purchase, and the defendant became the administrator of his estate. The pleadings were conformed to this new state of facts, and an order was taken for the re-sale of the premises so purchased to pay the debt incurred by the first purchase for the purchase money. The re-sale took place, and the defendant became sole purchaser of the land, making payments on account of such purchase, but leaving a balance of the purchase money unpaid. While matters thus stood, the distributees of M. L. Edwards, who are the same persons made parties plaintiff, as the distributees of the original testator, commenced proceedings in the Probate Court for the settlement of the accounts of E. Edwards, the defendant, as administrator of M. L. Edwards. No objection appears to have been made by the defendant to this mode of proceeding either in the Circuit Court or the Probate Court, and the case in the Probate Court went to a decree against the defendant for a balance found due on such accounting. It appears that execution issued out of the Probate Court under this decree, and was returned nulla bona. The object of the supplemental complaint was to bring these matters before the court so that satisfaction of such judgment could be obtained by enforcing the decrees and orders in this cause, looking to the completion, by the defendant, of the purchase of the premises bought by him, part of the purchase money still remaining unpaid as was alleged, and title not having been made under such purchase. As all parties consented to the proceeding in the Probate Court, the decree of that court is entitled to as conclusive force as affecting the rights of the parties submitted to that court, at least, as would be ascribed to a contract, upon consideration, between the parties themselves, modifying their rights in the same manner as they were modified by the Probate decree. Such a contract could be made pendente lite, with such effect as to conclude the rights of the parties as to all matters disposed of by it in all further proceedings in the cause to which it related. The fact that a Probate decree admits of enforcement by execution is immaterial, as that circumstance cannot affect the nature of the estoppels proper to the decree. As there was no actual satisfaction of that decree, and the only means of enforcing it in the hands of the Probate *Court exhausted, there is no ground to say that the parties should be left to the tribunal which they have chosen. The jurisdiction of the Circuit Court over the new matter brought in by the supplemental complaint is not dependent on the Probate decree and the exhaustion of the means of enforcing it, but existed antecedent to the proceedings in the Probate Court. The supplemental complaint was, therefore, no analogy to a creditor's bill. The case resolves itself to this, that, subsequent to action commenced, the parties, by their mutual acts, have given a new mould to their rights as pending in the original suit, and this is one of the cases to which the practice of allowing supplemental complaints looks. It follows that the fourth objection must be disallowed.

*17

*18

The fifth objection is that plaintiffs are barred by the judgment in the Probate Court. It is not clear upon what principle the judgment is alleged to be a bar, and what is the effect claimed for it as such. So far as it adjudicates, finally, certain rights between the parties, it is undoubtedly a bar to any attempt to re-open the discussion of such rights, but the decree appealed from makes no such attempt. If it is meant that when one court has proceeded to judgment, and has failed to compel the satisfaction of such judgment, no other court can supplement its powers, that would conflict with the jurisdiction on which a judgment creditor's bill rests. The Circuit Court, under the facts disclosed, could clearly have taken jurisdiction under an original bill of the equitable enforcement of the judgment: and, such being the case, it could indirectly afford the same relief as incidental to a pending suit between the same parties within its proper jurisdiction. It would be specially exceptionable to hold such a doctrine as it regards the judgment of a court of limited or special jurisdiction, both as violating the principle that brings to the aid of such courts the powers of courts of general jurisdiction, and the constant practice of making the decree of the Probate Court as formerly of the Court of Ordinary, the basis of a decree in the Circuit Court between the same parties and touching the same subject of controversy. This objection must be overruled.

The sixth objection is well taken, pointing as it does to a mere clerical error in the figures stated in the decree, which must be corrected accordingly.

*19

*The seventh, eighth and ninth objections involve a claim of homestead made by the defendant in the lands purchased under the decree of the court, and will be considered together. It is not necessary to consider the question whether the nature of the rights acquired by the defendant by the purchase and part payment of the purchase money, in respect of the lands sold under the decree, is such as to sustain a homestead right. The original purchase of the Home place was made by defendant and M. L. Edwards jointly. Before the order of re-sale was made, M. L. Edwards died, and defendant became his administrator. The default in non-compliance with the terms of the first sale, that rendered necessary the second sale, was that of the defendant, in part in his personal right, and in part as the representative of M. L. Edwards. As the estate of M. L. Edwards had contributed to make the payments that had been made on the first sale, no reason appears why the defendant should have excluded that estate, represented by him, from participating in any advantage that might arise from the purchase. This matter is not brought before us for direct consideration, and no explanation of the transaction appears. If then, the defendant seeks the aid of a court of equity to establish a homestead right as against parties with whom he sustains such a fiduciary relation, it would be necessary that he should make such a demand to appear reconcilable with the equities of such parties. This he has failed to do, nor are the grounds for claiming a homestead stated in the case.

The right of homestead is asserted against an order for the sale of the premises for the satisfaction of the purchase money demand, under the re-sale, as appears by a distinct statement in the decree to that effect. That portion of the purchase money, on the re-sale, remaining unpaid was, under the decree of Judge Orr, to go to the estate of M. L. Edwards. This balance of purchase money must be regarded as contained in the amount adjudged by the Probate decree, and as belonging to the distributees of M. L. Edwards, and payable by E. Edwards individually. In equity, no such loss of character, by merger in the decree, would be allowed to take place as to disturb the equities existing before such decree. As the final decree orders a re-sale *for the purpose of satisfying this decree, it must be regarded in substance, as well as in form, ordering it for the satisfaction of the purchase money on the re-sale, absolutely due from the defendant to the distributees of M. L. Edwards. Until a judicial sale is permitted to be finally consummated by the transfer of title the whole matter remains in the power of the court, and it will not permit a purchaser, failing to comply in full with the terms of purchase, to acquire rights prejudicial to the objects of the decree under which such sale was made. An assertion of homestead right on the part of the defendant would tend to defeat in part the relief intended by the decree of Judge Orr, and cannot be allowed. It is not a question now whether credit should have been given to the defendant for the amount of the purchase money, on the re-sale, due to the estate represented by him. No such application appears to have been demanded or made; on the contrary, by the voluntary act of the parties in interest, in submitting to the action of the Probate Court, the title to such balance of purchase money has passed into the plaintiff and out of the defendant as administrator. Equity certainly will not make such an application for the mere purpose of letting in a claim of homestead of, to say the least, doubtful equity.

*20

The tenth objection is general, and is disposed of by what has already been held.

The decree must be modified by the correction of the clerical error pointed out by the sixth objection, and, as so modified, is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s concurred.

14 S. C. 20

(Case No. 897.)

EDGAR v. CASTELLO.

(April Term, 1880.)

[Reported and Annotated in 37 Am. Rep. 714.]

[Death ⟸7, 31.]

A father is not entitled to recover damages for the negligent killing of his infant child.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Lewis v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 57 S. C. 330, 35 S. E. 556.

For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 43; Dec. Dig. ⟸7, 31.]

*21

*Before Fraser, J., Charleston, June, 1879.

This was an appeal by plaintiff from an order of non-suit. The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. A. J. Magrath, Jr., for appellant.

Messrs. De Saussure & Son, contra.

July 23d, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action brought by a father to recover damages for an injury, occasioned by the alleged negligence of the defendant, which caused the immediate death of the child of the plaintiff, an infant about three years of age. There is no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff has sustained any damage by reason of the loss of the services of his child, or by reason of any expense or outlay to which he was thereby subjected, but damages are claimed simply for the killing of the child. A motion for a nonsuit was made and granted, upon the ground that under the statute of this state the action could only be maintained by the executor or administrator of the deceased. The statute referred to is the act of 1859, (12 Stat. 825), incorporated in the General Statutes, Chapter CIX., page 507. That statute, in its first section, provides that "whenever the death of any person shall be caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another, * * * in every such case the person or corporation who would have been liable if death had not ensued, shall be liable to an action," &c., and, in its second section it declares "that every such action shall be for the benefit of the wife, husband, parent and children of the person whose death shall have been so caused, and shall be brought by, or in the name of the executor or administrator of such person," &c., and then proceeds to provide for the distribution of the amount recovered among "the before-mentioned persons in such shares as they would have been entitled to if the deceased had died intestate and the amount recovered had been personal assets of his or her estate." There are no saving words in the statute and the imperative terms employed, which we have italicised in the fore*going quotation, exclude the idea that the party causing an injury, which resulted in death, was to be subjected to tw› actions for such injury; indeed, the provisions of the fifth section of that chapter seem to have been framed with a view to prevent a double liability. It is true that in the cases of Smith v. City of St. Joseph, 55 Mo. 456, (17 Am. R. 660), and Mewhirter v. Hatten, 42 Iowa 288, (20 Am. R. 618), it has been held that a party may be subjected to two actions for an injury done to a wife—one brought by her for the damage done to her personally, and one by the husband for damages sustained by him by reason of expenses incurred by him in procuring necessary medical and other attendance, and for the loss of her services during the time she was disabled by reason of the injury. But death did not ensue from the injury sustained in either of these cases, and they are, therefore, not strictly applicable to the case in hand. According to our view, however, in order to subject one to a liability to two actions for the same act or default, the law should be express and not left to depend upon inference merely, and while, if we had full access to the statutes of those states, we might be able to see that they were properly decided, we are not prepared, as at present advised, to yield our assent to them. But in addition to this our statute expressly declares that, in the action provided for by it, "the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought," which terms would, of course, embrace damages resulting from the loss of services of the deceased; and if a father should, in his character as master, be permitted to bring an action in his own name for the loss of the services of his child, in the character of servant, it is manifest that the defendant would be liable to be twice called upon to respond in damages for the same thing. So that even if the cases above cited should be accepted as authoritative of the general principle therein announced, it is clear that they could not affect the question now under consideration, for they are based upon the ground that the damages recoverable by the wife are intended as a compensation to her for the personal injuries which she may have sustained, while the damages recoverable by the husband *are intended as a compensation to him for the loss of her services and for the expenses incurred in providing her with proper attendance during the time she was suffering from the injury.

*22

*23

But, aside from our statute upon the subject, we think the motion for a non-suit was properly granted. As was said by Mr. Justice Hunt in Insurance Company v. Brame, 95 U. S. 757 [24 L. Ed. 580], quoting from Hilliard on Torts, the rule undoubtedly is "that at common law, the death of a human being, though clearly involving pecuniary loss, is not the ground of an action for damages." There are some cases (Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware 80 [Fed. Cas. No. 11,234]; Ford v. Munroe, 20 Wend. 210,) which might be claimed as establishing as an exception to this rule the right of the father, in his character of master, to bring an action for an injury causing the death of his child; but the ground of such action, if sustainable at all, is the loss of the services of the child as a servant. This is manifest from the case of Plummer v. Webb, which, though recognizing the right of the father, as master, to bring an action against another who has wrongfully caused the death of his child, places that right exclusively upon the ground of the loss of services, for there, the child having been hired to a third person, it was held that the father could not recover because the services of the child were due, not to the father, but to such third person, and hence that the action in that case could not be maintained by the father. So, also, Ford v. Munroe was an action brought by a father to recover damages sustained by reason of the killing of his child, about ten years of age. The special damage alleged was: 1. That the plaintiff's wife was made sick by reason of the occurrence, and that he was thereby deprived of her society and was subjected to expense in procuring necessary attendance upon her. 2d. The loss of the services of the child from the time the injury was sustained until he would have attained his majority. The jury were charged that the plaintiff might recover whatever sum the jury might think the services of the child would have been worth from the time the injury was sustained until he attained the age of twenty-one years, and, also, for damages incident to the wife's sickness. These points of the charge received but little attention at the hands of the court, though they were sustained, the principal *question considered being in relation to another matter. It is difficult to understand how, in any view of the case, that portion of the charge which permitted the jury to give, as damages, whatever they might think the services of the child would have been worth from the time of the injury until he attained the age of twenty-one years could be vindicated, for the child might have died from natural causes long before he reached the age of twenty-one years.

*24

It is said, however, by Mr. Justice Hunt, in the case of Insurance Co. v. Brame, supra, in speaking of these cases: "They are considered by the New York Court of Appeals, in Green v. Hudson River Railroad Co., 2 Keyes 294, and compared with the many cases to the contrary, and are held not to diminish the force of the rule above stated."

The case of Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague's Dec. 522 [Fed. Cas. No. 3,521], which has been cited to sustain the doctrine that a father may recover damages for an injury to his child resulting in death, does not decide any such proposition, but, on the contrary, Mr. Justice Sprague, though expressing his own opinion in favor of such a doctrine, admits that "the weight of authority in the common law courts seems to be against the action, but natural equity and the general principles of law are in favor of it," and then undertakes to show that, by the civil law, such an action could be maintained. Indeed, we do not find that it is anywhere decided that the father could maintain such an action except where it is alleged and proved that the father has sustained damage by reason of the loss of services of the child, or by reason of expenses incurred from the killing of his child for funeral or other expenses. Hence, where, as in this case, there is no allegation in the complaint upon which such damages could be claimed, we do not see how, in any view of the question, this action could be maintained. And where, as in this case, death resulted immediately from the injury, and the child was of such tender years as to negative the idea that he could render any such service to the father, there certainly could be no ground for a claim of damages from a loss of services; and, as to the funeral expenses, in addition to the fact that there is no allegation upon which to base a claim for such damages, we find that it has been *distinctly decided in the recent case of Osborn v. Gillett, L. R., 8 Exch. 88, that a father could not maintain an action for injuries which caused the immediate death of his child, either upon the ground of loss of services or for burial expenses.

*25

The cases of Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Bantom, 54 Penna. St. 495; Owen v. Brockschmidt, 54 Mo. 285, which were cited by appellant to sustain the proposition that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for the amount proved to have been necessarily expended for funeral and other expenses incurred by reason of the killing of the child, prove to be cases arising under special statutes of those states, and are, therefore, inapplicable here. The other case cited on this point, Roeder v. Ormsby, 22 How. Pr., was a case as to the measure of damages, and turned mainly on a question as to the construction of the pleadings, as to whether the expenses claimed to be the foundation for the damages, were properly alleged to have been incurred.

We are of opinion, therefore, that in any view which may be taken of this case, the judgment of the Circuit Court was right, and accordingly it is affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 25

(Case No. 898.)

PENDER v. LANCASTER.

(April Term, 1880.)

[Exemptions ⇐7; Homestead ⇐95.]

Where an execution debtor marries after levy upon his personal property but before its sale, he does not thereby become entitled to its exemption under the homestead provisions of the constitution of this state.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Oliver v. White, 18 S. C. 240; Chafee & Co. v. Rainey, 21 S. C. 20; Rollings v. Evans, 23 S. C. 328.

For other cases, see Exemptions, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. ⇐7; Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 144; Dec. Dig. ⇐95.]

[This case is also cited in Chafee & Co. v. Rainey, 21 S. C. 11, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Fraser, J., Barnwell, September, 1879.

This was an action by T. C. Pender to recover from J. W. Lancaster, sheriff of Barnwell county, damages for the sale of a horse, which, as a work animal, was exempt from levy and sale, and to recover the balance due upon the execution paid by *plaintiff under protest, after levy upon his land. At the time of judgment rendered, and at the time of the levy upon the horse, plaintiff had no family, but married before its sale, and demanded of defendant its exemption, which was refused. The levy upon the land was after the sale of the horse. The presiding judge, by whom the case was tried, a jury having been waived, dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed. In the arguments before this court no question was made about the balance paid upon the execution under protest, after levy upon the land.

*26

Mr. Robert Aldrich, for appellant.

Mr. I. M. Hutson, contra.

July 30th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by WILLARD, C. J. The defendant, as sheriff of Barnwell county, levied upon a horse belonging to the plaintiff, under an execution issued upon a judgment recovered against the defendant. Subsequent to the levy the plaintiff married and claimed to have become the head of a family, and thereby entitled to a right of a homestead, and demanded of the defendant, as sheriff, the horse so levied upon, as exempt from execution. The defendant refusing to recognize such right of exemption, the present action was commenced, which resulted, at the Circuit, in a judgment of nonsuit.

The only question presented by the appeal is, whether the fact that the plaintiff became the head of a family and entitled to a homestead right, as such, and to the exemptions of personal property incident thereto, after the levy, entitled him to allege such exemption as against personal property actually levied upon prior to the acquisition of such right of exemption.

The argument of the appellant places the right of homestead, and to those exemptions of personal property connected therewith, on a peculiar footing, distinguishing them in important particulars from ordinary rights. The validity and effect of rights are usually tested by the state of things existing at the time they became operative. Conflicting claims in the nature of rights of property, general or special, take priority, as among *themselves, according to the time when they commenced to act upon the particular subject of property. But the appellant regards the right of homestead and the concomitant right to exemptions of certain kinds of personal property, as sui generis, and as operating independently of the fact of having priority in point of time over other rights conflicting with them. The respondent claims that by virtue of the levy the execution took a special property in the horse levied upon, which, having become vested, could not be divested through a right of homestead exemption arising subsequently to the levy, while the appellant claims that the only test of the validity of the right of exemption is whether it existed at the time the property was demanded of the sheriff and at the time of sale.

*27

The right of homestead exemption, and that to the exemption of personal property of the prescribed kinds, must be regarded as of the same nature and attended by the same general incidents, as they are both created by the same instrument for the accomplishment of the same purpose, and only differ in the respect that one relates to real and the other to personal property, which is unimportant in its bearing on the question of their nature. It will serve the purpose of convenience to discuss the question as one of homestead exemption, reserving for subsequent consideration the question whether the difference in the mode of asserting the right in the two cases gives rise to any distinction between them material to the present question.

The provisions of the constitution granting the right of homestead exemption, must be regarded as taking effect in one or the other of two modes, namely, either as creating in certain persons rights of a remedial character, capable of being enforced by action or defence, as the case may require, or by limiting the jurisdiction and powers of the courts so as to deny a certain efficacy to their process. According to the view last mentioned, the constitution operates by way of disabling the process of the court from having any effect to deprive a person entitled to such exemption of the property to which such exemption relates. These provisions of the constitution (Article II., Section 32,) declare that certain rights of property held by certain persons, "shall be exempt from attachment, levy or sale, on any mesne *or final process issued from any court." Was it the intention of the constitution to deprive the process of the court of efficacy in certain cases by acting directly on such process? If so, then the levy of an execution upon property entitled to exemption, is, ipso facto, void. Certainly it cannot be contended that the process of a court can take an effect denied to it by the constitution, especially where, as is contended by the appellants, the object of the constitution was to act upon the process so as to prevent such an effect. Such being the case it would be unnecessary for the defendant in an execution, claiming property levied upon thereunder as exempt under the constitution, to take any steps to prevent a sale, but he might content himself by standing by silently until that property has passed into the hands of a purchaser from the sheriff, and then, by an action against such purchaser, contest the constitutional efficacy of the levy. In such a case the requirements of the statute, under which the debtor must assert his right of exemption in a particular manner, while the property is in the hands of the sheriff, would be not only useless, but in derogation of the constitution, as imposing conditions upon the right of exemption in excess of what is imposed by the constitution creating such right, declaring the cases in which it may be exercised and the mode of its exercise. It would also follow, if this view could be maintained, that a sale for the foreclosure of a mortgage or other lien created by the debtor, other than for the purchase money of the land, would be invalid, as the process by which such sale must be effected is within the description, set forth in the constitution, of the process from which such property is declared exempt. Another consequence that would result would be that when a judgment had once taken a lien upon land, that lien might be defeated by a subsequently arising right of homestead exemption, as the final process for enforcing it would be without capacity to operate against such a homestead right. That such consequences do not flow from the constitution is evident, not only from the consideration of the principles of construction, but from the opposite conclusions reached by this court, in general harmony with the views that have prevailed wherever the system of homestead exemptions has been adopted.

*28

On the other hand, the conclusion that the constitution intended *as its proper effect, the investing of the debtor with a right of exemption that must be asserted as other similiar rights are required to be asserted, and which might be lost by neglect to assert it, or by estoppel arising from his acts, and which, when asserted, would carry with it the usual incidents of such rights, is clear on the face of the constitution, and is in harmony with all the decisions under it. In that case the proper subjects upon which it must be regarded as intending effect are the rights of the judgment debtor and the duty of the officer or person using such process commensurate with such right. This view leaves the debtor to prosecute his right of exemption by such proceedings and means as may be prescribed by law for that purpose, not inconsistent with the constitution, for it includes the idea of creating the right and leaving to the legislature the duty of devising the remedy, while the opposite construction would involve the idea that the constitution itself has afforded the proper remedy by destroying the validity of what is done against its provisions, thus placing legislation on that subject beyond the reach of the legislature.

*29

It must, therefore, be concluded that the proper effect of the constitution is to invest the debtor with a right to demand exemption in certain cases, in behalf of certain descriptions of property held by him as the head of a family. This right does not differ in its nature from other rights that may be made available by action or defense. It is true it looks to the protection of existing enjoyment rather than to future acquisitions, but numberless rights of action and defence are given for a similiar purpose that are subject to the same rule.

As has been already said, when there are conflicting rights to any subject of property, they are always adjusted according to their relative priorities, having regard to the time when they commenced to be operative, so as to create a vested interest in such property. It cannot be disputed that the execution in the present case took, by the levy, a lien, a special property, in the horse levied upon, for the purpose of the execution, and that such lien existed effectively in the hands of the sheriff, as the agent of the law and of the parties, from the time of the levy.

*30

The right *of homestead subsequently arising, was, necessarily, subordinate to this right, because later in point of time.

It has already been said, in substance, that if a subsequently accruing right of exemption could defeat the lien of an execution levied upon personal property, it could also defeat the lien of a judgment upon land. There is no difference in the nature of these two liens, as they are allowed for the protection of the same rights and follow the same general principles. The difference between them is in the steps by which they are respectively acquired and the mode of realizing from them, arising from the difference between real and personal property. Both are equally amenable to the rule that rights must be determined according to their respective priorities. Thus, no ground of distinguishing the two appears, as it regards the effect upon them of rights subsequently arising.

From the foregoing conclusions it is manifest that the plaintiff obtained, by the acquisition of the general right of homestead, no rights as against the lien taken by the execution previously levied, and was accordingly properly nonsuited.

The appeal must be dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 30

(Case No. 899.)

DUBOIS v. THOMAS.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Records ⇐17.]

The Court of Common Pleas in virtue of its general authority, possesses the power of substituting new records, including judgments, in the place of originals lost or destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. ⇐17; Courts, Cent. Dig. § 370.]

[2. Judgment ⇐283.]

The act of assembly entitled "An act to provide a mode by which to perpetuate testimony in relation to deeds, wills, choses in action, other papers and records destroyed or lost during the recent war," approved December 21st, 1865, neither took away nor suspended the ordinary power of the Court of Common Pleas in such cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 557; Dec. Dig. ⇐283.]

[3. Records ⇐2.]

The act of 1871 which renews and extends this act of 1865, until February 11th, 1876, was not intended to deny to the courts, after the limited date, the remedy provided by the act of 1865.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. ⇐2.]

*31

*Before Aldrich, J., Colleton, March, 1880.

This was an application dated in February, 1880, for leave to substitute a new record for a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Colleton district, entered up in April, 1859, and burned in the City of Columbia on February 17th, 1865. The order was granted, and defendant appealed.

Messrs. Henderson & Behre, for appellants.

Messrs. Tracy & Tracy, contra.

July 30th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This was an application to the Court of Common Pleas to substitute a new record of a judgment for the original record alleged to have been destroyed. D. Padgett, one of the defendants, and the appellant here opposed the application on the ground "that the time limited by the act of assembly entitled an act to provide a mode by which to perpetuate testimony in relation to wills, choses in action, other papers and records destroyed or lost during the recent war, dated December 21st, 1865, and acts amendatory thereto, within which parties were allowed to come in and obtain relief thereunder has long since expired." This objection was overruled and an order made substituting a new record for such original record. The only questions submitted by the present appeal are, whether the time allowed by statute for making such application has expired, and whether the proper effect of the acts in question is to preclude the making of such application after the expiration of the time allowed for that purpose.

It is material to inquire whether the Court of Common Pleas, prior to the statute, possessed power to allow the substitution of new records in the place of original records lost or destroyed, as having a bearing on the proper effect of the statute. This will constitute the first point of inquiry. No direct authorities have been found in this state, but abundant authority exists for concluding that the superior courts of law in England possess such authority.

*32

*King v. Bolton, 1 Stra. 140. In this case the record of the King's Bench was stolen while being transmitted to the House of Lords, and a new record was ordered to be filed by the King's Bench, which was affirmed in the House of Lords.

Evans v. Thomas, 2 Stra. 833. Here a judgment roll was lost after being "docquetted," but before being filed. Leave was granted to file a new roll, the defendant being dead and the executor consenting. The allowance of this substitution cannot be regarded as resting entirely on the consent of the parties, as the court took into consideration its effect upon purchasers, as appears by the statement of the report that "there being a docquet it could be no deceit upon purchasers."

Douglass v. Yellop, 2 Burr. 722. Through the neglect of the clerk, in 1729, a judgment had not been entered and the roll was lost. A rule was made thirty years after, in 1759, for the clerk to sign a new roll, "wherein is entered the judgment, signed in this cause in Michaelmass Term, 1729, and filed amongst the rolls of that term, a special entry being first made expressing the day of docquetting the same."

Dagrell v. Bridge, 2 Stra. 1264. In that case a new postea was ordered to be made out in the place of one lost.

It appears by these authorities that the courts of England, of general jurisdiction, possess authority to substitute a new judgment record for one lost or stolen, and that the lapse of thirty years does not preclude an application for that purpose from being granted. No statute authority is referred to as the ground of such competency, and it must be referred to the principles of the common law.

If such a power results from the principles of the common law it would apply to our Circuit Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions as embodying all the principles of jurisdiction recognized by the common law as appertaining to courts of general original jurisdiction, when not otherwise denied by positive law, either constitutional or statutory. It is certainly essential to the powers of these courts that they should possess such competency, and if this proposition is maintained they must be deemed to possess it in virtue of the principle that a grant of *general public authority contains, by implication, all that is necessary to the full exercise of such authority.

*33

If a judgment roll should be abstracted and destroyed by the party against whom the judgment was recovered, no one would doubt the authority of the court to replace it, as to suppose inability so to do would be to deny to the courts that which is clearly essential to the efficacy of their judgments. There is no difference in principle, as it regards the power of the court to replace a record, between the two cases of a malicious destruction by the act of a party before the court and of a loss or destruction occurring by accident or negligence without malicious intent. The power put in exercise is the same in both cases, however much difference there may be in the reasons calling for its exercise in the two cases. Where the destruction or loss occurs while the plaintiff is actively pressing his rights under such judgment the necessity for such a power is apparent. If, then, the power exists for any length of time, or for any purpose, it must be regarded as a general power, there being nothing in its nature to suggest that it is either of a temporary or special or restricted character. While a judgment remains in a condition to be enforced, the powers and duties of the court continue unchanged, and there is as much reason for the continuance of such a power as there is for its existence in the case of recent judgments actively pressed. Section 437 of the code, authorizing the court to supply lost pleadings and papers, must therefore be regarded as conferring no new power, but as recognizing one that already existed, and, therefore, it is unnecessary to consider whether judgments are within the description of those records capable of being restored under that section, for, regarding it in that light, there is nothing expressed or necessarily implied by it that can be regarded as a limitation of pre-existing powers. We are of opinion that the Court of Common Pleas, independently of the statutes in question and in virtue of its general authority, possessed the general power of substituting new records in the place of its original records lost or destroyed, and that that power extended to judgment records.

*34

*The legislature could, beyond doubt, substitute for the general mode of proceeding by motion to the court for relief of this character, a more formal proceeding, or a different and inconsistent proceeding, and if it appeared that the object of such legislation was substitution and not the creation of an auxiliary or additional remedy, or the confirmation of an existing one, such substitution might have the effect either to take away the previous remedy or suspend its operation while the statutory remedy was in force. We do not find any such intent to create a substitute for the common law remedy by motion, in such cases, in the statute in question.

The remedy there contemplated is by motion, with no new incidents or limitations as to the mode of proceeding or the authority of the court thereunder. The most that can be assumed is that it was thought doubtful whether requisite authority existed in the courts for that purpose and deemed desirable that the competency of the courts in such a case should be placed beyond doubt. It is reasonable to assume that such was the motive that induced the passage of the act. As there is nothing in the mode of procedure, or in the results capable of being attained under the statute, that either enlarged or narrowed the powers previously possessed by the Court of Common Pleas, we see no reason for holding that the adoption of the statute either took away or suspended the ordinary power of the court in such cases.

Unless the statutes in question have some effect additional to that already discussed, it will be unnecessary to inquire whether the provisions of the statute were in force at the time the order appealed from was made or had expired by their own limitation, for, in either case, the power of the court to grant that relief is undoubted.

It is contended by the appellant that the act of 1871, (15 Stat. 537,) "renews and extends the act of 1865 until February 11th, 1876, which time has long since expired," and, therefore, has the effect of a declaration that the act of 1865 shall not be operative after that day. It is claimed that this is equivalent to a declaration that the remedy provided by the act shall not be allowed after that day. It is not claimed that such is the *express declaration of the act, the argument being that it is a fair and reasonable inference arising from the consideration of the objects that the statute had in view. As that which is claimed is the destruction of a power vital to the administration of justice, such a result cannot be admitted except where the intent to that effect is clearly expressed or may be gathered on the principles of necessary construction. It is clear that no such ground exists in the present case, as there is no express declaration, and all the purposes of the statute can be attained without ascribing such effect to them. But, even if the statute was open for implications, standing on grounds of less certainty than such as are competent to sustain a necessary inference, it would be impossible for this court to say from any evidence furnished by the statute in question, that the legislature had before its mind any question of the propriety of withdrawing from the courts powers of so important a character or subjecting them to restrictions of any kind. Without such fact there is nothing on which to base a conclusion that the statute intended to interfere in any way with the common law powers of the courts in cases like the present.

*35

The appeal must be dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 35

(Case No. 900.)

STERNBERGER v. McSWEEN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Justices of the Peace ⇐171.]

On appeal to the Circuit Court from a trial justice's judgment, where the amount involved exceeds $10, there must be a trial de novo, unless appellant states in his notice of appeal that such appeal is taken upon questions of law only.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 656; Dec. Dig. ⇐171.]

[2. Justices of the Peace ⇐175.]

The trial being de novo the parties are not restricted to a repetition of the evidence offered in the court below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 697; Dec. Dig. ⇐175.]

[3. Agriculture ⇐13.]

A lienee, under the agricultural lien law, is not entitled to recover from an innocent purchaser the value of property covered by the lien, sold by such purchaser before action brought.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Jackson v. Merchants' Hotel Ass'n, 37 S. C. 569, 16 S. E. 713.

For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. ⇐13.]

*36

[4. Chattel Mortgages ⇐153.]

*An unrecorded chattel mortgage is of no avail against a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration without notice.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Burriss v. Owen, 76 S. C. 482, 57 S. E. 542.

For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 255; Dec. Dig. ⇐153.]

[5. Agriculture ⇐12.]

Under the act of 1878, (16 Stat. 411,) which requires agricultural liens to be filed in the office of the register of mesne conveyance, and an index thereof to be kept by that officer, a lien filed and immediately thereafter withdrawn by the lienee and retained in his possession, is not constructive notice to third parties, notwithstanding the proper entry appears in the index.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Archer v. Long, 46 S. C. 294, 295, 24 S. E. 83; Townsend v. Sparks, 50 S. C. 383, 27 S. E. 801.

For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. ⟸12.]

[6. Evidence ⟸87.]

The presumption of law that an officer has done his duty may be rebutted by proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. ⟸87.]

[7. Agriculture ⟸14.]

The lienee cannot avoid the consequences of the register's default in permitting the lien to be taken from its file, when the removal was the act of the lienee himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. §§ 38, 39; Dec. Dig. ⟸14.]

[8. Records ⟸16.]

This court cannot sanction the withdrawal of a paper from the files of a public office, even though by permission of the officer in charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. ⟸16.]

[9. Action ⟸35.]

[Cited in Kennedy v. Reames, 15 S. C. 552; Jennings v. Abbeville County, 24 S. C. 549; Whilden & Co. v. Pearce, 27 S. C. 48, 2 S. E. 709; Cope v. Hampton County, 42 S. C. 21, 19 S. E. 1018; Michalson v. All, 43 S. C. 460, 21 S. E. 323, 49 Am. St. Rep. 857; Newton v. Odom, 67 S. C. 10, 45 S. E. 105; Bingham v. Harby & Co., 91 S. C. 123, 74 S. E. 369, to the point that one who undertakes to enforce his rights under a lien, which is the creature of a statute, must confine himself to the remedy furnished by the statute.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 273–294; Dec. Dig. ⟸35.]

[This case is also cited in Creech v. Long, 72 S. C. 31, 51 S. E. 614, without specific application, and in Link v. Barksdale, 70 S. C. 487, 50 S. E. 189, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Hudson, J., Darlington, March, 1880.

This was an action instituted before a trial justice by H. Sternberger to recover from John McSween $45.30, the value of a bale of cotton purchased by McSween from one L. Morris, and re-sold before action brought. The cotton had been raised by Morris during the year 1879, and plaintiff claimed that it was subject to an agricultural lien in his favor, by virtue of the following agreement:

"Whereas, it is agreed by and between H. Sternberger, merchant, and L. D. Morris, all of said county and state, that the said H. Sternberger is to make advances of provisions and supplies to the said ———, not to exceed in amount seventy-five dollars; the advances being for the purpose of enabling the said L. D. Morris more effectually to carry on the cultivation of his farm and produce a crop therefrom, in said county, on which he is engaged at work for the present year.

"Now know all men by these presents, that I, the said L. D. Morris, for and in consideration of the said advances to be made by the said H. Sternberger, whether at one time or at various times through the current year, have bargained, sold and pledged, and by these presents do bargain, sell and pledge unto the said H. Sternberger, all and every portion of the cotton, corn, peas, small grain, fodder, or other crops which I may produce on said *farm the present year, or so much thereof as may be necessary to fully pay and satisfy the amounts advanced to me under this agreement, save and except enough of same to satisfy the rent for the land, if there be any rent due on the same; and the said crop or crops to be prepared for market and delivered to said H. Sternberger between the months of August and October, the present year.

*37

"In witness whereof, we, the contracting parties, have hereunto set our hands and seals this 13th day of January, 1879.

"H. Sternberger. [L. S.]
"L. D. Morris. [L. S.]

"Executed in the presence of
"C. Alexander."

This paper was filed in the office of the clerk of the court, as ex officio register of mesne conveyances, and the following entry was made in the Index to Liens:

"L. D. Morris—H. Sternberger advances—$75.00—Jan'y 17, 1879."

Plaintiff had no knowledge, previous to the sale to defendant, that Morris was disposing of his crop, and defendant had no actual notice of plaintiff's lien until after he had bought and sold, in the usual course of business. The cotton was not planted at the date of the agreement.

The trial justice gave judgment for plaintiff for the sum demanded. The defendant gave notice of appeal, upon grounds which raised questions of law only, but he did not say so in totidem verbis in his notice.

In the Circuit Court the presiding judge held that there must be a trial de novo, and permitted proof to be offered that the agreement, after being filed and indexed, was immediately withdrawn by Sternberger and retained in his possession until after this action was commenced—a fact not shown in the trial below.

The Circuit judge held that the agreement was substantially an agricultural lien; that plaintiff could not recover the value of the cotton from defendant, who had sold before action brought; and that the index was not constructive notice to defendant of the lien. He gave judgment for defendant, with costs. Plaintiff appealed. The grounds of his appeal and the positions *assumed in the argument are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court, except the last position, which is thus stated by appellant:

*38

"We say that the clerk of the court is supposed to have done his duty; after receiving and filing the paper, if he chose to give the same back to Sternberger, when it was his duty to retain the same, are we to suffer?"

Mr. J. J. Ward, for appellant.

Messrs. Boyd & Nettles, contra.

July 30th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. The object of this action is to recover the value of a bale of cotton, sold to the defendant by one Morris, upon which the plaintiff claimed to have a lien, by virtue of an agreement in writing, between himself and said Morris, which, it is insisted, amounts to what is commonly called an agricultural lien, under the provisions of the act of March 4th, 1878. 16 Stat. 410. This agreement, bearing date January 13th, 1879, a copy of which is set out in the case, was received in the clerk's office on January 17th, 1879, and so marked, and was indexed by the name of the parties, the amount of the advances and the date of its entry in that office: but as soon as it was indexed it was taken out of the office by the plaintiff and remained in his possession until the trial in the court below. The action was originally instituted before a trial justice, and, he having rendered judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant gave notice of appeal to the Circuit Court upon various grounds, which are fully set out in the case. That court proceeded to hear the case de novo, and, upon such hearing, rendered judgment for the defendant, and from that judgment this appeal has been taken.

Various exceptions were taken to the rulings and the final decision of the Circuit judge, and the questions thus raised will be considered in their order. The first question is as to the right of the defendant, who was the appellant in the Circuit Court, to have a trial there de novo. It is contended here that as the grounds of appeal from the judgment of the trial justice raised *questions of law only, the case could not be tried de novo in the Circuit Court. This position is based, as we understand it, upon the language of the proviso to Section 369 of the code of procedure. That section provides that on appeal from a judgment of a trial justice, where the amount in controversy exceeds the sum of $10, as it does here, "a new trial shall be had in the Circuit Court in the following appellate cases: 1. When the judgment was rendered upon an issue of law joined between the parties. 2. When it was rendered upon an issue of fact joined between parties, whether the defendant was present at the trial or not." Then follows the proviso, containing a mere permission to appellant to waive his right to a new trial, by stating in his notice of appeal that such appeal is taken upon questions of law only. The only person who can avail himself of this permission is the appellant, and unless he does so in the manner prescribed by the statute, the code declares that "a new trial shall be had" even in cases "where the judgment was rendered upon an issue of law joined between the parties." We are unable to perceive the force of the argument drawn from the fact that Section 370 of the code requires the appellant to serve a notice of appeal "stating the grounds" upon which the appeal is founded. The provisions of this section apply to every case in which there is an appeal, and it is manifest that there are some cases in which, upon appeal, the trial must be de novo, we do not see why this requirement should operate, in this case, to abridge or deny the right of the appellant, in the Circuit Court, to a new trial there.

*39

The next position taken is, that even if the trial should be de novo the parties should have been restricted to the issues raised before the trial justice, and that the Circuit Court erred in permitting the defendant to offer additional testimony to that adduced before the trial justice. We do not see the force of this objection. When a new trial is had, it seems to us that it should be conducted just as if there had been no previous trial, and either party is at liberty to offer any competent testimony pertinent to the issues involved in the case. Here there were no formal pleadings before the trial justice. The plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to recover the value of the bale of cotton in question, and this being denied by the defendant, any testimony *tending to defeat the plaintiff's claim was certainly pertinent to the issue which the court was called upon to try, and, if otherwise competent, was clearly admissible, even though it may not have been offered at the original hearing before the trial justice.

*40

The next question to be considered is, whether the paper in question, assuming it to be an agricultural lien, would authorize the bringing of this action; in other words, whether the lien provided for by the statute invests the lienee with such a right of possession in the property covered by the lien, as would entitle him to recover the value of such property from an innocent purchaser who had previously disposed of it. An agricultural lien, as it is commonly called, is the creature of the statute, and to ascertain its nature and the rights which it confers, resort must be had to the terms of the statute. Looking into the statute we do not find that it purports to give such a paper the incidents of a chattel mortgage. It does not confer upon the lienee the right to the possession of the property covered by it even after default and while the property still remains in the possession of the lienor, and, certainly, not while it is in the possession of an innocent purchaser. The remedy which the statute provides is of a totally different character. So far from authorizing the lienee to seize the property covered by the lien, even after default, it expressly provides that such seizure shall be made by an officer of the law, under a warrant issued by another officer. In this respect the lien provided for by the statute differs very materially from a chattel mortgage. One who undertakes to enforce his rights under a lien which is the creature of a statute, must confine himself to the remedy provided by the statute. The right is derived solely from the statute, and the remedy resorted to must be that furnished by the statute. The attempt to invest an agricultural lien with the qualities of a chattel mortgage, is an attempt to interpolate into the statute provisions which the legislature has not seen fit to adopt, for, certainly, if that body had designed to give an agricultural lien the qualities of a chattel mortgage, it would have been very easy to have said so. On the contrary, however, the agreement provided for by the statute, which creates the lien, lacks one of the qualities of a chattel mortgage, which has been held (Green v.

*41

Jacobs, 5 S. C. 283,) *to be essential to invest the mortgagee with the right to the possession of the property, in that it does not contemplate any provision whatever for the transfer of the title; and, as we have seen, the remedy provided by the statute manifestly contemplates no change in the title, but, on the other hand, presupposes the continuance of the title in the lienor, subject, however, to the lien, until it is transferred by the execution of the process of the law, just as in the case of property covered by the lien of a judgment or execution, the title to the property remains in the judgment debtor until it is transferred by a sale under process of law; and one who purchases from the judgment debtor takes subject to the lien, which follows the property into whosoever hands it may go, but the purchaser, after he has disposed of it, cannot be made liable for the value of the property or for the proceeds of its sale. Paysinger v. Shumpard, 1 Bail. 237. The foregoing remarks are based upon the character of the agreement contemplated by the statute; and the fact that the agreement in the case now under consideration does contain words purporting to transfer the title, cannot affect the argument as to the proper construction of the statute and the rights which it was designed to confer. These words might, possibly, have the effect of converting the paper in question into a chattel mortgage, as is argued by the respondent, though upon this point also we are inclined to agree with the Circuit judge, and if they should have such effect, then, manifestly, the plaintiff could not maintain his action. For, aside from the question whether the paper could be sustained as a chattel mortgage upon a crop not yet planted, as against the rights of a third person, (a question which we do not propose to consider, as all the facts necessary for its proper determination are not before us,) it is not pretended that it ever was recorded in the manner in which mortgages are required to be recorded, and, therefore, could avail nothing against the defendant who is a subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration without notice.

Another question has been raised by the grounds of appeal which, under the view we have taken, it is not absolutely necessary to decide, but as the point raised is one of importance it may be well for us to express our views. That question is *whether the paper, considered as an agricultural lien, was properly recorded so as to affect subsequent purchasers with constructive notice. To state the question more precisely—was the entry of this paper in the office of the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, who, in the county where the parties resided is ex officio register of mesne conveyances, and indexing it as was done in this case, a sufficient compliance with the sixth section of the act of March 4th, 1878, (16 Stat. 411,) or was it necessary that the paper should remain on file in that office? The act requires that every lien "shall be filed in the office of the register of mesne conveyances for the county in which the lienor resides. * * * and he shall keep an index of all such liens so filed, * * * and this shall be a sufficient record of the same." It is argued that the word "this" refers only to the indexing required and not to the filing. This appears to us to be a forced and unnatural construction. The legislature manifestly designed to dispense with the usual mode of recording by copying the paper at length, and to substitute another simpler and cheaper, to wit, by filing the original paper and indexing it, and then declared that "this"—that is the new mode, not merely one of the incidents of the new mode, the indexing, but both, the filing and the indexing, should be a sufficient record.

*42

Again, it is argued that filing a paper in the clerk's office does not necessarily convey the idea that it is to remain there, but that it may be marked filed and taken out of the office; and this view, it is urged, is supported by the prevalent practice in this state, to take papers from the clerk's office after they have been marked filed therein. There is no evidence in this case of any such custom, and if we were to assume its existence, we do not feel at liberty to give it judicial sanction. When papers are placed on file in a public office, they become public records, open to the inspection of the public, under proper regulations; but if private individuals are at liberty to remove them whenever they see fit, they necessarily lose their character as public records. They are in the custody of the officer in whose office they are filed, and he is responsible for them. If he chooses to allow individuals to remove the originals rather than to require them to procure copies, that is a matter of mere favor and not of right, *and while we may not feel called upon to volunteer a condemnation of such a practice, we certainly cannot be expected to give it judicial sanction. As is said in 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 524: "A paper is said to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer and by him received to be kept on file." In addition to this the proper office of an index is to afford a ready means of finding something else which contains the information desired, and if that something else is not in the office where the index is kept, it would not serve the purpose for which it is intended. The statute does not prescribe how the index should be kept, and the presumption is that it was intended to be kept in the usual way, and if so kept it would not afford such information as the statute evidently designed should be furnished to the public. The fact that the index in this particular case was fuller than usual cannot affect the question as to the proper construction of the statute, which requires a mere index, not an abstract.

*43

Finally, it is argued that the presumption is that the clerk did his duty, and at all events the appellant should not suffer for the clerk's default. There is no doubt that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the presumption is that a public officer has done his duty, but here the proof shows the contrary, and there is no room for the presumption invoked. As to the other branch of the proposition, that is likewise disposed of by the evidence, which shows that it was by the appellant's own act and consent that the paper was removed from the office after it was indexed, and retained in his own custody. But even if it was the default of the clerk, it is difficult to see how that could affect McSween. If a party delivers a mortgage or other paper to the clerk to be recorded, and he neglects to do so, we can very readily understand how he might be made responsible for any damages occasioned by such a neglect of duty, but how an innocent third person could be made to suffer for such a neglect of duty on the part of a public officer it would be more difficult to comprehend.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *44

*(Case No. 901.)

PFEIFER & CO. v. DARGAN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇨ 326.

Under an assignment for the benefit of such creditors of assignor as shall establish their claims within a time limited, and agree to receive their dividends from the assigned estate in full discharge of their demands, and which excludes from its benefits all creditors neglecting or refusing to comply with these conditions, the whole of the assigned estate is applicable to creditors who do so comply, to the extent of their debts proven.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. §§ 950–957; Dec. Dig. ⇨326.]

[2. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, ⇨ 326.]

A concluding clause in such assignment to the effect that dividends otherwise applicable to creditors neglecting or refusing to accept the provisions of the assignment, shall remain in the hands of the assignee, subject to such order as the court may make regarding the same, was not intended to apply to such creditors as failed, through their own fault or neglect, to comply strictly with the requirements of the previous conditions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. § 952; Dec. Dig. ⇨326.]

[3. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇨ 326.]

Although such conditions are permitted rather than favored, the courts cannot, in the construction of a subsidiary clause of such assignment, resort to implications which are not necessary, and which would conflict with the express terms of the main body of such instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. §§ 950–957; Dec. Dig. ⇨326.]

Before Kershaw, J., Sumter, June, 1879.

This was an action brought by Charles M. Pfeifer & Co., in their behalf alone, against Herman Schwerin on an acceptance in favor of Charles M. Pfeifer & Co. and against John W. Dargan, assignee, under a deed executed by Schwerin for the benefit of his creditors.

The complaint prayed judgment against Schwerin for the amount due on said acceptance, and that the defendant Dargan might be decreed to satisfy the same out of the funds then in his hands derived under said deed. There was no further prayer.

The deed of assignment from Schwerin to Dargan was put in evidence. It transferred the entire estate of Schwerin to Dargan, "to and for the following uses and purposes, and none other," to wit:

"In trust that he, the said John W. Dargan, (in conjunction with the agent, if any, to be appointed by my creditors,) shall sell the said stock of goods, wares and merchandise and store *fixtures for cash, in such manner as he may deem most advantageous; and to collect said debts and demands due me as aforesaid as speedily as possible, and, after deducting the commissions allowed him by law and the necessary expenses of selling said stock and collecting said demands, to pay out of the moneys arising therefrom, in equal and ratable proportions, to all the creditors of the said Herman Schwerin, upon notes or accounts or obligations of any character, as shall render in the same to the said

*45

John W. Dargan, and establish the same within ninety days from the date of these presents; and who shall, at the time of rendering and establishing said demands, signify and accept in writing that the dividends so to be received shall be a free and full discharge of their said claims and demands against the said Herman Schwerin; and, upon the payment of said dividends, shall grant such full and final release and discharge, hereby debarring and excluding all and every creditor of the said Herman Schwerin from any advantage or benefit whatever, under any provision of this assignment, who shall neglect for the period aforesaid, or refuse to render in and establish his, her or their demand, and signify and assent in the manner aforesaid to accept of their dividends as a full and final discharge of their claim or demand against the said Herman Schwerin.

"In case any of my creditors shall refuse or neglect to accept of the provisions of this assignment, the dividend, which would be applicable to their demands, shall remain in the hands of said assignee, subject to such order as the court may make in the premises regarding the same.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 6th day of January, A. D. 1879.

(Signed) H. Schwerin." [L. S.]

The defendants, Schwerin and Dargan, in their answer, denied that plaintiff had any right to or interest in the fund.

John W. Dargan, assignee, was sworn on behalf of defendants. He testified that the total amount of debts due by Schwerin was about $5000; that his creditors, to the extent of about $4500, before any dividend had been declared or paid, had assented to and accepted the terms and provisions of the deed of assignment; that some four or five of the creditors, the aggregate of whose *debts was about $500, including the plaintiff in this separate action, had neglected and refused to render in and establish their demands, or to accept or assent to the terms and provisions of the deed, and had brought their separate actions against him, which are still pending; that the proceeds of the assigned estate amounted on the whole to about $2000; that he had paid the assenting creditors up to that time about thirty-six per cent. of their demands, and the balance remaining in his hands would pay them about five per cent. more, and that they were demanding such balance; that the plaintiff in this action, as well as those who had brought their separate actions against him, had neglected or refused to accept or assent to the terms of the deed; that this balance in his hands is the dividends to which the non-assenting creditors would have been entitled had they come in under the deed, and which they are now suing him for.

*46

The case was heard by the presiding judge, who, after finding the facts as above stated, concluded his judgment in words following:

A debtor is allowed to make an assignment of his estate upon the condition that his creditors, before receiving any portion of the same, shall be required to execute a release of all demands against the debtor. In such a case, where all releasing creditors have been paid the full amount of their respective dividends, and a surplus remains in the hands of the assignee, there results a trust to the assignor as to such surplus, unless there be some other disposition made of it by the deed. In this case the deed declares that if any creditor shall neglect or refuse to accept of the provisions of the assignment, the dividend which would be applicable to his demand shall remain in the hands of the assignee, subject to such order as the court may make regarding the same. The fund so remaining is, in equity, distributable among the unpaid creditors. Niolon v. Douglas, 2 Hill's Eq. 455 [30 Am. Dec. 368].

It is, therefore, adjudged that the defendant, H. Schwerin, do pay the plaintiff the sum of $86.80, with interest thereon from November 13th, 1878, together with the costs and disbursements of the plaintiff herein, to be adjusted by the clerk of the court *and inserted in this judgment, and that the plaintiff have execution therefor against the said H. Schwerin.

*47

That the defendant, John W. Dargan, as assignee, do pay from the fund remaining in his hands as such, the pro rata share of the same to which the plaintiff is entitled under the principles of this decree, as hereinbefore declared, first deducting from the entire fund his costs and disbursements, as one of the defendants herein, to be adjusted by the said clerk; the sum so paid to be credited on the judgment of the plaintiff herein.

That any other creditor of the fund entitled under the principles of this decree to a share therein, may apply, at the foot of this judgment, for such order as may be necessary to secure his rights in the premises.

Dargan, the assignee, appealed, upon the following grounds:

1. Because his Honor erred in not dismissing the complaint as to John W. Dargan, assignee.

2. Because his Honor erred in decreeing that the plaintiff had any interest in or right to the fund in the hands of the assignee, or any part thereof.

3. Because his Honor erred in not decreeing that plaintiff should release his demand according to the terms of the deed, upon receiving a pro rata share of the fund derived thereunder.

4. Because his Honor erred in converting plaintiffs' complaint into a creditor's bill, and decreeing that any other creditor might apply under that decree for any necessary order to secure his rights in the fund.

Messrs. Moise & Lee, for appellant.
Mr. J. H. Earle, contra.

August 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. The only matter presented by the appeal in this case, is the construction of an insolvent debtor's assignment for the benefit of releasing creditors. The question is whether, by the terms of the assignment, the whole proceeds of the assigned estate were to be distributed among such creditors as *proved their debts in a certain time, and agreed to release, in accordance with the condition attached to the assignment, to the extent necessary to satisfy the debts due to them by the assignor. If such is the proper construction of the instrument of assignment, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action, as the whole fund is insufficient to satisfy the releasing creditors, and the Circuit judgment is erroneous.

*48

But the plaintiffs, who are the respondents, contend that by the terms of the assignment the releasing creditors can only receive their ratable share of the assigned estate, estimating, for the purpose of ascertaining that proportion, the whole amount of the indebtedness of the estate, and that such proportion of the assigned estate as would have gone to the non-releasing creditors, had they consented to release, according to the terms of the assignment, is a fund undisposed of, and, accordingly, subject to the claims of creditors generally. The Circuit Court sustained the claim of the plaintiffs and gave judgment accordingly.

The assignment, after transferring the estate to an assignee, proceeds to declare the trusts upon which the same is made, and directs that so much of the proceeds thereof as shall be available for that purpose shall be paid "in equal and ratable proportions to all the creditors of the said Herman Schwerin, upon notes or accounts or obligations of any character, as shall render in the same to the said John W. Dargan, and establish the same within ninety days from the date of these presents; and who shall, at the time of rendering and establishing said demands, signify and accept, in writing, that the dividends so to be received shall be a free and full discharge of their said claims and demands against the said Herman Schwerin; and, upon the payment of said dividends, shall grant such full and final release and discharge."

The assignment then proceeds to exclude from its benefits all creditors who shall neglect or refuse, within the prescribed time, to establish their demands and signify the consent previously provided for.

Considering this part of the assignment independently of the concluding clause of the instrument, under which the point of difficulty has arisen, it is clear that the intention was to divide the whole estate among a certain class of creditors, namely, such *as should prove their demands and signify the requisite consent within the time prescribed. The direction to divide, ratably, among "all of the creditors" * * * "as shall render," &c., can receive no other construction than that the rate of distribution was to be established with reference alone to the class provided for, consisting of such as could prove their debts and signify the proper consent in due time. It is presumably the intention of the assignor, in assignments of this class, that his whole estate shall go to such creditors as he choses to prefer, to the extent necessary to satisfy their demands against him. The motive of the creditors in releasing is, ordinarily, to gain an advantage over non-releasing creditors, or, what is equivalent, to prevent releasing creditors from gaining such advantage over him. That advantage usually consists in the fact that releasing creditors generally take the whole estate, if necessary, to satisfy their demands. There is nothing in that part of the assignment, already considered, that indicates a different intention from that just mentioned as usually characteristic of assignments of this class.

*49

Unless the remaining clause of the assignment has the effect to fix on the instrument a different intention, that already stated must stand as its clear purpose.

The assignment concludes as follows: "In case any of my creditors shall refuse or neglect to accept of the provisions of this assignment, the dividend which would be applicable to their demands, shall remain in the hands of said assignee, subject to such order as the court may make in the premises regarding the same." The direct sense of this clause is that the assignee shall not apply that portion of the estate which would have been the share of non-releasing creditors in the event that they had complied with the condition of the assignment without the aid of the court. The proper recipients of this part of the estate were not pointed out in this clause, therefore there is nothing in its direct effect to conflict with the designation of such persons made in the former part of the instrument.

Is there a necessity for extending this direct sense of this clause in the manner contended for? If there is such a necessity it must be created by the instrument itself. In the first *place there is no hiatus in the expression of the intention of the assignment, to be supplied constructively, as the previous portion of the instrument had fully declared the trusts in that respect. In the next place, the clause under immediate examination can take full force and effect, without any enlargement by implication. There is a clear purpose that can be ascribed to it, sufficient to account for its introduction. It might well be that creditors entitled to prove their debts and signify their consent to release might be prevented from so doing without fault or neglect on their part and under circumstances which would raise an equity for them to be let into the benefits of the arrangement notwithstanding the want of strict compliance with the express requirements. As the provisions that deprive the non-releasing creditors of an interest in the proceeds of the assigned estate are in the nature of a forfeiture, and, as such, equity might, in a proper case, relieve against them, it was eminently prudent to enable the assignor to demand the aid of the court in ascertaining the existence of such forfeiture and not compel him at the peril of risk and expense to prejudge such questions. It is evident, then, as neither the instrument at large nor the particular clause under consideration make any demand for the enlargement, by implication, of the sense of that clause, having full and complete operation without it, there is neither reason nor justification for so doing.

*50

Nor is there any reason for a resort to implication arising from the fact that conditional preferences, having a compulsory effect upon creditors, are rather permitted than favored. If the instrument left a doubt of its intention, the effect of favor or disfavor might make a difference in the character of the inferences drawn to supply such doubt; but disfavor is no ground for injecting into an instrument that which is not demanded by its language or fair import. To go to the extent of raising out of a clause, subsidiary to the main purpose of the instrument, an implication not demanded by such clause, which shall have the effect to unsettle the express terms employed in that part of the instrument, the office of which is to create the trusts, is not warranted by the principles of construction, and, if defended on the ground of disfavor for such assignments, would place the *principle of favor and disfavor in the light of an arbitrary power of dispensation.

51

The construction that has just been placed upon the assignment is in harmony with the presumable intent of the assignor. He would not, as we must assume from the nature of the condition of the assignment, have annexed the condition except as affording a motive for releasing. If, then the releasing creditor could get no more by releasing than he would get by equal division among all creditors without any condition annexed, he has no motive for releasing. A construction that would destroy the motive for releasing would destroy the purpose of the condition, and cannot be ascribed to the mind of the assignor, nor does it result from the principles of law, for, as held in this state, they permit the use of such conditions in the assignment of insolvent debtors.

It must be concluded that it was the intention of the assignment that the proceeds of the estate, available for that purpose, should be divided ratably among such creditors as are entitled to be regarded as having complied with the condition of the assignment, and, consequently, the Circuit decree must be set aside and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the principles hereinbefore laid down.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J's, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 51

(Case No. 902.)

CHERAW & CHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY v. WHITE.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Corporations ⇐514.]

Where the complaint alleges a corporate existence in the plaintiff, and no facts or circumstances appear upon the face of the complaint showing in plaintiff a want of corporate authority, or of capacity to sue, a demurrer to the complaint under Class 2, of Section 167 of the code, cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. Garland, 14 S. C. 63.

For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2052–2081; Dec. Dig. ⇐514.]

[2. Corporations ⇐514.]

A reference to its charter in the complaint of a corporation plaintiff does not so incorporate the charter into the complaint as to render the state*ment of its right to sue defective, by reason of the failure to allege the performance of conditions precedent to its corporate existence.

*52

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. Garland, 14 S. C. 63.

For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2053; Dec. Dig. ⇐514.]

[3. Corporations ⇐514.]

The performance of conditions precedent to a corporate existence is a matter of proof, and a failure to allege such performance is not ground for demurrer under the second class of Section 167 of the code.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. Garland, 14 S. C. 63; Harle v. Morgan & Co., 29 S. C. 259, 7 S. E. 487.

For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2052–2081; Dec. Dig. ⇐514.]

[4. Corporations ⇐35.]

The charter of a railroad company conferred corporate powers in terms importing an immediate grant, with a proviso "that said persons shall commence operations upon said road within two years after the passage of this act, and complete the same within five years." Held, that the requirements of the proviso were not conditions precedent to a corporate existence.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cheraw & C. R. Co. v. Garland, 14 S. C. 63.

For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. ⇐35.]

[5. Corporations ⇐90.]

The charter of a railroad company permitted subscriptions in labor, materials or land, as well as in money; in action brought by the corporation to recover a stock subscription, the complaint alleged that the "defendant subscribed to the joint stock of the said company four hundred dollars, for and in consideration of eight shares of the capital stock," and also alleged a demand of payment. Held, on demurrer, that the complaint sufficiently stated that the subscription was payable in money and was due before action brought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 406; Dec. Dig. ⇐90.]

[6. Corporations ⇐77.]

The word "subscribe," in contracts of this nature, has a distinctively definite sense, and includes the idea of a promise to pay the amount subscribed in the manner agreed upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 210–212, 219–243, 455; Dec. Dig. ⇐77.]

[7. Costs ⇐51.]

Where a demurrer to a complaint is overruled, the Circuit judge may require the payment of all costs up to that time, as a condition of leave to answer.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Lowry v. Jackson, 27 S. C. 324, 3 S. E. 473.

For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 220; Dec. Dig. ⇐51.]

Before Wallace, J., Chesterfield, January, 1879.

This was an action commenced in January, 1878, by the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company against Ellison B. White. The complaint is as follows:

The above named plaintiff, complaining of the defendant, respectfully shows to this court:

1. That on or about the ——— day of ———, 1873, the said defendant subscribed to the joint stock of the above named company $400, for and in consideration of eight shares of the capital stock of said company at $50 per share, the said subscription being made to aid in the construction and carrying into operation a railroad between the towns of Cheraw and Chester, in said state, pursuant to the provisions of an act of the legislature, entitled "An act to charter the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company," approved February 27th, A. D. 1873.

2. That the plaintiff is and ever has been ready since then, *upon the payment of said sum of money, to deliver to defendant a certificate of said stock; and defendant, although required and called on to pay the money so subscribed to plaintiff, according to the true intent and meaning of said subscription, has utterly refused and failed to pay the same or any part thereof.

*53

Wherefore plaintiffs demand judgment for the sum of $400, and interest thereon from January 1st, A. D. 1877.

To this complaint the defendant demurred, upon the grounds stated in the judgment of the Circuit Court.

In the brief it is stated that at the hearing "his Honor suggested to defendant's counsel that argument upon the incorporation of the company was unnecessary, as the act of the legislature granting the charter would determine that matter."

The judgment of the Circuit Court is as follows:

This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the amount subscribed by the defendant to the capital stock of the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company. The defendant has filed a demurrer to the complaint, alleging, as the first ground thereof, that plaintiff has not a legal capacity to sue, and specifies thereunder, First. That the act of incorporation is not alleged in the complaint. Second. That the corporators are not named therein, and no authority to enter into the contract is alleged. Third. And that the company is not chartered. Now as to this ground and the specifications, as recited, the court, after due reflection, has reached the conclusion that the plaintiff is a corporate body, and so constituted by the act of the general assembly, passed on February 27th, 1873, entitled "An act to charter the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company," and that it has, by reason of its organization under said act, been clothed with authority to sue. The act granting the charter being general and not a special act of the legislature, I am of opinion that it was not necessary for the plaintiff in the complaint to allege its corporate existence. It would be unnecessary to prove that the plaintiff was a corporation unless the defendant, in his answer, had alleged that the plaintiff was not a corporation; and, as a general rule, it is unnecessary to allege that which need not be proved. See Voorhies' Code (9th Rev. ed.) 213, and the various authorities there referred to.

*54

*If the plaintiffs were a foreign corporation, it might be necessary to allege its corporate existence; but, in the present instance, it is domestic, and the court is satisfied that there is no necessity for such allegation in the complaint. And here it may be observed that the defendant, by making the alleged subscription, had, in a measure, acknowledged the corporate existence of the plaintiff. The court can see no necessity for naming the corporators mentioned in the charter, nor for alleging any more authority for entering into the contract than is alleged in the complaint. The act of the legislature above referred to shows the grant of the charter to the company; and the question raised by the defendant that the plaintiff is not a chartered company, would appear to be more a question of fact than of law, unless it be assumed that the act of the legislature is a nullity. It appears, therefore, that the demurrer cannot be sustained on the first ground and the specifications thereunder.

The second ground of demurrer is, that the complaint does not state a cause of action; and the specifications thereunder are as follows, to wit: First. In that that it does not state that the subscription was to be paid in money. Second. In that that it does not allege the time when or the terms upon which the contract was made. Third. In that that it does not allege that the amount sued on was due before the commencement of the action. Fourth. In that it does not state a promise on the part of defendant to pay. On examination of the allegations of the complaint, the court finds that the complaint is not as full and complete as it might have been on the points referred to, but that, for the purposes of substantial justice between the parties, it is sufficient. The code does not favor a technical construction of pleadings, but only looks to the substance. And if the cause of action be substantially alleged, whether it be in full and complete form or not, it will meet the requirements of the code. If the allegations of the complaint on any of the points referred to were a little vague and indefinite, the defendant, by motion, could have required the plaintiff to make such allegations more definite. The court is of opinion that for the purpose of substantial justice between the parties the complaint is sufficient. The demurrer must, therefore, be overruled. The defendant, *however, on the payment of all costs which have accrued, may be allowed to answer over.

*55

The defendant appealed from this judgment upon the grounds taken in his demurrer, and upon the additional grounds, (1.) That his Honor erred in declining to hear argument on the question of law raised by the demurrer, whether the plaintiff is a chartered company, and in determining that question as a question of fact, without evidence or argument; and (2) that his Honor erred in requiring defendant to pay more costs than the costs of the demurrer.

Messrs. Prince & Caston, for appellants.

Messrs. R. E. Allison and M. J. Hough, contra.

August 14th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This action was brought to recover the amount of a subscription to the capital stock of the plaintiff company, alleged to have been made by the defendant, and not duly complied with on his part. The defendant demurred to the complaint on various grounds. This demurrer was overruled by the Circuit Court, and leave to answer granted on terms. From this decision the defendant now appeals.

The grounds of appeal follow the line of the reasoning of the Circuit opinion; but as the question now is, whether any ground exists for sustaining the conclusion reached by the Circuit Court, the sufficiency of the grounds stated in the demurrer will be considered in the order therein stated.

The first ground of demurrer is, that the plaintiff has no capacity to sue. Several propositions are stated under this ground of demurrer that, in substance, involve the general proposition that the plaintiffs have received, by law, only authority to become a corporation upon the performance of certain conditions precedent, and that the complaint contains no allegations showing that such conditions have been performed. Two questions are here presented: First. Was the plaintiff bound to do more than to assert its alleged rights in the character of a corporation, leav*ing the question of its right to sue in that character to be disputed by the defendant's answer as an issuable fact? If so, then the demurrer was clearly bad in this respect. Second. Whether by the act entitled "An act to charter the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company," (15 Stat. 442), the corporators therein named received immediate competency as a corporation under the name and style in which the plaintiff sues?

*56

The grounds upon which a demurrer to a complaint may be supported being, by the code, reduced to six, enumerated in Section 167, it becomes necessary to inquire whether any such ground of demurrer exists in the present case? The second ground stated in Section 167 is the only one that can possibly include the objections under consideration, and that is where it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. It may be conceded that the want of authority to act as a corporation by a plaintiff suing in that character, is a case where the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue in the sense of Section 167. It may also be conceded that when it appears, as matter of legal conclusion, that the plaintiff does not possess such capacity, a demurrer may be maintained. This want of legal capacity may appear either as a general incapacity attached to the character in which the plaintiff sues, or in facts and circumstances showing that the plaintiff is not entitled to the character in which he sues, or to any character in which he might have capacity to maintain the suit. It is presumable that every corporation having legal existence and rights, has, as such, capacity to maintain an action, therefore this is not a case in which it appears that the character in which the plaintiff sues is one to which the capacity to maintain an action is not ascribed by the law. The only question, then, that can be considered, as raised by the ground of demurrer under examination, is, whether facts and circumstances appear showing that the plaintiff is not entitled to appear in the character in which it has made itself a party. The general question, whether these facts and circumstances may, in any case, be made to appear by matters of which the court is bound to take judicial notice, such as the public statutes, or whether they must be, in all cases, pleaded so as to create an issue of fact, need not be considered. It is clear that the exist*ence of a particular corporation is a question of fact, and cannot be ascertained as a mere conclusion of law, except upon an admitted state of facts. At common law this was necessarily so, for corporations were created by letters patent of the Crown, or existed by virtue of long usage, so that the question of the existence of a corporation could only be legally ascertained upon proof of a royal grant, or of the long use of such corporate franchise, and could, for that reason, never be a pure question of law. Unless it appears that corporations can exist with us only under direct statute sanction, there is no basis for an argument that the nature of the issue has undergone any change in this respect. Although corporations in this country are usually created by statutes, public or private, yet it by no means follows that no such corporation can exist unless direct authority can be found conferred for that purpose by the statute. There may be corporations that can only show as their authority grants from the Crown of Great Britain, or some other governments once exercising sway over parts of the territory now occupied by the United States, issued while such government held sovereignty here. A grant from the Crown creating a franchise would be entitled to the same force and effect as a grant of lands, grantable by the Crown. But resort to such source of authority is not likely to occur in such a case, for, if corporate franchises so granted have been continuously exercised until the present day, the other principle of the common law, namely, that of long, undisputed use, would furnish a source of proof presumably more accessible. There is no ground for saying that the principles of the common law as to the effect of the use of corporate franchises for long periods of time in establishing title to use such franchises have undergone any change in this country. Such being the case it is not possible that the courts should have judicial knowledge of all the facts and circumstances enabling them to say whether any party claiming such franchise is entitled thereto. At all events the character of the issue in such cases, as settled by the principles of the common law, has undergone no change by direct statute authority, and, therefore, remains unchanged.

*57

The other case that may arise under the second class, men*tioned in Section 167, is where the facts and circumstances appear in the complaint, from which it is claimed, as an inference of law, that the plaintiff has no capacity to sue. It should be observed that the code does not make it a ground of demurrer; that the complaint does not set forth the facts and circumstances showing the plaintiff to be entitled to sue in the character in which he has come into court. On the contrary, the complaint itself must contain evidences that the plaintiff has no such capacity. This is what is plainly meant as to its appearing on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue. In a word it is no ground of demurrer; that it does not appear by the complaint that the plaintiff has legal capacity to sue, but only where such facts and circumstances appear as legally exclude the inference that the plaintiff has such capacity.

*58

The foregoing disposes of the principal question under the first ground of demurrer, as above stated, for the plaintiff not being bound to state the facts and circumstances entitling it to sue in the character set forth in the complaint, was not bound to set forth any conditions precedent upon which it might alone be authorized to exercise corporate franchises, such as are asserted by it, nor to aver that such conditions precedent were duly performed. But the argument of the appellant may be construed as including the proposition that the plaintiffs having made reference to an act of the legislature as its authority to make the contract sued upon, the complaint must be read as if all the provisions of the act were set out and pleaded at length in it, and, therefore, under the view which the appellant takes of that act, it would appear that there were certain conditions to be performed before the plaintiff could claim legally to exercise the powers of a corporation. As the plaintiff was not bound to set forth the facts and circumstances that entitle it to exercise the powers of a corporation, it is not clear upon what ground the provisions of the act can be incorporated in its complaint against its will. It is true that the complaint refers to the act to charter the plaintiff company, but that is alleged for the purpose of showing the nature and legal effect of the contract sued upon, for every subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, when a binding contract, is such in virtue of the charter or organic *compact under which the corporation acts, and, therefore, such charter, whether set out in words or by reference to the statute constituting it, is a proper part of the cause of action alleged. Such being the only purpose for which reference is made to the act chartering the plaintiff, it cannot, with any propriety, be said that the plaintiff has attempted to set forth its right to sue as a corporation, and has made a defective statement of such right.

*59

But, assuming for the present purpose that the act is to be regarded, as set forth, as part of the averments of the complainant, and, also, that the appellant's construction of the act is correct, namely, that it imposes upon the plaintiff the performance of certain acts as conditions precedent to receiving and exercising the powers of a corporation, and, further, that the plaintiff failed to set forth the performance of such conditions specifically, or in the general manner permitted by Section 186 of the code, still, at most, that would show only defect of proof to establish the right of the plaintiff to sue as a corporation, but affords no positive proof tending to show, affirmatively, that such conditions precedent have not been complied with, which is the only proof available to sustain a demurrer on the ground of want of legal capacity to sue. The demurrer admits the right to sue, unless the facts of the case, as spread out in the face of the complaint, show that such right cannot exist at law; a mere case of want of proof cannot produce such an effect.

But the statute does not admit of the construction which the appellant seeks to put upon it. The act to charter the plaintiff company, passed February 27th, 1873, (15 Stat. 442,) confers corporate powers on the corporators named, in terms importing an immediate grant, with the following proviso annexed: "Provided that said persons shall commence operations upon said road within two years after the passage of this act, and complete the same within five years." The period of completion is stated by Section 6 at seven years, but this conflict of time is not material to the present question. The question is whether the proviso can have the effect to convert a grant of the corporate franchise, made in terms that import an immediate grant, into one taking effect only upon the happening of a certain contingency. If the purpose intended by the proviso cannot be fully *accomplished without a limitation of the broad sense of the language conferring the franchise, then such effect can be accomplished consistently with the rules of construction, for, in that case, the proviso would be necessarily interpreted as a condition in substance and effect. As a condition subsequent this is undoubtedly the effect of the proviso, but does it contain, in itself, anything that imports a necessity that it should operate as a condition precedent? Two things are to be considered in this respect: First. What is essential to the full efficacy of the matter of the proviso itself? Second. What would be the effect of allowing it to stand as a condition precedent on the completeness of the powers granted for the purpose intended by the grant, and to which the terms of the proviso stand as a condition? It certainly was intended that the corporators should have all the powers and capacity properly incident to a railroad corporation for the purpose of enabling it to commence and complete the road in the times prescribed by the law, for it must be assumed that the construction of the road was deemed a public benefit, and that the acquisition of that benefit to the public was the true consideration of the grant, and, in this light, the proviso must be regarded as directly intended as a means of hastening its construction. This view also excludes the idea that the proviso was intended to limit the capacity or powers of the company to construct the road within the times prescribed for that purpose. It must certainly be assumed that the possession of corporate powers during the time that the company was organizing and acquiring the capital and credit requisite to construct the road was a material aid toward the accomplishment of that result. It is fair, then, to assume that the grant, in terms importing immediate corporate capacity, was intended to operate as such for the purpose of conferring on the corporation the most perfect means for accomplishing that which it was the purpose of the proviso to secure. So far then from its being essential to the efficacy of the proviso that the sense of the terms granting, directly, the corporate franchise should be narrowed, the purpose of the proviso is best subserved by holding these powers intact according to the terms in which they were granted. If, at the end of two years, the corporation had not *commenced to construct the road, every object intended to be secured to the state and to the public, by the limitation, would be fully attained, even if the company had at once, upon the granting of the charter, become a corporation. The extinguishment of the franchise of building and operating a railroad would have followed, and the right to exercise the functions of a corporation would have fallen with it as an accessory. On the other hand if the grant is held to be subject to a condition precedent, by reason of the limitation as to commencing work in two years, the argument that would produce that result would go a step further and make the completion of the road a condition precedent. In that case the anomaly would be presented of a company undertaking the construction and completion of a work of such magnitude without the powers of a corporation, and only hoping to obtain such powers when the work had been accomplished. Such an intention cannot be ascribed to the statute. It is clear that the demurrer was properly overruled as it regards the ground just considered.

*60

*61

The second ground of demurrer is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, under this ground, it is objected that it does not appear by the complaint that the contract sued upon was to pay money, while its charter permitted plaintiff to take subscriptions in labor, materials, or land as well as money. The complaint clearly and distinctly charges that the subscription was for the payment of money. It states that "the said defendants subscribed to the joint stock of the said company $400, for and in consideration of eight shares of the capital stock." Unless the plaintiff availed itself of the privilege of making a special contract calling for payment in labor, materials or land, it is unnecessary to notice the provision intended for such cases. The law will presume the contract to have been made with reference to the payment of money unless the contrary appears, for that is the most general form of such contract. There can be no doubt as to the nature of the contract laid in the complaint as it regards the proper mode of satisfying it.

It is objected that the complaint does not state the time when or the terms upon which the contract was entered into. There *is nothing in the charter that prevented the parties from effectively contracting in terms requiring immediate payment or payment on demand. The contract as laid must be construed at all events as calling for payment on demand, if not for immediate payment. The terms of the contract appear sufficiently to give it binding force by referring to the averments of the complaint and the provisions of the charter. There was a lawful subject-matter, namely, a certain number of shares of the capital stock of the company, made vendible by the charter; there were also competent parties, and a price agreed upon; these are all the requisites to a valid contract.

*62

The third objection under the second ground of demurrer is answered by what has just been said; as the plaintiff alleges a demand before action brought, the money must be regarded as due before the commencement of the action. It was not necessary to add to the complaint a distinctive promise to pay. The word "subscribe," as applied to contracts of this nature, has a definite technical sense, including in it the idea of a promise to pay the amount subscribed in the manner agreed upon, and the act in question must be regarded as using it in that known sense.

The statement in the grounds of appeal that the appellant was not permitted to submit an argument on certain questions, is not supported by the record.

The objection to the allowance of full costs as the condition on which the defendant should be permitted to answer over, is not well taken. The permission, in such cases, cannot be claimed as matter of right, but rests in the discretion of the court, and may be allowed when the demurrer has been interposed in good faith. Code, § 195. Accordingly it was competent for the court to grant such relief on terms. We see no error in law in the mode in which the court has exercised its discretion in the present case.

The judgment must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s concurred.

14 S. C. *63

*(Case No. 903.)

CHERAW & CHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY v. GARLAND.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Corporations ⇐35, 514.]

Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the syllabus in Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company v. White, ante p. 51, re-affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 103, 2053; Dec. Dig. ⇐35, 514.]

[2. Corporations ⇐77.]

There is nothing in the charter of the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company (15 Stat. 442) which requires its whole capital stock to be subscribed before calls are made for the payment of subscriptions; and therefore stock subscriptions may be made payable upon such terms as are agreed upon between the corporation and the stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 229; Dec. Dig. ⇐77.]

[3. Corporations ⇐89.]

When a contract does not call for any demand of payment by specified persons or in a particular mode, a general demand is all that need be alleged in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 376; Dec. Dig. ⇐89.]

[4. Appeal and Error ⇐1170.]

An omission to state in the complaint that plaintiff was ready to perform his part of the contract sued upon, does not affect the substantial rights of the defendant; and the judgment of the Circuit Court disregarding such omission may not be reversed on appeal. Code, § 199.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4032, 4066, 4075, 4098, 4101, 4454, 4540–4545; Dec. Dig. ⇐1170.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐91.]

Complaint alleged the subscription by defendant to the stock of plaintiffs' company of fifty acres of land, and a refusal to convey, and demanded payment in money for the land so subscribed, without alleging a promise to pay money or a previous demand for money—Held, on demurrer, to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 631; Dec. Dig. ⇐91.]

Before Wallace, J., Chesterfield, January, 1879.

This case was heard in conjunction with the next preceding case. The differences between the complaint and demurrer there and here are sufficiently indicated in the opinion of the court.

The judgment of the Circuit Court was as follows:

This is an action brought by the plaintiff to recover the value of a landed subscription to the capital stock of the Cheraw and Chester Railroad Company. The defendant has filed a demurrer on two grounds, with several specifications thereunder. One ground is that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. And the other is that the complaint does not state a cause of action. The specifications are, some of them, the same as set forth in the demurrer in the case of these plaintiffs v. Ellison B. White, and some of them a little different, but they are all substantially *64

the *same. So the court refers to the decree made in that case as setting forth more in detail the conclusions reached by the court. The court, after a careful consideration of the grounds of demurrer and the various specifications thereunder, concludes that the complaint for the purposes of substantial justice between the parties is sufficient and the demurrer is therefore overruled. The defendant, on the payment of all costs that have accrued up to this time, may be allowed to answer over.

Defendant appealed.

Messrs. Prince & Caston, for appellants.

Messrs. R. E. Allison and M. J. Hough, contra.

August 14th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This is an action for recovering the amount of $250, alleged to have been subscribed by the defendant to the capital stock of the plaintiff corporation, payable by the conveyance to the plaintiff of a designated lot of land, estimated by the agreement of the parties as of that value. The defendant demurred on several grounds, which demurrer was overruled, and the defendant appeals from such ruling.

The first ground of demurrer objects to the legal capacity of the plaintiff to sue. This objection is disposed of by the judgment of this court on the same question, rendered in the case of the same plaintiff v. E. B. White. The complaint in this case sets forth the fact of incorporation directly, and not merely inferentially, and, accordingly, as the question of due incorporation is one of fact, as was held in the case to which reference has just been made, it must be regarded as admitted by the demurrer.

This case appears to have been heard at the Circuit in conjunction with that of the same plaintiffs against White. The opinion and judgment rendered in that case is set forth in the record as the judgment in the present case, and the grounds of appeal have critical reference to the line of reasoning pursued by the Circuit Court in that case. As there is a very decided difference in the questions presented in the two cases, as it regards the *second ground of demurrer, it will not be serviceable to follow the grounds advanced by way of appeal, but to consider whether the grounds of demurrer give proper support to the conclusion of the Circuit Court.
*65

The objections that go to make up the second ground of demurrer, which is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, will be considered in the order stated in the demurrer. The first is, that the complaint does not state that the subscription to the capital stock of $1,000,000 was ever received, and that the directors were ever authorized to make calls for assessments or payment of subscriptions. There is nothing in the act chartering the plaintiff that requires that the whole capital stock should be subscribed before calls are made for the payment of subscriptions, or before subscriptions made without specific limitations as to the time of payment should become due. There is, therefore, nothing to prevent the parties from making the contract alleged in the complaint and admitted by the demurrer. The contract, as alleged, is to pay "when required," the amount subscribed, in the manner agreed upon, namely, by the conveyance to the plaintiff of the land bargained for. A breach of this contract is alleged and admitted by the demurrer. The second objection is, that it is not alleged "that any call was made by the directors for any payment." The contract, as laid in the complaint, does not require that any call should be made by the directors for payment, nor prescribe any particular mode of demand, so the allegation of a general demand was all that could be required of the complaint, and this is fully made.

The third objection is, that it is not alleged "that the plaintiff was ready, on his part, to perform the contract on a conveyance by defendant." The omission to state that the plaintiff was ready to perform, is immaterial. If there was any ground for an issue as to the ability of the plaintiff to perform its part of the contract, such issue could be properly tendered by the defendant in his answer. As the burden of proof under such an issue lay, at all events, with the defendant, it is evident that such omission did "not affect the substantial rights of the adverse party," and, therefore, under Section 199 of the code, *the Circuit Court was bound to disregard it, and this court is in terms excluded from reversing the judgment of the Circuit Court by reason of any such omission.
*66

The fourth objection is, "to the want of an allegation of a demand for the payment in money for said stock." The contract, as laid, does not admit of a demand for the payment of money for the stock, as, by the agreement, payment was to be made in a different manner. The breach follows the contract as laid, and that is all that is required.

The fifth objection assumes that a recovery cannot be had for the money value of the land agreed to be conveyed; but, that to warrant such recovery a promise to pay money must be set forth. The question of the measure of damages on the breach of the contract to convey is not before us on the demurrer, and need not be considered. It is enough if it appears that some damage has resulted to the plaintiff, and that appears as a necessary legal inference from the nature of the contract and breach alleged.

There is no error in the judgment overruling the demurrer, and the appeal must be dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 66

(Case No. 904.)

LYNCH v. HANCOCK.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Subrogation ⇐31.]

Where seven bonds are secured by mortgage, the surety, upon paying one of them to its assignee, becomes subrogated to all the rights of the assignee, and as such is, in equity, the assignee of a proportionate part of the mortgage, with the mortgagee as his trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subrogation, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. ⇐31.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐249.]

After mortgage executed the premises were sold to H., and H. agreed to convey to R., and subsequently one of the mortgagees (there being two) entered in the office of records, without the knowledge of such assignee or the surety, a discharge of the lien of the mortgage, and afterwards R. agreed to convey to A. and J. Held, that such entry did not affect the right of the assignee or of the surety to enforce the mortgage upon the property in the possession of H. or of R., or even of A. and J.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 671; Dec. Dig. ⇐249.]

*67

[3. Mortgages ⇐309.]

*One of the mortgagees could not, in such case, release the lien of the mortgage; and as the record of the mortgage showed that there were two mortgagees, and seven separate bonds secured thereby, there was enough to put subsequent purchasers upon the inquiry, and thus charge them with notice of the assignment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Williams & Co. v. Paysinger, 15 S. C. 174; Werber v. Cain, 71 S. C. 350, 51 S. E. 123.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 864, 870, 899, 900, 902–905, 907–912; Dec. Dig. ⇐309.]

[4. Payment ⇐12.]

If A purchased land in 1863 and gave his mortgage deed, contracting with reference to confederate money, an offer to pay in confederate currency in January, 1864, the amount due, is not an offer to pay the amount secured by the contract, nor a legal tender of the debt; and the lien of the mortgage would not be thereby destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. ⇐12.]

[5. Adverse Possession ⇐31.]

An entry in the book of records in the proper office that the lien of a mortgage has been released, cannot operate to make the possession of subsequent purchasers from the mortgagor adverse to the claim of one entitled in equity to the security of such mortgage; and more particularly not until notice of the entry is had by such claimant.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Williams & Co. v. Paysinger, 15 S. C. 173.

For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. ⇐31.]

[6. Mortgages ⇐424.]

Mere possession for the statutory period by a purchaser from the mortgagor, with notice of the mortgage, will not constitute a bar to the action for foreclosure. Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 25, recognized and followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1263; Dec. Dig. ⇐424.]

[7. Mortgages ⇐257.]

Spreading upon the records a notice that the lien of a mortgage has been discharged, is not constructive notice, for it is not within the terms of Chapter LXXXII, Section 20, of the general statutes, and not such a paper as is required by law to be recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 684; Dec. Dig. ⇐257.]

[8. Mortgages ⇐143.]

Adverse possession cannot be asserted against a mortgage where the necessary statutory period includes the years when the stay law was of force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 281–284; Dec. Dig. ⇐143.]

[9. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐226.]

The plea of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, cannot avail unless the party has both paid the purchase money and acquired the legal title before notice of the outstanding encumbrance or equity.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hill v. Burgess, 37 S. C. 605, 15 S. E. 963; Peay v. Seigler, 48 S. C. 514, 26 S. E. 885, 59 Am. St. Rep. 731; Robert v. Ellis, 59 S. C. 147, 37 S. E. 250.

For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 476; Dec. Dig. ⇐226.]

[10. Principal and Surety ⇐177.]

Where a surety gives his note in payment of the debt, he is not entitled to recover the amount of the note from his principal, unless he shows that the note has been paid, or that he has the means to pay it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 510, 511; Dec. Dig. ⇐177.]

[11. Executors and Administrators ⇐432.]

A payment of the debt by a surety after his principal's death, is a good set-off in an action brought by the executor of the principal upon an obligation of the surety to the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1674–1676; Dec. Dig. ⇐432.]

[12. Mortgages ⇐290.]

Where the mortgaged premises are held by several purchasers, in different rights, acquired at different times, the several parcels must be sold in the inverse order of the sales by mortgagor. Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 25.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gregory v. Ducker, 31 S. C. 146, 9 S. E. 780; Kennedy v. Boykin, 35 S. C. 85, 14 S. E. 809, 28 Am. St. Rep. 838; Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 55 S. C. 30, 33 S. E. 15.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 791–805; Dec. Dig. ⇐290.]

[13. Mortgages ⇐301.]

[Cited in Salinas & Son v. Ellis, 26 S. C. 347, 2 S. E. 121; Reynolds v. Price, 88 S. C. 537, 71 S. E. 51, to the point that a tender of the mortgage debt at the time it is due discharges the lien of the mortgage, though it does not extinguish the debt.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 876–881, 885, 887, 888; Dec. Dig. ⇐301.]

[This case is also cited in Interstate B. & L. Association v. McCartha, 43 S. C. 75, 20 S. E. 807, and Whitmire v. Boyd, 53 S. C. 341, 31 S. E. 306, without specific application.]

Before Pressley, J., Richland, November, 1878.

This was a bill in equity, filed by John Bauskett, in February, 1867, to foreclose a mortgage given him by Lana J. Hancock, in 1856, to which bill James M. Rhett, E. J. Arthur and L. D. Childs, subsequent purchasers from the mortgagor, were made parties defendant. These defendants answered. Some testimony was taken, but before a hearing, Bauskett died in 1867, *and E. J. Arthur died in March, 1868. John Lynch and Sophia Bauskett, as qualified executors of John Bauskett, filed their bill of revivor against William Martin and Martha Arthur, executors of E. J. Arthur, and against Hancock and Childs. Subsequently, Lynch, plaintiff, (Sophia Bauskett having died) under leave of court, filed his amended complaint against the heirs of Arthur, and the heirs of R. M. Johnston, (who died in 1868, and who, it was ascertained, was, instead of Childs, the joint purchaser with Arthur,) and also against Thomas B. Wadlington, who claimed to hold a mortgage prior in time to the Hancock mortgage. Wadlington filed his answer in July, 1875, asserting his prior mortgage. Again, in October, 1875, under order of the court, James F. Sims, then in possession of a part of the mortgaged premises, which he claimed under a tax title, the date of which is not stated, was made a party defendant.

*68

The agreement between Hancock and Rhett was as follows:

"Articles of agreement between Dr. L. J. Hancock and James M. Rhett. Dr. Hancock agrees to sell James M. Rhett his plantation, three and a half miles from Columbia, containing 1500 acres, more or less, for the sum of twenty-seven thousand and five hundred dollars, payable in equal installments, the first in two years from date, the balance in three installments, payable in three, four and five years from date, and Mr. Rhett to have the privilege of paying the bond, or any part of it, at any time he may wish to. The interest to be paid annually. Should the land prove less than 1500 acres, it is to be paid for at the same rate. The plantation to be delivered in the next two or three days, Dr. Hancock to make good titles in the next ten days, and to pay expenses of papers. James M. Rhett agrees to purchase the above mentioned plantation on terms as started above, and to secure Dr. Hancock's payments by bonds and mortgage of the plantation and endorsement by Maj. Roland Rhett.

"Columbia, 21st March, 1863.

"(Signed) L. J. Hancock.

"Jas. M. Rhett.

"Witness—Charles H. Rhett."

*69

*All the issues of law and fact were referred to James H. Rion, Esq., as special referee, who made the following report:

After hearing argument of counsel and a consideration of all the evidence, I find as matters of fact—

A.

1. That on January 2d, 1854, Samuel Fair and J. Foster Marshall conveyed to John Bauskett, eighteen hundred and ninety-nine acres of land, for which Bauskett executed to them seven bonds, signed by himself as principal, and Thomas B. Wadlington as surety, and gave a mortgage of the land to secure the payment of the bonds, which was duly recorded.

2. That the entire interest in the said bonds and mortgage became vested in Samuel Fair.

3. That Bauskett died A. D. 1867, having paid all of the said bonds except the one first due, to wit, January 1st, 1855, and another due January 1st, 1859.

4. That prior to January 1st, 1855, Fair assigned the bond due January 1st, 1855, to one Gerhard Muller, guaranteeing the payment of the same, without mention of the mortgage.

5. Suit was instituted on the bond due January 1st, 1859, against Bauskett and Wadlington, and judgment by confession obtained against Bauskett only, on March 2d, 1867.

6. That on April 14th, 1863, the following was endorsed on the mortgage: "The lien and legal effect of the within mortgage is hereby released and discharged forever. Samuel Fair, for Fair and Marshall. This April 14th, 1863, in presence of James A. Black;" which endorsement was recorded in the same office in which the mortgage was recorded.

7. That in April, 1871, Muller sued Wadlington on the assigned bond and obtained judgment thereon.

8. That on appeal, the Supreme Court of this state, at April Term, 1874, (5 S. C. 347), affirmed the judgment, holding that upon the facts hereinbefore stated, Wadlington was not released from his liability as surety.

9. That on October 9th, 1874, Muller assigned to Wadlington all his right, title and interest in the mortgage, for Wadlington to hold and use, for enforcing the payment of the bond, and for his indemnity as surety.

*70

*10. That on April 13th, 1875, Wadlington paid Muller $3671.01, in full satisfaction of the aforesaid judgment, of which $127.10 was costs.

11. That on January 10th, 1856, Bauskett conveyed the aforesaid land to Lana J. Hancock.

12. That on March 21st, 1863, Hancock contracted to sell fifteen hundred acres, more or less, of the said tract of land to James M. Rhett, under which contract of sale Rhett entered into possession; and on January 19th, 1864, he, Rhett, sold the fifteen hundred acres, more or less, as fifteen hundred and fifty-four acres, to Rufus M. Johnston and Edward J. Arthur, who then went into possession of the land and held the same until their deaths.

13. That Arthur died February 27th, 1868, and Johnston died April 20th, 1869, and since their deaths their heirs (defendants in this case) have held possession of the said fifteen hundred and fifty-four acres as tenants in common.

14. That the remaining three hundred and forty-five acres, more or less, is now held under a tax title by James C. F. Sims, son-in-law of Hancock, said land having been sold for taxes assessed thereon as the property of Hancock.

Upon the foregoing facts Wadlington, who is brought in as party defendant by Bauskett's executor, the plaintiff, in a bill to foreclose a mortgage upon the land mentioned, given by Hancock to Bauskett, seeks to foreclose the mortgage given by Bauskett to Fair and Marshall.

The assignment of the mortgage by Muller to Wadlington was a nugatory act. By the payment of the bond upon which he was surety, Wadlington became at once vested with a right of action upon the bond against Bauskett, and entitled to all the benefits of the mortgage given by Bauskett.

To the prayer of foreclosure three defences are set up—

First. That the lien of the mortgage was released by Fair. This I overrule as having been decided by the Supreme Court in Muller v. Wadlington.

Second. Adverse possession for ten years. I overrule this on independent grounds.

1. Wadlington's rights, as above ruled, do not come through *Muller, but are the consequences of his paying the bond upon which he was surety. Hence his right of action only accrued on April 13th, 1875.

*71

2. Wadlington was made a party to the bill on July 18th, 1875. Hancock's adverse possession cannot be connected with, or (prior to the code) benefit subsequent grantees. Neither Sims nor Rhett held for ten years. Arthur and Johnston and their heirs (whose adverse possession can be connected) held from January 19th, 1864, to July 18th, 1875, ten years and seven months. But in the foreclosure of a mortgage the administrator or executor is a necessary party, for in their possession are the evidences, if any, of payment, and it is their duty to relieve the land of any encumbrance out of the personal assets, if any. Hence any court would ignore the rights of the heirs of decedent (often minors) by granting a decree of foreclosure without the administrator or executor being brought into court as a party. But no suit can be brought for nine months after decedent's death against an administrator or executor. Hence, for nine months the possession was not adverse, but protected by the statute. This leaves only nine years and ten months adverse possession.

3. Again, from December 21st, 1861, to December 21st, 1866, the operation of the statute of limitations was suspended as applicable to all actions for the collection of money; hence, for two years and eleven months no action could have been brought to collect the amount due on the bond by a foreclosure at law or in equity. This leaves less than ten years.

4. Arthur and Johnston and their heirs, if purchasers from mortgagor out of possession but with notice of the mortgage, cannot avail themselves of the defence of the statute, unless they did some act of express open defiance to the claimants under the mortgage. Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 31.

I hold (subter) that they had such notice, and that no such act was proven.

Third. The third defence is, that all the parties interested in the land since the release by Fair (April 14th, 1863,) are "subsequent purchasers without notice of the mortgage to Fair and Marshall."

It is contended by the counsel for Wad-lington that Fair had *no authority to execute a release for Marshall, and that the release was not in form legally sufficient. I hold that as no one has, on the part of Marshall, up to this day, disputed Fair's authority, he had such authority. The arguments of counsel and the authorities cited are all applicable to the release of a debt. This was not a release of the debt, but merely a declaration of, or an agreement for, the surrender of a security. This, I hold, can be done without consideration or any formality, as to third parties, who became subsequent purchasers of the property affected by the security. A mere verbal declaration in unambiguous terms by a mortgagee, that his mortgage debt is paid, satisfied, or released, or that he releases, waives or surrenders his security, will estop him from afterwards setting up his mortgage against those who, on the faith of his declaration, became purchasers of the property.

*72

But what was the extent of this release and of what did it give notice? It is to be presumed that all parties had notice of the recorded mortgage. For the purposes of this case I give all parties the benefit of holding that they had actual notice of the entry by Fair on the mortgage. The whole question is then resolved into an inquiry as to the extent of this notice. All parties had notice that the mortgage was a security for seven different bonds. Hence the entry of release was a notice to the effect that Fair on April 14th, 1863, released the security to the full extent of his interest in that security, which was commensurate with his interest in the seven bonds, to secure which the mortgage was given. At this date one of these bonds was held by Fair unpaid. The mortgage was released as to this. But one was held by Muller, and in the latter he held no interest, and consequently he had no authority to release the security as to that bond. Hence those who became subsequent purchasers on the faith of the notice of release, assumed the risk, first, of Fair not having authority to release for Marshall; and second, of his having parted with his interest in some of the bonds; and events have proven that their second risk was unfortunately assumed. In my opinion the foregoing is fully sustained by the decision in Muller v. Wadlington, and in fact almost parodies the reasons in that case. It is true the court in that case disclaimed *precluding purchasers of the land from setting up defences, but the decision itself precluded them from setting up that Fair had authority to release the security of the mortgage quoad the bond assigned to Muller.

*73

I therefore hold as matters of law—

1. Fair's release was valid to the extent of the interest he had in the then unpaid bonds.

2. The lien of the mortgage was not released quoad the bond assigned to Muller.

3. That Wadlington's rights arose from and upon his payment of the bond upon which he was surety.

4. That neither Hancock nor any subsequent purchaser of the land are purchasers without notice of the mortgage by Bauskett to Marshall and Fair being in force quoad the bond assigned to Muller.

5. That the defence of ten years adverse possession cannot be successfully set up by any of the parties to this suit.

And in this behalf I recommend that it be adjudged and decreed by the court that the plaintiff, as executor of Bauskett, is indebted to the defendant Wadlington in the sum of $3435.91, with interest thereon from April 13th, 1875; and that unless the sum be paid on a day stated, that the whole tract of land conveyed to Bauskett and by him to Hancock, be sold on terms and in manner usual in foreclosure sales, the tract now in possession of Sims first, and the proceeds of sales being insufficient to satisfy the debt and costs, then the tract now in possession of the heirs of Johnston and Arthur, in such parcels as the counsel for the parties may agree, until sufficient be realized.

B.

As to that branch of the suit which relates to the prayer of the plaintiff as executor of Bauskett, to foreclose the mortgage given his testator by the defendant Hancock.

I find as matters of fact—

1. That on January 10th, 1856, John Bauskett conveyed eighteen hundred and ninety-nine acres of land to Lana J. Hancock, in payment of which Hancock gave ten bonds for $3000 each, payable in one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, *eight, nine and ten years respectively, all secured by a mortgage of the land, which mortgage was duly recorded.

*74

2. That on March 21st, 1863, Hancock contracted to sell fifteen hundred acres, more or less, of this land to James M. Rhett, under which contract of sale Rhett went into possession, and on January 19th, 1864, he, Rhett, sold the fifteen hundred acres, more or less, as fifteen hundred and fifty-four acres to Rufus M. Johnston and Edward J. Arthur, who then went into possession of the land and held the same until their deaths.

3. That Arthur died February 27th, 1868, and Johnston died April 20th, 1869, and since their deaths, their heirs (defendants in this case) have held possession of the said fifteen hundred and fifty-four acres as tenants in common.

4. That the remaining three hundred and forty-five acres, more or less, is now held under a tax title by James C. F. Sims, son-in-law of Hancock, said land having been sold for taxes assessed thereon as the property of Hancock.

5. That after the contract between Hancock and Rhett, and before the sale by Rhett to Arthur and Johnston, Bauskett expressed his willingness to Arthur, in his capacity at that time of attorney for Rhett, at any moment to release his mortgage and mark it satisfied. During the same interval Bauskett declared, in the presence of Hancock, that he did not know that he, Bauskett, had any claim against the land.

6. That Bauskett and Hancock had divers and numerous mutual money and business transactions with each other besides the land purchase, from the date of said conveyance up to the death of Bauskett, during the whole of which period Bauskett was the regular confidential legal adviser of Hancock.

7. That Bauskett and Hancock, in their said mutual money and business transactions during the civil war, recognized confederate notes and values of articles furnished at prices estimated in confederate notes as if the same had been in legal currency.

8. That in stating the account between Bauskett and Hancock—

a. I charge Hancock with the mortgage bonds, $30,000, with interest payable annually from January 10th, 1856.

b. I charge Hancock with the following notes. * * *

*75

*c. I charge Bauskett with $1000 collected on note of Robert N. Lewis, with interest from January 1st, 1863.

d. I charge Bauskett with the amount of the Kirkland bond, $10,000, with interest payable annually from April 15th, 1864.

e. I charge Bauskett with the following items. * * *

I finding the aforesaid items of indebtedness to exist and to be unpaid as matters of fact; but more specifically—

9. I find that Hancock gave Bauskett the note on Lewis of $1000 to collect, which note is unaccounted for by Bauskett or his executor.

10. I also find that the bond of Bauskett with Hancock as surety to Mrs. Kirkland, was not paid by Bauskett in his lifetime; that after Bauskett's death, to wit, on September 26th, 1873, Hancock became the owner thereof for value, to wit, by giving his note for $10,000 and the interest to J. C. F. Sims, whom I find to have been the holder and owner thereof from some date subsequent to August, 1872, the time of Mrs. Kirkland's death.

In this accounting, the statute of limitations is set up against the items of discount offered by Hancock, and the notes and due-bills offered by plaintiff.

I overrule the plea on both sides for the reason of the continued contemporaneous mutual dealings between the parties as proven.

Objection is made to insufficient notice of these opposite claims having been given, and as to some not having been properly pleaded; I overrule this on the ground that at this reference any of the parties were at liberty to offer proof against any item, and that from February 9th, 1876, to July 21st, 1877, afforded ample time to recover from any surprise and enable all parties to hunt up and produce proof.

The Lewis note I allow not as proven to be collected; but being unaccounted for by Bauskett or his executor, I presume its collection.

The Kirkland bond I allow on the ground that since September, 1873, Hancock has held this bond, and his ownership has been undisputed to this date, near four years. His payment of *the same by his note is good payment, being accepted as such by the owner and holder of the bond.

*76

The payment of the bond by Hancock, after the death of Bauskett, would not authorize him to set the same up as a set-off were it not that he paid it as surety for the testator. This constituted the fruition of a credit given by Hancock to Bauskett at the time of the execution of the bond, by his becoming surety thereon for Bauskett. A contract was then entered into by Bauskett that if Hancock would become his surety on the bond, he, Bauskett, his heirs, executors and administrators, would, in event Hancock ever had to pay the bond, repay the amount so paid.

I therefore find as matters of law—

1. That the plea of the statute of limitations cannot be successfully set up by either party to any item of the accounting.

2. That proof or disproof of any of the items was admissible as of the date of July 21st, 1877.

3. That Bauskett's estate is liable for the value of the Lewis note on failure to account for its non-production.

4. That Hancock is to be presumed to have become holder and owner of the Kirkland bond rightfully on account of the length of time the ownership has been undisputed by those interested so to do, and he being surety.

5. That Hancock's payment by his note is a valid payment, having been accepted as such.

6. That his payment as surety, though after testator's death, entitled Hancock to set up the amount so paid as a set-off.

7. That Hancock is not indebted to the estate of Bauskett in any amount, on the mortgage bond or otherwise.

8. That the estate of Bauskett is indebted to Hancock in the sum of $4967.52, with interest thereon from September 26th, 1873.

To the prayer for foreclosure, the same defendants set up the same defence of ten years adverse possession, which I overrule for some of the reasons hereinbefore given as regards the Fair and Marshall mortgage (2, 3 and 4.)

The same defendants also set up the defence of subsequent purchasers without notice of the mortgage. This I sustain upon *the fifth finding of fact herein, and for reasons given as to how informally a party may release the security of a mortgage as to third parties when discussing the question of the release by Fair.

*77

I therefore further find as matters of law—

9. That the defence of ten years adverse possession cannot be successfully maintained by any of the parties to this suit.

10. That Johnston and Arthur were subsequent purchasers without notice of the mortgage to Bauskett, being a subsisting lien or encumbrance upon the land purchased.

In neither view of the question, then, as having an unsatisfied mortgage debt, or having subsequent purchasers with notice in possession of the land mortgaged, is the executor of Bauskett entitled to the prayer of his bill or complaint.

I therefore recommend that the court adjudge and decree that the prayer of plaintiff for a foreclosure be not granted.

As to the question of costs, I recommend that as nearly an equitable adjustment as possible, (besides being the only one not merely nominal,) in this very complicated cause, the court orders all the costs be paid out of the proceeds of such land as may be sold under decree made in this cause.

All which is respectfully submitted.

The case was heard by the Circuit Court upon exceptions to this report, and the following decree was filed:

This case involves the foreclosure of two mortgages, on which the referee has reported separately. He sustains the claim of T. B. Wadlington who holds a bond amounting to $3435.91, with interest from April 13th, 1875. It is one of seven, dated January 2d, 1854, by John Bauskett, with Wadlington as surety, to Samuel Fair and J. Foster Marshall, secured by mortgage duly recorded. Marshall transferred his share to Fair, but did not in writing assign the mortgage: it remained of record to both of them. In 1854, Fair sold one of said bonds to Gerhard Muller, to whom Bauskett paid the interest several years.

After his death, (insolvent,) Muller compelled Wadlington, the surety, to pay that bond, and he now claims repayment out of the mortgaged property. Meanwhile, on April 14th, 1863, *Fair had surrendered the mortgage to Bauskett, having first endorsed thereon for Fair and Marshall that its "lien and legal effect was thereby released and discharged forever." This release was recorded, and now Hancock, who purchased the mortgaged land from Bauskett, in January, 1856, and the heirs of Arthur and Johnston, who claimed to have purchased in January, 1864, resist the mortgage, alleging the validity of the said release. I agree with the referee that it cannot avail them. Hancock cannot claim its benefit, because his purchase was long before the release, and he has not attempted to prove that he then relied on any promise to obtain such release, or that he ever required one as precedent to his paying the purchase money.

*78

As to Arthur and Johnston, I hold that the irregularity of the said release was sufficient to cause them to inquire whether Fair held all the bonds secured by the said mortgage. It secured the purchase money of land which had been sold by Fair and Marshall as tenants in common. That was express notice of the nature of Marshall's interest in the bonds, and the record did not show any assignment of that interest. He, too, as holding part of the legal title in the mortgage, was trustee with Fair for Muller. In that condition of the record no purchaser should have relied upon a release made by Fair for Fair and Marshall without requiring him to show his authority. Failing to require this, the party so negligent must bear the loss, if any, which it occasioned. The heirs of Arthur and Johnston further claim the mortgaged property by possession, but allege no notice of its adverse character except the record of the said release.

I hold that Muller will not be presumed to have had notice of that record. He had purchased his bond long before that time, and the obligor had been notified of the said purchase and was then paying the interest to Muller. He therefore could have had no motive or occasion to examine the record in respect of the said mortgage, nor is there any requirement of the registry law imposing such duty. The said release so recorded was not, therefore, any notice to Muller that the mortgagor or his assigns held possession of the land adversely to the mortgage; as against a *mortgagee notice of adverse possession should be unmistakable and clearly proved.

*79

But if the said defendants had even proved the adverse character of their possession, its period is too short to sustain their claim. Their alleged purchase was in January, 1864; then the stay law prevented suits on such bonds. That stay continued until December 21st, 1866, and from that time until January, 1875, when Wadlington was made a party to this suit, was too short a period to perfect their adverse possession. In the matter of Hancock's mortgage to Bauskett, who is dead, the referee has erred in admitting the testimony of Hancock and the declarations of Arthur. They prove transactions with the deceased or declarations by him, and such proof by interested parties is incompetent. If their testimony be stricken out, as it must be, there remains no proof whatever that Bauskett ever agreed to receive payment from Hancock in supplies at their price in confederate money. Nor is there proof as to what amount of supplies Hancock delivered. Hall's testimony on that head is very vague, and he also proves that Bauskett was "not to pay the market price." Nor is there any proof to warrant the charge against Bauskett of $1000 on the Lewis note. That and all other discounts, if properly proved hereafter, should be credited on Hancock's mortgage at their value in legal currency. Only Roland and Charles Rhett prove that Bauskett at one time consented to discharge said mortgage for confederate money. The time of that consent must have been soon after March 21st, 1863, when James Rhett contracted to buy fifteen hundred acres of the mortgaged land, and the moderate price which he was then to pay for the same in confederate money, clearly proves that it was still available for investment. The consent of Bauskett to receive it at that time is therefore no proof of his agreement to accept such payment afterwards, when that currency had become less than one-fourth of its value in 1863. But the testimony of Charles and Roland Rhett is also, with the letter of Bauskett dated January 27th, 1864, relied on to prove an admission by Bauskett, that nearly all the Hancock debt had then been paid. The Rhetts prove that both Hancock and Bauskett then refused to receive confederate money, each excusing himself by saying it *was to go to the other. Bauskett's letter does not indicate what balance was due to him on his mortgage: it simply required the Rhetts to execute their bonds and mortgage according to contract, and offers to satisfy his mortgage without indicating what portion of the Rhett bonds he was to keep in payment of the balance due to him.

*80

On April 15th, 1863, Hancock became surety for Bauskett on a bond for $10,000 to Rebecca Kirkland, which was unpaid when Bauskett died insolvent. After that Hancock purchased it, and now claims it as a discount in this case.

I hold that at law it could not be so allowed. Nettles v. Huggins, 8 Rich. 273. But in equity the surety of a mortgagee who is asking a foreclosure of a mortgage will be relieved of his liability as surety before the court will compel him to pay his mortgage. In that case it does not allow as a discount the full amount of the bond, if the surety has already taken it up, for a less sum. He must not use his position as surety to speculate on his principal. Neal v. Sullivan, 10 Rich. Eq. 283; McKnight v. Bradley, Id. 557.

If, therefore, Sims, who is son-in-law of Hancock, bought the bond for him, the price then paid, with interest, is now the measure of Hancock's equity. And, if that purchase was not for him, the amount which he can now claim credit for in this case is only so much as his own estate was good for when he bought the bond from Sims. The mere giving his note for a larger sum than he could pay will be regarded in this case as only a contrivance between him and Sims to get more than their share of Bauskett's insolvent estate, to the loss of his other creditors; and that equity will not permit.

On March 21st, 1863, James Rhett contracted to buy from Hancock fifteen hundred acres of the mortgaged land for $27,500. He was to give bond with surety and mortgage for the purchase money, with privilege to pay it "at any time he wished." Hancock was to make good title in ten days, but Arthur, as attorney for Rhett, objected to Hancock's title, and the conveyance was never executed. If Rhett's bonds had been delivered, the contract authorized him to pay them in confederate money: but there is no proof that he ever offered any bonds or *was ever willing to accept such title as Hancock could make, at any time before January, 1864. Meanwhile confederate money continually depreciated, and on January 19th, 1864, Rhett sold the land to Arthur and Johnston for $50,000, they waiving the defect of title which he, under Arthur's advice, refused to waive. There is no competent proof that either Bauskett or Hancock knew anything of this sale before it was completed, or that either of them encouraged or assented to it. Arthur's declarations, which were objected to, is the only testimony offered on that point. After the said sale, Rhett tendered payment to Hancock in confederate money, and he refused to receive it. There is no proof that the money so tendered was afterwards deposited anywhere to his order, or that Rhett ever parted with his control over it. Whether he used it for other purposes or whether it finally perished in his hands, does not appear.

*81

I hold that the said tender was not payment, and that the failure of Rhett to place the money beyond his control, made the loss, if any, fall on him.

I further hold that his persistent objection to Hancock's title until the depreciation of the currency made the contract a valuable speculation, deprived Rhett of all just claim to a specific performance thereof. When the contract was made, both the parties were on equal terms, and after contingencies might turn out to the advantage of either one or the other of them; if the war should cease, the currency would rise in value, and in that case Hancock would be the gainer; but if the war continue, then Rhett would gain by the decline of the currency. Each therefore was entitled to have the contract executed immediately. Then Hancock would have surety for its fulfillment if the currency should rise, and Rhett the privilege to pay if it should decline. But he so long objected to the title as to deprive Hancock of his right if the chances had been in his favor, and not until the advantage was clearly on his own side did Rhett waive his said objection. In such case I cannot think that this court should decree a specific performance in his favor, and I therefore adjudge that his claim to the land, and that of Arthur and Johnston, who are his assigns, is invalid.

*82

*It is ordered and decreed that the plaintiff pay to T. B. Wadlington within sixty days, the sum of $3435.90, with interest from April 13th, 1875. If the same be not so paid, Nathaniel Barnwell, master in equity, is authorized and directed, after usual advertisement, to sell at public sale the tract of land now in the possession of the heirs of E. J. Arthur and R. M. Johnston. The terms of the said sale are one-third cash, balance in two equal annual installments, bearing interest from the day of sale, payable annually, secured by bonds of the purchaser and mortgage of the premises.

Further ordered that the said master apply the proceeds of said sale, first, to pay the costs of this case; next, to pay the amount herein decreed to T. B. Wadlington, and the remainder to the further order of this court on the account to be taken between the plaintiff and Lana J. Hancock.

Further ordered that said master take the testimony and report the said account, excluding the evidence of the defendant Hancock and allowing him all proper credits at their value in legal currency, according to the principles hereinbefore stated.

The plaintiffs, defendant Hancock and the heirs of Arthur and Johnston, appealed to this court upon the grounds considered in the opinion of the court.

Mr. F. W. McMaster, for plaintiff.

Messrs. Wm. Wallace and Bachman & Youmans, for Hancock.

Messrs. Melton & Clark, for heirs of Arthur and Johnston.

August 25th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. A brief statement of the leading facts of this case will be necessary to a proper understanding of the questions to be considered.

The land which is the subject matter of this suit, was sold by Fair and Marshall to Bauskett on January 2d, 1854, and to secure the payment of the purchase money the latter gave to the former seven bonds secured by a mortgage of the premises, which was *duly recorded. The entire interest in these bonds and this mortgage became vested in Fair, but how, or when this was effected does not appear. Prior to January 1st, 1855, Fair assigned one of these bonds, which became payable on that day, to Muller, but did not assign the mortgage. It is true, that in the argument of one of the counsel for Hancock, it is contended that this bond was never legally assigned to Muller, but the fact of the assignment is found by the referee and affirmed by the Circuit decree, and there being no exception to such finding, it is conclusive here. On January 10th, 1856, Bauskett sold and conveyed the land to Hancock, and, to secure the payment of the purchase money, took his bonds, secured by a mortgage of the premises, which was likewise duly recorded. On March 21st, 1863, Hancock contracted, in writing, to sell and convey fifteen hundred acres of the land to Rhett, for the particular terms of which agreement reference must be had to the copy set out in the "case." Under this contract Rhett went into possession, but no titles were ever made to him, and he never paid the purchase money, though it is insisted that the purchase money was tendered and refused: nor did he ever give, or offer to give, the bonds and mortgage to secure the payment of the purchase money provided for in the agreement. On April 14th, 1863, Fair made an endorsement on the mortgage held by him in the following words: "The lien and legal effect of the within mortgage is hereby released and discharged forever." (Signed) "Samuel Fair, for Fair & Marshall." This endorsement was recorded in the same office in which the mortgage was recorded, but whether at the same place in the record book, or whether reference was made from one to the other does not appear. On January 19th, 1864, Rhett contracted, in writing, to sell and convey to Arthur and Johnston the said fifteen hundred acres in consideration of the sum of $50,000, then paid in cash. After this contract was made, but exactly at what date does not appear, Rhett offered to pay Hancock, in confederate money, the amount which he had contracted to pay him for the land, which Hancock refused to receive. Arthur and Johnston went into possession of the land immediately after their contract with Rhett, and they and their heirs have since continuously remained *in possession—Arthur having died February 27th, 1868, and Johnston April 20th, 1869. The remainder of the land was subsequently sold for taxes assessed against Hancock, and is now held by his son-in-law, Sims, under a tax title. Bauskett having paid all the bonds given by him to Fair and Marshall, except two, one of which was held by Muller, and the other by Fair, filed the original bill in this case on February 18th, 1867, against Hancock, Rhett, Arthur and Childs, who was then supposed to be the owner of Johnston's interest, for a foreclosure of the mortgage given by Hancock to him. Bauskett died sometime during the year 1867, and, subsequently, a bill of revivor was filed by the plaintiff, as his executor, to which the executors of Arthur, who had also died, were made parties. In April, 1871, Muller brought suit against Wadlington, who was the surety of Bauskett on the bond assigned to him by Fair, and, having recovered judgment against him, assigned to Wadlington, on October 9th, 1874, all his right, title and interest in the mortgage given by Bauskett to Fair and Marshall, and subsequently, to wit, on April 13th, 1875, Wadlington paid to Muller the amount of the judgment recovered against him as surety for Bauskett. On June 30th, 1875, the plaintiff, by leave of the court, filed an amended complaint making as additional parties the heirs of Arthur, the heirs of Johnston, (who, as it had been in the meantime ascertained, had not transferred his interest to Childs,) and Wadlington, who claimed the right to enforce the mortgage given by Bauskett to Fair and Marshall to the extent of the amount paid by him as surety of Bauskett upon one of the bonds secured by said mortgage.

*83

*84

Wadlington, by paying the bond on which he was surety, became subrogated to all the rights of Muller, who, as assignee of one of the bonds, was, in equity, also the assignee of a proportionate part of the mortgage, with Fair as his trustee. Muller v. Wadlington, 5 S. C. 343. See, also, 1 Jones on Mortgages, § 822, where it is said that this is the generally received doctrine. This proceeding may, therefore, be regarded as an action by a junior mortgagee to foreclose his mortgage, brought against the mortgagor and those claiming under him, to which the senior mortgagee has been made a party with a view to the adjudica*tion of his rights also, and the enforcement of any lien which he may be able to establish.

*85

There can be no doubt but that Hancock, at the time he purchased from Bauskett, took his title subject to the encumbrance of the Fair mortgage, which was duly recorded, and, therefore, notice to the world; and there is as little doubt that those who claim under him have no higher rights than he has, unless they can sustain their claim by adverse possession, or as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of the equity set up by Wadlington as senior mortgagee, which will be hereinafter considered. If Hancock took his title thus encumbered, at the time he obtained it, has anything subsequently occurred to remove that encumbrance? The endorsement made by Fair on the mortgage could not have that effect so far as the assignee, Muller or Wadlington, is concerned, for that was made long after the conveyance to Hancock, and could not, therefore, have formed any part of the inducement to or consideration for the purchase by him from Bauskett. As is said in 2 Jones on Mortgages, § 957: "An entry of satisfaction by a mortgagee, after he has parted with his interest in the security, will not discharge the mortgage in favor of one who acquired an interest in the land before the discharge was made. He is no worse off than he supposed himself to be when he acquired his interest, and there is no reason, in equity, why the person really entitled to the mortgage should not have the benefit of it so far as he is concerned." So far then as Hancock is concerned, the endorsement made by Fair on the mortgage was a nullity, except, perhaps, as to any interest which Fair then retained in the mortgage, as to which we are not now called upon to express any opinion. The same is true as to Rhett, who made his contract for the purchase of the land before the endorsement was placed upon the mortgage. But, in addition to this, Fair, as trustee, could not release a lien intended for the benefit of his cestui que trust, and, if he did so, it would be a breach of trust, in which all persons who had actual notice of the trust, or of such facts as would put them on the inquiry, would be regarded as participants, and could therefore claim no benefit from it. Here the mortgage, which was spread upon the records, not only gave notice to the *public that there was a lien upon the land, but that such lien was for the benefit of two persons, and was intended to secure the payment, not merely of one but of seven separate bonds. The fact that seven bonds were given instead of one, payable in seven installments, pointed very naturally to the conclusion that the object was to make use of these bonds separately by a transfer of them. Common prudence would therefore suggest to a purchaser the propriety of an inquiry as to whether all of the bonds had been paid, or the lien to secure their payment properly released, and such inquiry would have led to the discovery of the fact that one of these bonds had been transferred to a third person, and that, therefore, Fair had no right to release the lien of the mortgage so far as that bond was concerned. It is clear, therefore, that Hancock held the legal title, subject to the encumbrance of the Fair mortgage, and whatever rights he may have in the land can be subjected to the payment of the amount which Wadlington has been compelled to pay as the surety of the original mortgagor, Bauskett. What his rights are will next be considered.

*86

Under his contract with Rhett, the latter stood in the position of mortgagor to Hancock as mortgagee, and Rhett could not therefore convey the land, free of such encumbrance, to Arthur and Johnston, unless the mortgage debt, as it might be called, was satisfied by payment, or the lien of the mortgage discharged or released. There is no pretence that such debt was ever, in fact, paid, but it is contended that the lien was discharged by a tender. There is no doubt but that a tender of the mortgage debt at the time it is due discharges the lien of the mortgage, though it does not extinguish the debt; and it will, therefore, be necessary to inquire whether Rhett ever made such a tender to Hancock. Assuming that he offered to Hancock the full amount of the purchase money in confederate treasury notes, this cannot be regarded, legally, as a tender, for such notes never were made a legal tender. The written contract did not provide for the payment of that kind of currency, and while it is quite true that parol evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of showing that the contract was made with reference to confederate treasury notes, as a basis of value, with a view to determine the *actual value to be paid, we know of no authority which authorizes it to be received for the purpose of showing that the offer of such currency would amount to a legal tender of the debt and produce the legal consequences of such a tender. A contract which is proved to have been made with reference to such a currency may be discharged by the payment in actual money of the amount which the number of confederate dollars mentioned in it may be proved to have been worth at the time the contract was made, or a creditor may, if he chooses, accept payment in confederate treasury notes, and if he does so it will discharge the debt, upon the principle that anything accepted as payment will operate as such; but it is a very different thing to say that a creditor can be compelled to accept anything in payment of his debt except actual money, or that if he refuses he will be saddled with the consequences attendant upon a refusal to accept a legal tender of his debt. But, in addition to this, the offer of $27,000 in January, 1864, could not, in any view of the matter, be regarded as a tender of the amount secured by the contract made in March, 1863, as the currency was constantly depreciating in value. Rhett, therefore, occupies the position of one who has contracted to purchase but who has not received a title, nor has he paid or tendered the purchase money.

*87

The position of Arthur and Johnston will next be considered. They bought from Rhett, whom they knew at the time had no title, and no right to demand a title until he had complied with the terms of his agreement with Hancock, which he has never done. If they paid the purchase money to him and went into possession under a mistaken reliance upon the effect of what is claimed to have been a tender by Rhett to Hancock they must bear the consequences of their own mistake. They bought land which, as the records showed, was encumbered by two mortgages, from a person whom they knew had no title at the time, and they took the risk of showing that the land had been relieved from both of these mortgages, and that their vendor would acquire a title, or be able to show himself entitled to demand one. Have they done so? First, as to the Fair mortgage. It is very certain that the debt secured by this mortgage has never yet been fully paid, and it is not so pretended; but it is con*tended that the land has been discharged from the lien of the mortgage by the endorsement placed upon it by Fair. Assuming that Fair, as one of the joint mortgagees, could, by this endorsement, without any consideration, so far as appears, release the lien of the mortgage, he certainly could not thereby affect the rights of his assignee, Muller, or Wadlington, who now stands in the shoes of Muller. And though their right to the mortgage may be nothing more than an equity, yet it is an equity long prior in point of time to any equity which Arthur and Johnston can lay claim to, and is, therefore, the superior right. For it will be remembered that Arthur and Johnston (passing by for the present their claim of title by adverse possession) have not got the legal title and can only claim an equity. The question as to whether the land has been relieved from the second mortgage—that of Hancock to Bauskett—depends upon other considerations which must be the subject matter of further inquiry. It is quite clear, as we have seen, that Rhett, the immediate vendor of Arthur and Johnston, has not only never acquired the legal title, but has never placed himself in a position to demand such title, as he has never paid or tendered the purchase money, nor has he ever offered, nor does he now offer to comply with the terms of his agreement. It follows, therefore, that the land in the possession of Arthur's and Johnston's heirs must be subject to these various encumbrances, unless they can make good their claim to hold by adverse possession, or as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice.

*88

As to the claim by adverse possession, we agree with the Circuit judge that it cannot be sustained; first, because there is no proof of the adverse character of the possession, and, next, because the possession was not for a sufficient length of time. Since the case of Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 25, affirming the previous case of Wright v. Eaves, 5 Rich. Eq. 81, it must be regarded as the settled law of this state that the mere fact of the possession of land covered by a mortgage, for the statutory period, by a purchaser from the mortgagor, with notice of such mortgage, will not constitute a bar to the action for foreclosure. Here the only thing relied upon to show the adverse character of the possession of Arthur and Johnston, as against the Fair *mortgage, is the endorsement placed upon it by him. How that act, in which Arthur and Johnston had no participation, and which was done some time before they claim to have acquired any interest and before their possession commenced, can be said to give any character to their possession, it is difficult to understand. But, even giving it all the efficacy claimed for it, how can it affect Muller or Wadlington, who knew nothing about it—the former until 1871, and the latter until the fall of 1867 or spring of 1868, and dating from either of these periods the possession would be less than the ten years required by the statute before Wadlington was made a party to this action.

*89

The fact that this endorsement was spread upon the records could not operate as constructive notice, because it was not such a paper as, by law, was required to be recorded, and, therefore, the recording of it would not operate as notice. Harper v. Barsh, 10 Rich. Eq. 149. The statute which is relied upon to show that this was a paper proper to be recorded, (Act of 1817, 6 Stat. 61; Gen. Stat., Ch. LXXXII., p. 427.) provides: "That each and every person who shall have received full payment or satisfaction, or to whom a legal tender shall have been made, of his or their debt, damages, costs and charges, secured by mortgage of real estate, shall, at the request of the mortgagor * * * enter satisfaction in the proper office on such mortgage, which shall forever thereafter discharge and satisfy the same." It will be observed that this provision applies only where full payment or satisfaction of the debt, secured by the mortgage, has been made, or where there has been a legal tender of such debt, and to extend it to anything else would be an unwarrantable addition to the terms of the statute. The doctrine of constructive notice, by recording, is not to be extended to all papers which are in fact recorded, but only to those which are authorized or required to be recorded. 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 404. As there is no statute which authorizes or requires such a paper as the endorsement in question to be recorded, the fact that it was put upon the record will not make it constructive notice. We see no evidence, therefore, that gives to the possession of Arthur and Johnston a character adverse to the Fair mortgage, and *certainly none that give it such a character as against the mortgage from Hancock to Bauskett.

*90

But in addition to this, we do not think the possession was of a sufficient length of time to bar the action for foreclosure even of the Fair mortgage. The right to bring this action was suspended by the stay law until December 21st, 1866, and from that time to July, 1875, when Wadlington was made a party, the ten years had not elapsed. Certainly, as against the Hancock mortgage, the statutory period had not elapsed before the commencement of the action to foreclose that mortgage.

Nor do we think that Arthur and Johnston can successfully maintain their claim as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. For, to say nothing of the effect of their failure to plead this defence in the manner required by law, it is manifest that they have not got the legal title, and, at most, only an equity to demand title, and that though they may have paid the purchase money to their immediate vendor, whom they knew did not have the legal title, yet the purchase money has never been paid or tendered to Hancock, the person whom they knew did hold the legal title. As is said by Dunkin, Ch., in Bush v. Bush, 3 Strob. Eq. 134 [51 Am. Dec. 675]: "The protection of a purchaser for valuable consideration stands on this, that he has bona fide acquired the legal title and paid the purchase money before notice of the plaintiff's equity. If he has acquired the legal title but has not paid the purchase money before notice, his plea fails. So, if he has paid the purchase money, but has acquired no legal title, and then receives notice of the plaintiff's equity, he cannot defeat that prior equity by procuring the legal title." And, as is said by Marshall, C. J., in Vattier v. Hinde, 7 Pet. 271 [8 L. Ed. 675]: "The rules respecting a purchaser, without notice, are framed for the protection of him who purchases a legal estate and pays the purchase money, without knowledge, of an outstanding title. They do not protect a person who acquires no semblance of title. They apply fully only to the purchaser of the legal estate. Even the purchaser of an equity is bound to take notice of any prior equity." For, as is said by the same distinguished judge in Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 210 [9 L. Ed. 388]: "It is a general principle in courts of equity that where both parties *claim by an equitable title, the one who is prior in time is deemed the better in right." Again, at page 211, speaking of the protection afforded bona fide purchasers, without notice against a prior equity, says such an equity "can be barred or avoided only by the union of the legal title with an equity, arising from the payment of the money and receiving the conveyance without notice and a clear conscience." In view of these authorities it is very clear that Arthur and Johnston cannot maintain their claim as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice of the prior equity of Muller or Wadlington.

*91

As to the mortgage from Hancock to Bauskett, we propose to say but little, as we agree with the Circuit judge that the questions whether anything, and if so, how much, is still due thereon, should be recommitted to the master, as the conclusions of the referee, based upon the incompetent testimony derived from the declarations of Arthur, and Hancock's testimony as to transactions with the deceased Bauskett cannot be sustained. We think, however, that the whole matter in reference to this mortgage, including the question whether Bauskett, by his conduct or declarations, induced Arthur and Johnston to purchase by holding out to them the idea that the debt due him by Hancock was paid, or that the lien of the mortgage would be released, should be left open with liberty to all parties to introduce any competent testimony as to all these matters, allowing all proper credits to Hancock at their value in legal currency, unless the testimony to be adduced shows that there was an agreement between Hancock and Bauskett that the various articles furnished were to be credited on the mortgage debt at their value in confederate money at the time they were delivered. The discount claimed on account of the amount alleged to have been collected by Bauskett on the Lewis note must be further inquired into, as we do not think the testimony adduced sufficient to establish the claim. As to the discount claimed on account of the Kirkland note, that also must be the subject of further inquiry. There is no doubt but that the claim of a surety for indemnity against the principal is founded, not upon contract, but upon a principle of natural equity and justice. This equity springs up at the time the relation is entered into, and consummated when the surety *pays the debt. Hence, as the Circuit judge has held, a mortgagee will not be permitted, in equity, to foreclose his mortgage against his surety without allowing such surety the benefit of a credit for any amount which he may have actually paid for such mortgagee; but the surety can only claim the benefit of such credit to the amount actually paid by him. If he has compromised the debt he can only claim the amount of such compromise—in other words all he can claim is indemnity—nothing more. See the American notes to the case of Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 W. & T. Lead. Cas. in Eq. 105, where these principles are laid down and fully supported by the cases there collected. The inquiry, therefore, in this case should be what is the amount which Hancock has actually, not nominally, paid on the Kirkland bond, and for such amount he is entitled to have credit. The mere fact of giving a note or due-bill for the whole amount of the bond is not sufficient without proof that he has paid or has the means to pay it. A mere pretensive payment would certainly constitute no foundation for the equity upon which the claim must rest. The case of Peters v. Barnhill, 1 Hill 234, which has been relied upon to support a contrary view, was an action at law, and cannot be regarded as controlling this case. As to the ground taken by the counsel for the plaintiff that a payment made by a surety after the death of the principal cannot, in an action by the executor of the principal, be set off against an obligation given by the surety to the principal, we do not think it can be sustained; for, besides being directly opposed to the decision in Hinds ads. David, Harp. 423, the proposition contended for manifestly rests upon the idea that the claim of the surety is founded upon contract, which as we have seen, is not the case, but that on the contrary, it rests upon an equity which springs up when the relation of principal and surety is entered into, and is consummated when the surety pays the debt; and that it is upon a principle of equity rather than as a set-off that the principal will not be permitted to enforce the payment of a debt or the foreclosure of a mortgage in disregard of such equity.

*92

The order of sale ignores the fact that the mortgaged premises are now held by different persons, under different claims acquired *at different times. When such is the case the rule is that the several parcels shall be sold in the inverse order of the sales made by the mortgagor. Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 25. The order of sale must, therefore, be modified so that the tract held by Sims should be first sold, and if the proceeds of such sale should be insufficient to satisfy the various liens which have or may be established, together with the costs, then the remainder of the land in the possession of the heirs of Arthur and Johnston should be sold.

*93

The judgment of the Circuit Court, except as modified herein, is affirmed, and the case is remanded to that court for such further proceedings as may be necessary.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 93

(Case No. 905.)

WILLINGHAM v. CHICK.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Trial ⇐203.]

While the statement in the answer that defendant cannot "admit or deny," is not sufficient to put in issue the execution of the bond sued on, still, there being no evidence that the bond had not been executed, there was no material error in the charge to the jury, that "plaintiff has produced proof of the execution of the bond, which, in law, is ordinarily considered sufficient, but still the execution of the bond is a question of fact for the jury."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 477–479; Dec. Dig. ⇐203.]

[2. Executors and Administrators ⇐221.]

In an action brought by an unpaid creditor against his debtor's executors, who, after duly advertising for creditors, had fully distributed the estate, the burden of proof is upon the creditor to show that the executors had notice of his claim before they made the distribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1863; Dec. Dig. ⇐221.]

[3. Executors and Administrators ⇐449.]

Under the plea of plene administravit in behalf of executors, the returns of administrators and guardians of the estates of the legatees, charging themselves with amounts received from the executors, who at the time of trial are deceased, are admissible in evidence in support of the plea.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1852; Dec. Dig. ⇐449.]

[4. Executors and Administrators ⇐307.]

An unpaid creditor cannot charge executors with the possession of assets, because that the legatees accepted a depreciated currency in payment of their distributive shares.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1251–1256; Dec. Dig. ⇐307.]

[5. Bonds ⇐130; Insane Persons ⇐45.]

Bond of a committee was given in 1843, the lunatic died in 1848, leaving as his distributees persons sui juris, and in 1849 the committee filed a statement of his indebtedness in the office of the commissioner in equity. *In 1876 plaintiff administered upon the estate of the lunatic, and in 1877 brought his action against the executors of a surety on the committee's bond, alleging the bond, and that "no part of said balance found to be due as aforesaid by said committee has been paid." The executors, by their answer, did not controvert this statement, nor did they plead payment, but set up the statute of limitations as a bar, and denied plaintiff's right of action, and did not deny the allegation that there had been no previous administration on the estate of the lunatic. Held, that under these facts the Circuit judge did not err in charging the jury that the liability on the bond, if it ever existed, would be presumed to be paid and discharged, and that for that purpose, if necessary, it would be presumed that letters of administration had been granted on the estate of the lunatic.

*94

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. § 225; Dec. Dig. ⇐130; Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. ⇐45.]

6. Riddlehoover v. Kinard, 1 Hill's Ch. 380, approved.

[This case is also cited in Boyce v. Lake, 17 S. C. 486, 43 Am. Rep. 618; Tobin v. Myers, 18 S. C. 328; Dingle v. Mitchell, 20 S. C. 212; Pyles v. Bell, Id. 368; Adams v. Richardson, 32 S. C. 140, 10 S. E. 931; Smith v. Tanner, 32 S. C. 264, 10 S. E. 1008; Bredenburg v. Bardin, 36 S. C. 202, 15 S. E. 372, as to legal presumptions arising from lapse of time.]

Before Wallace, J., Newberry, February, 1880.

The nature of this action is sufficiently indicated in the opinion of the court. To these statement of facts as therein contained it will be proper to add a few other matters appearing in the brief.

The complaint alleged that no administration had ever been granted upon the estate of the said William F. Graham until that granted to this plaintiff; and this was neither admitted nor denied in the answer.

The receipts and testimony of legatees under the will of Thomas H. Henderson, showed that the executors, in settling with them in 1864, paid them in part with confederate money. To show payments to some of the legatees, the defendants were permitted to introduce, against the objection of plaintiff, the sworn returns of P. W. Chick, administrator of one of the legatees, of R. C. Chick, guardian of three of the legatees, and of Simeon Fair, guardian of three others of the legatees.

The Circuit judge charged the jury, inter alia, as follows:

The plaintiff has produced proof of the execution of the bond, which, in law, is ordinarily considered sufficient; but still the execution of the bond is a question of fact for the jury.

The defendant alleges that there is a presumption of fact that the bond has been paid. It is an ordinary rule of law that presumptions of payment will run against sealed instruments. In this case the commissioner in equity had the legal interest in said *bond. After a great lapse of time, a further presumption would arise that a prior administration had been granted upon the estate of a deceased person.

*95

Notwithstanding the legal interest in the bond in suit was in the commissioner, twenty-eight years have elapsed since the death of Graham, and with a view to having the question finally determined, I charge you, under authority of the case of Witt v. Elmore, that a presumption does arise that payment has been made. Such a presumption does not arise against an infant, because of disability. It is in proof, in this case, however, that the parties in interest were sui juris; and you must take this fact into consideration, in connection with the presumption of a previous administration. After twenty years the presumption arises, and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the bond is not paid, as much so as to prove the execution of his bond.

As to the plea of plene administravit. If a plaintiff comes into court and establishes his claim, and the executor pleads plene administravit, and that all funds have been paid out, and his accounts balanced, if he satisfies the jury that he has fully administered, unless notice of the claim be brought home to him, he is entitled to a verdict. If, however, such notice be brought home to him, the plea of plene administravit is no answer, but it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that he had such notice.

It is not necessary that I should charge you about the payments in confederate money and notes. The law holds that anything is payment which is accepted as such: and if the legatees accepted payment in confederate currency of their legacies, it is a good payment as against this plaintiff, and the receipts introduced are evidence of such fact.

Upon request, I will further charge that the presumption of payment could only arise upon the expiration of twenty years from the granting of letters of administration upon the estate of William F. Graham; but from the lapse of time a previous administration may be presumed.

I will likewise charge you that if the executor of Thomas H. Henderson had knowledge of his testator's liability on the bond *described in the complaint, the plea of plene administravit will not avail.

*96

If you should find that the bond in suit has been paid from the presumptions, by lapse of time, of a previous administration and payment, your verdict should be for the defendant. If you should not find such payment, but should find that the executor has fully administered his testator's estate without notice of this claim, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, subject to the plea of plene administravit.

If, however, you should find that there was no such payment and shall likewise find that said executor has not fully administered the estate of Thomas H. Henderson, or that he had notice of this claim before the distribution amongst the legatees, your verdict should be for the plaintiff generally for the amount claimed in his complaint.

The plaintiff, in writing, requested his Honor to charge:

1. That payment is not pleaded, and the matter of presumption of payment cannot be considered by the jury.

2. That the non-payment of the money sued for being admitted by the answer is sufficient to rebut such presumption.

3. That any presumption of a previous grant of administration upon the estate of William F. Graham is rebutted by the admission in the answer of the defendant that no administration had in fact been granted on said estate previous to that granted to the plaintiff.

4. That presumption of payment arising from a lapse of twenty years is rebuttable.

5. That the defendant, in order to make out the plea of plene administravit, must show want of notice of the liability of the testator.

All of which requests were refused; to which refusal the plaintiff excepted.

To the admission of the testimony objected to, and to these charges and refusals to charge, the plaintiff excepted; and upon his exceptions appealed to this court.

Messrs. W. H. Lyles and Geo. S. Mower, for appellant.

Messrs. Pope & Fair, contra.

*97

*August 31st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This is an action on bond of committee of lunatic against the personal representative of one alleged to be a surety. On March, 10th, 1843, one Nathan Parrott gave bond to L. J. Jones, Esq., commissioner in equity for Newberry county, as committee of one William F. Graham, a lunatic. It is alleged that Thomas H. Henderson, John H. Gilliam and J. D. Kenner were sureties on the bond. May 15th, 1848, said lunatic, Graham, died intestate, leaving, as his distributees, brothers and sisters of full age. A statement of the accounts of Parrott committee was found in the office of the commissioner in equity, of date February 1st, 1849, by which it appeared that there was in the hands of the said Parrott $2014.94. At whose instance, whether that of the commissioner or of the distributees, or of an administrator, this statement was made, does not appear. It may have been ex parte. There is no evidence that the sureties knew anything about it, or that there was any decree, by any authority, that the amount should be paid. January 15th, 1860, Thomas H. Henderson, one of the alleged sureties, died, leaving a will, of which Reuben C. Chick and P. W. Chick were executors. They qualified, gave notice for creditors to present their demands—the claim now sued was not presented—and on January 22d, 1864, finally settled and distributed the estate. R. C. Chick afterwards died, leaving P. W. Chick the surviving executor, and, afterwards, he died, leaving a will, of which Sarah E. T. Chick is executrix, and that makes her, by law, also the executrix of the estate of Thomas H. Henderson. The plaintiff, William P. Willingham, took out letters of administration on the estate of Graham, the lunatic, September, 1876, and brought this action on the bond against Sarah E. T. Chick, executrix of Thomas H. Henderson, February 5th, 1877, being thirty-four years after the bond bears date; twenty-nine years after death of Graham; twenty-eight years after the statement of the account, which was found in the commissioner's office; seventeen years after the death of Henderson, the alleged surety and debtor, and thirteen years after a final settlement and distribution of his estate under his will. Under the charge of the Circuit judge, the jury found for the defendant. The plaintiff *excepted to the rulings, and the case comes to this court. The exceptions are numerous, and it may contribute to clearness to consider them under three general heads.

*98

1. In regard to the proof of the execution of the bond by the testator and alleged surety, Thomas H. Henderson, deceased.

The fourth exception alleges error on the part of the judge in ruling "that the execution of the bond described in the complaint was still a question of fact for the jury, although it had been proved, and was not denied in the answer." The first and second paragraphs of the complaint charge the execution of the bond by Henderson. The first paragraph of the answer is in these words: "This defendant cannot admit or deny the allegation set forth in the first and second paragraphs of plaintiff's complaint, but demands that plaintiff be put to strict proof thereof," and the fourteenth and fifteenth paragraphs deny generally the plaintiff's right to recover "because she says no cause of action exists against the defendant." We do not think that the answer sufficiently put in issue the execution of the bond in suit. The defendant should either deny the facts alleged in the complaint from positive knowledge, or deny that he has any knowledge of such facts sufficient to form a belief of them. To say that he cannot admit or deny them is not equivalent to saying that he neither possesses positive knowledge to the contrary or that he is destitute of knowledge on the subject, but admits of the construction that his inability to admit or deny arises from matter not disclosed, and which, if disclosed, might not be sufficient in law to justify him for neither admitting or denying. But we do not think that any material error has been committed. The judge submitted the bond as proved, prima facie at least. Unless, then, there was some evidence tending to show that the execution of the bond had not taken place, there was nothing on which the jury could overcome the prima facie proof. No such evidence appears, and it cannot be assumed that the jury took advantage of the general proposition that the question was one of fact to override the prima facie proof without evidence for that purpose. It is presumable from the whole case that the verdict did not turn on any question of the sufficiency *of the proof of the bond, and, therefore, there is nothing to contradict a legal presumption arising, as before stated.

*99

2. As to the defence of plene administravit made by the defendant executrix. The fourteenth exception alleges error in the charge: "That it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the executors of Thomas H. Henderson, deceased, had notice of his testator's liability under the bond in order to make the plea of plene administravit no answer." This exception makes the point as to the onus of proof upon the question of notice of the claim by the executors of Henderson before they distributed the estate. The executors advertised for creditors. This creditor did not present the claim within the time prescribed by law. He was in default, and could make no progress until it appeared that the executors had notice of the claim; upon that subject he held the affirmative, and it was incumbent on him to prove it. The executrix could not be required to prove a negative. The law requires estates to be settled promptly. Creditors are required to present their demands within twelve months, and there are no exceptions in terms on account of alleged disabilities. The law proceeds on the assumption that creditors will look after their interests, and provides that if the creditors do not present their claims in time the "executors shall not be responsible." Here the claim was not presented in time, and if the plaintiff wished to relieve himself from the consequences of the default, it was necessary for him to prove that the executors had notice.

The first, second and third exceptions make the point that it was error to admit in evidence returns of guardians and administrators of legatees, tending to show that they had received in full their shares. One of the issues in the case was that the estate of Thomas H. Henderson had been settled and paid out to the legatees. Any evidence tending to prove this issue was admissible. It is true the legatees are not parties, but the issue of distribution was made by the executrix. The executors who made the distribution were dead, and the best evidence to prove the fact alleged was the settlement itself, or the testimony of the legatees, or receipts and returns showing that their legacies had been paid to them. What weight the testimony might be en*titled to was for the jury. We are only dealing with its admissibility.

*100

The fifteenth exception alleges error in charging "that if the legatees of Thomas H. Henderson accepted payment of their legacies in confederate money it is a good payment as against this plaintiff, and that the receipts introduced are evidence of such fact." That is payment which is received as such. If the legatees chose to receive their legacies in part or in whole in confederate money, and receipt for the same, we do not see that the plaintiff has any right to complain of that, or how it bears upon the issues in this case.

3. All the other exceptions, in one form or another, allege error on the part of the judge in charging "that after a great lapse of time the liability on the bond, if it ever existed, would be presumed to be paid and discharged, and that for that purpose, if necessary, it would be presumed that letters of administration had been granted on the estate of William F. Graham, the intestate."

I. It may be doubtful whether the mere statement of account made by Parrott in the commissioner's office was in itself enough to fix the liability of a surety upon a bond for the performance of covenants without further account and making the representative of Parrott a party; but assuming that it was, the question arises whether that liability, thus fixed, is still a subsisting liability, thirty-four years after the bond was given, or is lost by lapse of time and the statute of limitations. The twenty-first statute, James I., made of force in this state, was our only statute of limitation until the adoption of the code in 1870. That statute had no limitation as to sealed instruments. The statutes now of force, both in England and South Carolina, include expressly bonds. Under the old law in force, up to 1870, which did not provide a limit to actions on bonds, it was soon seen that there was a necessity for a limit to actions in such cases. The courts at an early day applied to actions on bonds, the well-established doctrine of presumption. Twenty years possession would presume title to property, and upon the same principle they held that twenty years would presume payment and discharge of a bond. The doctrine is now perfectly familiar, and *is no where better stated than in Angell on Limitations, § 93: "By analogy to the statute of limitations an artificial presumption has long been established that when payment of a bond or other specialty was not demanded for twenty years, and there has been no circumstance to show that it was still acknowledged to be in existence, the jury are to presume payment at the end of twenty years. This doctrine has been so often recognized that it is not requisite to cite any of the countless authorities which sustain it."

*101

II. Admitting the general principle, which cannot be denied, it is, however, insisted that it was error to apply it to this case on account of the state of the pleadings. Although the lapse of time here is more than sufficient, it is said that the defendant executrix answered in such a manner as to exclude the estate she represents from all benefit from the presumption; that the presumption is one of fact, and cannot be raised unless payment as such is pleaded in form. The defendant did not plead payment in form, but she did plead the statute of limitation, and denied generally the plaintiff's right of action. This omission in the answer of the executrix is not necessarily fatal to the defense of lapse of time. The presumption of payment is one which the law raises whenever the facts appear which give rise to it. Angell on Limitations, § 78; Jackson v. Sackett, 7 Wend. 94; Bass v. Bass, 8 Pick. 187; Starkie's Ev. 823; Best on Presump. 188.

III. It is further insisted that the presumption of payment, being one of fact, may be overthrown by proof, and that the omission of the defendant in her answer to controvert specifically the negative statement of the complaint that "no part of said balance found to be due as aforesaid by said Nathan Parrott has been paid," makes that statement proof. The answer of the executrix does not, as a matter of fact, make any such acknowledgment, and the technical result, which the law declares for failing to controvert the statement, is not one of those acknowledgments in fact which affect the statute of limitation.

But if the executrix had herself made the statement in her answer, it would not have been sufficient to rebut the presumption. More than twenty years had expired before the action was *brought, and the perfected presumption had acquired an artificial force, and the cause of action did not exist. In analogy to the operation of the statute of limitation, after the law was complete, mere admissions by the executrix could not have the effect to make a new debt. To have that effect there must be a distinct admission of a subsisting legal obligation of the debt, unaccompanied by any conduct or expression indicative of an unwillingness to pay. As was said by Judge Wardlaw, in delivering the judgment of the court in the case of Stover & Barnes v. Duren, 3 Strob. 448 [51 Am. Dec. 634]: "The presumption is no legal bar, but originally it was admitted in analogy to the then prevailing statute of limitation, and in considering admissions which rebut it, the same principles are applicable as in considering admissions to take a cause of action out of the statute of limitation. So long as the lapse of time is merely circumstantial evidence, which, by ordinary inference, creates belief, any admission which oppose the inference of payment drawn from it, go to the jury along with it, and all are weighed together according to their natural force. But when, by the expiration of full twenty years, the presumption of payment has acquired an artificial force, so that it stands in the place of belief, an admission that the payment has not in fact been made, cannot of itself destroy the effect which considerations of policy have given to a certain period of time, whether the payment has or has not been made."

*102

IV. But it is insisted that the time which raises the presumption of payment does not begin to run until there is some one authorized to receive payment, and that the distributees of Graham could not legally receive their shares of this debt except through an administrator, and that none was appointed before the plaintiff in 1876.

The proposition is that this claim was in a state of suspended animation from 1843 until 1876, when administration upon the estate of Graham breathed into it the breath of life. It is true that the statute of limitation does not commence to run until there is some one who can sue; but it is not certain that the distributees of Graham could not have been paid by Parrot without administration. They were sui juris, and, by consent, might have received payment directly.

*103

The fact that Parrot volun*tarily made a statement of the amount due in the commissioner's office would seem to favor the idea that the parties settled without administration. But, without affirming anything upon this point, both public policy and private rights require that there shall be an end of litigation. In all civilized countries some term of time has been observed, at the end of which a party is exonerated from all responsibility. There should have been an administration upon the estate of Graham soon after his death. The law requires that there should be administration upon the estate of every man who dies intestate owning property. It is the right of the next of kin and creditors to administer, and if they fail, certain officers are required to administer the estate as "derelict." If they, whose duty and interest it is to administer, can, without injury to their rights, neglect to do so for forty years, why may they not for fifty years or a century? It cannot be permitted that parties shall thus, to the injury of others, select their own time to administer and pursue their rights. It is all important that estates should be settled up promptly and finally. Those who neglect to look after their rights in a reasonable time must suffer the consequences. After thirty years the presumption arises that all parties did their duty, and that administration was granted upon the estate of the intestate Graham.

After a lapse of twenty-eight years, an executor's assent to a legacy of freedom to a slave may be presumed. Bowers v. Newman, 2 McM. 486.

Where a negro has been at large and acting as a freeman for more than twenty years, a deed of manumission, under the act of 1800, may be presumed. Miller v. Reigne, 2 Hill, 592.

Thirty years' possession will raise the presumption of deed or other intermediate conveyance. Gray v. Bates, 3 Strob. 500.

After twenty years of separation between husband and wife a deed of separation will be presumed in order to confirm title in her alienees. Jones v. Jones, 3 Strob. 319. Upon this subject we adopt the ruling of Chancellor Harper in the case of Riddlehoover v. Kinard, 1 Hill's Eq. 380: "It is said we cannot presume either a general administration or a valid will. It is hardly necessary to say that legal presumptions are not founded on actual belief. As observed by Lord Erskine in Hillary v. *Waller, 12 Ves. 267: 'Mankind, from the infirmity and necessity of their situation, must, for the preservation of their property and rights, have recourse to some general principle to take the place of individual and specific belief.' * * * Presumption must be sometimes much against the well-known truth of the fact. If twenty years have elapsed without the payment of interest or any acknowledgment of a bond, we must presume it paid, notwithstanding the fullest conviction that it never has been paid. In Hutchison v. Noland [1 Hill, 222] it was proved by the ordinary that no administration had ever been taken out until granted to the plaintiff. As said in that case, we will presume whatever is necessary to give efficacy to long possession," &c.

*104

The exceptions are overruled and the appeal dismissed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 104

(Case No. 906.)

CASTON v. BROCK.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐368.]

An appeal from an order granting a new trial on the minutes dismissed, because the notice of appeal did not contain an assent on the part of appellant that if the order be affirmed judgment absolute should be rendered against him.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Daughty v. Northwestern R. Co., 92 S. C. 365, 75 S. E. 553.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1997; Dec. Dig. ⇐368.]

[2. Statutes ⇐200.]

Punctuation allowed some force in construction, it being, in this case, strictly consistent with one of two senses, which were equally grammatical, and inconsistent with the other.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Chastian, 49 S. C. 185, 27 S. E. 2.

For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 278; Dec. Dig. ⇐200.]

3. The terms bill of exceptions and exceptions taken, considered.

[4. Appeal and Error ⇐422.]

Application for leave to amend a notice of appeal must be in writing and on due notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2149; Dec. Dig. ⇐422.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐422.]

Such amendment would not be allowed where the appeal was based upon the hearing at chambers of a motion for new trial upon the minutes, which was noticed at the same term and entered upon his docket by the presiding judge, but its hearing postponed by agreement beyond the adjournment of the term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2149; Dec. Dig. ⇐422.]

[6. Appeal and Error ⇐110.]

[Cited in Lampley v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 77 S. C. 326, 57 S. E. 1104, to the point that subdivision 2, § 11, Code of Civil Procedure, applies where pure questions of law are involved.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 740–748; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 110.]

[This case is also cited in Kennedy v. City of Greenville, 78 S. C. 128, 58 S. E. 989, as to the effect of appeals from orders granting new trials.]

Before Kershaw, J., Chesterfield, September, 1879.

Action by Robert T. Caston to recover from Mary A. Brock certain lots of land in the town of Cheraw. Verdict for defend*ant. Motion by plaintiff on minutes for a new trial, which the presiding judge, with consent of counsel on both sides, noted upon the docket in the following words: "Motion for a new trial to be argued by consent, at Marlboro'."

*105

At Marlboro' it was verbally agreed between counsel that the motion should be heard at Darlington during the succeeding term of the Circuit Court, written argument to be submitted by either counsel desiring.

About October 15th, 1879, defendant's counsel were notified, by letter, that the argument of plaintiff's counsel had been forwarded to the Hon. J. B. Kershaw, at Darlington, whereupon defendant's counsel wrote to plaintiff's counsel demanding a copy of the argument sent, or the points and authorities contained in it, in order that a reply might be framed thereto. On October ——, 1879, before the close of the Darlington court, plaintiff's counsel sent the points and authorities to defendant's counsel, in deference to said demand, but the same were not received till October 28th, 1879, after the close of the said Darlington term. Defendant's counsel then refused to consent further in the premises, or do anything to further the hearing and determination of the motion.

Plaintiff's counsel then served a notice upon defendant's counsel, that Judge Kershaw would be asked to render his decision before January 1st, ensuing. Defendant objected, upon the grounds that such motion could be heard and determined only at the term at which heard; that there was no agreement or waiver beyond the term at Darlington; and that defendant had not received plaintiff's points and authorities in time to enable him to reply at Darlington.

An order was granted by his Honor as of September Term, 1879, but dated December 31st, 1879, and filed January 5th, 1880, granting the motion for a new trial on the minutes. Defendant appealed, upon the ground that his Honor erred in granting the motion and overruling his objections. In his notice of appeal there was no assent that final judgment should be rendered against him in this court, if he failed in his appeal; and for such omission plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal.

*106

*Messrs. Dudley & Newton, for appellant. Messrs. Prince & Pollock, contra.

August 31st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

WILLARD, C. J. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial. A preliminary objection is taken to the appeal, on the ground that no assent on the part of the appellant is contained in the notice of appeal, to the effect that if the order be affirmed, judgment absolute shall be rendered against the appellant, in accordance with sub-division 2, Section 11, of the code, and that, as a consequence of such omission, the appeal is not effectual for any purpose and should be dismissed. To this objection the appellant replies that the order for a new trial, appealed from in the present case, was made upon a motion heard upon the minutes of the Circuit judge, and is not, therefore, an order granting a new trial on a case made or a bill of exceptions, within the meaning of the proviso in sub-division 2, Section 11.

That portion of sub-division 2, Section 11, directly involved, is as follows: "But no appeal to the Supreme Court from an order granting a new trial, on a case made or a bill of exceptions, shall be effectual for any purpose, unless the notice of appeal contain an assent on the part of the appellant that if the order be affirmed judgment absolute shall be rendered against the appellant." It is essential to the understanding of the purpose of this proviso, affecting the power of the court to entertain such appeals, to read, in connection with the foregoing citation, the provisions that immediately follow it, viz.: "Upon every appeal from an order granting a new trial on a case made or on exceptions taken, if the Supreme Court shall determine that no error was committed in granting the new trial, they shall render judgment absolute upon the right of the appellant."

There are two possible readings of that part of Section 11 under immediate consideration. According to the first, no assent can be demanded unless the order appealed from was made upon a motion heard upon a case or bill of exceptions. This is the construction for which the appellant contends, urging that the *order in question having been made upon the minutes of the judge, it was not a case in which the assent of the appellant in question could be demanded, such order not having been granted on a case or bill of exceptions. The other reading will be understood by inverting two members of the sentence, as follows: "But no appeal to the Supreme Court on a case made or bill of exceptions, from an order granting a new trial," &c. The effect of this reading would be that all appeals from orders granting new trials would demand such assent on the part of the appellant, whether heard at the Circuit upon a case, with or without exceptions, or upon the minutes of the judge.

*107

The grammatical construction of the language quoted, aided by the punctuation of the text of the code, as it appears in the general statutes, (page 564), admits, to say the least, the possibility of the reading last above indicated. The words, "on a case or bill of exceptions," act as a condition or other qualification of some antecedent phrase. As such they do not, in a grammatical sense, necessarily qualify their immediate antecedent, so as to become a definition of the kind of order that is subject to the proviso under consideration; but they may, without forced construction, qualify the prior antecedent, in this sense having the effect of enlarging rather than narrowing the sense of that which they affect, by including all appeals from orders granting new trials, both such as are brought into the Appellate Court upon a case and upon a bill of exceptions. It is perfectly consistent that a member of a sentence, limiting the scope of a precedent, general direction should be followed by one giving the greatest amplitude to that direction consistently with such limitation; and had such been the intention of the legislature, the mode adopted is a proper and customary mode of giving expression to such intention.

Punctuation is the least reliable guide to the sense of a statute, but cannot properly be said to be without any force. In itself it is ordinarily insufficient to fix the sense of a statute where that is disputable, especially where the question is one of the force of a comma; but when the punctuation is strictly consistent with one of two senses, equally grammatical, and inconsistent with the other, it should be allowed the force of opening the question of *construction to receiving aid from the context, and from the nature of the purpose the statute has in view. It is certainly competent to cancel the equally weak argument that arises from the relative position in the sentence of the two clauses. The punctuation in the present case is entitled to this degree of consideration, for the insertion of a comma after the words "from an order granting a new trial," and before the words "on a case or bill of exceptions," tends to the conclusion that each of these clauses is an independent member of the sentence, having each distinct and independent effect upon the precedent general declaration, and such as is demanded by the reading suggested. It must be concluded that the reading that extends the provision as to assent to all appeals from orders granting new trials, is, to say the least, possible, and that is a sufficient warrant for going to the context for the proper solution of the question.

*108

We come now to consider what force, in settling the construction of the words just considered, should be ascribed to the language immediately following them, which declares that "upon every appeal from an order granting a new trial upon a case made, or on exceptions taken, if the Supreme Court shall determine that no error was committed in granting the new trial, they shall render judgment absolute upon the right of the appellant." Construing this clause as if it was an independent provision, it becomes necessary to inquire what cases are embraced within it. The important words here differ from those in the preceding provision; there the expression was "on a case made or bill of exceptions;" here the expression is, "on a case made or exceptions taken."

Both of these expressions, "on a bill of exceptions," and "on exceptions taken," are familiar to the courts of common law, and have been so from time immemorial. Until the recent act on the subject, exceptions were always taken at the trial. They were usually taken orally, but might be taken in writing. The taking of an exception before the jury left their seats, was an act incident to the trial that laid the foundation for a bill of exceptions. The bill of exceptions was a formal statement for the purposes of a writ of error or appeal to a court possessing the proper juris*diction, by way of review of the exceptions that had already been taken upon the trial.

*109

By Section 288 of the code, the use of the bills of exceptions is dispensed with, in terms, and the practice substituted of stating the exceptions that had been taken at the trial in a case containing so much of the evidence as might be necessary to show the bearing and force of the exceptions there taken. The direct meaning, then, of the clause of the section last quoted is, that whenever an exception has been taken at the trial, and an order granting a new trial has been made, based on such exception, the Supreme Court, on appeal, in determining that no error of law is involved in such exception, must give judgment absolute. The act of 1878 (16 Stat. 698) extends the right of taking exceptions for ten days after the trial, but this does not change the nature of an exception or the substantial sense of what is meant by taking an exception.

A motion in the Circuit Court for a new trial, after a verdict on an action in the nature of a suit at law, may be made either upon exceptions taken at the trial or without any such exception on certain other familiar grounds. An order for that purpose can be reviewed in this court only so far as it rests on exceptions taken at the trial. This is equally true where the motion for the new trial is made upon the minutes of the judge, as where made on a case formally prepared for that purpose. If, then, a motion for a new trial is made at the Circuit upon the minutes of the judge, it may rest, wholly or in part, on exceptions taken at the trial, or it may rest altogether on grounds independent of any exception taken. If it rests in whole or in part on exceptions taken, then it is capable of being reviewed on appeal in this court to the extent that it involves the matter of exceptions taken. If granted on grounds other than those embraced in exceptions, it cannot be reviewed on appeal in this court, except in a case, not supposable, of being granted on grounds that in themselves could not justify the granting of a new trial in any case. Therefore every order granting a new trial that is appealable to this court is, necessarily, an order on exception taken, and thus within the description of those cases in which this court must render judgment absolute upon the right of the appellant.

*110

*It remains to consider whether the provisions of the section that demand the assent of the appellant to the rendition of judgment absolute were intended to embrace all cases that are included in that part of the section that declares when judgment absolute shall be rendered on such appeals. It is clear that the assent of the appellant was deemed the proper justification for such judgment absolute, as the previous part of the section would otherwise have been omitted altogether, and the direction to the court to render judgment absolute in such cases would have been made compulsory without laying any special ground therefor. The purpose of requiring the assent of the appellant then being that a certain judgment may be rendered, the cases in which the assent may be demanded should be identical with the cases in which that judgment should be rendered. The end being a judgment of a certain character, and the means to that judgment being the assent of the appellant, the language that describes the means must, in doubt, find its key of construction in that part which describes the end sought to be obtained. It would follow that the intention of this section cannot be reached by reading the language demanding the assent of the appellant as restricting that demand to cases that have been heard before the Circuit Court on a formally prepared case or bill of exceptions. Unless, then, the words declaring, directly, the cases in which the assent of appellant may be demanded are free from doubt, their sense must be accommodated to the obvious purpose of the provision. That the reading contended for by the appellant is not free from doubt is apparent on other grounds than those already considered, for that reading assumes that what the code had in view in using the language defining the cases in which assent might be demanded was the observance of certain forms of proceeding, while that which is mentioned as a form of procedure in such cases, namely, a bill of exceptions is rendered absolute by another section of the code.

Even if the considerations already advanced do no more than place the reading already suggested on grounds of probability, yet when the purpose of the provision is considered with reference to its reason, that probability must be resolved into certainty.

*111

*The clear object of demanding the assent of the appellant to a judgment absolute is to discourage appeals from orders granting new trials, except where the controversy is of such a nature that it may be finally disposed of upon the argument of pure questions of law in the Appellate Court. Every appealable order granting a new trial must involve the fact that a ruling or decision made by the Circuit Court has been reversed by the same court, and, in fact, by the same judge who gave such ruling or decision, according to the general provisions of Section 289, which requires that the hearing of such motion shall be at the same term, except when the judge trying the cause shall otherwise order. It is unlikely that a judge would overrule his previous determination except upon the strongest reasons and after careful consideration. While the probabilities are thus strongly in favor of the last and deliberate conclusion reached, the inconveniences arising from appeals from orders granting new trials are, as a general rule, very great. The party allowed to appeal without restrictions from such orders has two chances, he may contend for his verdict, that has been set aside, in the appellate court, and, on being dismissed from that court without relief, may return to the Circuit and have a trial, de novo, of the whole case. The decision of the Appellate Court may possibly settle nothing of importance to the case, as, on a second trial, the subject and ground of exception may be entirely eliminated from the case. When, however, the whole question is one of law, capable of being finally disposed of by the Appellate Court, no such inconvenience arises. The policy of the provision is to leave the responsibility with the appellant in such cases of deciding for himself whether the case should be treated as one capable of being finally disposed of by the Appellate Court in the event of the failure of his appeal. If that is his judgment he expresses it by a corresponding assent in his appeal; if, on the other hand, he perceives that his case cannot properly be disposed of on such appeal, then his course is to submit to the order granting a new trial, with no ultimate loss, usually beyond that of some technical advantage gained at the first trial from an unwary adversary, who will be better instructed on the second trial.

*112

*This being the object in view, it is apparent that drawing a distinction between cases heard on formal papers and those heard on an informal presentation on the minutes and memory of the judge, is senseless. If a case is settled, it is the minutes and the memory of the judge that, in case of dispute, must settle it. The whole distinction between motions heard upon the minutes of the judge and upon a case formally settled, turns simply on the propriety of having the facts either acted upon or placed in a position for future action while the memory of the judge is fresh, his minutes and his memory being, in both cases, the test of what occurred at the trial.

It must be concluded that the notice of appeal was irregular and the appeal should be dismissed. The counsel for appellant upon the argument, expressed a desire that in the event that the notice of appeal should be adjudged defective he might be allowed to amend. Such application for amendment should be made in writing and upon due notice, but in the present case, even if made in proper form, the court having looked into the papers and become satisfied that there is no merit in the appeal, can see no ground for the exercise of its discretion by allowing the amendment asked.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 112

(Case No. 907.)

PARKER & CO. v. JACOBS.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Chattel Mortgages ⇨17.]

The rule at law and in equity stated, as to rights of a mortgagee of personal property in which the mortgagor had no interest, actual or potential, at the date of his mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Holliday v. Poston & Son, 60 S. C. 106, 38 S. E. 449; Creech v. Long, 72 S. C. 32, 51 S. E. 614.

For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 55–58; Dec. Dig. ⇨17.]

[2. Estoppel ⇨37.]

Where such mortgage has been executed, and an antecedent creditor subsequently obtains judgment against the mortgagor, and levies upon the property before it is delivered to the mortgagee, the mortgagee is entitled to recover its possession from the officer making the levy.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hirshkind & Co. v. Israel, 18 S. C. 174; Akers v. Rowan, 33 S. C. 475, 12 S. E. 165, 10 L. R. A. 705; Perkins v. Loan & Exchange Bank, 43 S. C. 45, 20 S. E. 759; Armour & Co. v. Ross, 75 S. C. 297, 55 S. E. 315.

For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 94; Dec. Dig. ⇨37.]

[3. Chattel Mortgages ⇨191.]

Where it was stipulated in such mortgage that the mortgaged property should be delivered to the mortgagees in Charleston to be sold by them *as factors, a delivery of the property to a railroad company for shipment consigned to the mortgagees, is not a delivery to them, nor a transfer of the legal title.

*113

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Matheson v. Southern Ry., 79 S. C. 158, 60 S. E. 437; Whaley v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 84 S. C. 190, 65 S. E. 1022.

For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 417; Dec. Dig. ⇨191.]

[4. Action ⇨25.]

A plaintiff, since the code, can enforce an equitable right to property in dispute under a form of action which seeks relief formerly obtainable only in a court of law.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gary v. People's Nat. Bank, 26 S. C. 548, 2 S. E. 568, 4 Am. St. Rep. 733.

For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 124–145, 147–149, 153, 156–159, 313; Dec. Dig. ⟸25.]

[This case is also cited in Davis v. Childers, 45 S. C. 144, 22 S. E. 784, 55 Am. St. Rep. 757, as to equitable mortgages, and in Keenan v. Leslie, 79 S. C. 473, 60 S. E. 1114, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Fraser, J., Williamsburg, February, 1880.

Action commenced in July, 1879, by J. H. Parker & Co., against Louis Jacobs, sheriff of Williamsburg county. The presiding judge ordered a non-suit upon the motion of defendant. Plaintiff appealed. The property in dispute was levied upon as the individual property of W. A. Ward. The other facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Dozier & Gilland, for appellants.

Mr. J. A. Kelley, contra.

August 31st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action to recover the possession of ten barrels of spirits of turpentine and forty-eight barrels of rosin, upon which the defendant had levied under an execution against Ward & Hinson, and which the plaintiffs claimed under a mortgage executed by Ward, one of the members of that firm, to them, prior to the recovery of the judgment upon which such execution was issued.

It did not appear from the original record submitted here whether the turpentine and rosin, the subject of this suit, was the product of a turpentine farm in the possession or under the control of the mortgagor, Ward, at the time the mortgage was executed, or whether it was subsequently bought by him; and the counsel engaged in the cause agreed that the Circuit judge should be requested to amend the "case" by a further statement of the evidence upon this point. In this additional statement, which has been filed with the original record, as a part thereof, the Circuit judge says: "There was no evidence before me as to whether the crude turpentine, from which the rosin and spirits *were made, was the product of a turpentine farm worked by W. A. Ward, or was bought by him. * * * The witness, W. A. Ward, the mortgagor, only said that the rosin and spirits of turpentine were made in his 'business in this county,' which included purchasing crude turpentine as well as making it on turpentine farms." Now, as the burden of proof is upon the plaintiffs, and as they, according to this statement, have not shown that the property in dispute was in the possession of the mortgagor at the time of the execution of the mortgage, or that it was the natural product of anything then in his possession or under his control, the precise question which we are first called upon to consider, is whether a mortgage of personal property of which the mortgagor has no possession or right of possession at the time, and which is not the natural product of something of which he then has either the possession or right of possession, confers any rights upon the mortgagee, after the property is acquired by the mortgagor, and before it is delivered to or taken possession of by the mortgagee under the mortgage.

*114

There can be no doubt that the rule at law is that it is necessary to the validity of the mortgage that the mortgagor should have a present property, either actual or potential, in the thing mortgaged, (1 Jones on Mortgages, § 149;) but in equity the rule is different. As is said by Judge Story in Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story 630 [Fed. Cas. No. 9,673]: "It seems to me the clear result of all the authorities that wherever the parties, by their contract, intended to create a positive lien or charge, either upon real or personal property, whether then owned by the assignor or not, or if personal property, whether it is then in esse or not, it attaches, in equity, as a lien or charge upon the particular property as soon as the assignor or contractor acquires a title thereto, against the latter and all persons asserting a claim thereto under him, either voluntarily or with notice or in bankruptcy." This doctrine is fully established by the case of Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191, and is recognized in McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 459.

We take it, therefore, that a mortgage on personal property in which the mortgagor has no present interest, either actual or potential, is ineffectual to transfer the legal title to such property *when subsequently acquired by the mortgagor, unless, when acquired, possession thereof is given to the mortgagee or taken by him under the mortgage, (Moody v. Wright, 13 Mete. 32; Williams v. Briggs, 11 R. I. 476, and many other cases there cited,) but that, in equity, such a mortgage is effectual to charge the property, as soon as it is acquired by the mortgagor, and before possession is obtained by the mortgagee, with an equitable lien which will prevail against a subsequent judgment or attaching creditors. Holroyd v. Marshall, 10 H. L. Cas. 191; Mitchell v. Winslow, 2 Story 630 [Fed. Cas. No. 9,673]; Smithurst v. Edmunds, 14 N. J. Eq., 1 McCarter 408; McCaffrey v. Woodin, 65 N. Y. 459.

*115

Let us apply these principles to the case under consideration. The language of the mortgage clearly shows an intention to give a lien, not only upon the spirits of turpentine and rosin then in the possession of the mortgagor, but also upon all "which he may produce or prepare for market or otherwise acquire." It is certainly broad enough to cover, not only the turpentine and rosin which might be the product of either of the farms mentioned in the mortgage, but also any that the mortgagor might purchase or otherwise acquire. Assuming then that the property in dispute was not the product of either of the farms mentioned in the mortgage but was bought by the mortgagor subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, yet, according to the principles above established, the plaintiffs were entitled to an equitable lien thereon as soon as it was acquired by the mortgagor, though they could not be said to have a legal right thereto until it was delivered to or taken possession of by them under the mortgage.

The next inquiry is, whether the property in dispute, after it was acquired by the mortgagor, was delivered to or taken possession of by the mortgagees before the rights of third persons had intervened by the levy made by the sheriff. According to the terms of the mortgage the mortgagor bound himself to "consign, send, ship and deliver to the said J. H. Parker & Co., in Charleston, all the crude turpentine, rosin and spirits of turpentine already made by him and to be made by him, or owned or to be owned by him; * * * also, all the crude turpentine, rosin and spirits of turpentine that he shall purchase in his *general business, to be sold by the said J. H. Parker & Co., as factors, on the usual commissions," &c. The delivery by the mortgagor to the railroad company of the property in dispute, to be carried to the plaintiffs, in pursuance of the above recited covenant, was not, in our judgment, such a delivery to, or taking possession of, by the mortgagees under the mortgage as would perfect their legal title. The purpose was that the property should be delivered to the plaintiffs to be sold by them as factors. It never was actually delivered into the possession of the mortgagees, and the legal title was never transferred to them. The test of this is that if the property had been lost or destroyed before it reached Charleston the loss would have fallen upon the mortgagor and not upon the mortgagees. The agreement was to deliver in Charleston, and until the property reached that place it could not be said to be delivered in accordance with the terms of the agreement, and, therefore, the legal title never passed to the plaintiffs by delivery. There was no transfer, by writing, as in the cases cited upon this point, by the appellants; the mortgage, as we have seen, being insufficient for that purpose, so far as the subsequently acquired property was concerned, and, as there was no delivery, the legal title never passed.

*116

The plaintiffs must, therefore, rely solely upon their equitable rights, which, as we have seen, they acquired by virtue of the mortgage, even before the property was delivered to or taken possession of by them. The question then is narrowed down to the inquiry whether this equitable lien of the plaintiffs can prevail against the execution under which the defendant levied upon the property in dispute. This execution was issued to enforce a judgment recovered in March, 1879, and could have no lien on the property until it was levied, and as the equitable lien of the plaintiffs arose as soon as the property was acquired by the mortgagor, it was, of course, prior, in point of time, to the lien of the execution. The real question, therefore, is whether an equitable lien can prevail against the lien of an execution subsequently acquired. In Dow v. Ker, Speers Eq. 417, Johnson, Ch. says: "The language of all the books is that an agreement to mortgage is an equitable lien and has precedence of subsequent judgments and all general creditors." To support this proposition *he cites Massey v. McIlwain, 2 Hill's Eq. 428; Reddos v. Gaillard, (which should be Read v. Administrator of Simons,) 2 Desaus. 552 [2 Am. Dec. 296]. To same effect, see, also, Welsh v. Usher, 2 Hill's Eq. 167 [29 Am. Dec. 63]: Bank v. Campbell, 2 Rich. Eq. 191. It is true that the question in all these cases arose prior to the act of 1843, and, therefore, if, as in the case of Boyce v. Shiver, 3 S. C. 515, the controversy was between an equitable mortgagee and a subsequent creditor or purchaser, the result would be different. But here there is not only no evidence that the defendant or those whom he represents occupies the position of a subsequent creditor or purchaser, but from the fact that the judgment was recovered in March, 1879, only about two months after the execution of the mortgage, the reasonable inference is that the creditor, whose execution the defendant was attempting to enforce, was an antecedent creditor.

*117

The only remaining question is whether the plaintiffs can, in this action which seeks relief formerly obtainable only in a court of law, enforce their equitable right to the possession of the property in dispute. Prior to the code, this unquestionably, could not have been done. That statute has, however, introduced fundamental changes in the forms of proceedings for the enforcement and protection of rights in the courts of this state. One of the most important of these changes is that found in Section 92: "The distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of all such actions and suits, heretofore existing, are abolished; and there shall be in this state hereafter but one form of action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress of private wrongs, which shall be denominated a civil action." Hence when one comes into court asking for the enforcement or protection of his rights, it does not matter what the nature of his rights may be, whether legal or equitable, he must pursue them by the same form of action. If his allegations and proofs satisfy the court that he is entitled to relief he will obtain it, and the fact that his title to such relief is based upon an equitable rather than a legal right cannot affect or be affected by the form of the action, for, as we have seen, the code provides that there shall be but one form of action for the enforcement and protection of both classes of rights. Such is *conclusively shown to be the proper and legitimate construction of the code by Mr. Pomeroy in his work on Remedies, Chap. I., §§ 2 and 5, although a different view seems to prevail in some of the states which have adopted this system of procedure. As is said by Johnson, J., in Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266: "Since the enactment of the code the question is not whether the plaintiff has a legal right or an equitable right, or the defendant a legal or an equitable defence against the plaintiff's claim, but whether, according to the whole law of the land applicable to the case, the plaintiff makes out the right which he seeks to establish, or the defendant shows that the plaintiff ought not to have the relief sought for." Or, as is said by Sanderson, J., in Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514: "Legal and equitable relief are administered in the same forum, and according to the same general plan. A party cannot be sent out of court merely because his facts do not entitle him to relief at law, or merely because he is not entitled to relief in equity, as the case may be. He can be sent out of court only when, upon his facts, he is entitled to no relief either at law or in equity." If, therefore, the plaintiffs, while failing to show that they have a legal right to the possession of the property in dispute have succeeded in showing an equitable right to such possession, we see no reason why they should be denied the relief demanded in this action, simply because their title to such relief is based upon an equitable and not upon a legal right.

*118

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and a new trial is ordered.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 118

(Case No. 908.)

STATE v. GLENN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Bastards ⇐35.]

Under Article IV, Section 1, of the constitution of this state, it is competent for the legislature to confer upon trial justices jurisdiction of the cases mentioned in Article IV., Section 22, including bastardy. These sections, together with Article I., Section 19, construed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–90; Dec. Dig. ⇐35.]

*119

[2. Bastards ⇐35.]

*No jurisdiction to hear and determine cases of bastardy has been conferred by law upon trial justices. Under Chapter LXVIII., of general statutes, original jurisdiction in such cases belongs to the Courts of General Sessions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–90; Dec. Dig. ⇐35; Courts, Cent. Dig. § 1199.]

[3. Courts ⇐160.]

The grant to an inferior court out of the jurisdiction previously exercised by a court of general original jurisdiction, cannot operate as an exclusion of such superior court, unless made so by the terms of the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 405; Dec. Dig. ⇐160.]

[4. Bastards ⇐35.]

The Court of General Sessions is not excluded by the constitution from taking jurisdiction in cases of bastardy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–90; Dec. Dig. ⇐35.]

[5. Bastards ⇐83.]

One convicted of bastardy cannot be sentenced to imprisonment in default of giving bond for the maintenance of the bastard child.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Quick, 25 S. C. 111.

For other cases, see Bastards, Cent. Dig. § 210; Dec. Dig. ⇐83.]

[This case is also cited in State v. Brewer, 38 S. C. 263, 16 S. E. 1001, 19 L. R. A. 362, 37 Am. St. Rep. 752, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Northrop, J., Newberry, May, 1876.

Indictment for bastardy. Defendant was convicted and sentenced, and appealed upon the several grounds considered in the opinion of the court; but counsel for both appellant and respondent argued only the last ground, viz., whether the alternative sentence of imprisonment was within the power of the court.

Messrs. Pope & Fair, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Ball, contra.

August 31st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by WILLARD, C. J. The defendant was arrested under a warrant issued by a trial justice upon a charge of bastardy. Having traversed the charge, the case was transmitted to the General Sessions, and an indictment therefor found, and conviction had under such indictment, and sentence pronounced by the court under Chapter LXVIII. of the general statutes, p. 376. The first question presented by the grounds of appeal is whether the constitution has granted exclusive original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy to justices of the peace so as to exclude trial justices from assuming such jurisdiction. If the conclusion is reached that it was competent for the general assembly to confer on trial justices original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy, then it will be necessary to inquire whether, in the present instance, such jurisdiction has been conferred.

*120

If it should appear that no such *grant of jurisdiction has, in fact, been made to trial justices, it will become necessary to inquire whether the Court of General Sessions is competent under the constitution and the laws to assume such jurisdiction. If so, whether such jurisdiction was properly assumed in the present case, and whether the judgment of the Court of General Sessions, appealed from, is in conformity with law.

The first of these inquiries involves the question whether a trial justice can exercise the jurisdiction conferred by Section 22, Article IV. of the constitution, consistently with its provisions. That section provides "that justices of the peace, individually, or two or more of them jointly, as the general assembly may direct, shall have original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy," &c. If this is to be regarded as a grant of exclusive jurisdiction, then trial justices are excluded from exercising the jurisdiction here conferred upon justices of the peace. There are no words in the constitutional grant importing exclusive jurisdiction, and if that conferred is of that nature, it must arise by implication. If the grant of jurisdiction, in case of bastardy, is exclusive, then all the jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace by Section 22, Article IV., must be regarded as of the same nature, and, in that case, trial justices, and other inferior courts, must be excluded from participating in such jurisdiction. The jurisdiction conferred on justices of the peace by that section embraces, in addition to cases of bastardy, actions ex contractu and ex delicto, and for fines and forfeitures, under limitations, as it regards the amount involved, prosecutions for assault and battery and other penal offences less than felony, punishable by fines only. To this enumeration is added, by Section 19, Article I., offences less than felony, where the penalty does not exceed a fine of $100 and imprisonment for thirty days. To hold, then, that the jurisdiction conferred on justices of the peace by Section 22, Article IV., is exclusive, would be equivalent to holding that the entire jurisdiction proper to the inferior courts of this state is vested exclusively in justices of the peace, except that over offences punishable by fine not exceeding $100 and imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. Such a conclusion would be inconsistent *with a fair construction of the provisions of Section 1, Article IV., as will hereafter appear.

*121

It is necessary, then, to inquire whether a proper construction of Section 1, Article IV., is consistent with the conclusion that the grant to justices of the peace in Section 22, Article IV., is exclusive in its nature; for, if it is not consistent, clearly no implication is admissible having the effect to place the language of Section 22 in antagonism with that of Section 1 of the same article of the constitution.

Section 1, Article IV., is as follows: "The judicial power of this state shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in two Circuit Courts, to wit, a Court of Common Pleas, having civil jurisdiction, and a Court of General Sessions, with criminal jurisdiction only, in Probate Courts, and in justices of the peace. The general assembly may also establish such municipal and other inferior courts as may be deemed necessary." It must be conceded that this grant of judicial power is exhaustive, so that no other courts than those named, or otherwise provided for, can be constitutionally created by the legislature. The constitution recognizes the distinction between the superior and inferior courts of law, as was held in State v. Fillebrown, 2 S. C. 404, and, accordingly, must be regarded as recognizing the distinction involved in the application of the terms superior and inferior to the respective jurisdictions conferred upon such courts. Regarding then the whole inferior jurisdiction of the state as vested, either actually or contingently, by the section in question, it remains to inquire what disposition is made by Section 1, Article IV., of that inferior jurisdiction. The effect of the clause of Section 1 that provides that "the general assembly may also establish such municipal and other inferior courts as may be deemed necessary," is the same as if the preceding clause had read and in justices of the peace and in municipal and other inferior courts as the general assembly may deem necessary. In the event of the creation of municipal and other inferior courts, their jurisdiction must of necessity embrace part of that intended to be conferred on justices of the peace, and, therefore, the grant to justices of the peace in Section 1, Article IV., cannot be read as exclusive. This section must then be read as conferring the en*tire inferior jurisdiction on justices of the peace and such municipal or other inferior courts as the legislature should thereafter create for such purpose, and whenever such courts should be called into existence, to the extent deemed requisite by the legislature they would have concurrent jurisdiction with justices of the peace.

*122

If, then, an exclusive character is denied to the jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace by a necessary construction of the terms of Section 1, it is clear that it is not competent to enlarge the sense of the subsequent twenty-second section, by means of implication, so as to produce an opposite effect. In the one case the implication rests on the high ground of necessity, for without it the provision cannot take proper effect, while no such ground exists for enlarging the sense of Section 22. It must be concluded then that the grant contained in Section 22 to justices of the peace does not contemplate vesting exclusive jurisdiction in such officers, but that the whole jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace is capable of being made concurrent in justices of the peace and such municipal or other inferior court as the legislature may see fit to create.

It may be argued that Section 19, Article I., marks out the proper jurisdiction capable of being exercised by such municipal or other inferior courts as the legislature may see fit to create, and that by reading that section with Section 1, Article IV., the conclusion may be reached that, as it regards the particular jurisdiction specified in Section 19, Article I., concurrent jurisdiction may exist between justices of the peace and municipal or other inferior courts created for that purpose, and as to the residue of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace conferred by Section 22, Article IV., such jurisdiction may be regarded as exclusive in them. In order to reach such a construction it is necessary to regard Section 19, Article I., as intended to define and circumscribe the jurisdiction proper to be exercised by such inferior courts as the legislature might see fit to establish, by limiting such inferior courts to the particular jurisdiction provided for in that section. It is necessary then to examine that section to see if such an intention can be made out from it.

*123

*Section 19 is as follows: "All offences less than felony, and in which the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment for thirty days, shall be tried summarily before a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law, on information under oath, without indictment or intervention of a grand jury, saving to the defendant the right of appeal; and no person shall be held to answer for any higher crime or offence unless on presentment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land and naval service, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger." The direct object of this section is to regulate the method of making accusations of crime, as appears not only by the language of the section itself, but by its position in the first article of the constitution entitled the "declaration of rights," which is particularly concerned with the rights and immunities of the citizen, as such, as in the familiar bill of rights. It recognizes the fact that the jurisdiction of justices of the peace is not exclusive, as its powers are to be concurrently exercised by "a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law." As we have seen that Section 1, Article IV., vests the whole judicial power so as to exclude all other courts and officers, not therein named or provided for, from participating in the exercise of such power, the language of Section 19 must be read as intended to apply to such municipal or inferior courts as the legislature might create for that purpose under the authority of Section 1, Article IV. Section 19, Article I., cannot be regarded as intended to define the jurisdiction proper for such inferior courts as the legislature may create under Section 1 of Article IV. Such is neither the language and import of that section nor the proper province of the article to which that section appertains. It is true it might have the incidental effect of vesting the particular jurisdiction provided for in it, if elsewhere the constitution had failed to effectually vest such powers. Section 19 does, in fact, vest jurisdiction in the inferior courts in excess of that granted by Section 22, Article IV., for under the last named section, justices of the peace had jurisdiction of penal offences less than felony, only where punishable by fines alone, while Section 19 extends that jurisdiction to offences of that class when punishable by im*prisonment of a limited duration. State v. Fillebrown, 2 S. C. 404. While, then, Section 19 does actually vest jurisdiction, on the principle that words creating a jurisdiction must, if possible, where necessity requires it, be regarded as vesting it for execution, yet there is nothing to lead to the conclusion that in framing Section 19 the scope of the powers of the inferior courts, other than justices of the peace, was before the minds of its framers, so as to warrant the inference that they intended it to operate as an organic disposition of the whole subject of the jurisdiction of such inferior courts. If such could be its effect, the only jurisdiction that could be exercised by municipal courts or inferior courts other than justices of the peace would be that over offences less than felony, where the punishment prescribed by law was either a fine, not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or where such fine or imprisonment might be in the alternative. This would not enable such municipal or other inferior courts to examine and commit for offences of a higher grade than those cognizable originally before themselves, a result that cannot be supposed to have been intended by the constitution. It would also exclude all proceedings for the enforcement of penalties or forfeitures where fines are imposed, with imprisonment as a means, merely, of enforcing the payment of such fines. It should not be concluded, as a mere inference, from doubtful language, that the intention was to prevent the legislature from conferring such powers on municipal courts, or even upon other inferior courts. It is, therefore, clear that Section 19 was not intended to mark out the jurisdiction of such courts as the legislature was authorized to create.

*124

Trial justices courts must be regarded as inferior courts in the sense of Article IV., Section 1, and entitled to concurrent jurisdiction of the cases included in Section 22, Article IV., embracing that of bastardy, if the views already advanced are capable of being maintained. It remains to consider what judicial support these views have received from the adjudicated cases that have arisen under the constitution.

State v. Fillebrown, 2 S. C. 404. The exact question in the present case was not necessarily passed upon in the case just cited. The question there was as to the jurisdiction of trial *justices on prosecutions of assault and battery, a jurisdiction properly included in that conferred by Section 19, Article I., under the provisions of the act of 1870, (14 Stat. 376, 402,) making that offence punishable in accordance with the limits imposed by Section 19, Article I., where the offence was not of a high and aggravated nature. Chief Justice Moses, in the opinion of the court, places a construction on the words "inferior courts," as contained in Section 1, Article IV., in harmony with the views just expressed. He holds that the intention was that under the name of inferior courts, courts might be created by the legislature with jurisdiction and powers concurrent with those of justices of the peace, and not necessarily inferior to them. That case leaves open the question whether cases included in Section 22, Article IV., but not included in Section 19, Article I., are cognizable by any other inferior court than that of justices of the peace within which class the case of bastardy comes. It is also said in that case: "A court in which a justice of the peace presides is an inferior one, and the jurisdiction accorded to it by the constitution is not exclusive because the general assembly may establish such other inferior courts as may be deemed necessary; and the right to do so being permitted by the constitution, such other court is as much a court established by the constitution as is that of a justice of the peace." While this remark was not necessarily demanded by the nature of the question then before the court, yet it derives importance from the use that was made of it in the case that will be next considered.

*125

Rhodes v. Railroad, 6 S. C. 385. The question in that case involved, directly, the inquiry whether the jurisdiction conferred by Section 22, Article IV., on justices of the peace was exclusive of a trial justice's court considered as an inferior court in the sense of Section 1, Article IV. It related to the cognizance of actions ex delicto when the damages laid were less than $100. It was there held that such jurisdiction could be exercised by trial justices, and the decision was placed upon the proposition already cited from State v. Fillebrown, namely, that the authority to establish inferior courts embraced that of creating courts with jurisdiction concurrent with that of justices of the peace.

*126

*It is apparent that the views already expressed have received the judicial sanction of this court, and no ground appears that should weaken the weight of that authority. It must then be concluded that it was competent for the legislature to confer upon the trial justices jurisdiction in cases of bastardy, which brings us to the second question, whether such jurisdiction has been conferred.

It is claimed that Chapter LXVIII. of the general statutes, p. 376, confers original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy upon trial justices. Chapter LXVIII. does not permit the truth of the charge of bastardy when denied by the defendant to be inquired into by the trial justice who has issued the warrant. It is required that in case of the denial of the charge an issue shall be made up and tried in the Court of General Sessions, and if conviction is had upon such issue, the judgment should be rendered by that court. These provisions tend to restrain the functions of the trial justices in such cases to the performance of mere ministerial acts, namely, to issuing the warrant and when the defendant admits his culpability to taking the security provided by law in such cases. By original jurisdiction we must understand power to hear and determine the cases brought within it, and incidentally to decide all questions of law and fact involved in such cases. No such power appears to have been conferred upon trial justices.

The next question presented is, whether it was competent for the Court of General Sessions to take jurisdiction of the case. It is clear that Chapter LXVIII., so far as it confers original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy, confers it upon the Court of General Sessions, as appears from the reasons already stated. Unless, then, there is some constitutional objection to such grant, the General Sessions had competent authority to proceed in the present case.

It is immaterial to the present case whether Chapter LXVIII. of the general statutes is to be regarded as confirming a jurisdiction previously existing in the Court of General Sessions, or as intending an original grant of jurisdiction, for in either case to deprive that court of the jurisdiction thus conferred, it would *be necessary to point to some clause of the constitution having the effect to exclude it from the exercise of such jurisdiction.

*127

The constitution no where, in express terms, excludes the General Sessions from exercising jurisdiction in cases of bastardy or the general jurisdiction to which that case is capable of being referred. If excluded, then, it must be by implication. Such an implication may arise out of two classes of provisions, either out of such as serve to define and limit the jurisdiction of that particular court, or such as grant jurisdiction to some other court in terms inconsistent with its exercise elsewhere. If the implication contended for in this case arises, it must be from provisions conferring jurisdiction on other courts, for nothing appears in the constitution elsewhere, that is, Section 19. Article I., already considered, that can be construed as directly intended to limit and define the jurisdiction of the General Sessions beyond keeping it within the limit of criminal jurisdiction or upon which such an implication can arise. We are then to look to the constitution to see whether jurisdiction in cases of bastardy has been conferred upon some other court so effectively as to imply the exclusion of the Court of General Sessions from the exercise of such jurisdiction. In other words, the inquiry is, has some other court than the General Sessions exclusive jurisdiction in cases of bastardy? Such jurisdiction may be conferred eo nomine or as appertaining to a class made the subject of such exclusive jurisdiction. A grant of jurisdiction does not, in itself, carry the idea of an exclusive character. Our constitution is silent where concurrent jurisdiction is intended, and only speaks when the design is that it shall be exclusive. A grant of jurisdiction to a court, in terms exclusive, may properly be regarded as a limitation in express terms of the jurisdiction of all other courts to a corresponding extent. The constitution contains no express grant of exclusive jurisdiction that can possibly include the case of bastardy. The question then arises whether the terms in which jurisdiction is granted in that particular case or in the class of cases to which it appertains, imply the exclusion of all other courts from participating in such jurisdiction. It is impossible to answer fully this question in its special bearing on the case on hand without considering a much wider range of objects.

*128

*It necessarily brings into consideration the general scheme of the constitution as it regards the distribution of various jurisdictions that fall under the head of "judicial power." General language, as well as special, must receive attention in this inquiry. This necessity is specially imposed by the fact that in Section 1, Article IV., a distinction is clearly drawn between the classes of superior and inferior courts, while in Section 22 that particular jurisdiction in bastardy is conferred eo nomine on a court appertaining to the class of inferior courts. The argument has to be answered, that as the constitution recognizes the existence of superior and inferior courts, and must, therefore, be regarded as recognizing the corresponding distinction arising from the nature of their jurisdiction, and as it confers jurisdiction in cases of bastardy on a court of inferior jurisdiction that it has impliedly excluded the Court of General Sessions as a court of superior jurisdiction from the exercise of such jurisdiction, upon the idea that superior jurisdiction is proper to the superior courts, and, therefore, exclusive in them, while that which is inferior in its nature is proper to the inferior courts, and, for the like reason exclusive in them.

The sections of the constitution that must be construed together for the purpose just indicated, are the first, eighteenth and twenty-second sections of Article IV. Section 1, Article IV., is as follows: "The judicial power of this state shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in two Circuit Courts, to wit, a Court of Common Pleas having civil jurisdiction, and a Court of General Sessions with criminal jurisdiction only, in Probate Courts and in justices of the peace. The general assembly may also establish such municipal and other inferior courts as may be deemed necessary." Section 18 is as follows: "The Court of General Sessions shall have exclusive jurisdiction in all criminal cases that shall not be otherwise provided for by law." * * * Section 22 is as follows: "Justices of the peace, individually, or two or more of them jointly, as the general assembly may direct, shall have original jurisdiction in cases of bastardy, and in all matters of contract, and actions for the recovery of fines and forfeitures where the amount claimed does not exceed $100, and such jurisdiction as may be provided by law in actions ex *delicto, where the damages claimed do not exceed $100, prosecutions for assault and battery and other penal offences less than felony, punishable by fines only."

*129

We have already considered whether the grant of jurisdiction in cases of bastardy excludes other inferior courts, such as trial justices, and it remains to be considered whether it excludes the Court of General Sessions. It is very clear that if the whole question depended upon the force of the language of Section 22, the conclusion that has been reached as it regards trial justices would contain its entire solution. But there remains for examination certain considerations growing out of the force of Section 1, Article IV., in so far as it draws a distinction between superior and inferior courts. Reverting to the argument that has been mentioned as needing an answer, it may be observed that it does not follow that because the constitution may have indicated the jurisdiction proper to the inferior courts, and thus impliedly recognized the jurisdiction proper to the superior courts, that it is hence to be inferred that such jurisdictions are to be regarded as exclusive, simply because respectively proper to the courts possessing them. No such precise distribution is possible as that which would assign to each class of courts that which is proper to it, and in its nature improper for any other court. It is in the nature of the administration of justice that jurisdiction should overlap and be, to a large extent, concurrent between courts possessing different powers and proceeding by different methods. But if such a distribution was possible, the terms superior and inferior, for the want of the means of rendering them precise, would not serve the purpose of indicating such a distribution. It would follow from this that what is proper for one court is not necessarily improper for another, hence no implication in favor of the exclusive character of any jurisdiction can arise simply from the fact that such jurisdiction is proper to the court upon which it has been conferred.

The delegation of "judicial power" made by Section 1, Article IV., is necessarily exhaustive, for the judicial power mentioned means the whole judicial power when, as is here the case, nothing appears to give it a less extensive signification, and the effect of vesting the whole judicial power is to leave nothing *appertaining to such power capable of being vested in any other manner. It would therefore follow, as has been noticed in another place, that it is not competent for the legislature to create any other courts to participate in the exercise of the judicial power of the state than such as are either named or provided for in Section 1, Article IV. The grant may, consistently with the terms employed, be regarded as a grant in solido made to the courts indicated, for the purpose of excluding all other courts, and yet not operate as a partition of such judicial power among such courts. The question of partition is one of intention that must, as has been said, be reached, if at all, in the present case by implication.

*130

The first consideration to be adverted to as bearing on the question of the office intended for Section 1, Article IV., and tending to exclude the idea that it was intended by that section to mark out the proper office for the several courts and classes of courts provided for in it, is the fact that this purpose in regard to each of these courts and classes of courts is accomplished in other independent sections. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is defined in Section 4, that of the Common Pleas in Section 15, that of the General Sessions in Section 18, that of the Probate Courts in Section 20, and that of justices of the peace in Section 22. While the jurisdiction of the inferior courts, though not defined fully as such, is treated of in Section 19, Article I. It is to these sections last named that we must look, in the first instance, to find the partition of the judicial power intended to be made by the constitution, and no necessity exists for resorting to Section 1 for such purposes.

It is clear that in a limited aspect, Section 1 does make a partition of power. It confers upon the Common Pleas civil jurisdiction and upon the General Sessions criminal jurisdiction. Here is an instance in which jurisdiction is distributed in a manner that implies exclusion. It recognizes a fundamental division of jurisdiction, and separately and distributively vests the several kinds each in a court of a particular designation. Under such circumstances for the Court of Common Pleas to assume the exercise of criminal administration, or for the Court of General Sessions to exercise civil jurisdiction would contra*dict the terms in which their jurisdictions are respectively conferred, and thus violate the purpose of the constitution. No such recognition of the divisible nature of jurisdiction is found in Section 1, Article IV., in its application to the Supreme Court, the Probate Courts and to justices of the peace, nor any line drawn by which their jurisdiction can be distinguished from that divided between the Common Pleas and General Sessions, nor by which these courts can be classified as superior and inferior. It is only when the subject of creating municipal and other inferior courts is dealt with that the distinction appears. Whatever difference the constitution makes in the fundamental character of the Supreme Court, the Common Pleas and General Sessions, the Probate Courts and justices of the peace, apart from the distribution of civil and criminal jurisdiction, as between the two Circuit Courts, is accomplished altogether by those sections that severally define the jurisdictions of these courts respectively. In an indirect sense, Section 1 may be regarded as operating to establish a particular jurisdiction in the Common Pleas and General Sessions. The other sections of this article that define and limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the Probate Courts and justices of the peace, leave a residuum of jurisdiction not granted away, and this necessarily appertains to the remaining courts whose jurisdictions are not limited either by their own nature or by any provision of the constitution. As then, under Section 1, no courts other than those enumerated can be created except for the exercise of inferior powers, it follows that it is not competent for the legislature to divest the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions of that part of their jurisdiction that answers to the designation superior.

*131

It is evident from the foregoing that no general partition of jurisdiction was intended by Section 1, Article IV., and that as between the Courts of General Sessions and justices of the peace it furnishes no test of what matters may be concurrent between the two courts.

It is necessary then to inquire whether competency has been denied to the General Sessions by Section 22, Article IV., as it regards any of the matters brought within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace by that section. Is there anything in the *nature of a grant of jurisdiction to an inferior court that necessarily removes such jurisdiction from the superior courts? The object of creating inferior courts is two fold: first, to afford a simple and inexpensive mode of proceeding in cases of small magnitude; and, second, to relieve the superior courts of the burden of small suits. In practice this result has been attained by opening inferior courts in such cases, and denying costs and expenses incurred in such prosecutions in a superior court where a remedy might have been found in an inferior court. This object rests on prudential grounds and does not touch the fundamental nature of grants of jurisdiction. There is no recognized principle by which a grant to an inferior out of the jurisdiction previously exercised by a court of general original jurisdiction can operate as an exclusion of such superior courts unless made so by the terms of the grant. If the existence of concurrent jurisdiction could be regarded in no other light than as the consequence of imperfection in the distribution of jurisdiction, there might be some ground for assuming the possibility of such a principle, but, so far from that being the case, the concurrence of jurisdictions, as has been already said, is a positive aid to the administration of justice. On the other hand, our constitution undertakes to say when the jurisdiction granted by it shall be exclusive in many instances, and the absence of any expression of an intent that the jurisdiction conferred upon justices of the peace shall exclude the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions should be referred to the absence of any such intent, and it is manifestly improper to supply words omitted, when to do so confers characteristics or a grant of jurisdiction that do not appertain to the nature of such grants, and with no other justification than a theoretical objection to concurrent jurisdiction between a superior and inferior court. It follows that the grant of jurisdiction in cases of bastardy, in Section 22, does not operate to deprive the Court of General Sessions of jurisdiction in such cases.

*132

Section 18 has already been construed by this court in State v. Simmons, 4 S. C. 72, as not preventing the Court of General Sessions from retaining jurisdiction in certain criminal cases, notwithstanding the creation of a court by the legislature for *the purpose of exercising such jurisdiction exclusively. The conclusion of the court in that case that the legislature could not constitutionally take away any part of the general criminal jurisdiction of the Court of General Sessions may be referred to the ground already presented by assuming that the criminal court of Charleston, as constituted by the act of 1872, did not answer the description of courts which the legislature, under Section 1, Article IV., was competent to create, inasmuch as it was intended to encroach upon the superior jurisdiction of the General Sessions, and, therefore, was not an inferior court. The eighteenth section was evidently intended to exclude all other courts from participating in the criminal jurisdiction in the General Sessions, except where, under the constitution itself, or some law passed in conformity therewith, competent to take such jurisdiction as might exist or be created, in which case such jurisdiction would be concurrent with that of the General Sessions, for the want of words excluding the General Sessions in any case, as the condition in that section operates alone on the grant of exclusive jurisdiction, and not upon the general competency of the General Sessions to take concurrent jurisdiction where it is not entitled to exclusive.

*133

The foregoing construction is in harmony with all the cases decided in this court.

McIver v. Townsend, 2 S. C. 1. That case illustrates the operation of that portion of Section 1, Article IV., that distributes civil and criminal jurisdiction as between the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions. In the section conferring jurisdiction in the Common Pleas, the writ of mandamus is mentioned as part of that jurisdiction. This was ground for holding that the constitution recognized the change that mandamus had undergone in its practical use, being changed from a criminal to a civil proceeding, and that thus it passed to the Common Pleas and out of the General Sessions as a civil remedy.

Burge v. Willis, 5 S. C. 212. That case held that notwithstanding Section 22, of the constitution, conferred upon justices of the peace original jurisdiction "in all matters of contract" where the amount claimed did not exceed a certain sum, yet the Common Pleas did not thereby lose jurisdiction over such cases.

*134

*Rhodes v. Railroad, 6 S. C. 385. That case holds that the jurisdiction conferred by Section 22, on justices of the peace, is not exclusive so as to prevent the legislature from conferring such jurisdiction on such inferior courts as it might see fit to create under the authority for that purpose conferred by Section 1, Article IV.

State v. Harper, 6 S. C. 464. The exclusion of the Court of General Sessions from a portion of its criminal jurisdiction was attempted to be worked out from the provisions of Section 19, Article I., relative to certain summary proceedings. No intimation is given in that case of any exclusion of the General Sessions as the consequence of the jurisdiction conferred on justices of the peace by Section 22.

Walker v. Russell, 10 S. C. 82. The same general mode of reasoning was employed in that case to reach the conclusion that the grant of jurisdiction to Probate Courts in Section 20, Article IV., was not in its character exclusive.

It must be concluded that the Court of General Sessions is not excluded by the constitution from taking jurisdiction in cases of bastardy.

The sentence of the General Sessions was not conformable to law. The statute provides that on conviction for bastardy, the defendant "shall be required to give the security or recognizance hereinbefore provided, and on default thereof shall be liable to execution as are defendants convicted of misdemeanors." The sentence in the present case was "that defendant, Abraham Glenn, give bond in the sum of $300 for the maintenance of the child until it reaches the age of twelve years, and in default thereof, be imprisoned in the county jail for the period of six months, and execution issue against defendant's property." The statute confers no authority to impose punishment for a fixed period, or in the nature of alternative punishment. The judgment of the General Sessions must be set aside and the case remanded for such proceedings as are by law provided.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *135

*(Case No. 909.)

STATE v. BALDWIN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Counties ⇐74, 101.]

In the absence of a statute providing compensation to county treasurers, such an officer has, for his services, no legal claim which can be determined by the court or jury, or asserted as a defence or discount to an action brought against him by the state to recover a balance of taxes collected by him, but retained as reasonable compensation for such services.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Corbin & Stone, 16 S. C. 541, 543.

For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 107, 154; Dec. Dig. ⇐74, 101.]

[2. Counties ⇐197.]

In the absence of a statute authorizing compensation to county treasurers for the collection of county taxes, the amount of commissions proper to be retained in such case must be submitted to the county commissioners for audit, and cannot be determined by the verdict of a jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 309, 310; Dec. Dig. ⇐197.]

[3. Counties ⇐99.]

A county treasurer and the sureties on his official bond held liable for a defalcation committed by such treasurer more than two years after the execution of such bond, there being at that time no law limiting the tenure of office of the county treasurers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. ⇐99.]

[4. Trial ⇐339.]

In an action against A, B and C, the jury having returned a verdict, "we find for the plaintiff the sum of $3110.74, against A," the Circuit judge recommitted the case to the jury with instructions to find a complete verdict. Held, that there was no error in the action of the Circuit judge.†

[Ed. Note.—Cited in King & Son v. Lane, 68 S. C. 434, 47 S. E. 704.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 793; Dec. Dig. ⇐339.]

Before Mackey, J., Richland, November, 1879.

Action commenced in May, 1879, by the State of South Carolina against C. H. Baldwin, W. J. Duffie and J. H. Kinard, upon the official bond of Baldwin, county treasurer of Richland, dated February 1st, 1871, to recover $1543.63 for the state, and $1611.11 for Richland county, of moneys collected for taxes during fiscal year of 1873, and ascertained to be due upon settlement made with comptroller-general in September, 1874. At such settlement, Baldwin claimed four per cent. commissions upon the amounts collected, but the comptroller-general allowed $2000 for collecting state taxes, and $500 for collecting county taxes. The complaint, in this action, conceded to Baldwin the $2500, and demanded the sums already stated, which represent the difference between the compensation claimed by Baldwin and *that allowed him. For all other moneys the defendant had fully accounted.

*136

The defences relied upon were that there was no breach, all moneys received having been accounted for, and that plaintiff had no right of action against the defendants.

So much of the evidence as is material is stated in the opinion.

The Circuit judge was requested by defendants to charge inter alia—

3. That there being, in the words of the counsel for the state, no law fixing the compensation of county treasurers, there could be no charge of compensation in violation of law, and the verdict therefor must be for the defendants.

4. That there is no statute fixing the compensation of the treasurers, and that when there is no law fixing the compensation, the officer is entitled to a reasonable compensation, and that is a question of fact for the jury.

The presiding judge refused to charge as prayed, and in lieu thereof, instructed the jury that there was no law fixing the compensation of the treasurer, and that the treasurer was not entitled to any compensation whatever, for his services in that capacity, in the absence of a statute fixing it.

That the treasurer, Baldwin, was not entitled to retain anything whatever, for his compensation; but as the plaintiff's attorney had admitted that the treasurer was entitled to deduct $2500 per annum, as compensation, and had only sued for the excess, the jury could allow to the defendant, Baldwin, the sum of $2500 as compensation.

† See State v. Corley, (3) 13 S. C. 1.

That according to the law in force at that date, there was no fixed and definite term to the office of county treasurer, but that he was appointed during good behavior, or until his successor was appointed and qualified.

The jury found the following verdict: "We find for the plaintiff the sum of $3110.-74, against C. H. Baldwin." The counsel for plaintiff then moved that the verdict be recommitted to the jury, with instructions that they should find a complete verdict, either for the plaintiff or for the defendants, and that if they found for the plaintiff, the plaintiff would be entitled to interest from the date of the defalcation.

*137

*The counsel for defendants objected to the verdict being recommitted. The court stated that the jury must find a complete verdict.

The counsel for the defendants then requested the court to charge the jury that they had the right to find for the plaintiff as against Baldwin, and yet to find at the same time for the defendants, Duffie and Kinard, the sureties of Baldwin.

The court refused to charge as requested by counsel for defendants, to which refusal counsel excepted.

The verdict was then recommitted to the jury with the instructions prayed for by the counsel for the plaintiff. On recommitting the verdict to the jury, the court said: "Gentlemen of the jury: This is an action against C. H. Baldwin, county treasurer, and the sureties upon his official bond. If he committed a defalcation at the date alleged in the complaint, and had not then been reappointed, his sureties are liable. You are the sole judges of the evidence, but you must find a complete verdict, either for the plaintiff or for the defendants. Whatever verdict you may find, will be satisfactory to the court, provided that it is a verdict upon which judgment may be entered up."

And the jury retired, and shortly after returned into court and rendered the following verdict:

"We find for the plaintiff the sum of $3110.74 with interest."

To all of which refusals and to the instructions granted, the defendants then and there excepted; and afterwards appealed to this court.

Mr. James Conner, for appellants.

Mr. Solicitor Abney, contra.

August 31st, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action against Baldwin, as county treasurer, and the other defendants, as his sureties on his official bond, to recover certain amounts which, it was alleged, had been collected by Baldwin, as county treasurer, and not accounted for properly to the plaintiffs. There was no dispute about the fact that the money had been collected, and the only *controversy was as to whether it had been properly accounted for—the defendants contending that the amounts claimed by the plaintiffs were lawfully retained by Baldwin for commissions due to him as county treasurer. The real question, therefore, is whether the law, as it stood at the time of Baldwin's appointment, and at the time of the alleged default, allowed any commissions to a county treasurer, and, if so, how much. It is conceded that there was, then, no statute fixing the compensation to be allowed county treasurers, and the Circuit judge so instructed the jury, and, further, that in the absence of any such statute the treasurer was not entitled to any compensation. To this charge exception was duly taken, and the judge was requested to charge that, in the absence of the statute fixing the compensation of a county treasurer he would be entitled to a reasonable compensation, the amount of which would be a question for the jury, which was refused. We think that there was no error in the charge or refusal to charge as requested. One who renders service to the state, for which there is no compensation provided by statute cannot, as in the case of services rendered to a private person, raise an implied assumpsit against the state, and for such service he has no legal claim, that is, no claim which can be enforced by process of law. He cannot make such claim the basis of an action against the state, for the state cannot be sued in its own courts, except by its own consent, nor can he interpose such claim as a discount or set-off, which is nothing but a cross-action to an action brought against him by the state. Treasurers v. Cleary, 3 Rich. 372. The money which Baldwin collected constituted a part of the taxes due to the state, and the law, (Gen. Stat., Chap. XIII., § 12, p. 84,) required that "all the moneys collected by him for or on account of the state taxes" should be paid to the state treasurer, and, when paid into the state treasury, not one dollar of it could be withdrawn except "in pursuance of appropriations made by law." Const., Article IX., § 12. If, then, there was no statute authorizing the county treasurer to retain anything for his commissions he was bound to forward every dollar of taxes collected by him to the state treasurer, and if there was no act appropriating any sum for the payment of his commissions, as it is not pretended that there is, *he could not lawfully claim any compensation whatever, and for payment, even assuming his claim to have been of the most righteous character, he must, like all other persons having claims against the state, resort to this petition to the legislature, the body which is exclusively entrusted with the power of disposing of the revenue. It is clear, therefore, that the question as to what was a reasonable compensation for his services could not have been left to the jury, for as is said in Treasurers v. Cleary, supra: "If that were allowed it is obvious the revenue would be under the control of the court and jury and not the legislature."

*138

*139

So far as the taxes collected for the county were concerned, it is very clear, in the absence of any statnte authorizing the county treasurer to retain a certain percentage thereon for his commissions, that any claim which he might have against the county for compensation for his services in collecting the county taxes could not be determined by the verdict of a jury, but, like all other claims against the county, should have been submitted to the county commissioners to be audited, and could only be paid upon their order.

The next question is as to the tenure of office of a county treasurer. As the law stood at the time of Baldwin's appointment, and at the time of the default alleged, there was no statute fixing the term of office of a county treasurer. The original act providing for the appointment of such an officer, act of September 15th, 1868, (14 Stat. 66), simply invests the governor with power to appoint county treasurers, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, but makes no provision as to the duration of their term of office, and by a subsequent act of February 3d, 1870, (14 Stat. 329), the governor was authorized "whenever to him there appears good and sufficient cause," to remove any county treasurer and report the fact, together with his reasons therefor to the general assembly. Thus the law stood at the time, though there has been, subsequently, an act passed limiting the term of office of county treasurers to two years. Act of March 19th, 1874. 15 Stat. 777.

It is plain then that unless Baldwin was removed from office by the governor he would have had the right to hold the office from *the time of his original appointment in February, 1871, up to and after the time when he was alleged to be in default by a failure to account for all the taxes collected in 1873, and that his official bond, originally given, would cover that period, and for any default committed during that time his sureties would be liable. It will be observed that there is not the slightest evidence that Baldwin was ever removed from office by the governor, and if he was never removed we do not see how he could be re-appointed, unless he had resigned, of which there is no pretence. Indeed, as it appears to us, there cannot be said to be any evidence tending to show that he was ever re-appointed. Baldwin himself does not say so, but only says, what, if objected to would have been incompetent, that Governor Moses told him that he had re-appointed him. He does not pretend that he gave any new bond, but, on the contrary, says he did not give a new bond. He produced no new commission, and does not pretend to claim that he ever had a new commission, while the books of the secretary of state's office show only one appointment, and the records of the treasurer's office only one bond. Under this state of the evidence the Circuit judge might possibly have been warranted in declining to refer the issue of fact as to whether Baldwin had been re-appointed to the jury upon the ground that there was in reality no testimony upon which such issue could be raised, but, in fact, the judge practically did leave that issue to the jury by saying: "If he committed a defalcation at the date alleged in the complaint, and had not then been re-appointed, his sureties are liable."

*140

Our next inquiry will be whether there was any error of law committed in recommitting the case to the jury after the first announcement of the verdict. It is a very common practice, one which has the sanction of long usage, and is undoubtedly correct, for a Circuit judge to recommit the record to the jury after their verdict has been announced for the purpose of enabling them to put the verdict in proper and complete legal form, and this seems to have been the purpose in this case. The action was against three persons, and the verdict, as first announced, was manifestly incomplete and not in legal form; while it determined the issues as between the plaintiffs and one of the *defendants, as to the other two it left the issues wholly undetermined. The jury, therefore, when they first announced their verdict, had manifestly failed to complete their task, and the judge properly recommitted the case to them for the purpose of enabling them to finish their work. The case was not recommitted because the jury had made an incorrect finding, but because they had failed to find at all as to two of the defendants. If the verdict, as first announced, had been in favor of the plaintiffs as against Baldwin, and in favor of the other two defendants, then, even though it may have been manifestly without any evidence to sustain it so far as these two defendants were concerned, the case could not have been recommitted to the jury with instructions to find another verdict, for in such case the verdict would have been complete, and, however erroneous it might be, it would have to stand until set aside by a proper proceeding for that purpose. It may be, and doubtless was true, that the jury, while satisfied that a verdict should go against Baldwin, were desirous of releasing the sureties, if they could do so legally; but when they were told, and correctly told, that if Baldwin had not been re-appointed at the time he committed the defalcation charged, the sureties were legally liable, they could no longer hesitate, and therefore returned the verdict against all of the defendants.

*141

The exceptions taken to the amount of interest allowed have not been pressed in the argument here, and, therefore, we are not informed of the grounds upon which it is claimed that there was error in this respect, and we have not been able to discover any.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *142

*(Case No. 913.)

WALKER & TRENHOLM v. KEE.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⇐235.]

The transfer of a note carries with it a mortgage given to secure its payment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ballou v. Young, 42 S. C. 176, 20 S. E. 84; Whitmire v. Boyd, 53 S. C. 321, 31 S. E. 306.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 621; Dec. Dig. ⇐235.]

[2. Bills and Notes ⇐358.]

Promissory notes, payable to A & B, a partnership, were endorsed in blank by B with the firm name, and transferred to plaintiffs before maturity to secure advances made by plaintiffs to another firm of a different name, of which A, B & C were members; and afterwards A & B made an assignment of all their assets for the benefit of the creditors of that firm. Held, that whether A knew of the endorsement and transfer or not, the notes were the property of plaintiffs, they having had no notice of any misappropriation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 915; Dec. Dig. ⇐358.]

[3. Bills and Notes ⇐337.]

Circumstances sufficient to arouse the suspicions of plaintiffs would not impair their title to such paper.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank v. Stackhouse, 91 S. C. 461, 74 S. E. 977, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 856–863; Dec. Dig. ⇐337.]

[This case is also cited in Kerngood v. Davis, 21 S. C. 205, without specific application.]

Before Thomson, J., Lancaster, June, 1879.

This was an action commenced in January, 1879, by Walker & Trenholm against A. M. Kee, and against R. M. Miller and T. G. Cureton, assignees of Stevens & Cureton, to recover from Miller and Cureton a chattel mortgage given to Stevens & Cureton, in February, 1878, to secure the balance due upon three promissory notes, two of which endorsed in blank with the firm name of Stevens & Cureton, had been transferred in June, 1877, by Ardrey, Cureton & Co., acting through T. J. Cureton (a member of both firms) to secure advances promised by plaintiffs upon the faith of these collaterals, and made a few days afterwards. Judgment was also demanded against Kee for a sale of the mortgaged property, and for balance due upon the notes. Only the assignees answered. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court. The mortgaged property was sold by the sheriff before the trial. The Circuit judge decreed that plaintiffs were entitled to the notes transferred to them, and ordered the proceeds of the mortgaged property to be turned over to them, and gave them judgment against Kee for the balance due.

[For subsequent opinion, see 16 S. C. 76.]

143

*Messrs. Wylie & Hough, for appellants.

Messrs. Allison & Connors, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. J. H. W. Stevens and T. J. Cureton were co-partners in mercantile business in the county of Lancaster, under the name and style of Stevens & Cureton, and they, together with one J. W. Ardrey, were co-partners in a mercantile business, carried on in the county of York, under the name and style of Cureton, Ardrey & Co. Stevens & Cureton entered into a written agreement with the defendant, Kee, for the sale of certain real estate, a part of the purchase money being secured by the notes hereinafter mentioned, which are the subject of controversy in this case. Cureton, having possession of these notes, which were negotiable, endorsed them in blank with the name of the payees—Stevens & Cureton—and transferred them, before maturity, to the plaintiffs to secure advances to be made by them to Cureton, Ardrey & Co. Some time after the making of these notes, the defendant, Kee, at the instance of the payees, Stevens & Cureton, executed to them a mortgage on certain personal property to secure the payment of said notes, under which the property has been sold and the proceeds of such sale is now in the hands of the sheriff awaiting the judgment of the court as to who is entitled to it. The firm of Stevens & Cureton becoming embarrassed made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors, of all their assets, to the defendants, R. M. Miller and T. G. Cureton, subsequent, however, to the transfer of the notes to the plaintiffs, and the real controversy is between the plaintiffs and these assignees as to who has the best right to the notes in question and the mortgage given to secure their payment, or rather the proceeds of the sale of the property under such mortgage. There does not seem to be any question made as to the mortgage going with the notes, and there could not well be, as the rule that the transfer or assignment of a bond or note carries with it a mortgage given to secure the payment of such bond or note is too well established to admit of dispute. *It is only necessary therefore to determine who has the best title to the notes.

*144

Unless the holder of a negotiable note, transferred before it is due, is bound to inquire into the title of the person from whom he obtains it, the right of the plaintiffs is manifestly indisputable. Cureton, undoubtedly, as a member of the firm of Stevens & Cureton, had a right to endorse the notes in blank with the name of such firm, and, when so endorsed, they would pass by mere delivery, and the holder would be under no more obligation to inquire into the title of the person from whom he obtained them than he would be to inquire into the title of a person from whom he purchased a negotiable note, before maturity, payable to bearer. If the notes bore the genuine endorsement of the payees, as was unquestionably shown by the proof in this case, then the plaintiffs were not bound to inquire further. For, while it may be quite true that, as between Stevens & Cureton, or as between them and a person affected with notice, Cureton had no right to use these notes for any but partnership purposes, and, therefore, had no right to transfer them in payment of, or security for, the debt of another partnership, an innocent purchaser cannot be affected by any such considerations. In this case the Circuit judge has found, and we think his finding supported by the testimony, that the plaintiffs had no notice of any fact tending to show that the notes had been endorsed and transferred by one of the payees for an improper purpose, and, therefore, even assuming the fact to be as alleged, although the defendants have offered no proof of it, that T. J. Cureton was, without the knowledge or assent of his co-partner, using the notes due to Stevens & Cureton to secure debts contracted by Cureton, Ardrey & Co., the rights of the plaintiffs could not be affected thereby unless notice is brought home to them. We see nothing in the evidence calculated to arouse the suspicion of the plaintiffs. To secure a debt of Cureton, Ardrey & Co., they took negotiable notes, before maturity, in the usual course of business, which bore the genuine endorsement in blank of the payees, and although the notes showed upon their face that they were originally the property of Stevens & Cureton, yet at the same time the endorsement in blank showed that the original *owners had parted with their right to the notes, and that they were, in law, presumed to be the property of any person who held them. The plaintiffs might, therefore, very properly have assumed that these notes had been transferred by the payees to Cureton, Ardrey & Co., and that T. J. Cureton, as a member of the last mentioned firm, had a perfect right to transfer them.

*145

But, even if the evidence showed that there was enough in the circumstances of the case to arouse the suspicions of the plaintiffs and excite them to inquire by what right T. J. Cureton, as a member of the firm of Cureton, Ardrey & Co., undertook to transfer notes due to another firm, of which he was also a member, for the purpose of securing the obligations of Cureton, Ardrey & Co., that would not be sufficient to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs. The rule that a mere suspicion that there may be a defect of title in the holder of negotiable paper, or that knowledge of circumstances which would excite suspicion as to his title in the mind of a prudent man, is not sufficient to impair the title of one who buys the paper before it is due, but that such result will only follow where there has been bad faith on the part of the purchaser, is now well established both in England and in this country. Goodman v. Harvey, 4 A. & E. 870; Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. 343 [15 L. Ed. 934]; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. 110 [17 L. Ed. 857]; Cromwell v. County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51 [24 L. Ed. 681], and has, upon at least two occasions, been recognized in this state. Witte v. Williams, 8 S. C. 301 [28 Am. Rep. 294]; Walker v. State, 12 S. C. 272-3. In this case there is not the slightest evidence of any bad faith on the part of the plaintiffs, and, hence, taking the view of the evidence most favorable to the appellants, there is nothing to invalidate the title of the plaintiffs.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *146

*(Case No. 914.)

HOLMES & CALDER v. COUNTY OF CHARLESTON.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Costs ⇦4.]

Where the legislature provided a special mode of ascertaining the indebtedness of Charleston county, declaring that claims then in judgment should be proven without regard to the judgment, and that no costs should be charged against the county in such proceedings —Held, that a creditor establishing his claim then in judgment, was not entitled to the costs of the judgment or the costs of the proceedings under this act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. ⇦4.]

[2. Counties ⇦198.]

An open account audited by a board of county commissioners does not draw interest from the date of the audit.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Wheeler v. County of Newberry, 18 S. C. 137.

For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 335; Dec. Dig. ⇦198.]

[This case is also cited in Richland County v. Miller, 16 S. C. 246; Wheeler v. County of Newberry, 18 S. C. 135, 136, as to the practice in the enforcement of claims against county.]

Before Fraser, J., Charleston, July, 1879.

Petition under act of 1878, (16 Stat. 695), to establish a judgment, based upon an audit by the county commissioners of an open account. The audit fixed the amount of the claim, but not the date of payment. The case is fully stated in the opinion. Under their grounds of appeal, the plaintiffs claimed interest from the audit, interest on the judgment, and the costs of the judgment and of this proceeding.

Mr. J. B. Cohen, for appellants.

Mr. J. E. Burke, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. The petitioners were creditors of Charleston county, and had obtained judgment on their claim; others had also obtained judgments against the county. Controversy arose as to the bona fides of many of the claims upon which judgments had passed, and, by consent of all parties interested, the general assembly passed an act "to provide for funding the debt of Charleston county," &c. 16 Stat. 695. Section 10 of that act provides as follows: "That in case any person holding *a claim against the county of Charleston, which has been passed upon by the said commissioners, and has been disallowed by them in whole or in part, shall be dissatisfied with such finding, it shall be lawful for such person, by petition to the Court of Common Pleas for Charleston county, within twelve months after the passage of this act, to bring such finding before the court, whereupon the said court may proceed to the matters of said petition and the proceedings thereunder, or may refer the same to a master of the court, or a special referee, upon whose report the same may be heard and determined. * * * And provided also, that in such proceedings the claimant shall be required to prove his claim, notwithstanding that he may already have obtained judgment thereon, and without regard to said judgment; provided further, that no costs shall be charged against the county in such proceedings."

*147

The claim of the petitioners was one of those "passed upon" by the commissioners referred to in the act and proved in full, but neither the costs of obtaining the judgment nor interest on the demand were allowed, and the petitioners, "dissatisfied with such finding," filed this petition under the section above cited to correct the alleged error. The questions of law and fact were referred to Master W. D. Porter, who reported against the claim, and recommended that the petition be dismissed. The Circuit Court confirmed the master's report, and from his order the appeal comes to this court.

From the view which this court takes it will not be necessary to consider all the points made in the exceptions. The act of 1878 furnished a special mode of proceeding to settle the indebtedness of Charleston county as it stood before any judgments were obtained, and not as the debts might be increased by costs in obtaining these judgments. Those who availed themselves of the machinery of the act, in recovering their claims, accepted all the terms and provisions of the act. The section under which this proceeding was instituted provides that "in such proceeding the claimant shall be required to prove his claim, notwithstanding that he may already have obtained judgment thereon, and without regard to said judgment." The petitioners, by availing themselves of the remedy provided, elected to give up all the *rights they might suppose they had under the judgment. They cannot get what the act gives, without regard to the judgment, and then fall back on their rights under the judgment. The claim, as it stood before judgment, was the matter referred to the commissioners. It was an account against the county of Charleston for $267.82. The commissioners were not authorized to add to that account the costs incurred in obtaining the judgment or in the appeal from the order setting it aside. As we understand it, the object of the legislature in passing the act was to relieve the settlement of the county claims from the complications produced by the judgments, which, for that reason, were carefully excluded from consideration by the terms of the act, and to pay the true and bona fide indebtedness of the county, as if no judgments had been obtained.

*148

The demand was an open account, which did not bear interest, and we cannot say that the commissioners erred in not allowing it.

The order below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 148

(Case No. 915.)

ROBINSON v. AMATEUR ASSOCIATION.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⟸362.]

A sale by a mortgagee of the mortgaged premises under a power conferred in the mortgage, and in strict compliance with the conditions of the power, is valid, and bars the equity of redemption: and at such sale the mortgagee may, himself, become the purchaser, if so authorized by the terms of the power conferred.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Dendy v. Waite, 36 S. C. 574, 15 S. E. 712; Team v. Baum, 47 S. C. 417, 25 S. E. 275, 58 Am. St. Rep. 893.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1082; Dec. Dig. ⟸362.]

[2. Mortgages ⟸354.]

Such sale will not be set aside, because the terms of the contract were hard, the interest high, and the advertisement (which followed the description given in the mortgage) not sufficiently descriptive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1056; Dec. Dig. ⟸354.]

[3. Mortgages ⟸363.]

Mere inadequacy of price is not sufficient ground for setting aside such a sale, unless the inadequacy is so great as to furnish evidence of fraud.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ex parte Cooley, 69 S. C. 155, 48 S. E. 92.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1086; Dec. Dig. ⟸363.]

[4. Mortgages ⟸329.]

[Cited in Johnson v. Johnson, 27 S. C. 314, 3 S. E. 606, 13 Am. St. Rep. 636; Hall v. Hall, 41 S. C. 167, 19 S. E. 305, 44 Am. St. Rep. 696, to the point that sales under such powers should be very closely scrutinized by the courts.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1012; Dec. Dig. ⟸329.]

Before Aldrich, J., Charleston, December, 1879.

*149

*Controversy without action upon an agreed state of facts. The bond of plaintiff, Robinson, to Mordecai matured in two years, interest from date, at rate of ten per cent. per annum, payable quarterly in advance, the failure to pay these installments of interest when due, and also to pay state, county and city taxes upon the mortgaged premises, and to keep the buildings insured and in good repair, to be a forfeiture of the bond. The bond and mortgage were assigned by Mordecai to the defendant, the Amateur Literary and Fraternal Association of Charleston. The advertisement of the property by defendant was for three weeks, and described the property in the words of the description given in the mortgage, no mention being made of buildings in either, but there was a covenant in the mortgage that the mortgagor would "insure the house and buildings on said lot." The other material facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. M. Mordecai, for appellant.

Mr. E. A. Marshall, contra.

1. Although the validity of mortgages, with powers of sale, has been generally recognized, sales under such powers are scrutinized by the courts with great care, and will not be sustained unless conducted with all fairness, regularity and scrupulous integrity; the mortgagee being considered and treated as a trustee. Perry on Trusts (2d ed.) § 602, a, b, etc.; Sugd. on Vendors, (8th Am. ed.) Vol. I., 87, 96; 3 Metc. 311; 3 Meriv. 207; 2 Giffard 108.

2. When such mortgages contain a clause authorizing the mortgagee to become purchaser, and he avails himself of this privilege, thus acting as vendor and vendee, (characters that are inconsistent for "emptor emit quam minimo potest, venditor vendit quam maximo potest,") he is required to exercise unusual good faith and fairness, and if it appears that he has not used the best means to realize the largest amount of money, and the price is grossly inadequate, such sale will be set aside on application of the mortgagor within a reasonable time, and said mortgagor allowed to redeem. See 14 Allen 369; 115 Mass. 353; 122 Mass. 122.

*150

*3. Considering the mortgagee as trustee, he will not be allowed to speculate in trust property, and should he, after purchasing property of his cestui que trust (even though bona fide), re-sell or attempt to re-sell at a larger price, the first sale may be set aside, or the profit must go to his cestui que trust or mortgagor. Perry on Trusts, (2d ed.) §§ 254, 602, v.; Willard's Eq. Jur. (Potter's ed.) 186, 188; Story's Eq. Jur., §§ 321, 322; 1 McC. Ch. 390; 4 Rich. Eq. 167; 7 S. C. 201.

The respondent asks that the appeal in this case be dismissed, and the judgment of the court below sustained on the grounds—

1. That the mortgagees did not exercise reasonable diligence and good faith in protecting the mortgagor's interest.

2. That the property was not sufficiently advertised to attract purchasers. 2 Jones on Mort., §§ 1839, 1852, 1858.

3. That the mortgagees bought at a grossly inadequate price, and attempted to re-sell at a large profit to themselves. 4 Desaus. 715.

4. That constructive fraud will be presumed from the various circumstances of the case.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This is a case submitted, containing the facts agreed upon by the parties. On November 27th, 1877, Alexander Robinson executed a bond to T. Moultrie Mordecai, Esq., for $450 borrowed money, and at the same time, to secure the bond, gave a mortgage of a house and lot in the city of Charleston, which contained the following power to sell: "But in case of nonpayment of the said bond, with the interest thereon, or any part thereof, &c., then and in such case it may be lawful for the said T. Moultrie Mordecai, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, and the said Alexander Robinson doth hereby empower and authorize the said T. Moultrie Mordecai, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, to grant, bargain, sell, release and convey the said premises with the appurtenances, at public auction or vendue, at which sale they or any of them, shall have the right to become the purchasers of the said premises, and on such sale to make and execute to the *purchaser or purchasers, his, her or their heirs or assigns, for ever, a conveyance in fee of the said premises, free and discharged from all equity of redemption," &c.

*151

On January 3d, 1878, Mordecai, for value, assigned the bond and mortgage to the defendant corporation, who, Robinson having made default, advertised, under the power in the mortgage, the premises for sale, and sold them at public outcry April 15th, 1879, both the plaintiff and the officers of the defendant corporation being present at the sale. The corporation bid off the property for $400, complied with the terms of sale, received title and went into possession.

Subsequently the property was offered for sale at auction and bid off by one Francis Ryan for $850, but he refused to comply with the terms of sale, as in the meantime this controversy about the title had arisen.

On August 25th, 1879, Robinson made the claim that the first purchase by the defendant corporation was void, which they denied, insisting that the deed to them and possession under it, made their title absolute. The question was submitted to the court, the Circuit judge set aside the sale and adjudged that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. The defendant appeals to this court on several grounds, but they may all be considered under the first exception, which is as follows: "Because the sale under the power and the purchase thereunder, and the conveyance in conformity therewith, and the voluntary surrender of the premises by the plaintiff to the defendant under the conveyance, made the title of the defendant absolute, and there was and is no equity of redemption in the plaintiff."

It may now be regarded as established in South Carolina that a mortgagor may, by provision in the mortgage, confer upon the mortgagee the power to sell the mortgaged premises to pay, in case of default, the debt secured. Mitchell v. Bogan, 11 Rich. 686; Webster v. Brown and Hammett, 2 S. C. 428; 2 Jones on Mort. 1752. In the case of Mitchell v. Bogan, the court say: "This power to sell real estate, conferred by the mortgagor on the mortgagee, is not familiar in our observation, but it is not liable to any legal objection. * * * Enough upon this subject may be seen by consulting Coote on Mort., Ch.

*152

VI., 124." *A sale under such a power is equivalent to a sale and purchase under a decree in equity, and will cut off all right of redemption, provided the mortgagee faithfully discharge, in all respects, the duties imposed upon him as donee of the power. 2 Jones on Mort. 1897; Hall v. Bliss, 118 Mass. 558. But while the courts will not set aside powers authorizing the creditor, who is the interested party, to sell lands mortgaged for the reason that they are the contracts of the parties themselves, yet such powers may be so easily used for purposes of oppression that they scrutinize sales made under them very closely.

The plaintiff Robinson executed a mortgage in which he expressly conferred upon the mortgagee or his assignee the power to sell upon default and to be the purchaser himself. The mortgagee assigned the bond and mortgage to the defendant corporation, and upon default they advertised, sold at public auction and purchased themselves—all of which they had, by terms of the plaintiffs' own warrant, the right to do; then why should their purchase be set aside? It is not alleged that they did not have express authority to do what they did do, and, therefore, if there is good ground to set aside the sale, it must in some way relate to the manner in which the sale was made. The case submitted contained no statement that the defendant corporation was guilty of any actual fraud in selling the house and lot which they purchased. Fraud being a fact, should have appeared in the case, but not appearing is taken not to exist. A number of single facts are stated in the case, and it seems that the question intended to be submitted is, whether these unconnected facts, all taken together, constitute constructive fraud sufficient to set aside the sale.

The decree of the Circuit judge sets aside the sale, but upon what ground it does not state. The case submitted charges no actual fraud, the Circuit decree charges none, unless it may be involved in the order setting aside the sale. We are left to reach an original conclusion as to the bona fides, from the facts stated, viz., the advertisement, purchase by the mortgagees, and the prospect of a re-sale at an advanced price. The grounds upon which the decree is based appear no where, unless it may be in the argument of counsel. It is there urged that the terms of the *bond were hard, interest high, &c. That is no ground to set aside the sale. The plaintiff made his own contract, signed the bond and mortgage, and the defendant purchased them as they stood. It is said again that the property was not sufficiently advertised to attract purchasers. It would seem to be a full answer to this that the advertisement described the premises in the identical terms by which they were described in the mortgage by the plaintiff himself, with the omission only of the words "with the buildings thereon." The land included whatever buildings were on it, and the words "buildings thereon," would have been mere surplusage, unless the omission was with a corrupt motive, which is not charged.

*153

It is also said that the defendant corporation, as assignee of the mortgagee, purchased at their own sale, which is not allowable. The terms of this mortgage expressly authorized the mortgagee to purchase at his own sale under the power given, and that made clear the right, which, without such express agreement, might have been doubtful. 2 Jones on Mort. 1876; Hall v. Bliss, 118 Mass. 560. But it is insisted that if there is nothing in any of the other points the lot was sold at a very inadequate price, and that alone is sufficient to set aside the sale. The inadequacy here is denied. When a public sale is open and fair, in all respects free from fraud, mere inadequacy of price is not sufficient to set aside a sale, unless the inadequacy is such as to furnish evidence of fraud upon the part of the mortgagee, which is not alleged here.

Looking at all the facts with a strong sense of the necessity of scrutinizing such sales very closely, we are unable to see any such want of fairness or good faith in these proceedings as would authorize us to set aside the conveyance to the defendant, based on the sale of April 15th. On the contrary, the acts of the plaintiff himself would seem to confirm the conclusion that there was no want of fairness or good faith. The sale was advertised regularly, and, besides, the plaintiff received personal notice. He was present at the sale and made no objection, without any murmur of complaint he yielded possession to the defendant and seemed satisfied until they had the prospect of selling the prop*erty at an advanced price, when he put forward his claim to redeem under the mortgage. It seems to us too late.

*154

The Circuit decree is reversed and the case remanded for such orders as may be necessary.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 154

(Case No. 916.)

STEELE v. ATKINSON.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⇐120.]

An administrator de bonis non cannot maintain an action to set aside a transaction between his predecessor in office and a debtor of the estate, upon the ground of a fraudulent collusion between them. Johnston v. Lewis, Rice's Eq. 40 [33 Am. Dec. 74], recognized and approved.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Knobeloch v. Germania Sav. Bank, 43 S. C. 243, 244, 21 S. E. 13; Latimer v. Latimer, 53 S. C. 489, 31 S. E. 304.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 487; Dec. Dig. ⇐120.]

[2. Execution ⇐348.]

A receipt for a small amount "in full of this case," endorsed by a sheriff upon an execution, is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, a satisfaction of the execution, although the aggregate of the credits endorsed is less than the sum due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1064; Dec. Dig. ⇐348.]

[3. Evidence ⇐83.]

The court will not presume that a sum of money received by the sheriff was for commissions upon a payment made outside of his office, when such sum is more than the fees allowed by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. ⇐83.]

Before Wallace, J., Chester, October, 1879.

To the full statement of this case made by the Circuit judge, it is only necessary to add the terms of the last receipt endorsed upon the execution, viz.: "June 7th, 1873. Received of V. Atkinson, Sr., thirty dollars in full of this case. (Signed) B. G. Yocom, sheriff of Chester county."

The Circuit decree is as follows:

McKelvey died many years ago, having survived his wife. He left no lawful heirs, so far as is known or has been discovered in a quarter of a century since his death. It was not proven, but stated at the hearing, that there were no creditors of his estate. E. M. Kirkpatrick administered upon the estates of John and Elizabeth McKelvey, and, after protracted litigation, recovered a judgment on October 13th, 1871, for the sum of *$8434.84 against Valentine Atkinson and Elizabeth, his wife. On April 19th, 1873, Valentine Atkinson paid the sum of $1,300 on this execution. On May 29th, 1873, he took a receipt from Kirkpatrick for $6,000, which is stated in the receipt to be in full of the judgment by way of compromise. It was proved at the trial that at the time the receipt was given by Kirkpatrick, Atkinson paid to him a large sum of money and gave his note for an additional sum. On the night of the same day, Kirkpatrick left the state and never returned.

*155

John G. Steele, the plaintiff, who was one of the sureties on the administration bond of Kirkpatrick, took out letters of administration de bonis non upon the estate of John and Elizabeth McKelvey, and brought this action to recover the whole amount of the judgment, less the $1300 paid April 19th, 1873, and $30 paid June 7th, 1873. The complaint charges that the transaction on May 29th, in which the receipt was given for $6000 and money paid and note given, was fraudulent and collusive, in that Atkinson knew that Kirkpatrick intended to misapply the money. Upon this point issues were framed and tried by a jury. The jury found as matter of fact that there was no fraud and collusion on the part of Atkinson. I approve this finding and adopt it as my own.

Out of the foregoing facts two questions arise:

1. Can the payment of a smaller sum, a part of which consists of the debtor's note which the creditor agrees to accept in full satisfaction of his demand, operate to extinguish a debt for a large amount?

Pinnell's case established the rule that the payment of a smaller sum of money would not be allowed to extinguish a debt for a larger sum, even in cases where the creditor agreed at the time of the judgment that it should, on the ground that the agreement was nudum pactum.

In Pinnell's case, and many subsequent cases, this doctrine is broadly laid down. It seems to us that this doctrine, if fully applied according to its principle, would defeat every parol gift to any but kindred, even after delivery. No man should be allowed to enforce a contract which he had deliberately, without fraud or imposition, agreed to renounce. Yet on the principle *of stare decisis the rule has been allowed to stand. Regarding this rule, however, as "technical," not very well supported by reason, "allowing a violation of good faith," courts have limited its application to cases coming strictly within its terms and have departed from it upon slight distinctions. Hence the rule, that if any chattel is given and received in satisfaction of the debt, no matter how insignificant its relative value, the demand is held to be satisfied. Eve v. Mosely, 2 Strob. 206; Hope v. Johnston & Cavis, 11 Rich. 135. Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 116, cited in Eve v. Mosely, holds that the acceptance of a note of a third person for a less sum is a good accord and satisfaction; that the notes of a third person will operate as an absolute and immediate discharge of the debt for which it is given if such be the understanding and intention of the parties.

*156

The effect of giving and receiving the debtor's own note for a smaller sum in full of the original debt, is not so well settled as the preceding rule; but it is difficult to perceive any essential abstract distinction.

The question is: Is there a sufficient consideration to support the bargain? In Myres v. Welles, 5 Hill, (N. Y.) 463, Cowen, J., held that "accepting a principal debtor's negotiable note payable at a future time was such a giving of time upon the demand as discharged the surety." The surety was not discharged unless the creditor was bound. The creditor could not be bound without consideration. Hence, the giving a negotiable note for a prior debt is supported by a consideration, because the note might be used in a way beneficial to the debtor. Of course, the effect of such a transaction depends upon the intention of the parties. Eve v. Mosely, supra; Sibree v. Tripp, 15 M. & W. Exch. 22; Draper v. Hitt, 4 Vt. 439. Cases might be multiplied from Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Alabama.

In the case under consideration, as has been already stated, money was paid and a note given with the understanding that the prior debt was paid. Under the principles above set out, if Kirkpatrick had been the absolute owner of the judgment, the transaction would have been a satisfaction of the debt and a bar to this action. But Kirkpatrick was administrator. The jury*have found that collusion is not imputable to Atkinson. Then the second question in the case is: Is the transaction embraced within the scope of constructive fraud? Administrators are trustees for the benefit of creditors and distributees; they hold the title of their intestates for the purposes of the trust. Before the A. A. 1824, (6 Stat. 238, § 6,) they were invested with a large discretion as to the sales of the property. They were held to the exercise of a wise and prudent discretion. It was a part of their duty to sell the property of and collect the debts due to the estate. To sell the property and collect the debts was presumably in execution of his trust, and purchasers from him and debtor who paid him were protected by the force of this presumption, unless it was made to appear from the transactions themselves or otherwise that such purchasers or debtors colluded with him or had knowledge that he intended to commit a breach of trust. They were not bound to inquire whether the transaction was necessary and judicious on the part of the administrator; that was the business of the administrator, and if he did not act within the scope of his authority those who dealt with him had a right to presume that the transaction was necessary or proper in the management of the estate. The A. A. 1824, supra, provided that sales of personal property by administrators should not be made save by and under an order from the Court of Ordinary. This act took away the discretion of the administrator as to the conversion of the personal property, and any purchaser of personal property at an administrator's sale made without an order of the [now] Probate Court takes no title. But this power over the choses in action of the estate is unaffected by the A. A. 1824; so when these are sold, pledged or collected, the purchaser, pledgee or debtor is protected by the presumption that all is done according to the exigencies of a faithful administration of the estate, unless it appears intrinsically or aliunde that he who dealt with him knew that he intended a breach of trust by diverting, misapplying or wasting the assets. If the administrator parts with demands in payment of, or pledges them as security for, an existing debt of his own, or sells them or relinquishes them to a debtor of the estate for a valuable yet grossly inadequate consideration, knowledge of the *transaction is, for the purposes of the trust, imputable to him who takes them, and further proof is not necessary, and, at the instance of those beneficially interested, the taker must account for them. In this case, Atkinson, of course, knew that Kirkpatrick had the right, and that it was his duty perhaps, to collect the debt. If Kirkpatrick agreed to take in satisfaction a smaller sum than the amount of the debt, he had a right to presume that a more speedy conversion than could be affected by levy and sale might be important to the interest of the administration. If the amount, therefore, which Kirkpatrick did agree to take was not grossly inadequate, Atkinson is protected against the equities of those beneficially interested. The amount of the judgment was $8439.84, interest from October 13th, 1871.

*157

*158

On April 19th, 1873, Atkinson paid $1300.

On May 29th, 1873, he paid $6000.

On June 17th, he paid $30.

While the aggregate of the sum paid is not equal to the amount of the debt, it cannot be said that it is grossly inadequate. It is needless to enter into a discussion of the difference between mere inadequacy and gross inadequacy. It is, perhaps, impossible to lay down an arbitrary rule as to precisely where one begins and the other ends; it is a matter that is governed by the circumstances of each case and addresses itself to the sound discretion of the court. Under the circumstances of this case, I do not think the extent of the inadequacy was sufficient to suggest to Atkinson a breach of trust on the part of the administrator.

I have not thought it necessary in this decree to pass upon the liability of the administrator.

It is ordered and adjudged that the complaint be dismissed without costs.

Plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. W. B. Wilson and G. J. Patterson, for appellants.

Mr. John J. Hemphill, contra.

*159

*September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. E. M. Kirkpatrick, as administrator of the McKelvey's recovered a judgment against the defendants for a large sum of money, and on May 29th, 1873, gave to the defendants a receipt acknowledging the payment "by them of $6000 in full of the balance of the debt and interest in this case," a memorandum of which was entered on the execution by the sheriff. There are also two other credits entered upon the execution by the sheriff, one dated April 19th, 1873, of $1300, expressed to be "in part of this case," and another of $30, dated June 7th, 1873, expressed to be "in full of this case." The letters of administration previously granted to Kirkpatrick having been revoked, and letters of administration de bonis non having been granted to the plaintiff, he brings this action in that capacity. The plaintiff, in his complaint, recognizes the validity of the first credit of $1300, and without taking any notice whatever of the last credit of $30, which, as we have seen, is expressed to be "in full of this case," seeks to have the entry of the credit of $6000 vacated and set aside, and the judgment enforced for the balance due thereon, after deducting the credit of $1300 on April 19th, 1873, upon the ground of a fraudulent collusion between the former administrator, Kirkpatrick, and the defendants.

It appears to us that the plaintiff, in the outset, encounters an insurmountable obstacle which effectually prevents him from maintaining this action. He, as administrator de bonis non, is seeking to set aside a transaction between his predecessor and a debtor of the estate upon the ground of a fraudulent collusion between them. He is not asking that the estate be protected from a fraud practiced upon his predecessor, the former administrator, but the ground of his complaint is that such preceding administrator himself fraudulently colluded with the debtor to the prejudice of the estate. The case of Johnston v. Lewis, Rice's Eq. 40 [33 Am. Dec. 74], conclusively shows that the plaintiff cannot maintain the action. In that case the plaintiffs, as administrators de bonis non, attempted to set aside a sale of property of their intestate upon the ground that the same was made by a fraudu*lent collusion between their predecessor, the former administratrix, and the defendant, who was the purchaser at the sale. In the Circuit decree, Johnston, Ch., at pages 42–3, says: "It is true that both creditors and distributees, if defrauded in any manner by the sale, might bring their bill against Lewis and the administratrix, and set it aside for collusion between them. But the administratrix, as such, could never impeach a transaction for a fraud to which she was a party. Then the question is whether these plaintiffs can set the sale aside. They are neither creditors nor distributees. This bill is not filed in either of these characters. The plaintiffs come forward as successors in office to Mrs. Pickett to unravel transactions by which she was bound. But nothing seems plainer than that all acts binding upon a predecessor are equally binding upon a successor." And, Harper, Ch., in delivering the opinion of the Court of Appeals, at page 48, says: "We concur with the Chancellor that the present complainants, the administrators de bonis non, stand in the place of the first administratrix, and are bound wherever she could be bound, and concluded by whatever would conclude her. * * * The administratrix, in general, represents all creditors and distributees, and they cannot be heard but through her, and are bound by her acts. Only in the case of a fraudulent collusion to misapply the assets, these may be followed by creditors and distributees themselves, but certainly not by her successors in administration." In this case there are no creditors or distributees before the court complaining of a waste or misapplication of the assets, and from what is stated at the bar, it is not likely there ever will be, as it is said that none have been discovered in the quarter of a century which has elapsed since the death of the intestate.

*160

But even were the action maintainable by a person occupying the position of the plaintiff, it must fail, in this instance, for the want of sufficient proof of the allegations upon which it rests. The finding of the jury, approved by the Circuit judge, negatives the fraud charged, and it would require much more testimony than we have been able to discover in the "case" submitted here to warrant us in disregarding their concurrent finding.

*161

*It is contended, however, that as matter of law the payment of a smaller sum at or after the day the debt is due, can never operate as a satisfaction of a greater sum, and that the plaintiff is therefore entitled to enforce the execution for the balance which may be found due after deducting all the amounts credited on the execution. Without entering at this time into any discussion of the rule of law upon which this position is based, it is sufficient for us to say that it does not apply in the present case, for it ignores the fact that there is another credit upon the execution, subsequent in date to the one under consideration, which the sheriff acknowledges to be "in full." Such a receipt, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, must be given its full force, and amounts to an acknowledgment that the whole amount due has been paid. For though it may be shown by actual calculation that the amount mentioned in the receipt, added to the other credits endorsed, would not extinguish the whole amount due, yet the acknowledgment that it is in full presupposes that there were other payments, and, until such is shown not to be the fact, it must be given the effect of a receipt in full. Henderson v. Moore, 5 Cranch 11 [3 L. Ed. 22]; Trimmier v. Thomson, 10 S. C. 190. The answer made to this by the appellant's counsel, upon the argument here, that the amount acknowledged by this last mentioned receipt simply represented the sheriff's commissions on the $6000, rests wholly upon conjecture, and is without any testimony whatever to support it. The receipt does not specify that it was for costs or commissions, and no witness has so testified. It is a mere conjecture, and one too which we are not likely to entertain; but, on the contrary, according to well established principles, we are bound to infer that such was not the fact. The rule of law undoubtedly is that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that a public officer has done his duty —not that he has violated it. Now, according to the statute in force at the time when the $6000 payment was credited, (act of February 26th, 1873, 15 Stat. 388,) the sheriff was only entitled to one-fourth of one per cent. commissions upon all moneys paid out of his office upon executions lodged in his office; and, therefore, before we could presume that the amount mentioned in the receipt represented the sheriff's *commissions upon the $6000, we would have to presume that this officer, in gross violation of his duty, had exacted just twice as much as he was entitled by law to claim, and had thereby rendered himself liable to heavy penalties. Such a presumption, directly opposed as it is to the rule of law above stated, is not permissible.

*162

We do not see how, in any view of the case, the plaintiff can maintain this action, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is therefore affirmed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 162

(Case No. 917.)

ANDERSON & CO. v. HOLMES & DURHAM.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Trial ⇐194.]

A mortgage of personal property connected with the business of a turpentine distillery, containing no agreement that a suspension of operations should be regarded as a breach of the condition of the mortgage, and the proof of a suspension not being clear, there was no error in the refusal of the Circuit judge to charge "that the suspension of operations by the mortgagor was a breach of the mortgage."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 413, 436, 439–441, 446–454, 456–466; Dec. Dig. ⇐194.]

[2. Chattel Mortgages ⇐161.]

Under a mortgage of personal property given to secure the payment of moneys and interest, the mortgagee has no right to the possession of the property until the debt is due, notwithstanding that to the concluding clause, that the mortgagor shall retain possession until default, &c., are superadded the words, "but always at the will of the mortgagee."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. ⇐282; Dec. Dig. ⇐161.]

[3. Contracts ⇐147.]

The general intention to be collected from the whole context and every part of a written instrument, is always to be preferred to the particular expression.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Beasley v. Newell, 40 S. C. 23, 18 S. E. 224; Du Pont v. Charleston Bridge Co., 65 S. C. 530, 44 S. E. 86; Crawford v. Atlantic Coast Lumber Co., 79 S. C. 168, 60 S. E. 445.

For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 743; Dec. Dig. ⇐147.]

[4. Partnership ⇐242.]

A firm contracting, afterwards made a change in its membership, and informed the other contracting party of such change, who made no complaint, and the new firm brought an action for a subsequent breach of the contract—Held, that to the defendant's request to charge that the new firm could not bring action for this breach of the contract, the presiding judge committed no error in adding "unless the contract was renewed with the new firm."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 500–508, 663; Dec. Dig. ⟹242.]

Before Hudson, J., Williamsburg, November, 1879.

*163

*The opinion fully states the case. The bond and mortgage are very long, filling eight pages of the brief; but so much of them as are material to the errors assigned are stated by the court.

Messrs. Dozier & Gilland, for appellants.
Mr. J. A. Kelly, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. In January, 1879, James Anderson & Co., then consisting of James Anderson and Middleton Kelly, entered into a covenant with James H. Parker & Co., of Charleston, in which, among other things, it was agreed that James H. Parker & Co., should make advances to James Anderson & Co., in their business of raising crops of crude turpentine, rosin and spirits of turpentine, and to accept drafts for them to a certain amount, payable January 1st, 1880; and the said James Anderson & Co. agreed to send, consign, ship and deliver to the said Parker & Co., in Charleston, all the crude turpentine already made by them, or to be made and owned by them, to be sold on commission, &c. At the same time the said Anderson & Co., executed to Parker & Co., to secure the performance of their engagements and the payment of the money to be advanced under the arrangement, a mortgage of the following property, viz.: "One still, with all the fixtures and appurtenances thereto belonging, hacks, dippers, glue pots, etc.; also, all barrels, barrel staves, etc.; also, two dark horse mules; also, one wagon, and all that stock of goods, wares and merchandise."

After some transactions under the arrangement, on March 25th, Parker & Co. assigned the covenant and mortgage to Holmes & Durham, factors and commission merchants of Charleston. May 7th, Kelly, of the firm of James Anderson & Co., sold his interest to Elijah T. Finklea, who became a partner. August 15th, Louis Jacobs and Thomas Murphy, defendants, in their official capacity as sheriff and deputy sheriff, of Williamsburg county, seized the still and fixtures under some *proceeding for claim and delivery instituted by Holmes & Durham. This proceeding is still pending. The said Jacobs and Murphy, under a power of attorney from Holmes & Durham, a few days after they took the still, seized the wagon and mules included in the mortgage and turned them over to Holmes & Durham.

*164

In September the plaintiffs brought this action for damages for breach of contract for refusing to make advances and for the alleged unlawful seizure of their property, as described above, by which their business was broken up and their credit ruined, etc.

The jury found a verdict for plaintiffs for $325. The defendants made a motion for a new trial, which was refused, and they now appeal to this court upon grounds which will be separately considered. It seems that another action is pending between these parties, in which the defendants in this case are plaintiffs, and that they have had the still and fixtures delivered to them, valued at $———, besides the wagon and mules seized. This produces some confusion; but the only matter before us is the alleged errors in the charge of the Circuit judge.

The first exception. The debt secured by the mortgage was not due until January, 1880, and the defendants seized the mortgaged property in August, prior to the time indicated. But it is insisted "that the suspension of operations by the plaintiffs was a breach of the mortgage, and that the defendants then became entitled to the possession of the mortgaged property, and the judge should have so charged." The bond and mortgage are very long, and contain mutual covenants of the parties, of which it will only be necessary to refer to such as affect the issues made. Each party alleges failure to perform on the part of the other. They do not, however, contain any provision that the condition should be regarded as broken upon the suspension of operations by the plaintiffs. On the contrary, there is an agreement that the plaintiffs shall remain in possession until condition broken. If suspension worked that effect, it must have been by operation of law against the terms of the mortgage. But this view proceeds on the ground that there was a suspension. The testimony is not clear that the plaintiffs had voluntarily *turned over the still and suspended operations. We see no error in the judge refusing to charge as requested.

*165

The second exception objects to the charge: "That unless the mortgagors assented to the delivery, and voluntarily turned over the mules and wagon to the defendants, they were not entitled to the possession until 1880." It is claimed that by the terms of the mortgage itself, the title to the property, on the part of the mortgagees, was not postponed until the debt, secured, was due and payable and default made in payment, but that it was in them from the beginning.

There are two distinct clauses in the mortgage. The first is in these words: "And it is hereby declared, by and between the parties, that at any time and upon default of the said James Anderson & Co., in the keeping and performance of the agreements to be kept and performed by them in the payment of the moneys and interest according to the true intent and meaning of the condition thereof, then and in such case it may be lawful for the said J. H. Parker & Co., to seize and sell," etc. At another place are these words: "And it is further agreed that the said James Anderson & Co., are to hold and enjoy the possession of said mortgaged property until default as aforesaid, or any attempt to levy, attach, or in any way dispose of or remove any of the property herein mortgaged, but always at the will of J. H. Parker & Co."

The defendants insist that the last clause controls the whole instrument, and that the mortgagees could lawfully seize and sell at any time. If such were the intention of the parties, the whole previous provision as to default was entirely unnecessary. The whole character of the instrument would be changed, and it would not be a mortgage but a conveyance absolute. The intention of the parties to make a mortgage is clear. The object of construction is to ascertain what the parties meant by the terms and expressions used, and where the intent can be clearly and distinctly ascertained it will prevail, not only in cases in which it is not fully and clearly expressed, but even when it contradicts particular terms of the agreement. The general intention, to be collected from the whole context and every part of a written instrument, is always to be preferred to the particular *expression. Addison on Cont. 845; 1 Wait's Act. & Def. 116; Washburn v. Gould, 3 Story 122 [Fed. Cas. No. 17,214]; Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50 [19 L. Ed. 594]. We find no error in the charge excepted to.

*166

The third exception is because the judge refused to charge, when requested, "that if Kelly had sold to Finklea before the taking of the property, this was a dissolution of the firm of James Anderson & Co., the parties who made the contract with defendants, and, therefore, the plaintiffs cannot recover." The judge did charge as requested, but added, "unless the contract was renewed with the new firm."

The partnership of James Anderson & Co., consisted of two persons, James Anderson and Middleton Kelly. James Anderson never left it, but it seems that Kelly sold his interest to one Finklea, who thereby became a member. The property of the concern was never sold or removed. The style of the firm remained the same—James Anderson & Co. The defendants, Holmes & Durham, were informed by letter of the change shortly after it occurred in May, and at that time they made no complaint on that ground. It was left to the jury to say whether they accepted Finklea in the place of Kelly. We can see no error of the judge upon this subject, so far, at least, as the defendants are concerned.

The appeal must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 166

(Case No. 918.)

SCURRY v. COLEMAN.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐564.]

Notice of appeal was given in due time, but appellants failed to serve or file their case within thirty days thereafter; after the time had expired, the next succeeding judge presiding in that circuit gave appellants further time to prepare and serve their case—Held, that the order extending the time was unauthorized, and the appeal was dismissed. Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560, approved.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co., 14 S. C. 391; Stribling v. Johns, 16 S. C. 112; Tribble v. Poore, 28 S. C. 570, 6 S. E. 577; Marjenhoff v. Marjenhoff, 40 S. C. 546, 18 S. E. 942.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2501–2506, 2555–2559; Dec. Dig. ⇐564.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇐357.]

The second sub-division of Section 353, of the code of procedure, was repealed by the act of 1878. 16 Stat. 698.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1928; Dec. Dig. ⇐357.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐2.]

[Cited in Godbold v. Vance, 14 S. C. 470, to the point that the act of 1878 covers the whole field of appeals to the Supreme Court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3–7, 1882, 2421; Dec. Dig. ⇐2.]

[4. Appeal and Error ⇐7.]

[Cited in Hyatt v. McBurney, 17 S. C. 148, to the point that appeals by implication are not favored.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. ⇐7.]

[This case is also cited in Hyatt v. McBurney, 17 S. C. 151, as covering only the mode and manner of appeals.]

*167

*Before Mackey, J., Fifth Circuit, November, 1879.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Gary & Gary, for plaintiff.

Messrs. Carroll & Norris, for defendant.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. The plaintiff, as the widow of James Scurry, filed her petition in the Probate Court of Edgefield county for dower in certain lands in the possession of the defendant, of which the husband had been seized in his lifetime. The defendant answered, contesting the claim on various grounds. The Probate judge sustained the claim and ordered a writ for the admeasurement of dower to issue. The defendant appealed to the Court of Common Pleas, and Judge Wallace dismissed the appeal July 8th, 1879. Exceptions and notice of appeal to the Supreme Court were filed within ten days, but a case was not prepared and filed within thirty days. On October 23d the defendant's attorney gave notice that he would move, before Judge Mackey, at Columbia, on November 3d, at 10 o'clock, A. M., for an order enlarging and extending the time in which to perfect the appeal to the Supreme Court by preparing and serving all notices, &c. With this application was served copy of affidavit of A. J. Norris, Esq., one of the attorneys for the defendant, stating the grounds for the motion, viz., that the appeal was not perfected in the time required by law, on account of the absence and oversight of defendant's attorney. On hearing the affidavit and proof of notice, Judge Mackey granted an order extending the time for preparing and serving a case or exceptions fifteen days from the date of his order. The plaintiff appeals from this order of Judge Mackey upon the following grounds:

1. Because his Honor, as the presiding judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Richland county, had no jurisdiction to pass *an order affecting a cause pending in the Court of Common Pleas for Edgefield county.

*168

2. Because the Circuit judge had no authority to pass an order in said cause, for the reason that the plaintiff had commenced proceedings in the Supreme Court for the purpose of dismissing the appeal for want of jurisdiction.

3. Because the Circuit judge had no authority to enlarge and extend the time within which to appeal to the Supreme Court.

4. Because the motion to enlarge and extend the time within which to perfect the appeal should have been made before the time for perfecting the same had expired.

5. Because the motion to enlarge and extend the time for perfecting the appeal should have been made before the judge who heard and decided the case.

6. Because the defendant did not show sufficient and reasonable cause for extending the time for perfecting the appeal.

The second section of the act of 1878, (16 Stat. 698), provides as follows: That "within thirty days after such notice the appellant or his attorney shall prepare a case or exceptions and serve them, unless the judge before whom the cause was heard last, on ten days' notice to the opposite party, upon sufficient and reasonable cause shown, shall extend the time."

The terms of this act are clear, and have received construction by this court in the case of Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560. The court in that case say: "It also appears that the appellant failed to serve the respondent with a copy of the case and exceptions within thirty days after serving his notice of appeal. This is also required by the statute, to which reference has already been made. (1878.) The statute allows the enlargement of the time for serving the case and exceptions, but that must be accomplished in the manner pointed out by the act. As there has been no enlargement of the time, according to the provisions of the act, the appeal must be deemed waived and the appeal dismissed."

In this case the time has been extended and the case prepared within the time allowed, but it was not extended within the thirty days from notice of appeal, nor by the "judge before whom the cause was heard last," and the question is, whether *that order was properly made. It is insisted that Section 353, sub-division 2, of the Code of procedure, allowing the court to permit amendments where any act necessary to perfect an appeal has been omitted "through mistake," has not been repealed by the act of 1878, and that the order was properly granted under that authority.

*169

It is true that repeals by implication are not favored; but the last act of the general assembly is the law according to its terms, and it does repeal so much of all prior laws as are inconsistent with it. We understand the principle of repeal to be as expressed in the case of State v. Branham, 13 S. C. 394: "Repeals by implication are possible, but they are not favored. To have that effect the new law must cover the whole subject exhaustively, and be absolutely inconsistent with the old law. Acts upon the same subject, which can stand together, are construed in pari materia. If they are consistent, they both stand, the last as an amendment. If part is consistent and part not, the repeal only operates upon the inconsistent part." Apply this principle here. The law governing appeals to the Supreme Court was changed by the act of 1878, as to the time in which an appeal shall be perfected, and then expressly repeals "all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith." It covers the whole subject of appeals to the Supreme Court. Are the provisions of the act of 1878 inconsistent with the provision of the code before referred to? Its terms are "whenever the appellant shall fail to perfect his appeal according to the provisions of either of the foregoing sections, his failure to do so shall amount to a waiver of the appeal."

There was a failure in this case to perfect the appeal according to the provisions of the act, and the extension of time was not granted "in the manner pointed out by the act" by "the judge before whom the cause was last heard." The provisions of the act are mandatory and must be enforced. This court has no right to consider the hardships of the case, but is bound to announce the law.

The motion to dismiss the appeal must be granted.

Order set aside.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. *170

*(Case No. 919.)

ALSOBROOK v. ALSOBROOK.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⟸453.]

The widow of an intestate gave her note, with sureties, for personal property purchased at the estate sale, and transferred to her sureties as indemnity the property purchased and also her interest in the lands of her husband; afterwards, judgments having been obtained against her and her sureties upon this note, one of the sureties received from the administrator a release of himself alone from this judgment, in consideration of a transfer by him to the administrator of the property held by the sureties as indemnity. Held, that there was no consideration for the release, and that it must be set aside in favor of creditors of the intestate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1884–1908; Dec. Dig. ⟸453.]

[2. Executors and Administrators ⟸453; Principal and Surety ⟸193.]

The widow and her sureties are entitled to a credit upon such judgment to the extent of the value of so much of the property so transferred to the administrator, as was not subject to sale by the sheriff under execution against the administrator for debts of the intestate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1884–1908; Dec. Dig. ⟸453; Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. § 602; Dec. Dig. ⟸193.]

[This case is also cited in Alsobrook v. Watts, 19 S. C. 541, as to the facts.]

Before Kershaw, J., Chesterfield, September, 1879.

In this case the Honorable Thomas B. FRASER, judge of the Third Circuit, sat in the seat of Associate Justice McIVER who had been of counsel in the cause in the court below.

This was an action by Caroline M. Alsobrook, as executrix of Lemuel H. Alsobrook, against Franklin L. Alsobrook and others. F. L. Alsobrook was a son of Willis W. Alsobrook, and administered upon his estate; Elizabeth P. Alsobrook was the widow of intestate.

The Circuit decree, after finding the facts, (which are sufficiently stated in the opinion of the court,) thus concludes:

The note upon which the judgment, whose release is the subject of this controversy is founded, is payable to Franklin L. Alsobrook, administrator. It was received by him for personal property, purchased by the widow at the sale of his intestate's estate made by him as administrator.

Since the case of Rhame v. Lewis, decided in 1867, it cannot be doubted that a security of this kind is equally with choses in action, which the intestate held at his death, assets in the hands *of the administrator, subject in all respects, as such, to the claims of creditors and distributees.

*171

The same case is authority for the proposition, never doubted, that a valid alienation by way either of sale or pledge of such choses in action, may be made by the administrator to any one who takes them bona fide, and for value not grossly inadequate, and, upon such alienation, they will be discharged of all equities which attach upon them merely as assets. 13 Rich. Eq. 329. It is wholly unnecessary to go beyond the principles of law here decided, to solve the questions in this case.

They are resolved into two inquiries:

1. Was the release of the judgment complained of "bona fide?"

2. Was it for value "not grossly inadequate?"

It has already been said that I discover in the testimony no direct proof of fraud. Can it be presumed from any of the circumstances? The circumstances relied upon for that purpose are the alleged insolvency of Franklin L. Alsobrook, the administrator, and the supposed knowledge of that fact by Redfearn.

While these circumstances, fully established, would have been very high evidence of fraud, if the release of the judgment had been made in consideration of property conveyed to F. L. Alsobrook individually, it is not perceived that it can have any such effect, when the conveyance was made to him expressly as administrator, unless coupled with such gross inadequacy of consideration as would be evidence of a fraudulent intent. The case is, therefore, reduced to the point involved in the second inquiry.

2. Was the consideration so grossly inadequate as to raise the presumption of fraud?

The evidence on this point is recited above. Witnesses of equal respectability, and with equal means and capacity for forming an opinion, widely disagree as to the value of the land conveyed. Some of the evidence tends to show that it was worth from $8 to $10 per acre, while other testimony tends to reduce it to $2.50 per acre. The very quantity of land conveyed is left in such doubt that the court is unable to determine *whether there were six hundred, a thousand, or twelve hundred acres.

*172

The value of the personal property, and the particulars of which it consisted, is also not established by the testimony. The burden is on the plaintiff, who alleges fraud in the transaction, to establish it by proof of such circumstances as will make it plainly to appear. Such proof has not been furnished. From the nature of the subject, the question of value is one of opinion merely, and where the estimates are so diverse, the question must remain in doubt.

The transaction was not illegal in itself, nor necessarily unfair. The presumption, therefore, is in favor of good faith, and it cannot be removed by doubtful proof.

I must, therefore, conclude that the consideration for the release was not grossly inadequate, and, consequently, that there was no fraud in the transaction, actual or constructive. It is, therefore, adjudged that the complaint be dismissed, as to all the defendants, except Franklin L. Alsobrook, against whom, as administrator, an account is prayed, with leave to the plaintiff to apply at the foot of this judgment for such orders as may be necessary to procure such accounting from him, and proceedings consequent thereon.

It is also adjudged, that the plaintiff pay the costs of all the defendants herein, except Franklin L. Alsobrook, to be adjusted by the clerk.

From this decree, plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Dudley & Newton, and M. J. Hough, for appellant.

Messrs. Prince & Caston, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

FRASER, A. A. J. Willis W. Alsobrook died intestate, and his son, Franklin L. Alsobrook, one of the defendants, administered on his estate. Elizabeth P. Alsobrook, his widow, and his sons, Franklin L. and William, were his only heirs-at-law and dis-

*173

*tributees. He died possessed of considerable estate, real and personal. In 1857 or 1858 the administrator made sale of the personalty, amounting in all to about $30,000. At this sale Elizabeth P., the widow, purchased property, and gave her note, under seal, to the administrator, with Townley Redfearn, Thomas H. Watts and one Bivens as sureties. It is stated in the Circuit decree that "at the time when the note was signed by Redfearn and Watts, as sureties to Mrs. Elizabeth P. Alsobrook, she transferred to them, as indemnity for such suretyship, certain real estate and some personal property, the latter derived by her purchase at the estate sale of Willis W. Alsobrook, her deceased husband, and the real estate as his heir-at-law, she being, as widow, entitled to one-third part of the estate." It does not appear what was the precise nature of this transfer, whether by way of mortgage or by deed of trust, but it appears to have been by way of indemnity. It must be inferred that it included her whole interest in the land, whether as dowress or as heir-at-law, or of the whole interest in the land by some arrangement with the other heirs. The latter seems possible, as her purchases of personalty do not seem to have amounted to one-third of the personalty of the estate. The land transferred was the same land subsequently sold as a part of the estate for eight hundred acres in one parcel and fifty acres in another, and estimated by some of the witnesses at twelve hundred acres, and estimated by witnesses at from $2.50 to $8.50 per acre. The personalty consisted, or at least so much as was left after the war, of "household and kitchen furniture, hogs, cattle and, perhaps, other articles."

On this note, separate judgments were obtained against Mrs. Elizabeth P. Alsobrook and her sureties, Townley Redfearn and Thomas H. Watts, on September 6th, 1872, for the sum of $10,577.92 and costs.

On September 21st, 1872, the defendant, Townley Redfearn, procured from Franklin L. Alsobrook a release in full of his individual liability on this judgment, the release acknowledging "full satisfaction" of the same from him. This release makes no provision for the discharge of either the principal or the other sureties.

*174

*Before the date of this judgment and of this release, Lemuel H. Alsobrook had recovered a judgment against the administrator on a claim against his intestate, which was entered up March 5th, 1867, for $3467.62, and $21.13 costs, and renewed September 10th, 1875, for $6167.01, and $89.40 costs.

There was also a judgment in favor of James Funderburk as administrator of Gibson Mangum against Franklin L. Alsobrook as administrator of W. W. Alsobrook, dated March 7th, 1868, for $2465.58, and $28.85 costs.

There was also another judgment in favor of A. M. Lowry for some $300 and interest.

This action was brought to set aside the release given by the administrator to Townley Redfearn on the ground that it was without consideration, and that it was executed with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud the plaintiff, Lemuel H. Alsobrook and other creditors of W. W. Alsobrook.

Under the executions of Lemuel H. Alsobrook and others against the administrator, the land transferred to the sureties as indemnity, and by Redfearn transferred to the administrator as part of the consideration of the release, has been sold by the sheriff as a part of the estate of W. W. Alsobrook for the sum of $3300. Of this amount $2690.-01 was paid on the judgment of L. H. Alsobrook, and $210.12 on the judgment of A. M. Lowry. There had been an application from a previous sale of $196 to the plaintiff's judgment, which had been returned nulla bona on March 28th, 1873, before the commencement of this action.

The consideration is thus stated by the defendant Redfearn: "Transferred to Frank (i. e. Franklin L. Alsobrook, the administrator,) the same he got as indemnity; has lost nothing but time;" * * * "gave his individual release of the property;" "the others were not there," (i. e.) the other sureties.

The defendant Redfearn, and the administrator stood in the relation of debtor and creditor, and Redfearn had a right to make the best bargain he could, provided, however, there was no fraudulent purpose, and he gave a consideration for the release not grossly inadequate. But in no view of the case could *the administrator, dealing with trust funds, release or sell them without any consideration at all. Rhame v. Lewis, 13 Rich. Eq. 310.

*175

It would be difficult to reconcile this transaction with correct ideas of fair dealing. All the property transferred by Redfearn to the administrator, as consideration for this release, belonged originally to the estate, and was transferred to him and his co-sureties as indemnity by the principal debtor, yet, in his transfer to the administrator, he claims to transfer without consulting the other sureties, and, in the release, makes no provision for the benefit of the other sureties, who are equally interested with himself or for the benefit of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Alsobrook, the principal, who had furnished the means, only making the vague suggestion that in some way she would be benefited by the transaction.

As we construe this transaction, with the light before us, the whole property conveyed to the sureties as indemnity was not liable to sale under the plaintiff's execution against the administrator as a part of the estate of W. W. Alsobrook. The widow's right of dower could not have been barred by such sale, and the personalty purchased by her ceased to be a part of the estate at the sale, and was no longer liable to the debts of the estate. Both, however, were liable on her own contracts, and could have been subjected to the payment of her debts. Now, the conveyance made by Mrs. E. P. Alsobrook to Redfearn, and the other sureties was only by way of indemnity, and she had a right to pay the debt and redeem the property. She was heir-at-law and distributee of the intestate, and had a right to call on the administrator and his sureties for an account of the administration, and, so far as anything appears in this case, her share in the estate might have been sufficient to have paid her debt, for which Redfearn, Watts and Bivens were sureties. If, under these circumstances, she had conveyed this property to the administrator in payment of the debt, or if she had released her equity and right to redeem the property, we are not prepared to say that the consideration would not have been sufficient to sustain the release. But she was no party to this release, and does not appear to have consented to or been consulted about it. The sole consideration was the transfer by Redfearn, as far as he *could by his individual act, of property held by the sureties jointly for their protection. Sureties have a right to all collaterals taken by the creditor from the principal, or such as are taken by a co-surety. Creditors have a right to all collaterals taken from the principal by the sureties, and this without any reference to the solvency or insolvency of the principal debtor. Field v. Pelot, McM. Eq. 388; Lowndes v. Pinckney, 1 Rich. Eq. 155; McKenna v. George, 2 Rich. Eq. 15; Pitman on Princ. & Sur. 88, 89; Story's Eq., § 520.

*176

Under this view of the case Redfearn only gave what the administrator had a right to, and this could not be held to be a consideration for the release.

The land itself has been sold as part of the estate, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the debts, and the sale by the sheriff must be regarded as a fair test of its value. The right of dower and the personalty, or any other interest which was transferred to the administrator by Redfearn as a part of the consideration, and which was not subject to sale by the sheriff, under the execution against the administrator, should, however, be regarded as payment to the extent of its value and the administrator and his sureties are liable to the creditors for it.

There should therefore be a reference to ascertain what was the value of the property thus transferred, and the execution against Mrs. E. P. Alsobrook and her sureties should have credit for so much. The release executed by the administrator in favor of Redfearn should be set aside and a receiver appointed to administer the fund under the orders of the court in favor of the plaintiff and others who may be entitled to it.

It is, therefore, ordered that the release executed by the administrator be set aside and the case remanded to the Circuit Court for such orders as may be proper under the principles announced in this decree.

WILLARD, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *177

*(Case No. 920.)

NORTON v. LIVINGSTON.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Trial ⇐278.]

A general exception to the whole of a judge's charge to the jury is not a compliance with the law; the points of law wherein error is charged should be separately and distinctly stated.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Godbold v. Vance, 14 S. C. 471; McDaniel v. Stokes, 19 S. C. 61; Covar v. Sallat, 22 S. C. 270.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 689; Dec. Dig. ⇐278.]

[2. Property ⇐9.]

Where the question is, whether personal property levied upon belonged to the husband or the wife, it is not error to leave to the jury the weight to be attached to the marks upon the goods when received by railroad as evidence of ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 144; Property, Dec. Dig. ⇐9.]

[3. Executors and Administrators ⇐273.]

If the judge submits to the jury a question which he should himself decide, his attention should be directed at the time to his error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, §§ 1058–1060; Dec. Dig. ⇐273.]

Before Pressley, J., Orangeburg, January, 1880.

The case is stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. De Treville & Izlar, for appellant.
Mr. Samuel Dibble, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. On August 26th, 1879, John H. Livingston, as sheriff of Orangeburg county, under executions in his hands as sheriff, against A. C. Norton, levied upon and sold "one cotton gin and steam engine" as the property of the defendant in execution. The plaintiff, Mary D. Norton, wife of the judgment debtor, A. C. Norton, claimed that the property levied upon and sold did not belong to her husband but to her, and brought this action against the defendant, sheriff, to recover its value. The cause was referred to a jury. The only question in the case was whether the property levied by the sheriff, under executions against the husband, was the property of the husband *or wife. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $1000. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was granted nisi, unless the plaintiff would enter a remittitur of the verdict over and above the sum of $720. The plaintiff accepted the order and remitted the verdict in excess of $720, and for that sum entered judgment. The defendant appeals to this court. It does not appear that there was any request made to the judge to charge any particular point of law, or that any exceptions were made at the trial. Within ten days after the rising of the court the defendant gave notice of appeal to this court, but served no copy of exceptions other than the notice of appeal, which is as follows:

*178

"The undersigned excepts to the judgment in this case, entered on January 29th, 1880, and to the charge of his Honor, B. C. Pressley, and appeals to the Supreme Court of South Carolina."

The plaintiff makes no objection to the appeal, but we deem it proper to state, for the information of the bar, that we do not consider this appeal a compliance with the law. The act of 1878 (16 Stat. 698), requires that when exceptions to the rulings of the presiding judge are not taken and noted at the trial they may be taken "within ten days after the rising of the court by furnishing a copy of such exceptions."

In this case no exceptions were taken at the trial, and it appears that no copy of exceptions has been furnished in the case, except the general statement that the defendant "excepts to the charge of the judge," but without stating in what particulars. We understand an "exception" to be an objection stated "to a decision on matter of law arising upon the trial." The points of law wherein error is charged should be specifically stated in exceptions, otherwise the court has no guide as to the points contested. It is not a compliance with the first section of the act of 1878 to except in general terms to the judge's charge as a whole. This court is excluded from considering the sufficiency or insufficiency of evidence, or any other question except errors of law; and it is indispensable to the satisfactory discharge of their duty that these questions, submitted for their consideration, should be separately and distinctly stated

*179

*There being, in this case, no such exceptions specifically alleging errors of law, this appeal, without further consideration, might be dismissed; but we gather from the printed arguments of the counsel, which are, however, no part of the case, that the principal objection to the charge is the allegation that the judge submitted to the jury, as a matter of fact, a question which should have been decided by him as matter of law. Appellant's attorney, in his argument, says that his Honor, the presiding judge, on the question of ownership of A. C. Norton, charged the jury "that all the machinery was shipped and marked, and, also, entered on the railroad bill in the name of her husband; that the gin had cards with his name attached, and the engine was marked in his name. You must say what the effect of such marking is. Are goods so invariably shipped in the name of the owner as that it is the invariable proof of ownership? If goods are marked in that way simply to show who they are to go to, and it is not regarded as proof of ownership, then you will not so regard it."

Counsel insist that it was wrong to leave to the jury "the effect" of such marking; but that it was a question of law for the court. The question in issue—whether the husband or the wife owned the property—was certainly one of fact. Upon this question, one of the items of proof was the way in which the property came marked. What weight such proof was entitled to in the minds of the jury must depend upon another question of fact, whether goods are so invariably shipped in the name of the owner as that it is the conclusive proof of ownership. The judge had no right to decide that question of fact, and, properly, left the whole question as to the weight of the testimony to the jury.

The difficulty seems to arise from the use of the word "effect." It is manifest from the issue involved, and the whole context, that the judge intended to charge the jury in something like these words: "You must say what weight such marking should have as evidence upon the question of the ownership of the property." So considered, he was right. He could not say, as matter of law, what weight it was entitled to. Besides, if the appellant considered it error to leave that question to the jury, *he should have so informed the judge at the trial. We can see no error.

*180

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

WILLARD, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 180

(Case No. 923.)

PEGUES v. WARLEY.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Adverse Possession ⇐43.]

The possession of successive purchasers of a tract of land covered by the lien of a judgment, who derived title from the judgment debtor, cannot be united so as to make up the statutory period necessary to give title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Garrett v. Weinberg, 48 S. C. 45, 26 S. E. 3; Burnett v. Crawford, 50 S. C. 167, 27 S. E. 645; Epperson v. Stansill, 64 S. C. 488, 42 S. E. 426; Lewis v. Pope, 86 S. C. 295, 68 S. E. 683.

For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. ⇐43.]

[2. Limitation of Actions ⇐112.]

The act of 1865, to amend the stay law, (13 Stat. 286, 305, § 4,) suspended the statute of limitations, and while that act was in existence, the statute of limitations did not run in favor of a purchaser of land covered by the lien of a judgment, as against the judgment creditor.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Goldsmith v. Jacobs, 14 S. C. 624.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 522; Dec. Dig. ⇐112.]

[This case is also cited in Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. C. 566, 10 S. E. 330, 5 L. R. A. 821, as to the distinction between "dower" and "property," and in Garvin v. Garvin, 31 S. C. 587, 588, 10 S. E. 507, 17 Am. St. Rep. 48; Du Pont v. Charleston Bridge Co., 65 S. C. 535, 44 S. E. 86, as to the operation of the statute of limitations.]

Before Kershaw, J., Darlington, October, 1879.

Hon. T. B. FRASER, judge of the Third Circuit, sat in the place of Associate Justice McIVER, who had been of counsel.

This was an action commenced February 21st, 1879, by Samuel W. Pegues to recover the possession of a tract of land purchased by him on January 6th, 1879, under judgment obtained in October, 1860, and revived in 1872. The defendant, Rowena L. Warley, claimed by adverse possession under the circumstances stated in the opinion of court. B. S. Josey, tenant in possession under Mrs. Warley, and T. D. Wagner, who held a mortgage on the land dated May, 1866, were also defendants.

The Circuit decree is as follows:

This case was heard by the court without a jury by agreement of counsel.

The first question that presents itself is, whether the statute of limitations will protect the defendant's title against the lien of Pegues' judgment.

*181
*This seems now not to be an open question, if the possession was adverse and continued for the statutory period, and there were no intervening disabilities or other circumstances to prevent the operation of the statute. McRaa v. Smith, 2 Bay, 339; Lamar v. Raysor, 7 Rich. 511. Nor will it be seriously questioned that when one holds land as his own, by virtue of a purchase and regular conveyance of the legal title, with actual possession thereunder, he holds adversely to all the world. Sumner v. Murphy, 2 Hill 488 [27 Am. Dec. 397]; Simmons v. Parsons, 2 Hill 492, note. Such was undoubtedly the character of the possession in this case, since the purchase by Wagner.

The next question to be determined upon the facts is, whether the possession of the Warleys can be connected with that of Wagner, so as to make out a continuous possession for ten years, and thus protect Mrs. Warley's title.

There is no question that Wagner was seized in fee of the land claimed by the plaintiff, by an absolute and perfect title. He had not only the seisin in law, but the seisin in fact. Not only the right to the land, but the actual possession thereof. These two concurring, he had seisin "de droit et de claime, whereof no man may disseise him," as an old author hath it. This seisin, not a new one, he transferred by deed to Warley, whose estate was, therefore, the same, and Mrs. Warley, the defendant, holds by virtue of that title as devisee. Where the possession originally was wrongful, until it ripened into a right by lapse of time, or by descent cast, there was no estate, no right of property which could be conveyed by deed. Consequently, the purchaser from a party thus in possession of lands of another, acquired nothing by his deed. They were, as to the real owners, mere trespassers, who could not tack their successive trespasses together so as to defeat the right of him who had the title. This is settled law in South Carolina. Mazyck v. Wight, 2 Brev. 151; King v. Smith, Rice 11.

The current of authorities elsewhere, however, is various, as may be seen by reference to Mr. Washburn's Treatise on Real Property, Vol. III. 130, and Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. II. 416, in notes to Nepeau v. Doe, where the cases are collected. In New York, Vermont and Massachusetts, possessions may be *tacked, if one comes in under the other, and the possessory estates are connected and continuous, but not otherwise. So, in Pennsylvania, in a number of cases, in one of which, Moore v. Small, 9 Barr. 194, it is said that the contrary doctrine, "was never acknowledged as sound by any land lawyer or judge of that state." So in Kentucky and Texas the law is the same. In Tennessee and North Carolina, it is not necessary to show even a parol agreement between successive occupants. It "is enough that the owner has been kept out of possession the requisite time, if there has been a continuous possession by successive occupants."

*182

Mr. Washburn (Vol. III., 130) states the prevalent doctrine, thus: "In the case of successive holders of land, after a disseisin committed by one of them, the seisin thereby acquired by him will not enure to the benefit of the others who come into possession after him, unless there is a privity of estate between them and him, by purchase or descent. Their connected possessions cannot, in the language of the law, be tacked together to make a continuity of disseisin."

Again, at p. 125, he says: "But this possession need not be continued by the same person. It will be sufficient that it is held by different persons in succession, holding in privity with each other, or with the one who claims title by such possession."

There is no case in this state which determines that a conveyance of land by him who holds the same by a perfect title, to another to whom he transfers such title, accompanied with possession, breaks the continuity of such possession. On the contrary, the decisions only go to this extent that a mere trespasser, having nothing to convey, no estate in the land, can not by his deed convert the entry of his successor into anything more than a naked trespass as against the rightful owner. Mazyck v. Wight and King v. Smith, supra.

I consider, however, that the reasoning of the court in Wilson v. McLenaghan, McM. Eq. 35, is conclusive of this point.

I shall next consider the effect of the injunction against creditors, under the bill filed by the administrators of Zimmerman against Pegues and others, being a bill to marshal assets, etc. *This bill was filed June 2d, 1868, and dismissed on a plea to the jurisdiction in October, 1871. Shall this period be deducted in calculating the running of the statute?

*183

In Chitty's Gen. Pr., Vol. I., 781, it is said: "It is settled that the mere pendency of a bill in chancery against the claimant, is not sufficient to take the debt out of the statute of limitations, and so it is where the bill is dismissed. But it is said, that if a party be stayed by injunction, it is otherwise, and it has been considered that when the statute has run by the retention of a bill or otherwise in a court of equity, the court will not allow the statute to be set up. But it should seem that unless the court has previously directed that the statute shall not be set up at law, it will not afterwards entertain a bill or application for that purpose, and therefore the claimant should make a proper application to the court of equity, pending the proceedings and before the statute has barred the remedy at law; or he should take care and issue, and continue proper proceedings at law. The authorities to which he refers seem fully to warrant this summary of the law. The cases of Dixon v. Gayfere and Fluker v. Gordon, 23 Eng. L. & E. 149, sustain the proposition that "the institution of a suit to establish the right of real property, (the legal estate being outstanding,) has not the effect to stop the operation of the statute of limitations." But it is said in Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 93, "that a creditor prevented by the act of the court from obtaining a judgment, is put in the same position as if he had it." This, however, would seem to be confined to a case, where the injunction was had on the application of the defendant at law, or at least to a case in which he was a party to the injunction suit. In the case of Miller v. McIntyre, 6 Pet. 64 [8 L. Ed. 320], it was held that until the defendants were made parties to the bill, the statute would not be suspended as to them. The court says it would be a novel and unjust principle to make the defendants responsible for a proceeding of which they had no notice, and when a final decree in the case could not have prejudiced their rights."

And in Alexander v. Pendleton, 8 Cranch 462 [3 L. Ed. 624], it is decided, that "where a suit is dismissed, and a new bill filed, the plain*tiff cannot, in the computation of time to take a case out of the statute of limitations, avail himself of the pendency of the former suit, unless he can connect the two suits together." In our own cases at law, the rule of the common law is recognized, that process to take a case out of the statute, must be continued to the time of trial. Gray v. Moorehead, 2 Mills 439. After a diligent search, I am unable to find any case which determines, that at law, a reply to the statute would be good, which sets forth the pendency of a bill in equity, under which the plaintiff had been restrained by injunction from pursuing his remedy at law. On the other hand, it was held in Barker v. Millard, 16 Wend. 572, that before the adoption of the revised statutes in New York, an injunction from chancery would not suspend the running of the statute, and the party enjoined had to apply to that court to restrain his adversary from setting it up at law.

*184

All the cases which I have examined amount only to this, that where a party is so restrained, the court, upon application, will, by order, restrain the person against whom the legal demand exists, from setting up the statute. It would seem to follow that, if as said by Mr. Chitty, the party neglects, while the equity suit is still pending, to protect himself in this way, the statute will continue to run. This is the more evident, when the person whose rights are to be protected by the statute, is not a party to the injunction suit, as was the case here. It would be more accurate to say that the statute is never suspended by reason of the restraint imposed by the court of equity, because there is no power in the court to suspend a statute.

The utmost that a court can do, is to operate upon the party and prevent him from claiming the benefit of a statute, inequitably. This extraordinary power, not having been invoked, there is nothing to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations in this case, so far as concerns the effect of this injunction.

Furthermore, both these suits in equity were brought by the administrators of Zimmerman, to have his estate administered there, because of a deficiency of assets, and in the meantime to preserve the assets, and protect the administrators from suits at law, by enjoining legal proceedings against them.

*185

*It is difficult to see how an injunction in such a case could have restrained Pegues from enforcing his execution against the land in Warley's possession. There certainly was no good reason why it should.

As to the second bill filed by the administrators of Zimmerman, Pegues was specially excepted from the injunction therein, and as the cases already cited show, the mere pendency of a suit in equity cannot affect the currency of the statute. This brings me to the consideration of the bill filed in January, 1873, by Wagner and Warley to enjoin the sale of the land in question, under Pegues' judgment. Whatever might have been the difficulties in the way, prior to the adoption of the code, it is presumed that there can be none now to prevent the injunction in that case, from suspending the statute during its pendency. Section 128 of the code, is explicit in declaring that where action is stayed by injunction, the statute is suspended. That this injunction suit was dismissed, will not alter this result. The fact remains, that Pegues was restrained by injunction. The court had jurisdiction of the general subject, and the bill was dismissed for the want of equity. Wagner v. Pegues, 10 S. C. 262. Pegues was bound to obey the injunction as he did. High on Injunc., § 48.

The effect of the stay law is now to be considered.

It is sufficient to say as to the act of 1861, that the statute is not suspended, except as to "causes of action," and does not apply in terms to cases in which the execution of final process was inhibited. It may be that the general assembly supposed it had sufficiently guarded the rights of judgment creditors, by the second section of the act. However this may be, it did not provide for this case. It was so considered by the assembly of 1865, for care was taken in reenacting the stay law of that year to provide for this very case. A. A. 1865, p. 305, § 4. It is there declared that, during the continuance of that act, the statute of limitations should be suspended against the claims of all persons in possession of property of debtors on final process, and on which such process may have a lien." This act continued of force until the adjournment of the next regular session of the general assembly. Its effect was to suspend the *operation of the statute of limitations against Pegues for one year.

*186

It remains to apply these conclusions to the case under consideration.

Wagner's adverse possession commenced December 31st, 1862, when the land was conveyed to him by Zimmerman. The statute then commenced and continued to run, except as affected by the stay law, until January 4th, 1873, when the injunction in the last suit was obtained by Wagner and Warley, a period of ten years and four days. Giving effect to the stay law of 1865, and deducting one year from this period, it results that the bar of the statute is not complete.

It is, therefore, adjudged that the right and title of the said plaintiff, Samuel W. Pegues, is hereby absolutely and fully established to the real property described in the complaint, free from the lien of the mortgage thereof claimed by the defendant, Theodore D. Wagner, and that the plaintiff recover of the defendants, Rowena L. Warley and B. S. Josey, the possession of the said real property; and further, that he recover from the defendant, Rowena L. Warley, his costs and disbursements in this action, to be adjusted by the clerk.

Defendants appealed.

Mr. A. C. Spain, for appellants.
Mr. R. W. Boyd, contra.

September 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action for a tract of land. The plaintiff obtained judgment against one John P. Zimmerman, which was entered October 27th, 1860. Zimmerman, the defendant in execution, was then the owner of the land in dispute, but he sold and conveyed it to Theodore D. Wagner, December 31st, 1862. Wagner sold it to F. F. Warley, May 17th, 1866, who had it in possession until he died, April 16th, 1876, leaving his widow, Rowena L. Warley, executrix and *devisee, in possession. John P. Zimmerman died intestate in 1863. There were two proceedings to marshal the assets of his estate, in which the judgment of Pegues was presented but was never paid. Another proceeding was instituted by Theodore D. Wagner against Pegues to enjoin the sale of the land under his judgment. An injunction was granted January 4th, 1873, but finally dissolved November 18th, 1878. Wagner v. Pegues, 10 S. C. 259.

*187

From the view which the court takes it will not be necessary to state the facts more at length. After many delays, and the dissolution of the injunction, the land was sold by the sheriff, January 6th, 1879, under the judgment of the plaintiff, who bid it off; took sheriff's titles, and now brings this action for its recovery. The defence is the statute of limitations. The case was heard without a jury by consent of counsel. The Circuit judge overruled the defence principally on the force of the act known as the stay law, (13 Stat. 286, 305,) suspending in certain cases the operation of the statute of limitations, and adjudged "that the plaintiff recover of the defendants the possession of the said real property."

The defendants excepted, and charged as error "so much of the judgment as holds that Section 4 of the stay law of 1865 applied to the case."

The plaintiff, content with the result of the judgment, yet, "in case the court should come to the conclusion that there was error in so much of the Circuit opinion as is appealed from," insists that the judgment shall be affirmed on other grounds, and among them "that the possession of Warley cannot be connected with that of Wagner so as to make out a continuous adverse possession for the statutory period."

We will first consider the question here raised as to the right of the defendant to unite the possessions, as it will decide the case if the conclusion should be reached that the possession of Wagner could not be united with that of Warley so as to make out ten years of adverse possession.

It seems now settled in this state that the statute of limitations runs against the lien of a judgment in favor of a purchaser from the judgment debtor without any other evidence of the adverse *character of his possession than the purchase, conveyance and possession. McRaa v. Smith, 2 Bay 339; Lamar v. Raysor, 7 Rich. 511. The authority on which these cases rest is not clearly perceived, as the statute refers in terms to title, and is silent as to a lien, which, by the law then of force, continued for twenty years, or until presumed paid. It is said in the case of McRaa v. Smith that it was so held for the reason that "judgments and executions were within the mischiefs intended to be guarded against by the statute, although not particularly mentioned in it." In the case of a purchaser from a mortgagor a different doctrine has been declared and sustained by a long line of authorities. Thayer v. Cramer, 1 McC. Eq. 395; Wright v. Eaves, 5 Rich. Eq. 81; Norton v. Lewis, 3 S. C. 25; Gillison v. S. & C. Railroad Company, 7 S. C. 181. Is there any difference in principle between the lien of a mortgage recorded and that of a judgment in the proper office, as far as the statute of limitations is concerned? Both are liens—one general on all the property, and the other specific on particular property of the debtor—one created by the law and the other by the parties. But it is difficult to see that they differ in such a manner as to make necessary and proper a construction of the statute in one case different from that in the other. It is desirable that there should be harmony in the law, and that as far as possible the same rule should be made to apply in like cases.

*188

The case of McRaa v. Smith has, however, been recognized in other cases, and we do not propose to disturb it. But as we think it out of harmony with those of similar character, we are not willing to extend it beyond the very point decided. There was in that case no necessity to unite possessions. There was only one continuous possession in the defendant Smith for the whole period necessary. The question now presented is, whether the principle there announced requires us to go further and apply it to a case in which the bar of the statute cannot be made out against a judgment creditor without uniting the possessions of two successive occupants of the land. Can the possession of the first occupant be added to that of the second when he is sued by the purchaser at sheriff's sale?

*189

*It has been well settled in this state that the operation of the act of limitation depends upon actual possession of the land and not upon mere non-claim of the plaintiff, and that one in possession of land for a less time than the statutory period cannot unite his possession with that of one from whom he purchased in order to make out ten years, for, until that period has run out, they are both, as it respects the true owner, as mere trespassers. A conveyance from the first to the second tenant, under such circumstances, conveys nothing. It is said in several of the cases that "actual deed from a person who has no right conveys nothing." Mazyck v. Wight, 2 Brev. 151; King v. Smith, Rice 11; Beadle v. Hunter & Garrett, 3 Strob. 331; Dillard v. Philson, 5 Strob. 213.

But it is suggested that these authorities only refer to cases where all the occupants, whose possession it is proposed to tack, were originally naked trespassers, and do not embrace a case where the first occupant got his possession by regular conveyance from the person having the legal title. The judgment in this case states the proposition as follows: "When the possession was originally wrongful, until it ripened into right by lapse of time or by descent cast, there was no estate, no right of property which could be conveyed by deed. Consequently the purchaser from a party then in possession of lands of another acquired nothing by his deed. They were, as to the real owner, mere trespassers, who could not tack their successive trespasses together so as to defeat the right of him who had the title. * * * There is no case in this state which determines that a conveyance of land by him who holds the same by a perfect title to another to whom he transfers such title, accompanied with possession, breaks the continuity of such possession. On the contrary the decisions only go to this extent, that a mere trespasser, having nothing to convey, no estate in the land, cannot, by his deed, convert the entry of his successor into anything more than a naked trespass as against the rightful owner."

The exact point here made has never, so far as we know, been decided in this state. The cases in the reports were actions by the real owners against persons claiming title by possession, but who did not connect themselves with the legal title. We have *not been referred to any case, and we have not been able to find one where possessions were united against the lien of a judgment creditor who was not the owner of the land but had a lien upon it as judgment creditor or mortgagee. We do not think that the case of dower, decided in Wilson v. McLenaghan, McM. Eq. 35, is analogous. Dower is a peculiar estate, issuing out of another estate. The necessary concession of the dowress is that hers is the title of her husband. Dower right is inchoate until established by law, and is a mere chose. Then, if that case does not control this, what rule of construction shall be adopted in the case where a judgment debtor sells land subject to a lien? We must keep in view the difference between power and property. The right to the property, as such, and the right to levy and sell are distinct. The judgment creditor was not the true owner of the land. As creditor he could not sue for the land. His right was a lien—the power to levy and sell. Possession by the defendant in execution for ten years would not bar the lien which runs for twenty years or until presumed paid. Yet it might be so considered if the judgment creditor were the real owner of the land. The judgment debtor has the legal title, subject to a lien, and, therefore, it cannot be said that he has "perfect title." If he conveys the land the right to levy and sell is not lost, but goes with it. The purchaser can take no higher right than the seller can give. He is fixed with knowledge of the lien, and takes and holds subject to it as much so as the defendant in execution himself. His possession is not necessarily adverse to the lien, but consistent with it. He buys property subject to a known encumbrance, and he holds in subordination to it. So far as the lien is concerned his title is defective—he never had it—and quoad hoc, is he not in the exact condition of the naked trespasser? Not a trespasser out and out, but entirely without title or estate so far as the lien has effect. All the cases hold that the possessions cannot be united if the first taker had no right whatever. The fact here is that the first taker had the legal right, but qualified by the lien. Would it not seem that upon principle the same result should follow to the extent of that qualification? So far as the lien was concerned, the first purchaser, Wagner, had no right whatever *except in subordination to it, and, before he acquired title by ten years' possession, "he could not, by his deed, convert the entry of his successor into anything more than a naked trespass as against the lien."

*190

*191

Warley went into possession of the land still subject to the lien. The judgment creditor, who, as to the lien, was the true owner, could not enforce it against him until he went into possession, and as his deed from Wagner conveyed nothing but the legal title subject to the lien, he could not claim the benefit of adverse possession in quieting his title as against the lien until he had possession himself for the whole period of ten years.

We do not think this case should be an exception to the well established general rule that possessions cannot be united to make out the time necessary to complete the bar of the statute.

We concur with the Circuit judge that the fourth section of the act of 1865, (13 Stat. 286, 305,) suspended the statute from running in favor of Warley during the continuance of that act. In some particulars the section is not expressed in clear technical language, but we think there is no doubt about the intention.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

WILLARD, C. J., and FRASER, A. A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 191

(Case No. 926.)

SIMPSON v. WILLARD.

(September Term, 1880.)

[1. Judges ⇨8.]

The constitution of this state, (Art. IV., § 2,) provides that a chief justice and two associate justices shall be elected for the term of six years, to be so classified that one of the justices shall go out of office every two years. Held, that a chief justice elected to supply a vacancy caused by the death of his predecessor was entitled to hold the office only for the remainder of the term of such predecessor, and not for the full term of six years.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Williams v. Benet, 35 S. C. 153, 14 S. E. 311, 14 L. R. A. 825; Smith

v. McConnell, 44 S. C. 493, 494, 22 S. E. 721; McDowell v. Burnett, 92 S. C. 472, 75 S. E. 873; Geer v. City Executive Committee for City of Greenville, 94 S. C. 477, 78 S. E. 326.

For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. ⟸8.]

[2. Constitutional Law ⟸19.]

Weight given to contemporary construction.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Pelzer, Rodgers & Co. v. Campbell & Co., 15 S. C. 592, 40 Am. Rep. 705; State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 379, 19 S. E. 5.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 14, 15; Dec. Dig. ⟸19.]

3. This case distinguished from Wright v. Charles, 4 S. C. 178; Whipper v. Reed, 9 S. C. 5.

[This case is also cited in Carolina Groc. Co. v. Burnet, 61 S. C. 206, 39 S. E. 381, 58 L. R. A. 687, as an instance of exercise of jurisdiction by Supreme Court, of a controversy submitted without action.]

Original application, Special Term, September, 1880.

*192

*In this case, Hon. HENRY McIVER, senior associate justice presided, and Hon. JOSHUA H. HUDSON, judge of the Fourth Circuit, sat, by appointment of the governor, as one of the court, the CHIEF JUSTICE, as a party to the cause, being disqualified.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. L. F. Youmans, Attorney-General; W. G. DeSaussure and J. S. Cothran, for plaintiff.

Mr. F. W. McMaster, contra.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by HUDSON, A. A. J. By agreement between the parties, plaintiff and defendant aforesaid, a controversy without action, under Section 389 of the code of procedure, is submitted to this court, wherein is presented for determination the question whether the plaintiff has been duly elected and qualified, and is entitled to have and to hold the office of chief justice of the Supreme Court of the State of South Carolina, claimed and held by the defendant.

The controversy arises on the following facts, viz.: The Hon. F. J. Moses, Sr., was elected to the said office by a joint vote of the general assembly on July 29th, A. D. 1868. The Hon. F. J. Moses, Sr., was re-elected to the said office on January 30th, A. D. 1874, by a joint vote of the general assembly, to hold for the term of six years, commencing from the expiration of the then existing term of said office, and duly qualified and entered upon the said last mentioned term of said office, and held the same until his death, which occurred on March 6th, A. D. 1877.

That on May 15th, A. D. 1877, the general assembly, (in conformity to a concurrent resolution of the two houses, of date of May 11th, A. D. 1877,) proceeded to elect a chief justice by joint vote thereof, and the said defendant, A. J. Willard, was, by said joint vote, elected chief justice of the Supreme Court to fill the vacancy created by the death of the Hon. F. J. Moses, Sr.

*193

*That the defendant duly qualified and entered upon the duties of the said office on May 15th, A. D. 1877, and has continued to hold said office, and claims to hold the same until the full end and expiration of the term of six years, from and after the day on which he was so elected to said office.

That on December 17th, A. D. 1879, the two houses of the general assembly passed a concurrent resolution, under which the general assembly, on December 18th, 1879, proceeded to elect a chief justice; and the said plaintiff, W. D. Simpson, was, by joint vote, elected thereto, and qualified and was commissioned chief justice on September 6th, A. D. 1880.

The said W. D. Simpson claims that the election of A. J. Willard on May 15th, 1877, entitled the said Willard to hold the office for the unexpired term of F. J. Moses, Sr., only; that this has now expired; and that, therefore, he, W. D. Simpson, is entitled to the possession of said office.

The question submitted is, whether a vacancy in said office has occurred by reason of the expiration of the term of the office of chief justice, to which the said defendant, A. J. Willard, was elected on May 15th, A. D. 1877. If the court shall be of opinion that the office of the defendant, A. J. Willard, has expired by due course of law, judgment must be entered in favor of the plaintiff, W. D. Simpson, that he is entitled to have and to hold the office of chief justice of the Supreme Court; but if the court shall be of opinion that the defendant's term of office has not expired, judgment must be in favor of the defendant, that he is entitled to have and to hold the office of chief justice as against plaintiff.

The foregoing is almost literally the language of the controversy submitted to this court, and which we have thought best to set forth fully.

Its solution depends entirely upon a proper construction of the following sections of Article IV. of the constitution of the State of South Carolina, as ratified by the people on April 16th, A. D. 1868.

These sections are in Article IV., relating to the judicial department:

"Section 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a chief *justice and two associate justices, two of whom shall constitute a quorum. They shall be elected by a joint vote of the general assembly for the term of six years, and shall continue in office until their successors shall be elected and qualified. They shall be so classified that one of the justices shall go out of office every two years.

*194

"Section 3. The chief justice elected under this constitution shall continue in office for six years, and the general assembly, immediately after the said election, shall determine which of the two associate justices shall serve for the term of two years, and which for the term of four years; and, having so determined the same, it shall be the duty of the governor to commission them accordingly.

"Section 11. All vacancies in the Supreme Court or other inferior tribunals, shall be filled by election as herein prescribed; provided, that if the unexpired term does not exceed one year, such vacancy may be filled by executive appointment."

In searching for the true interpretation of these sections of our constitution, and upon which the present controversy depends for determination, we naturally inquire in the outset whether they have at any time received either legislative or judicial construction—and, if so, such construction should receive due consideration by this court in its bearing upon the question now submitted for the first time to this court for adjudication. It is a rule of common sense, recognized and adopted by judges and text writers as a rule of law, that in doubtful questions of construction, arising under statutes and constitutions, due weight should be given to contemporaneous exposition and usage. Due regard should be had to the opinions entertained by men learned in the law and by the law-makers who are called upon to carry into effect the constitution. The manner in which such men have uniformly interpreted the constitution, and the mode in which they have invariably carried its provisions into effect, will be of little weight with a court when called upon to pronounce a judicial exposition of the language of a constitution in which no ambiguity appears and no room for doubt exists, but will be of material aid to the court, and carry great force in cases where ambiguity does exist and doubt does arise from the phraseology *of the instrument. Contemporanea expositio est fortissima in lege, is a maxim of the civil law. And whilst the rule governing judicial tribunals is that cotemporaneous construction is not absolutely binding upon them in giving judicial interpretation to a statute or constitution, yet it has, in cases of ambiguity, always been accorded full weight, and, indeed, in many cases, has been allowed to prevail in fixing judicial interpretation. In considering the constitutional authority of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to sit as justices of the Circuit Courts, Patterson, J., pronouncing the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, said: "Another reason for reversal is, that the judges of the Supreme Court have no right to sit as Circuit judges, not being appointed as such, or, in other words, that they ought to have distinct commissions as such. To this objection, which is of recent date, it is sufficient to observe that practice and acquiescence under it for a period of several years, commencing with the organization of the judicial system, affords an irresistible answer, and has, indeed, fixed the construction. It is a contemporary interpretation of the most forcible nature. This practical exposition is too strong and obstinate to be shaken or controlled. Of course the question is at rest, and ought not now to be disturbed." Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch 309 [2 L. Ed. 115]. This decision was as early as February, 1803, when the constitution of the United States had been in operation about as long as has been that of South Carolina of April, A. D. 1868.

*195

To the same effect is the language of Story, J., in Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 351 [4 L. Ed. 97], touching the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States in cases from state courts. After enumerating many of the historical facts connected with the question, and establishing uniform acquiescence in the jurisdiction then for the first time questioned, that eminent judge says "This weight of contemporaneous exposition by all parties, this acquiescence of enlightened state courts, and these judicial decisions of the Supreme Court through so long a period, do, we think, place the doctrine upon a foundation of authority which cannot be shaken without delivering over the subject to perpetual and irremediable doubt."

In Sedg. on Stat. & Const. L. 251, the learned author, speak*ing of contemporaneous exposition, says: "In seeking aid to construe an obscure or doubtful statute, considerable weight is attached to the opinions in regard to it by persons learned in the law at the time of its passage." "Great regard," says Lord Coke, "ought, in construing a statute, to be paid to the construction which the sages of the law who lived about the time or soon after it was made, put upon it, because they were best able to judge of the intention of the makers at the time when the law was made."

*196

In perfect harmony with this doctrine are the views expressed by Blackstone, Vattel, Story, and all standard writers on constitutional and statute law, from whose able works it is entirely unnecessary to encumber this opinion with further extracts.

Applying this well-established rule of cotemporary exposition to the case in hand, we find that the three foregoing sections of the constitution fixing the tenure of office of the justices of the Supreme Court, and prescribing the mode of filling all vacancies that may occur therein, have received perfect uniformity of construction by every legislature of the state, from A. D. 1868 until the present day. In every instance where a vacancy has occurred in the office of chief justice or associate justice of the Supreme Court, by the death or resignation of the incumbent before the expiration of the full term, the election to fill such vacancy has been for the unexpired term only, and the justice so elected and so commissioned has, without exception, save in the present instance, acquiesced in this construction, and suffered an election to be held for a successor to the next regular full term.

On the resignation of Justice Hoge, February 1st, 1870, Justice Wright was elected and commissioned to fill his unexpired term, ending July 30th, 1870, and on December 9th, 1870, Justice Wright was elected to the full succeeding term, ending July 30th, 1876, and on December 15th, 1875, was again elected to fill the succeeding full term, beginning July 31st, 1876, and ending July 30th, 1882. On December 5th, 1877, Wright having resigned, A. C. Haskell was elected justice to fill the unexpired term of Wright. On December 11th, 1879, Haskell having resigned the associate justiceship, Samuel McGowan was elected to fill the unexpired term of said

*197

Haskell, to wit, the *unexpired term of Wright, the first incumbent of the full term, from July 30th, 1876, to July 30th, 1882.

On May 15th, 1877, Willard, then associate justice, was elected chief justice to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Chief Justice Moses.

On May 18th, 1877, Henry McIver was elected associate justice to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Willard to the chief justiceship, and whose regular term of office as associate justice would have expired July 30th, 1878. And hence, on December 4th, 1877, Henry McIver was elected associate justice to fill the succeeding regular full term to commence July 31st, 1878, and ending July 30th, 1884. Finally on December 18th, 1879, the legislature elected W. D. Simpson chief justice to fill the full term succeeding the unexpired term of Moses, then held by Willard, and which expired July 30th, 1880.

The journals of the general assembly show that on two occasions at least the true construction of the three foregoing sections of the constitution became the subject of examination and discussion: once pending the election of a successor to Chief Justice Moses, and again pending the election of a successor to Chief Justice Willard. On both occasions the general assembly, by their action, construed Section 2, requiring that one of the justices shall go out of office every two years, as imperatively fixing a rotation which that body could not alter, and that the election to an unexpired term, provided for in Section 11, could, in no event, enlarge the term of the justice so elected so as to extend it beyond the fixed, definite and unchangeable termination of the then current and unexpired term.

This brief narrative demonstrates the fact that the general assembly of the state—the first and each succeeding legislative body for twelve years—have uniformly construed the constitution to mean that the election of a justice of the Supreme Court to fill an unexpired term gives no right to the justice elect to hold beyond said unexpired term. And the narrative likewise reveals the fact that the claim of the present defendant is without precedent in the history of the Supreme Court since its establishment in 1868.

In the examination of the question before us, we are further *aided by the contemporaneous and uniform exposition of another section of the constitution, wherein a like system of classification and rotation is prescribed for a portion of the legislative department of the government.

*198

"Article II., Sec. 9. Upon the meeting of the first general assembly which shall be chosen under the provisions of this constitution, the senators shall be divided by lot into two classes, as nearly equal as may be, the seats of the senators of the first class to be vacated at the expiration of two years after the Monday following the general election, and of those of the second class at the expiration of four years, so that, except as above provided, one-half of the senators may be chosen every second year."

The preceding section (8), provides for the election of one senator from each county, except Charleston, which has two, and fixes the term of office of a senator at four years.

Pursuant to Section 9, upon the meeting of the first general assembly the classification of senators was made by lot, and a rotation fixed, which rotation has ever been kept unbroken, and can alone be kept unbroken by maintaining, in the case of each senator from each county, a term of office definite as to its beginning and ending, and, should a vacancy occur by death or resignation during any current term, by filling the same for the remaining portion of such unexpired term, and for that period of time only. This rule in filling vacancies of terms has been rigidly followed as the only mode of preserving the mandate of the organic law, which requires that one-half of the senators may be chosen every second year. Since the adoption of the state constitution in 1790, this scheme of rotation and classification has been retained in every succeeding constitution; and, under its operation, it has been an invariable rule that if the people elect a senator to fill a vacancy in an unexpired term he retains his seat until the current term expires, and no longer, unless by virtue of a re-election to a full succeeding term. Yet, under the constitution, the term of office of a senator is four years, just as that of a justice of the Supreme Court is six years.

But, nowhere can we find a more forcible illustration of the controlling effect of this revolving scale of rotation over elections to fill vacancies than in the organization and uniform usage and *practice of the United States senate. Indeed, the organization of our Supreme Court seems to have been modeled upon that of the federal senate.

*199

The provisions of the constitution of the United States in this regard are in Article I., Section 3, which reads as follows: "The senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each state, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years; and each senator shall have one vote.

"Immediately after they shall be assembled, in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

This section bears a striking resemblance to Sections 2 and 3 of Article IV. of our state constitution, so much so that we are unhesitatingly led to believe that the framers of our state constitution intended to organize a Supreme Court upon the model of the senate of the United States as to classification of its component parts and their periodical rotation, and, also, as to the mode of perpetuating the scheme by providing elections to fill vacancies in unexpired terms. Of this section of the federal constitution, from the first organization of the senate thereunder down to the present time, there has been but one exposition and interpretation, in the senate and out of the senate, by state executives and state legislatures, by text writers, commentators, jurists and judges. That construction is that the original division of senators into three classes, to enter and to depart at stated periods in regular rotation, is a fundamental feature of the organic law, intended to be a continuing and perpetual feature of the senate so long as that august body lasts; and that this succession of entry and departure by the classes of senators cannot be interfered with nor deranged by any action, either executive or legis*lative, state or federal. Hence, in every instance, under the constitution, of an election of a senator to fill a vacancy created by the death, resignation or removal of an incumbent before the expiration of his term, the senator elect has only held until the expiration of the unexpired term which he was chosen to fill, and no longer. It is needless to say that by no other construction could the original, leading, fundamental scheme of rotation of classes be maintained. And that this scheme should be maintained and perpetuated was evidently the leading design and main object of the framers of the constitution; and, being so, all minor provisions must be construed to be subordinate and subservient thereto. The supplying of vacancies in unexpired terms is incidental to the preservation of an existing term of office, and hence must be so conducted and carried out as not to derange, but to preserve this fundamental and leading design of succession and regular rotation. As state after state has been admitted into the Union, two senators from each have been chosen by the legislature, invariably for the term of six years, but, immediately upon entering that body, they have each, by lot, been cast into one class or another of the three divisions of senators, and their respective terms of office have been made to conform to that of the class to which lot had assigned them.

*200

Of the policy, the merits and wisdom of this scheme, which imperatively required that one-third of the senators shall go out of office every two years, it is not for us here to speak. It is enough to say that it was incorporated into the organic law by wise men for wise purposes, with safeguards of perpetuation thrown around it; that it has been most rigidly and scrupulously maintained in its original integrity, and its wisdom has been fully vindicated by the experience of nearly a century.

All that we design to show is the fact that this section of the constitution of the United States, so analogous in its phraseology and provisions to that of the section of our constitution now under discussion, has never received by any legislative body, state or national, nor by any learned commentator on constitutional law but one exposition, and that is that the terms of office of the three classes of senators must follow each other in duration and ending in regular order of rotation and periodical suc*cession, and can never, by election to fill unexpired terms and casual vacancies, be so deranged as to destroy this sliding scale.

*201

Perhaps it may be said that this uniform exposition of the section by legislators, politicians and commentators is not the technical interpretation which the language calls for, and which a judicial mind must give it, but rests alone upon political views and ideas of symmetry and convenience.

To this it is a sufficient reply to say that the senate has ever been composed in part of the ablest jurists of the country; the judicial ermine has never been worn by purer and abler judges than Marshall, Story and Kent, and, as commentators upon law, the two latter are unrivalled in this country. They are all agreed in the exposition of this section of the constitution, and none have been found to differ. And the absence of a judicial exposition of the law arises from this unanimity of construction and its removal from the jurisdiction of the judicial department. But whenever, in the judicial determination of a germain question, it has been appropriate, in illustration, to advert to the law organizing the senate of the United States and of the states, judges have uniformly interpreted the constitution in this regard the same way as have statesmen and commentators.

In People v. Green, 2 Wend. 273, a leading New York case, involving the construction of the constitution of New York relative to the office of sheriff, the court says: "The case of sheriffs has been assimilated to that of senators, who are declared by the constitution to be chosen for four years; but those chosen to fill vacancies hold only for the residue of the unexpired term of their predecessors. This limitation to their holding does not result from the fact that they are chosen to fill vacancies, but from other parts of the constitution from which it is necessarily implied. The provision classifying the senators, and vacating the seat of one from each district in every year, could not be carried into effect if a senator elected to fill a vacancy were to hold a full term of four years. But permitting a sheriff to hold for three years in case he is elected to fill a vacancy, is not like the case of a senator, incompatible with any other part of the constitution."

Pursuing this research, we are brought in chronological order *to the case of Whipper v. Reed, 9 S. C. 5. The issue in that case was as to the term of office of a Circuit judge elected to fill an unexpired term, and it was there held by this court that a Circuit judge elected by the legislature under Article IV., Section 11, of the constitution of the state to fill a vacancy in the office, holds, under Section 13 of the same article, for the full term of four years, and not merely for the unexpired term of the judge in whose place he was elected.

*202

It is worthy of mention that this judgment was rendered by two of the justices then alone sitting, viz., by Chief Justice Willard, the present defendant, and Associate Justice McIver both of whom had been but recently elected to this office, and both to fill vacancies created casually. Chief Justice Willard had been elected to fill the vacancy created by the death of Chief Justice Moses, and Justice McIver had been elected to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Willard. The judgment was rendered in June, A. D. 1877, within a month after the agitation in the legislature of the very question now before us, pending the election of Willard, chief justice.

The public mind was more or less exercised upon the question, and naturally desired a judicial exposition thereof that might put it at rest. The occasion and all the surrounding circumstances must have been, and certainly were, highly appreciated and fully understood by the learned court, both of whom, holding terms casually made vacant, were interested in this question. It is reasonable to presume, under all these circumstances, that the duration of their own terms of office would not have been made the subject of an unnecessary and idle obiter dictum; and we may reasonably infer, on the other hand, that all that was incorporated in that opinion bearing upon the tenure of office of the justices of the Supreme Court, was the result of calm deliberation and sober thought. In the learned opinion of Chief Justice Willard in this well-considered case, he proceeds to show that the law applicable to filling vacancies in the office of a Circuit judge is different from the constitutional mode prescribed for filling vacancies in the Supreme Court, so far as the effect and consequence of the election is concerned. In the one case the effect of an election to fill a casual vacancy is to confer upon the *officer elected a full term of four years under the controlling words of Section 13 of Article IV., whilst in the case of a vacancy in the Supreme Court the effect of an election to fill the same is to confer upon the justice so elected the vacant or unexpired term only, by reason of the controlling language of Sections 2 and 3. In the course of his remarks he says: "When the constitution fixes the duration of a term of office, and at the same time provides for its being filled at a fixed time, occurring periodically, it necessarily follows that, a casual vacancy occurring during such term of office, necessity must arise for filling it for the unexpired term; and although the mode of filling such vacancy is prescribed by the constitution, yet the incumbent only holds until the time arises for filling the office in the regular mode and at the regular time prescribed by the constitution. In that case the officer taking a term of office less than that prescribed for the office, is placed in that position by the effect of the constitution itself, reached by treating one class of provisions as necessarily a limitation of the other. * * * Having these principles in view, let us look into the constitution to see whether there is anything to sustain the conclusion that the constitution has imposed a limit to the duration of the office of Circuit judge of such a nature that persons elected to fill a casual vacancy cannot claim the full term attached to the office, but can hold only for the unexpired term.

*203

"In the first place there is no such provision indirectly accomplishing such a result by fixing the time when the Circuit judges shall take their offices. Such a provision exists, as we have already noted, in the case of the officers described as 'state officers,' Art. IV., § 2; Art. XIV., § 10. Such a limitation is inferrable as affecting the justices of the Supreme Court from the provision requiring that one of these justices shall be elected every two years, but none is found affecting the Circuit judges. This omission is evidently not accidental, but intentional. In the case of the Supreme Court, that body being composed of three justices, there was reason for placing regular intervals of two years between the elections of the respective justices, so that no sudden change should be made in the organization of the court, an important safeguard against inequality in the adminis*tration of the law. As the Circuit Court is held in every case by a single judge, that reasoning does not call for a similar provision as it regards the Circuit judges."

*204

It will be observed that in quoting the last clause of Section 2 of Article IV. of the constitution of 1868, the learned chief justice inadvertently remarks that it provides that "one of these justices shall be elected every two years," whilst he should have said that "one of the justices shall go out of office every two years."

In his learned argument for the present defendant, counsel alleges that the foregoing obiter dictum in Whipper v. Reed derives its strength from this erroneous quotation; but we are unable to perceive how the force of the reasoning would be in the least impaired by using the exact words of the section instead of the phraseology used by Chief Justice Willard above. They interchangeably mean the same thing.

We have been led to extract copiously from this opinion, because, although technically an obiter dictum, yet the argument is cogent and sound, and, viewed in the light of surrounding circumstances, must be regarded as an authoritative judicial interpretation of the constitution, carrying with it great weight in the list of cotemporaneous expositions thereof.

Passing from the argument resting upon usage, acquiescence and cotemporary exposition, we find that we are not without authoritative precedent bearing directly and with great force upon the case before us. We refer to the case of The People, ex rel. Jackson, v. Potter, 47 N. Y. 376.

The facts were, that Rosekrans, at the adoption in 1869 of the judiciary amendment to the constitution, was a justice of the Supreme Court, Fourth District. His term would expire December 31st, 1871. On November 6th, 1871, he resigned. On November 7th, 1871, a general election in his district was held, and Potter was elected to succeed him. Potter was elected for a term of fourteen years. When Rosekrans resigned the governor appointed Jackson, under Section 9, to fill the vacancy. Jackson claimed to hold until December 31st, 1872. The court held that Jackson's term lasted only for Rosekrans' term, and expired December 31st, 1871.

*205

*The Court of Appeals sustained this view, and Folger, J., said: "Mr. Justice Rosekrans could not resign that which he did not hold. He did not hold, nor was he entitled to hold the term beginning January 1st, A. D. 1872, nor any part thereof. He could not then resign that term nor any part of it. Hence the resignation which he made could create no vacancy in the office for that term to be filled, nor for any part thereof. The vacancy which he did create was for the remainder of his unexpired term, and for no other time. This was the vacancy to be filled, and no other. * * * To sum up our views, we conceive that the whole article must be read together; that each must be made to act in unison with each other; that, where there is conflict, that which provides for a contingency must be held to be subservient to those which provide for the general purpose, and for events sure to occur at stated intervals."

Under the constitution of New York, under which this judgment was rendered, the system of classification and rotation prevailed in both the Supreme Court and Court of Appeals, somewhat similar to our Supreme Court, and hence the value of this decision to us in solving the present question.

Thus far we have considered the question presented to us in the light of contemporaneous exposition and judicial precedent, and the result of the investigation establishes the fact that the harmony and uniformity of interpretation remains unbroken, and that this well-established interpretation is the same as the full, clear, explicit and forcible exposition of this branch of the organic law, rendered by the learned defendant himself in the aforesaid well-considered case of Whipper v. Reed.

It only remains, in conclusion, to examine the sections of the constitution out of which this contention springs, and to ascertain whether this usage, acquiescence and exposition can be reconciled to the true intent and meaning of the framers of the constitution to be gathered from that instrument by established rules of judicial interpretation.

These rules are, in the main, plain, simple, and of easy comprehension. They are rules of common sense, derived from experience, and formulated into rules and maxims of law. All have a common purpose in view, and that is to ascertain the *real meaning, intention and main object of the law-makers in framing statutes and constitutions.

*206

Story says: "Every word employed in the constitution is to be expounded in its plain, obvious and common sense meaning, unless the context furnishes some ground to control, qualify and enlarge it. Constitutions are not designed for metaphysical or logical subtleties, for niceties of expression, for critical propriety, for elaborate shades of meaning, or for the exercise of philosophical acuteness or judicial research. They are instruments of a practical nature, founded on the common business of life, adapted to common wants, designed for common use, and fitted for common understandings. The people make, the people adopt them, the people must be supposed to read them with the help of common sense, and cannot be presumed to admit in them recondite meanings, or any extraordinary gloss." Story on Const., § 451.

Let us apply this rule of common sense to the interpretation of the section of our constitution under consideration.

Section 2 of Article IV. provides for the organization of a Supreme Court, and requires that it shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices. The term of office of each shall be six years. They shall be elected by a joint vote of the general assembly, and "they shall be so classified that one of the justices shall go out of office every two years." Not one of the associate justices, but one of the justices, which term of expression includes all three: the chief as well as each of the associate justices, shall go out every two years. There is no ambiguity, no room for doubt, no need of construction of the language of this section. The meaning of the section is plain and manifest. It prescribes the number of justices, the mode of election, the term of office, its duration, the classification of the justices, and a system of rotation by which one of the three members of the court shall go out of office every two years. This biennial succession is thus imperatively made a feature of the court, continuing and to continue so long as the court shall last; it is a leading feature of organization, unchanging, invariable, definite and fixed, and, once put in operation, continues by virtue of its own inherent energy. Having thus, in Section 2, provided for the *court all the necessary elements and component parts of a symmetrical whole, Section 3, following, is designed solely to perfect the classification, and to put this judicial machinery into operation. It provides that in this classification the officer of greatest dignity shall take the first rank, viz., the full term of six years, and very properly leaves it to the legislature to say which of the associate justices shall rank second and which third, which for the term of four years, and which for the term of two years.

*207

So soon as this duty of electing and classifying the justices was perfected by the first legislature the court was organized, and these provisions of the organic law furnished the scheme of its permanency with biennial succession of its classes. No other provision as to the court would have been necessary but for contingencies arising from uncertainty of human life and other casualties incident to office. It became necessary, therefore, to provide for the filling of casual vacancies created by death, resignation or removal from office of the incumbent, as well as the filling of vacancies of full terms. To meet this end, Section 11 provides that "all vacancies in the Supreme Court, or other inferior tribunals, shall be filled by election as herein prescribed; provided, that if the unexpired term does not exceed one year such vacancy may be filled by executive appointment."

Now the only mode of electing a justice of the Supreme Court "herein prescribed," is by joint vote of the general assembly, and to this mode of election, and to nothing else, are the words "as herein prescribed" to be referred when applied to justices of the Supreme Court. So that, in this section, full and ample provision is made to fill all vacancies in the Supreme Court, whether the vacancy be that of a full term or part of a term. This power to fill all vacancies is conferred upon the legislature, which body can, by joint vote of the two houses, fill the vacancy of a full term, or of any part of an unexpired term, whether the same be more or less than a year. But as that body meets but once annually, and as a vacancy may happen during the recess of the general assembly, power is conferred upon the executive to fill, by appointment, a casual vacancy that does not exceed a year in duration.

*208

*It is difficult to see how more perfect provision could be devised for keeping the Supreme Court full and operative.

Construing this eleventh section in connection with Sections 2 and 3, it is manifest that when the vacancy in the Supreme Court is that of the unexpired term of any one of the justices, whether chief or associate, and the same is filled either by the joint vote of the general assembly or by executive appointment, the term of office of the justice so elected or appointed, must end with the expiration of the term which he was chosen to fill. Otherwise there would necessarily occur a derangement of the scheme imperatively established and unalterably fixed in Section 2, viz.: "That one of the justices shall go out of office every two years." To the operation of this controlling mandate all elections are subordinated, so that it matters not when or how the justice is inducted into office, whether by virtue of an election or by appointment, he must go out when the fixed and definite period of the term upon which he enters expires.

"When the constitution fixes the duration of a term of office, and at the same time provides for its being filled at a fixed time, occurring periodically, it necessarily follows that, a casual vacancy occurring during such term of office, necessity must arise for filling it for the unexpired term; and although the mode of filling such vacancy is prescribed by the constitution, yet the incumbent only holds until the time arrives for filling the office in the regular mode and at the regular time prescribed by the constitution." Chief Justice Willard in Whipper v. Reed, supra.

But in Wright v. Charles, 4 S. C. 178, it has been held by this court that when one is elected to fill a casual vacancy in the office of clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, he holds, not for the unexpired term, but for a full term of four years. And so, likewise, in Whipper v. Reed, it is decided that when one is elected to fill a casual vacancy in the office of Circuit judge, he holds for the full term of four years, and not merely for the unexpired term. In behalf of the present defendant it is urged that the same rule applies to elections to fill vacancies in the office of chief justice, and that the construction of the constitution, as contended for by the present plaintiff, if adopted by this court, will overthrow the doctrine of Wright v. Charles and

*209

*Whipper v. Reed. But in this view we cannot concur. For, in the case of a clerk of the court, there is nothing whatever in the constitution to limit the effect of the imperative words contained in Section 27, Article IV., "who shall hold his office for the term of four years," and, therefore, as was properly held in Wright v. Charles, a clerk, whenever duly elected, is entitled to hold the office for the full constitutional term of four years; and in the case of a Circuit judge, the provision of Section 11, Article IV., as to filling a vacancy in his office, must be controlled by the imperative mandate of Section 13 of Article IV., "who shall hold his office for a term of four years." Therefore, as was properly held in Whipper v. Reed, a Circuit judge, whenever duly elected, is entitled to hold his office for the full constitutional term of four years.

But in the case of a casual vacancy in the office of justice of the Supreme Court, whether chief or associate, the rule is different, because the provision fixing their term of office at six years, must, necessarily, be qualified by that other provision in the same section which requires that they shall be so classified as that one of them must go out of office every two years; otherwise this latter provision would be entirely defeated. Hence, in filling a casual vacancy in the office of justice of the Supreme Court, it must be so done as not to disturb this essential feature of classification stamped upon that tribunal by the constitution. Manifestly this can only be effectually preserved by filling casual vacancies for the unexpired term only. The reason for this distinction is obvious. The constitution makes no classification of clerks or Circuit judges. Each clerk and Circuit judge, in the discharge of the functions of his office, acts singly and alone, whilst the three justices of the Supreme Court constitute but one body, and act together in the discharge of the functions of that tribunal, and hence the requirement that they shall be so classified as that one of the justices shall go out of office every two years, is fundamental and imperative, and necessarily must control all other provisions as to tenure of office which might seem to be at variance with it. This classification fixes the end as well as the beginning of the term of office in this Appellate *Court, and hence limits and controls all other provisions regarding elections to fill casual vacancies.

*210

The harmony between this construction of the constitution and the doctrine of Wright v. Charles and Whipper v. Reed, is clearly and forcibly demonstrated by Chief Justice Willard in the opinion he delivered in the latter case by a line of argument clear, logical and unanswerable, extracts from which we have already cited, and the substance of which we deem it unnecessary to reproduce in varied phraseology.

It follows, therefore, that when, on May 15th, A. D. 1877, the Hon. A. J. Willard, the present defendant, was elected chief justice to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. F. J. Moses, Sr., on March 6th, 1877, whose term expired July 30th, 1880, he was elected to fill such unexpired term only. That said term having expired on July 30th, A. D. 1880, the lawful term of office of the defendant as chief justice of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, ended on July 30th, A. D. 1880.

That when, on December 18th, A. D. 1879, the Hon. W. D. Simpson, plaintiff herein, was elected to the office of chief justice by joint vote of the general assembly, he was elected to fill the full term of six years, beginning July 31st, 1880, and ending July 30th, 1886.

That he is, therefore, entitled to have and to hold the said office of chief justice of the Supreme Court of South Carolina against the said defendant, and for the full constitutional term aforesaid, and it is accordingly so adjudged.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

14 S. C. 210

(Case No. 927.)

GADSDEN v. WHALEY.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⇐440.]

One of two executors qualified, and action was brought against him for a debt of his testator, and judgment obtained. Pending appeal, the qualified executor died. Meantime, under other proceedings had, the *estate was put into the hands of a receiver, and the receiver declined to prosecute the appeal, but the other executor named in the will then qualified, and moved to have his name substituted on the record in the place of the deceased executor. Motion granted.

*211

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1788; Dec. Dig. ⇐440.]

2. The receiver declining to prosecute the appeal, the respondent moved to dismiss it. Motion refused.

[3. Receivers ⇐80.]

A receiver of an estate has no right to interfere in a case pending at the time of his appointment, without an order of the court that appointed him.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Re Fifty-four First Mortgage Bonds, 15 S. C. 314.

For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. ⇐80.]

[4. Trusts ⇐17, 18, 42.]

One may make gift of personal property to another, and constitute himself the trustee thereof, by declaring that he holds such property in præsenti for the donee. Such trust may be created and established by parol, and may be proved by circumstances as well as by express declarations.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Strong v. Weir, 47 S. C. 323, 25 S. E. 157; Wulbern & Co. v. Timmons, 55 S. C. 464, 33 S. E. 568.

For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 17, 61; Dec. Dig. ⇐17, 18, 42.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐1005.]

Concurrent findings of fact in an equity case, by jury and Circuit judge, sustained, not being against the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Pressley v. Kemp, 16 S. C. 343, 42 Am. Rep. 635; Rynerson v. Allison, 30 S. C. 537, 9 S. E. 656.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860–3876, 3948–3950; Dec. Dig. ⇐1005.]

[This case is also cited in Fraser & Dill v. City Council of Charleston, 19 S. C. 394, as to the facts.]

Before Hudson, J., Charleston, March, 1879.

This was an action by Edward H. Gadsden and Rebecca H., his wife, instituted in 1873 against William Whaley, sole qualified executor of Joseph Whaley, deceased, for an account of certain moneys alleged to have been given her by her grandfather, the said Joseph Whaley, in his lifetime, and afterwards held by him as trustee for her. The plaintiff, Rebecca, was the only child of Thomas Whaley, who was a son of Joseph, and she was seventeen years of age at the time of her father's death in 1855. She afterwards intermarried with E. H. Gadsden. The testimony showed that of the property so claimed, a large part was lost by unsecured investments made for Joseph Whaley, by William Whaley, his son and agent.

Three executors were named in the will of Joseph Whaley, but William Whaley alone qualified. After the decree of Judge Hudson, and after appeal therefrom by William Whaley, William Whaley died. W. J. Whaley, another of the executors named, then qualified as such.

The receiver of the estate of Joseph Whaley, appointed in the case of Fraser & Dill v. City Council of Charleston, William Whaley, executor, and others, notified counsel in July, 1879, that he was advised that no sufficient grounds existed to justify an appeal from the decree of Judge Hudson, and that further *proceedings would be at the risk of the party taking them, for which neither the receiver nor the funds in his hands would be responsible.

*212

All other matters necessary to a full understanding of the case are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. B. H. Rutledge, for appellant.

The preliminary, and, at the same time, ruling question in this case is, did Joseph Whaley constitute himself a trustee of the fund in question for Mrs. Rebecca Gadsden at any time? If not, there is the end of the case. There is no formal instrument of trust. If a trust exists it must have been created, and must be established by parol, and from acts and circumstances, and loose writings and expressions. Is this practicable—and, if so, under what conditions? A valid trust of personal property may be created, and proved by parol declarations. Hill on Trustees 57. But the subject matter and purposes of the trust, and the persons to take, must be clearly ascertained. Perry on Trusts, §§ 77, 86; 3 Brown's Ch. 577, note; 3 Ves., Jr., 708; 3 Cow. 580. The following recent cases contain the latest and best exposition of the legal doctrines applicable to this case. 4 DeG., F. & J. 274; 1 Chan. Ap. 28; L. R. 19 Eq. 241. See, also, Lewin on Trusts, *82, *83, *98; Perry on Trusts, §§ 96–102. And analogous cases in 1 S. C. 181; 4 Id. 152; 5 Id. 461; 2 Hill's Ch. 591; 3 Rich. Eq. 398; L. R. 20 Eq. 329; 97 U. S. 639. According to the law as declared, the elements requisite to deprive a man of his own property for the benefit of another, when there is no other than a voluntary consideration, are these:

If in the form of a gift; (1.) There must be an intention on his part to give: (2.) There must be an execution of that intention by appropriate act, so as to complete the gift.

If in the form of a declaration of trust: If the trust is to be created by parol declarations and acts and circumstances, it must be by words and acts "which admit of no other interpretation than that he himself had ceased to be, and some other person had become the beneficial owner of the subject of the gift or transfer, and that such legal right to it, if any, as he retained, was held by him in trust for the donee."

There is no such testimony in this case.

*213

*Mr. James Conner, for respondent.

Was there a trust created? Perry on Trusts, § 79. That is a question of fact, and has been settled. 1 S. C. 101, 116, 325; 4 S. C. 125, 249; 6 Id. 319. A trust in personalty may be created by parol. 4 Desaus. 505; 2 McC. 255; 3 Hill 222; 6 Rich. 315. The trust created, the cestui que trust could enforce her rights. Perry on Trusts, §§ 96–99. And although without valuable consideration, equity will enforce it. 18 Ves. 140; 6 Ves. 656; 1 Keen 551; 2 Keen 124; 1 Hare 460; 1 Phillips 153. A very strong case is Gray v. Gray, 2 Simms. (N. S.) 273. No particular form of words is necessary. 1 DeG., M. & G. 176; L. R. 3 Eq. 686; L. R. 4 Eq. 562; L. R. 10 Eq. 475; 2 Hill's Ch. 591; 11 R. I. 266; 3 Cent. L. Jour. 315. As to enforcement of voluntary trusts when completed, see Perry on Trusts, § 98.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. In order that the rulings in this case may be understood, it is necessary to make a short statement of facts.

Joseph Whaley, a man of large wealth, had two sons, Thomas and William, and one daughter. He had permitted his son Thomas to cultivate one of his plantations on Wadmalaw Island, until he died, in 1855, leaving a widow and one child, Rebecca H., who intermarried with Edward H. Gadsden, the plaintiff. Soon after the death of his son Thomas, Joseph Whaley sold the plantation and slaves on Wadmalaw for $25,577, and after some correspondence upon the subject with his granddaughter and her mother, in which, among other things, he said: "In the course of the winter I will make up my mind in what way the property shall be disposed of," he placed the proceeds of sale in the hands of his other son, William, a lawyer, living in Charleston, who, with the knowledge and consent of his father kept this fund separate from other business, and opened an account of receipts and expenditures under the caption "Colonel Joseph Whaley, Rebecca Whaley, in account with William Whaley, agent." The principal item among the expenditures was one recurring every year, from 1857, for money "paid to Mrs. *Whaley for support of Rebecca." This account was made up to August 10th, 1865, and then transferred to another book. A large part of the fund was lost in Confederate transactions during the war by William Whaley, agent. In 1869 Joseph Whaley executed his will, in which he made no provision for his granddaughter Rebecca, assigning as a reason that he had "already advanced and made over to his granddaughter, Rebecca Gadsden, the proceeds of the sale of his plantation and negroes on Wadmalaw Island." In 1872 Joseph Whaley died, and of those named as executors of his will, only his son William qualified at that time, and against him, as such executor, Mrs. Gadsden, in 1873, instituted this proceeding for an account of the proceeds of the Wadmalaw property. The case came on for trial in April, 1875, before Judge Reed, who referred it to a jury, and they found for the plaintiff the sum of $15,129; upon which verdict judgment was entered. This was more than the value of the remnant of assets after the war, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court set the verdict aside on the ground that, being clearly an equity case, it was error to base the judgment solely upon the verdict of the jury and not upon the decision of the Circuit judge. Gadsden v. Whaley, 9 S. C. 147.

*214

The case was heard a second time, in March, 1879, by Judge Hudson, who, upon the evidence taken at the first trial, decreed for the plaintiff the identical sum which had been found by the jury, and from that judgment the defendant again appeals to this court.

In the meantime, in 1874, the case of Fraser & Dill v. City Council of Charleston was instituted, and in that case orders were made to call in the creditors, marshall the assets, and for the appointment of a receiver of the estate of Joseph Whaley. Mr. Dingle was first appointed receiver, but he declined to act, and in 1878 Thomas W. Bacot, Esq., was appointed and qualified as the receiver of the estate of Joseph Whaley, with all the authority which had been previously conferred in the orders appointing Mr. Dingle. See 13 S. C. 533.

When the case was called in this court the attorney for the defendants moved for an order substituting the name of William James Whaley, as defendant executor, in the place of that of *William Whaley, the defendant on the record, who had died pending the appeal. The attorney for the plaintiff objected to the order proposed, and, as Mr. Bacot, the receiver, had given notice to the defendant to abandon the appeal, he made a preliminary motion to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the executor had no interest in the cause, or right to appeal from the decision therein.

*215

We regard the order proposed by the defendant as within the intent of Rule 4 of this court, and the motion to substitute the name of William James Whaley, a qualified executor of the will of Joseph Whaley, in place of that of William Whaley, defendant, is granted. The appeal will proceed against William James Whaley as executor of Joseph Whaley, defendant.

We cannot grant the preliminary motion to dismiss the appeal. An executor holds his letters testamentary from the judge of Probate, an officer of the law, but his appointment is by the testator himself. It seems that under the act of 1869, (Gen. Stat. 189), the judge of Probate, under certain circumstances, may discharge an executor upon his own application; but we think it has always been held in this state that the court of equity has not the power to remove an executor by the appointment of a receiver or otherwise. Haigood v. Wells, 1 Hill's Eq. 60; Ex parte Galluchat, Ib. 149.

In a proper case the court will appoint a receiver who is an executive officer—the hand of the court—to administer the assets of the estate under the direction of the court, which may, for the purpose of preserving the property, restrain the executor from meddling with the management of the estate, and compel him to give up the control of it to the receiver; but such appointment and administration do not remove the executor or destroy his character as the legal representative of the estate. The authority of a receiver rests only in the orders of the court by which he is appointed. By virtue of any general authority as receiver, he has no right to sue or be sued or defend. 1 Wait's Pr. 202; High on Receiv., §§ 209, 254, 724.

A receiver cannot interfere in a case pending at the time of his appointment until he has been made a party to the action by order of the court. Tracy v. First Nat. Bank of Selma, 37 N. Y. *Court of App., 10 Tiffany 583; High on Receiv., §§ 258, 264. In the case of Tracy v. The Bank, it is said: "The objection that the receiver has no status in court I regard as fatal. The action was commenced against the bank before the appointment of a receiver, and so far as the papers show is still in progress under that title. There is no legal objection to its continuance in that form until the final judgment is obtained, and such is the common practice in this state."

*216

The case before us had been long pending when the receiver was appointed, and, therefore, he had no right to appear in it without an order of the court making him a defendant. No such order appears as one authorizing him to defend suits pending against the executor at the time of his appointment. The strongest words in those orders are "to take possession of all the property of the estate of Joseph Whaley, and to administer the same under the orders of the court, and that he hath leave to institute such proceedings as he may be advised may be necessary and proper to try the validity of any claims against the estate of Joseph Whaley, and defend such proceedings as may be instituted against him," &c. This case is not against him, and the order does not make him a party to a suit then pending against the executor. There being no such order, he is a stranger to this proceeding. The motion to dismiss the appeal is refused.

As it respects personal property, the law remains unchanged by the statute of frauds, and a valid trust of such property may not only be still vested, but, if necessary, established by parol declarations. Hill on Trustees 57; McFadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Phil. 153; Fogg v. Middleton, 2 Hill's Eq. 598. It was in the power of Joseph Whaley to make a parol gift of the proceeds of his Wadmalaw plantation, either by placing them in the hands of a trustee or by creating himself a trustee for that purpose. No particular form of words is necessary to create a trust or to make the person creating the trust himself the trustee. It is enough if he orally, or in writing, explicitly or impliedly declare that he holds in præsenti for another. The facts do not authorize the view that William Whaley was made trustee. He gave no bond and always styled himself "agent of his father," acting under his direction. Did Joseph Whaley create himself a trustee of this *fund for his granddaughter, Mrs. Gadsden? Such a trust may be proved by facts and the acts of the parties, as well as by the express declarations of the donor. Whether a trust is created or not, is a question of fact in each case, and the court, in determining the fact, will give effect to the relations of the parties, the nature and situation of the property, and the objects the settler had in view in making the disposition. We think the evidence to establish such a trust should be full and clear, for the reason that if established the relation subsisting between the giver and the recipient of his bounty, is changed—the voluntary benefactor, out of his own means, being thereby made a trustee with all the liabilities incident to a debtor. No question can arise in this case as to completing an imperfect voluntary gift, for both parties agree that a perfect gift was made at some time before 1869, when the donor executed his will, which declared that he "had already advanced and made over to Mrs. Gadsden the proceeds of the Wadmalaw property." The plaintiff insists that the proceeds were "made over," and the character of a trust impressed upon them when they were set apart and the account opened with Mrs. Gadsden in 1857; and the defendant contends that it was not done by Joseph Whaley making himself trustee at the time the account was opened, but by appointing William Whaley trustee at some time after the war, and that, therefore, the gift only covered the remnant of the fund which survived and was in existence at that time. This substantially narrows the controversy down to the question as to the time when the proceeds were "made over." This question of fact the jury found for the plaintiff, and in that decision the Circuit judge concurred. Being an action for equitable relief, this court may reconsider all the evidence, but the safe principle upon which it generally acts is not to overrule the conclusions of the Circuit judge upon doubtful questions of fact, though the court might not have reached the same conclusion he did. The rule is more strictly adhered to when there is concurrence between a referee and the Circuit judge. As to its probable correctness, the verdict of a jury is as strong as the report of a referee. In the last case upon the subject, Adger & Co. v. Pringle, 11 S. C. 548, it is said: "The question of fact having been decided by the referee, and his decision *having been confirmed by the Circuit judge, their decision must be regarded by us as conclusive, unless it is without any testimony to sustain it, or is manifestly against the weight of the evidence."

*217

*218

We cannot say that the decree in this case is "against the weight of the evidence." On the contrary, there are facts which tend to support it.

The father of Mrs. Gadsden died in possession of the Wadmalaw plantation, and from that time her grandfather always connected her with the property. Upon the death of his son he wrote at once: "In the course of the winter I shall make up my mind in what way the property is to be disposed of. I have directed Messrs. O'Hear, Roper & Stoney to pay the proceeds of the crop to your mother for your joint support."

After the property was sold he kept the proceeds separate, and placed them in the hands of his son William as his agent, who, by his direction, or with his knowledge, opened an account of receipts and expenditures under the caption, "Colonel Joseph Whaley, Rebecca Whaley, in account with William Whaley, agent," and each year made payments out of the fund for the support of Mrs. Gadsden.

The testator, during his lifetime, told Mrs. Gadsden to go to her uncle William when she wanted money, as he had provided for her, and her uncle William would give it to her.

In 1869 Joseph Whaley executed his will, by which he gave nothing to Mrs. Gadsden, assigning as a reason for so doing that he "had already advanced and made over to her the proceeds of the sale of the Wadmalaw property." The terms of the will describe appropriately the transaction of 1857, in depositing said "proceeds" and in opening an account with Mrs. Gadsden. The natural inference is that they refer to the beginning of the business and not to any intermediate new arrangement, and cover, not a mere remnant which survived the war, but, according to the words of the will, "the proceeds of the sale of the Wadmalaw property."

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *219

*(Case No. 928.)

WILLIAMS v. McCARDELL.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⟸315.]

In the settlement of an estate by the Court of Probate, a decree declaring that one of the distributees has been overpaid, should be accompanied by a statements of the accounts, showing how such result has been reached.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298–1314; Dec. Dig. ⟸315.]

[2. Executors and Administrators ⟸310.]

Where a distributee receives from the administratrix more than his share of the personal estate of his ancestor, and then dies, his interest in the ancestor's real estate cannot be exclusively subjected to the repayment of such excess, but must be applied to the payment of all his debts owing at the time of his death, including such overpayment, in the order prescribed by statute.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Pendergrass v. Pendergrass, 26 S. C. 32, 1 S. E. 45.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1265; Dec. Dig. ⟸310.]

Before Wallace, J., Lancaster, September, 1879.

This was an action commenced in the Court of Probate in 1874, for the partition of the real estate of A. J. Stewart, who died intestate in 1864. His widow administered, and William G. Stewart, a son of testator, and entitled to one-third of his estate, received of the personalty more than his share of the entire estate, real and personal. W. G. Stewart died in 1873, intestate, leaving as his heirs-at-law, his mother, and the other heirs of his father.

After the petition was filed, the creditors of William G. Stewart were, upon their own petition, made parties to the action. The personal estate of W. G. Stewart was insufficient to pay his debts—none of which were in judgment; nor was there any lien existing upon his interest in his father's real estate.

The judge of Probate decreed that W. G. Stewart, in his lifetime, had received of the personal estate of A. J. Stewart an amount considerably in excess of his entire enterest in both the real and personal estate of A. J. Stewart; and that the lands should be therefore partitioned and divided among the remaining heirs-at-law of A. J. Stewart.

From this decree the creditors appealed to the Circuit Court. The Circuit judge referred it back to the judge of Probate to make a full statement of the accounts of the administratrix, and of the receipts by the several *distributees: and it was further *declared that the creditors of W. G. Stewart, at his death, were entitled to have his interest in the lands of his father applied as assets to the payment of all his debts, and that his co-heirs had no exclusive right thereto.

*220

From this order the heirs-at-law of A. J. Stewart appealed, upon the grounds considered in the opinion.

Messrs. Wylie & Hough and Allison & Connors, for appellants.

Mr. T. C. Gaston, contra.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. No question having been raised as to whether the judgment below was such a final judgment as would authorize an appeal from it, we will waive that question and proceed to consider the case on its merits.

It is very clear that the Circuit judge was right in remanding the case to the Court of Probate for the purpose of having the account taken. The parties interested have a right to see how the account stands, and what were the various items composing it. The mere assertion of the judge of Probate that it appeared to his satisfaction that William G. Stewart had been overpaid, was not sufficient. Parties interested in his estate had a right to know how the account was made up by which such a result was reached.

The only question of law raised by the appeal is, whether the creditors of an heir-at-law are debarred from subjecting his interest in the real estate of his ancestor to the payment of their debts by reason of the fact that such heir has received from the administrator, out of the personal estate, more than the value of his share of the whole estate, both real and personal, would amount to.

When a person dies intestate, leaving an estate consisting of both real and personal property, the real estate descends at once to and vests in the heirs-at-law, who are entitled to share the same in the proportions designated by statute. The administrator, as such, has no authority over, or interest in, the real estate, *but at the moment of the death of the intestate it becomes the property of the heirs, and their rights therein can only be divested either by proper proceedings to subject it to the payment of the debts of the intestate, or by their own act. But in reference to the personal estate the rule is different. That goes directly to the administrator, and the distributees can only obtain their shares therein through him. If the administrator pays to any one of the distributees more than what is ascertained to be his share, the distributee thereby becomes a debtor to the administrator for the amount of such excess, and the other distributees must look to the administrator and the sureties on his bond for the refunding of such excess. Now in this case, assuming the fact to be, as stated by the judge of Probate, "that William G. Stewart, deceased, received in his lifetime of the personal estate of A. J. Stewart, deceased, an amount considerably in excess of his entire interest in both the real and personal estate of the said A. J. Stewart," the effect of it is simply to make the estate of William G. Stewart a debtor to the administrator of A. J. Stewart in the sum which the amount he received exceeded his interest in the personal estate, and, this debt, like any other debt, may be enforced against the interest of William G. Stewart in the real estate. But how it has obtained, or why it should have any preference or priority over any other debt due by William G. Stewart, it is difficult, if not impossible, to conceive. Such a debt constitutes no lien upon the interest of William G. Stewart in the real estate which descended to him and the other heirs of A. J. Stewart. It stands like any other debt due by him, and during his lifetime might have been enforced by the usual proceedings for the collection of debts against the interest of Stewart in the real estate, as well as against any of his other property, but he being dead, his entire property, including this interest in the real estate of the intestate, A. J. Stewart, must be applied to the payment of his debts in the manner prescribed by the statutes upon that subject.

*221

The cases relied upon by the counsel for the appellants do not, in our judgment, sustain the position. In Smith v. Perdriau, Rich. Eq. Cas. 223, the rights of other creditors were not involved, and hence it was properly held upon well-recognized *principles of equity, that where there is a fund in court for distribution, and one of the parties interested has received payment of a part of his demand, before he could receive anything out of the common fund the other parties must be equalized, and the court, in making an order for the distribution of the common fund would provide for such equalization. In DeBrahm v. Fenwick, 1 Desaus. 111, the question presented in this case did not arise, the court, in that case, having simply ordered that estates devised to a son should be sold to pay legacies charged upon them, and to reimburse the estate of the testator for property taken away from it by such devisee. The rights of other creditors were not involved. So, too, in the case of Smith v. Huger, 1 Desaus. 247, the point which we have been considering was not made and could not properly arise in the case. There the testator directed his executors to sell all his estate not specifically devised or bequeathed, and divided the proceeds into eleven shares, one of which he gave to Charles Motte. One of the executors made sundry advances to

*222

Charles Motte in his lifetime on account of his share, and also assumed sundry liabilities for him, and upon a bill filed by the administrator of Charles Motte against the executors for an account and settlement of what was due to Charles Motte, the court held that the executors might discount the money paid to Charles Motte, and the liabilities assumed for him against the amount of his share under the will. It is plain that in that case the executors were simply the debtors of Charles Motte, and the only effect of the decision was to allow them to discount against such debts all amounts paid to or assumed for him. It does not, therefore, reach the question under consideration here.

The judgment below is affirmed.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *223

*(Case No. 929.)

CARROLL v. TOMPKINS.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Judgment ⇐306.]

Where a judgment against A was, by an order of the Circuit Court, revived against A, administrator of B, and the Circuit judge holding the next succeeding term, being satisfied that the additional words were a mere clerical mistake, amended the order to conform to the record. Held, that he committed no error.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Trimmier v. Thomson, 19 S. C. 252; Heulein v. Graham, 32 S. C. 307, 10 S. E. 1012; Willis v. Tozer, 44 S. C. 15, 21 S. E. 617.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 598; Dec. Dig. ⇐306.]

[2. Judgment ⇐868.]

Proceedings to revive a judgment should be by summons to show cause, and not by action.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Warren v. Raymond, 17 S. C. 192.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1608; Dec. Dig. ⇐868.]

[3. Judgment ⇐868.]

In such case, it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the judgment has not been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1608; Dec. Dig. ⇐868.]

[4. Judgment ⇐868.]

Summons was issued requiring defendant to show cause, at March Term, why a judgment should not be revived against him. Defendant put in no appearance or answer, and the matter was continued. At the next, or June Term, motion to renew the judgment being made by plaintiff, defendant then offered to read an answer, which had not been served nor filed, but leave to do so was refused, and an order of revivor was granted. Held, that there was no error in such refusal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1608; Dec. Dig. ⇐868.]

[5. Judgment ⇐868.]

In such case, a motion, after default made, for further time to answer, is wholly within the discretion of the Circuit judge.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in White v. Coleman, 38 S. C. 556, 17 S. E. 21.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1608; Dec. Dig. ⇐868.]

[6. Appeal and Error ⇐3.]

[Cited in Wallace v. Carter, 32 S. C. 317, 11 S. E. 97, to the point that the only way in which alleged error in cases adjudged upon the merits may be corrected is by appeal to the Supreme Court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 8–24; Dec. Dig. ⇐3.]

[This case is also cited in Adams v. Richardson, 30 S. C. 217, 9 S. E. 95, as to the sufficiency of cause shown.]

Before Wallace, J., Edgefield, June, 1879, and Mackey, J., October, 1879.

The summons to show cause, in this case, bears date January 29th, 1879, but it does not appear when it was served. The case is fully stated in the opinion of this court.

Mr. Ernest Gary, for appellant.

Messrs. Norris & Folk, contra.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. James P. Carroll obtained a judgment for $2314.87, against the defendant, D. H. Tompkins, in Richland county, May 22d, 1873. A transcript of this judgment was *lodged in the clerk's office of Edgefield county, where the defendant lives, and summons issued against the defendant, requiring him "to appear at the term of the Circuit Court to be holden for said county on the 10th day of March, A. D. 1879, and then and there show cause, if any you have, why said judgment should not be revived and become a lien on all the real property of the said judgment debtor in this county according to law." No cause was shown at the said term of the court by answer or return filed or served on the plaintiff or his attorney. No order was moved for at the March Term, to which the summons was returnable, but the case was placed on the motion calendar. When, in the regular course, it was called at the next (June) term, the defendant's attorney offered to show cause by reading an answer, which had not been filed or notice given to the plaintiff or his attorney. The Circuit judge refused to receive the answer, as coming too late, and, also, refused a motion for further time to answer, but granted the plaintiff's motion to revive the judgment and make it a lien in Edgefield county. In the order passed for that purpose were inserted after the name of defendant in execution these words: "Administrator of Daniel Holland, deceased." The defendant gave notice of appeal, but, after discovering that the order contained the superadded words above stated, which destroyed its effect as a lien upon his property, he abandoned his appeal.

*224

The plaintiff's attorney, after notice, moved at the next (October) term of the court to correct the order by striking out the words "administrator of Daniel Holland, deceased."

which, it was alleged, had been inserted by mistake of the person who drew the order. Upon the hearing of this motion the defendant's attorney again proposed to read an answer of the defendant to the original summons, of which no copy had been filed or notice served. After argument the Circuit judge granted an order to amend the former order by striking out the words "as administrator of Daniel Holland, deceased." The defendant excepted to the amending order, and the appeal comes to this court upon the following grounds:

1. "Because Hon. W. H. Wallace erred in not allowing ap*pellant to show cause, as demanded, in the summons in the case of James P. Carroll against Daniel H. Tompkins.

*225

2. "Because Hon. W. H. Wallace erred in ruling that the appellant herein had no status in court, and in ruling that the time for the appellant to show cause had expired.

3. "Because Hon. W. H. Wallace erred in not allowing appellant to put in an answer after it was made to appear by counsel that he had substantial grounds of defence.

4. "Because Hon. W. H. Wallace erred in granting the order aforesaid without any proof showing that the judgment had not been paid in whole or in part, or that it was a valid legal judgment.

5. "Because Hon. T. J. Mackey erred in granting an order changing the nature of an order passed by another presiding judge at a previous term of the Court of Common Pleas.

6. "Because the whole proceeding on the part of the plaintiff (the respondent herein) was irregular, as the process should have been by action and not by summons.

7. "Because Hon. T. J. Mackey erred in granting the order without trying the merits of the case, when it was made to appear by the answer, which was read, that the appellant had a substantial ground of defence.

8. "Because the order granted by Hon. T. J. Mackey was passed on Sunday, and is, therefore, void, having been granted on Sunday morning, October 26th, 1879."

First, as to the order of Judge Mackey (October term, amending the order of Judge Wallace, made at the previous (June) term, by striking out the words "administrator of Daniel Holland, deceased." There is no evidence of the matter alleged in the eighth exception as to the time when the order was signed. As the order of Judge Mackey changed materially the import of the order signed by Judge Wallace, was it error in law to make that order? That must depend upon the nature of the amendment made. As to all matters considered and adjudged upon their merits, there is no appeal from one Circuit judge to another; nor in such cases can one Circuit judge reconsider, reverse or change an order made by another Circuit judge. The only way in which alleged error in such cases can be corrected, is by *appeal to the Supreme Court. But this rule is not to be so construed as to prevent the court from correcting, by amendment, manifest errors and mere clerical mistakes. The code of procedure favors all amendments made in furtherance of justice, and expressly authorizes an amendment "correcting a mistake in the name of a party, or a mistake in any other respect." Code, § 196. Even before the adoption of the code it was within the jurisdiction and the constant practice of the court to amend its own proceedings and orders, especially in cases of mere clerical mistake as to form. As was said by the court in the case of Hubbell v. Fogartie et ux., 1 Hill 169 [26 Am. Dec. 163]: "It is every days' practice to permit judgments and executions to be amended according to the right of the case, even after a sale under execution. If authority be necessary to sustain this practice, it will be found in the case of Hancocke v. Proud, 1 Sand. 336, n. 10, in which it is said: 'But if the judgment be entered de bonis propiis instead of de bonis testatoris vel si non, &c., it is considered as a mere clerical mistake, which the court below will amend on motion, even after the record has been removed by error and argument in the Court of Errors.' So, also, as sustaining this practice, Bank of Penna. v. Condy, 1 Hill, 209; Giles v. Pratt, 1 Hill, 239 [26 Am. Dec. 170]; Patton v. Massey, 2 Hill, 475; O'Driscoll v. McBurney, 2 N. & McC. 58; Ashmore v. Charles, 14 Rich. 65." The record of this proceeding shows, indeed it is not controverted, that the judgment was against Daniel H. Tompkins individually, and not against him as "the administrator of Daniel Holland, deceased." The order recites that the judge was satisfied it was a mere "clerical mistake," and we agree with him that the words stricken out were inserted by mistake of the draftsman. It was not error in Judge Mackey to amend the order of Judge Wallace so as to make it conform to the record.

*226

But it is insisted that the correction of the mistake in the original order throws the inquiry back upon that order as amended, and that the appeal from it, once abandoned, is, in effect, revived; that the original order of Judge Wallace reviving the judgment and making it a lien, against the objections of defendant, was error in law.

It can hardly be necessary to say that there is no force in the *objection contained in the exception, that "the process should have been by action and not by summons." That objection could not avail if the defendant had secured a status in the case by appearing as he was required. The proceeding by summons is in exact conformity to the terms of the law. The amendments to section 313 of the code provide expressly how judgments may be revived when they have lost their active energy, and, also, how they may be made liens: "And in cases where judgments have been obtained since March 1st, 1870, a lien may be obtained by the service of a summons upon the judgment debtor, &c., * * * to show cause, if any he or they may have, why such judgment should not be and become a lien, in accordance with the provisions of this act; and if no sufficient cause be shown to the contrary, such judgment shall be and become a lien on all the real property of the judgment debtor in the county where entered." Lynch's Code 120.

*227

The terms of this law also answer the fourth exception, which charges error "in granting the order without proof, showing that the judgment had not been paid in whole or in part, or that it was a valid legal judgment." The judgment had already been obtained and this proceeding was only for the purpose of reviving its active energy and making it a lien. There would be no propriety in again litigating what had already been adjudicated. It would violate one of the cardinal rules of evidence to require the plaintiff to prove a negative that he had not been paid in whole or in part. The record of the judgment was sufficient proof of its existence and validity, and, therefore, it was not error to declare the lien under the law "if no sufficient cause was shown to the contrary." It was the duty of the defendant to show that cause. The onus was upon him.

It is further urged that the defendant did show sufficient cause against the motion. The summons required the defendant "to appear at the next term of the court for his county (March, 1879,) and then and there show cause, &c. He did not appear and show cause at the time indicated. It is true that the summons did not, in express terms, as the summons in a regular action does, require the defendant to answer and serve a copy of his answer within twenty days after the service of the summons; *but he was required, as the law directs, to appear at the term of the court to be holden for said county, on March 10th, 1879, and then and there show cause, &c. There is the same reason for notice of the defense in a case of rule as in regular actions, although the form in which it is required to be given is not precisely the same. The object of the summons is to give notice to the defendant of the motion to be made, and also to indicate the time within which the plaintiff must have notice of the defense, if any. This summons required that the defendant should show cause at the March Term of the court, and on or before the close of that term he should have given notice of his objection to the proposed order, either by filing his answer or serving a copy of it upon the plaintiff's attorney. It was not a compliance with the summons to retain his answer until the case was actually called for hearing at the next term of the court, which necessarily took the plaintiff by surprise. If the defendant had been allowed to show cause then by simply reading his answer, the result must have been at least a continuance of the case. Both parties should have reasonable notice of every issue to be tried. The defendant was in default at the June Term when Judge Wallace granted the order prayed for by the plaintiff. We have no doubt the judge would have granted further time to answer if he had been satisfied that there was merit in the defense, and that the failure to show cause at the time required was the result of accident or mistake. But be that as it may, the motion for further time to answer was addressed entirely to his discretion, and in his refusal there was no error of law which can be corrected by this court. The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

*228

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *229

*(Case No. 930.)

JENNINGS v. TEAGUE.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⇐126; Powers ⇐30.]

A power of sale conferred by will upon the executors, may be exercised by a sole qualified executor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 525; Dec. Dig. ⇐126; Powers, Cent. Dig. § 88; Dec. Dig. ⇐30.]

[2. Powers ⇐20, 31.]

Power was given to executors by will, executed in 1861, to sell real and personal property "so soon as the value of property shall recover from the depression caused by the existing war;" testator died in 1863, and the sole qualified executor made sale of the lands for confederate money in October, 1863. Held, that the executor was the proper judge of whether the contingency had happened, and, there being no grounds to suspect him of having acted contrary to his honest judgment, the sale was valid.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Rice v. Coleman, 87 S. C. 349, 69 S. E. 516, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1016.

For other cases, see Powers, Cent. Dig. §§ 63, 100; Dec. Dig. ⇐20, 31.]

Before Carpenter, J., Edgefield, May, 1877.

The Circuit decree is as follows:

In this cause a bill was filed by W. D. Jennings, who sued in that behalf as the next friend of the following children, minors: B. F. Calhoun, W. E. Calhoun, P. A. Calhoun, A. G. Calhoun, P. E. Calhoun, of whom he was subsequently appointed guardian ad litem, and by Robert Middleton and his wife, M. E. Middleton, M. A. Calhoun, G. C. Calhoun and T. T. Calhoun, on May 18th, 1868, in the Court of Equity for Edgefield against Abner G. Teague, executor of the last will and testament of P. L. Calhoun, and William A. Martin.

The bill alleges the death of P. L. Calhoun in 1863, leaving as his heirs-at-law the Calhouns before mentioned, and Mrs. M. E. Middleton, formerly Calhoun, and of force his last will and testament, in which, among other things, he devised "that his executors should sell all his estate, both real and personal, of what nature or quality soever it may be so soon as the value of property shall recover from depression caused by the existing war, and after paying all his just debts, distribute the remainder between his heirs-at-law aforesaid;" that Teague only qualified as executor, and sold on October 27th, 1863, the entire personalty and realty for Confederate currency, and on the same day *sold a tract of land in said county for $32,000, Confederate currency, to defendant Martin, and gave possession to him; that testator left choses in action for large amounts which passed into the hands of the executor.

*230

The bill alleges that in the sale the executors totally disregarded the letter and meaning of the will and the urgent objections of some of plaintiffs, and that the Confederate currency was then depreciating, and has since become entirely worthless, and that Teague has since become insolvent. The bill prays that Teague be held to a strict account for his alleged violation of the terms of the will and for his administration; that the sale of the personalty and the realty be declared null and void and without legal consideration, that the titles given to Martin be declared null and void and be canceled, and that Martin account for the rents and profits of the realty he purchased. Subpœna and relief are prayed against the executor and Martin only.

The executor died without answering, and the plaintiffs, by amendments, made his executrix, Narcissa M. Teague, a party defendant, who answered, averring her ignorance as to many of the allegations of the bill, claiming that the executor managed the estate according to his best judgment, that any loss which the devisees or legatees may have sustained is not attributable to the bad management of the executor; claims strict proof of allegations of executor's disregard of the discretion allowed him by the terms of the will, and the objections of some of the plaintiffs; refers to the Probate office for sales and action of the executor, alleges that executor was discharged from all liability to the devisees, legatees and others interested in the estate, by letters dismissory granted by the Probate judge, and that executor died insolvent and bankrupt.

Martin answered, alleging the refusal of G. C. Calhoun to qualify as executor; that the sale of the realty was made by Teague, executor, after public notice and due advertisement at public outcry; that he paid the purchase money to and received conveyance from Teague, executor. That Mrs. M. A. Calhoun, widow of testator and one of plaintiffs, executed to him renunciation of all interest and estate, and all right and claim of dower therein, before the said W. D. Jennings as notary public; *and that said conveyances were duly recorded in the register of mesne conveyance; that Teague had the legal right and power under the will to sell and convey, and that in so doing he did not in any wise disregard the letter and meaning of the will, which invested him with the power of deciding when "the value of property had recovered from the depression caused by the war," and that in point of fact the value of property at the time of the sale had recovered from the depression existing at the date of the will, August 1st, 1861, and that the sale of the real and personal estate was made with the advice and approval of the very intelligent appraisers of the property.

*231

He further answered, that if any of the plaintiffs really questioned the power or the judicious exercise of the power of the executor, they could, and in good conscience should, (if they ever intended to test the question,) having ample time and notice between the advertisement and the sale, have resorted to the court of equity then, before innocent third persons were entrapped into becoming purchasers, or should at least have given public notice of their objections, which was not done, and is not by the allegations of the bill pretended to have been done; or should have settled the question against the sale then, if they had really wished, by G. C. Calhoun, complainant, qualifying as executor and thereby rendering Teague powerless to sell without his co-operation; that several of the complainants sanctioned and encouraged the sale by becoming purchasers, some of them to very large amounts; that from the proceeds of the sale large sums of money were paid to and expended for complainants by the executor without any objection from them and in satisfaction of debts due by the estate to creditors, W. D. Jennings being among the number.

That Confederate currency was the only currency in the state, and was paid and received in a bona fide business transaction apart from and having naught to do with politics or war; the consideration was legal, the contract executed, and that it is alike against private right or public policy for the courts to annul the transaction, and that if plaintiffs have any equities they must be restricted in their assertion to remedies against Teague only; and that complainants have waited until Teague has become in*solvent. He further averring formally and fully that he is an innocent bona fide purchaser for value without notice, claims the benefit thereof of lapse of time, of the statute of limitations, of general demurrer, and of the fact that plaintiffs, if they had any remedy, had it at law, and asks that the bill be dismissed.

*232

It was referred by consent to A. J. Norris, esquire, of the Edgefield bar, to take and report the testimony.

His report, and the documentary evidence introduced, show that the advertisement of sale was regularly published in papers of large circulation, and stated that further information would be cheerfully given by addressing the executor or the plaintiffs, T. T. Calhoun, Robert H. Middleton or Dr. W. D. Jennings.

That no objection was made to the sale by any of the devisees or legatees within the knowledge of the purchaser Martin; that the sale and conveyance by the executor, and the renunciation by the widow, plaintiff, were bona fide and regular; that at the sale purchases were made by plaintiffs, Mrs. Mary Calhoun, R. H. Middleton, P. L. Calhoun, Dr. W. D. Jennings, J. F. Calhoun and T. Calhoun, and by the executor's accounts passed before the Ordinary, payments, some of them very large, were made to some of the plaintiffs and to creditors of the estate, all of whom have not yet been paid.

On well-settled principles of law, even if the executor unquestionably exceeded his powers, the conduct of the adult complainants would seem to estop them from the relief sought. Bank v. Campbell, 2 Rich. Eq. 190; Parks v. Jennings, 14 Rich. Eq. 319.

The evidence developed a conflict of opinion as to whether property at the time of the sale had recovered from the depression caused by the war at the date of the will (the time to be regarded. Tidyman v. Rose, Rich. Eq. Cas. 298), arising principally from the element of Confederate currency. Its nominal value in dollars had certainly increased.

The testimony shows that Teague was a good financier, an able manager of money; men acted as he did with their own estates, with the same lights before them.

The actual wisdom of the sale then was in the future. The disinterested appraisers of the property, George D. Tillman, *George W. Morgan and W. L. Parks, in writing, advised and approved: "In view of all the circumstances, the situation of the country, the condition of the currency, and for the good of all parties, that the executor should sell the estate for cash in Confederate money. That if the property were sold on time and the purchase money secured by notes payable in coin after the war, they thought it would be sacrificed."

*233

As early as 1866, a learned chancellor remarked that, "it was already becoming difficult for men to carry their minds back and reproduce the condition of things during the period of the war." Manning v. Manning, 12 Rich. Eq. 422. And it is still more difficult now. Independent of the general presumption that the executor had done his duty, (Turnipseed v. Hawkins, 1 McC. 276,) the fact that the executor consulted able counsel, learned in the law, who advised him that he was made by the will the proper judge to decide at what time the property had recovered from its depression, must weigh in the executor's favor. McDowall v. McDowall, Bail. Eq. 324; Bradley v. Lowry, Speers Eq. 7 [39 Am. Dec. 142].

As mere matter of fact, it may be that the value of the land has not even yet recovered from the depression caused by the existing war, particularly when reference is had to the witnesses' estimate of its annual rental. But the court cannot, in the absence of fraud charged or proved against the executor, regard this as the test of the validity of the sale or of his liability. Whether as matter of fact and finance, the sale was a wise or unwise exercise of judgment on the part of the executor; as matter of law the court concurs with his legal advice, that the will constituted him the judge of the happening of the event in, and the time at which the sale was to be made. It was a personal confidence and trust reposed in him by the testator: and the unwise exercise of his judgment is not sufficient authority for the court to set aside his acts and make him responsible for any loss which may have been incurred thereby. Greer v. McBeth, 12 Rich. Eq. 258.

In Thompson v. Wagner, 3 Desaus. 97, by a will dated in 1780, testator directed his estate to be sold "in better times"—no power being given therein to executor to sell. The court ordered the property to be sold by the master because the law *was not then in existence authorizing executors to sell when testator had not expressly given it.

*234

In Atcheson v. Robertson, 3 Rich. Eq. 134 [55 Am. Dec. 634], the same argument here relied on was urged, that the power to sell conferred by the will upon the executor was conditional only, and that the state of facts justifying the sale was not proved to exist, and that the sale was therefore an unlawful act, to which the court answered that it was within the discretion of the executors.

Whatever liability might attach to the executor on its being made to appear that the exercise of his judgment was not made in good faith, the title of the purchaser would not be affected thereby, unless collusion or guilty knowledge can be traced to him. 2 Wms. on Ex'rs 841; Whale v. Booth, 4 Term R. 625, note.

As to the sale and payment being made in Confederate money, the facts here develop nothing to take the case out of the ruling of the higher tribunals, state and federal, than an executed contract, a transaction in the ordinary course of civil society, between persons at a time when and a place where the only currency was Confederate money, will not be set aside because the consideration was paid or payable in that currency. Pope v. Chafee, 14 Rich. Eq. 80; Thorington v. Smith, 8 Wall. 11 [19 L. Ed. 361.]

Under the scope of their bill the complainants are however entitled to an account of the executor's administration of the estate. Whether in view of the financial condition of Teague's estate this will avail the plaintiffs anything, is for their consideraton exclusively. Entertaining these views, which go to the merits of the entire case, and prætermitting several nice questions discussed as to the proper form and effect of the statute of limitations, which strike me as unnecessary to the solution of the controversy, I find the following facts:

1. That P. L. Calhoun died prior to July 18th, 1863, leaving of force his last will and testament, bearing date August 1st, 1861, wherein he directed "that his executors should sell all his estate, both real and personal, of what nature or quality soever it may be, so soon as the value of property shall recover from the depression caused by the existing war."

*235

*2. That Abner G. Teague, one of the executors named therein, alone qualified as executor thereof on July 18th, 1863.

3. That on October 27th, 1863, the said Teague, after due advertisement and public notice in the newspapers, in pursuance of the powers conferred by the will, sold at public outcry to William A. Martin, the highest and last bidder, without objection on the part of any of the devisees and legatees under said will, and conveyed to him for the consideration paid of $32,000 in Confederate money, the price bid, all that tract of land on which the said Patrick L. Calhoun resided up to the time of his death, situated and lying in the county, then district, of Edgefield, State of South Carolina, on the waters of Stephens creek and of Savannah river, and adjoining lands belonging to H. Newson, Edward Howle, C. L. Blair, Sarah Bush and others, containing eighteen hundred and ninety-six and one-half acres, more or less.

4. That said sale, payment and conveyance were fair, formal and bona fide.

5. That on January 7th, 1864, Mary A. Calhoun, plaintiff, the widow of P. L. Calhoun, formally released, before W. D. Jennings, notary public, all her interest and estate and also all her right and claim of dower of, in, or to the premises aforesaid to the said William A. Martin.

6. That Abner G. Teague, after having been discharged in bankruptcy, departed this life, and that Narcissa M. Teague is the qualified executrix of his last will and testament.

7. That no final accounting has ever been had of the administration of the estate of P. L. Calhoun by the said Abner G. Teague.

I find the following conclusions of law:

1. That the will vested the qualified executor, Abner G. Teague, with power to decide when the value of property had recovered from the depression caused by the existing war.

2. That the sale and conveyance of the tract of land aforesaid by said executor to William A. Martin for $32,000 in Confederate money and the renunciation by Mrs. Mary A. Calhoun of her interest, estate and dower therein, are valid, and that neither the *said executor or the said Martin can in any manner be held liable therefor.

*236

3. The plaintiffs are entitled to an account from Narcissa M. Teague, executrix of the last will and testament of Abner G. Teague, of the said Teague's administration of the estate of P. L. Calhoun, if they desire it.

Wherefore it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the bill be dismissed with cost as to said William A. Martin, and that plaintiffs have ninety days after the filing hereof, within which to apply for an order referring the matters of account of said Abner M. Teague as said executor to a referee to be appointed.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. J. P. Carroll, for appellants, cited Hill on Trust. 478; 3 Rich. Eq. 134; 9 Rich. Eq. 270; 1 McC. Ch. 393; Hill on Trust. 47, note 1; 13 Penna. St. 535; 10 Hare 290; 19 Jurist 973.

Mr. L. F. Youmans, attorney-general, contra, cited Perry on Trusts, §§ 771–785; 2 Wms. on Ex'rs 839, 840; 2 N. & McC. 589; 3 Rich. 421; Rice 55; 1 Tread. Const. R. 106; 1 Strob. 189; 1 Rich. Eq. 305, 317.

Mr. M. W. Gary, in reply, cited 2 Bla. Com. *379; 2 Bay 255; 1 Desaus. 589; 2 Id. 246, 253; 1 Bac. Ab. 318; 2 N. & McC. 591; Rich. Eq. Cas. 405; 4 Desaus. 522; 2 McC. Ch. 198; 5 Stat. 15; 6 Rich. Eq. 23; 1 Jarm. on Wills 796–799; 2 Dall. 317; 1 Tread. Const. R. 106; 2 N. & McC. 588; 3 Rich. 418; 1 S. C. 256.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. The principal object of this action was to have the sale of a certain tract of land set aside, the deed given therefor cancelled, and an account from the purchaser for the rents and profits since the sale. Indeed the only question made by the appeal is as to the validity of the sale.

*237

*The land in question originally belonged to P. L. Calhoun, who died some time in the year 1863, having first duly made and executed his last will and testament, which bears date August 1st, 1861. The clause of the will which, it is claimed, contains the power of sale under which the executor acted, is as follows: "I desire that my executors, hereinafter to be named, shall sell all my estate, both real and personal, of what nature or quality soever it may be, so soon as the value of property shall recover from the depression caused by the existing war;" and after providing for the payment of his debts and the distribution of the remainder, the testator appointed Dr. A. G. Teague and his son, J. C. Calhoun, executors, the former of whom alone qualified. On the same day that Dr. Teague qualified as executor, he obtained from the Ordinary an order for the sale of the personalty, and on October 27th, 1863, after due advertisement, the whole estate, both real and personal, was sold for cash, in Confederate money, in accordance with the suggestions and advice of the appraisers, and a due return of the sale-bill made to the Ordinary on November 10th, 1863. This sale was attended by many of the parties now seeking to set it aside, some of whom became purchasers to a large amount. No objections appear to have been made to the sale by any of the persons interested under the will, though there is evidence that the plaintiff, W. D. Jennings, who was a creditor of the estate, did object to having the property sold for Confederate money, though his objections do not seem to have been communicated to the defendant, Martin, who was the largest purchaser at the sale, he having bid off the land now in controversy for the sum of $32,000, paid his bid in cash, in Confederate money, and received a deed from the executor. Jennings, also, notwithstanding his objections, became a purchaser at the sale to an amount not inconsiderable, a part of which, however, was, as he says, for the benefit of the widow and part for a young lady to whom he owed some money, while the remainder was for his wife. In about two months after the sale the widow of the testator, before the plaintiff, W. D. Jennings, as a notary public, formally released all her interest and estate, and all her claim of dower in the land sold to Martin, the purchaser at the executor's sale; and some of the parties interested *received from the executor, out of the proceeds of sale, large amounts of money.

*238

It is very clear that at the time all parties interested considered the sale a good and valid sale, and that there is not a shadow of ground for saying that there was any fraud or concealment, or misrepresentation which would tend to invalidate it. On the contrary, all the circumstances go to show that the sale was, at the time, satisfactory to all parties concerned, unless it be W. D. Jennings, who, as a creditor, may be regarded as interested in the estate. But even he, taking all his conduct together, can scarcely be regarded as making any opposition to the sale, but merely expressing a dissatisfaction with the terms of sale by which purchasers were allowed to pay their bids in Confederate money.

But, conceding all this, the validity of the sale is challenged upon the ground of a want of power in the executor to make the sale. First. Because there were two executors appointed, and one could not sell even though the other never qualified. Second. Because the power to sell was conditional, and as the condition never happened the power never vested. As to the first ground, it is very clear that it cannot be sustained. The very object of the statute (21 Henry VIII., Ch. IV., 2 Stat. 457,) which was in force at the time this sale was made, was to obviate this objection. Britton v. Lewis, 8 Rich. Eq. 271.

As to the second ground, it is quite clear that the power of sale was a conditional one, and it is equally clear that the condition was, in its nature, precedent and not subsequent, and that, such being the case, until the condition was performed, or the contingency, upon which the power was conferred, happened, the power could not be lawfully exercised. So that the real question in this case is, whether the contingency upon which the power to sell was given had happened at the time the sale was made, and as subsidiary to this, who was to determine whether the contingency had happened. To solve these questions it will be necessary to inquire what was the nature of the condition. Was it the happening of a distinct and independent fact, or was it a condition, which, in its very nature, involved the exercise of judgment or discretion for the determination of whether it had hap*pened, and about which, therefore, there might well be, as there was in this very case, honest difference of opinion. It certainly was not a distinct and independent fact, as if the testator had provided that the executor should sell when a certain person should attain to a certain age, but it was a condition, the happening of which could only be determined by an exercise of judgment. When the value of property should recover from a depression caused by a war, or by any other special circumstance, must necessarily be a question to be determined by the exercise of judgment—one about which persons might and probably would honestly differ. What was to be the extent of the recovery which would authorize a sale? Somebody must judge of this, and if the executor is not permitted to do so, then it is difficult to suggest who could. If the executor commits an error of judgment in determining such a question, that, certainly, ought not to invalidate a sale made by him in the honest exercise of his judgment. If it did, then it would be impossible to tell, until after it was tested by a judicial proceeding, whether any sale made under such a power was valid, and if such a rule be established it would destroy all chances of making such a sale, for, certainly, no one would buy with the prospect of having his title inquired into and assailed years after upon the ground that the executor had committed an error of judgment in determining a question which was left to his discretion.

*239

It is perfectly manifest that the testator in this case intended to invest his executor with power to sell in a certain contingency, the happening of which must necessarily be determined by an exercise of judgment, and unless his executor—the person whom he has selected as possessing more of his confidence than any one else—is authorized to determine this question, then the purpose of conferring upon the executor the power to sell would be practically defeated. That purpose, doubtless, was to avoid the necessity of obtaining an order of the court for the sale, which would involve delay and expense; but if the executor is denied the power of determining the time for the sale, or if his honest determination is liable to be revised and reversed by the court, then, clearly, it would have been better to have required a resort to the court in the first instance, rather than to give an apparent *power to the executor which would only serve to delude purchasers and result in greater delay and larger expense than if the will had required a resort to the court in the first instance. That these views are not without the support of authority, may be seen by reference to the case of Greer v. McBeth, 12 Rich. Eq. 254. The cases of McCants v. Bee, 1 McC. Eq. 383 [16 Am. Dec. 610]; and South Carolina R. R. Co. v. Toomer, 9 Rich. Eq. 270, relied upon by the appellants, do not, in our judgment, conflict with these views. In the former case the question was not really made, but it was suggested that the executor was willing to confirm a contract for the sale of a slave which had been made by the life tenant, about which the real controversy was, and the court, among several other reasons why the executor could not make the sale, said that the power given to the executor was only to sell such property as was useless to the estate, and that the court could not suppose that this conferred a power to sell the slave in question, without assuming, which it would not do, that the executor was willing to commit a fraud, for there was another provision in the will directing the executor to increase the stock of that kind of property by investing the surplus funds of the estate in the purchase of slaves; for if the court were at liberty to suppose that the slave was of such a description as to be useless to the estate, then it would have to suppose that the executor was willing to commit an actual fraud by imposing upon a female property which he knew to be worthless. In the case of S. C. Railroad Company v. Toomer, the condition upon which the power to sell was given was the happening of a distinct fact, and was not a condition which would have to be determined by the exercise of judgment or discretion.

*240

When, therefore, as in this case, a power of sale is given to an executor, upon the happening of a contingency which can only be ascertained by the exercise of judgment and discretion, and the executor, in the honest exercise of his judgment, determines that such contingency has happened and accordingly makes the sale, such sale cannot be invalidated, even though it should be made to appear, in the light of subsequent events, that the executor had committed an error of judgment in determining whether the contingency had happened upon which he was authorized to *sell. If, however, it should appear that the executor erred wilfully, or from such gross negligence as would imply wilfullness, then it would be different, and the question whether the sale should be allowed to stand, would depend largely upon whether the purchaser had notice of such misconduct upon the part of the executor. In this case, as we have seen, there is no foundation for a suspicion even that the executor acted otherwise than honestly in determining whether the contingency had happened upon which he was authorized to sell, and, therefore, upon the principles above stated there is no ground for invalidating the sale.

*241

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 241

(Case No. 931.)

KLINCK v. BLACK.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Injunction ⇐211.]

The act of a deputy sheriff in putting a purchaser into possession after an order of injunction restraining such act was served upon the sheriff, but before such service was known, or could possibly have been made known to the deputy, is invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 434; Dec. Dig. ⇐211.]

[2. Injunction ⇐206.]

Upon the application of one claiming a tract of land by title and possession, who was not a party to a cause under which a decree of sale was rendered, a Circuit judge, by his order at chambers, enjoined the sheriff from putting a purchaser of such land into possession, as required by the decree of sale. Held, that such order was within the judicial discretion of the Circuit judge, and its legality could not be questioned by the sheriff.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Harmon v. Wagener, 33 S. C. 497, 12 S. E. 98.

For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 422, 423; Dec. Dig. ⇐206.]

[3. Injunction ⇐220.]

Such an order is not suspended by an appeal therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 442; Dec. Dig. ⇐220.]

[4. Injunction ⇐221.]

Such order having been violated by the sheriff, through the act of his deputy ignorantly done, it was competent for the Circuit judge, by a second order, to command the sheriff to restore the possession thus changed by the wrongful act of his deputy.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Nathans, 49 S. C. 227, 27 S. E. 52.

For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 445; Dec. Dig. ⟸221.]

[This case is also cited in Simonds v. Haithcock, 18 S. C. 604, without specific application, and in State v. Nathans, 49 S. C. 227, 27 S. E. 52, as to the powers of judges at chambers.]

Before Aldrich, J., Colleton, January, 1880.

*242

*The tract of land, whose possession is the subject of dispute in this case, was sold by the sheriff of Colleton county, Robert Black, on sale-day, in January, 1880, under a decree of Judge Fraser, rendered in a cause to which this plaintiff, Gustavus W. Klinck, was not a party. The decree ordered a sale to satisfy the claim of Martha P. Godfrey, for dower, and directed the sheriff to put the purchaser at such sale into possession. The subsequent proceedings are stated in the opinion.

From the several orders of Judge Aldrich, the defendants, Robert Black and Martha P. Godfrey, appealed to this court.

Messrs. Tracy & Tracy and Henderson & Behre, for appellants.

Messrs. Mitchell & Smith and Robert Aldrich, contra.

October 15th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. This is a contest for the possession of a plantation in Colleton county, known as "The Shrubbery." As presented here, the rights of the parties on the merits are not involved, except so far as they may be incidentally affected by possession. On January 5th, 1880 the plaintiff was in possession of the plantation under claim of title which is not now to be considered. Seeing that the plantation was advertised for sale by Robert Black, sheriff of Colleton county, under an order of Judge Fraser, at the suit of one Martha P. Godfrey, for dower, as the widow of William Godfrey, he exhibited his complaint against Robert Black, sheriff, and Martha P. Godfrey, defendants, stating his case and praying for an injunction against the proposed sale, and also for the usual restraining orders. Judge Aldrich, upon the prima facie case made, granted an order, which, for convenience, we will call No. 1, "requiring the defendants to show cause on the first day of the next term of the court why the said sheriff should not be enjoined from making the sale," &c., and it was further "ordered that the said Robert Black, sheriff as aforesaid, be, and he is hereby restrained from making the sale aforesaid, or if the sale has been *made prior to the service of this order upon him, he is hereby restrained from delivering title to the said premises to the purchaser at such sale, and from placing said purchaser in possession of said premises or in any way interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the same."

*243

This order was granted at Barnwell courthouse January 5th, 1880, and on that same day Sheriff Black, at Walterboro', against the protest of the plaintiff, offered the plantation for sale, and it was bid off by one B. P. Sanders, at the price of $4000. Sanders did not comply with the terms of sale as required in two hours, and the sheriff re-sold at his risk. At the second sale the plantation was bid off for $1971 by Martha P. Godfrey, who was entitled to the purchase money, and to whom the sheriff executed titles. At the hour of 10.30 o'clock the next morning (January 6th) notice of the restraining order granted at Barnwell, was served on the sheriff at his office, but his deputy had already been dispatched "between daylight and sunup" that morning to put Mrs. Godfrey in possession under the sale, and at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M. of that day, after the sheriff had notice, but before the deputy had knowledge of it, the said deputy, in the name and by the authority of the sheriff, put the plaintiff out and Mrs. Godfrey into possession of the plantation.

On the next day (January 7th), the plaintiff, after leave granted, filed a supplemental complaint, stating the facts as they had taken place, and Judge Aldrich made another order, No. 2. This repeats the first restraining order in these words: "That in the meantime and until the further order of the court upon the hearing herein ordered, the said defendants be, and they are hereby, restrained forthwith from taking or keeping possession of the premises," &c. This order was communicated to Mr. Fishburne, agent of Mrs. Godfrey, who had been put in possession, and he "declined and refused to vacate said premises."

This disregard of his order being brought to the notice of Judge Aldrich, on January 10th, he granted order No. 3, requiring Robert Black, sheriff, Martha P. Godfrey, and L. N. Fishburne to show cause why they should not be attached for disobedience of the orders aforesaid. To this rule the parties *made return. They made no motion to dissolve the orders Nos. 1 and 2, but gave notice of appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court, January 13th. Black and Mrs. Godfrey, January 19th, filed answers to the complaint and supplemental complaint. Judge Aldrich heard nothing but the rule for contempt, and, finding that the returns were not sufficient, on January 26th, he made order No. 4, directing that Robert Black, sheriff, should, within two days from the order, restore to the plaintiff, Klinck, possession of the Shrubbery plantation. From this order, Martha P. Godfrey appeals, and Chief Justice Willard granted an order, No. 5, suspending the order of attachment pending the appeal.

*244

The appellant, Martha P. Godfrey, rests her appeal from the attaching order upon the ground "that Judge Aldrich erred in determining the defendant's right to the possession of the Shrubbery plantation, regularly acquired, under an order, being a judgment upon her rights, which a judge at chambers had no right to make." As we understand, this embraces two propositions: First, that the possession of the plantation was regularly acquired by the appellant under an order which is a conclusive adjudication of her rights; and, second, that a judge at chambers had no jurisdiction to determine her right to that possession.

The sworn complaint informed Judge Aldrich that the plaintiff was in quiet possession of the Shrubbery plantation under claim of right, and being satisfied with the prima facie showing of equity, he made an order restraining the sheriff from delivering possession to the purchaser until the rights of the parties could be determined. Notice of this order was served upon the sheriff, at the hour of 10.30 o'clock A. M., on January 6th, and from that moment he was bound to obey that restraining order. The transfer of possession at the hour of 1 o'clock P. M. that same day was in violation of that order and without authority. 2 Daniell's Ch. Pl. & Pr. 1683; High on Injunc., § 352. The character of the act was not changed by the fact that when the sheriff received notice of the restraining order, his deputy had already departed on the business, and that he could not be communicated with before the hour of 1 o'clock P. M., when the *deed was done. That might excuse the sheriff from punishment as showing that his act was not willful, but could not give authority where none existed. We cannot distinguish between the sheriff and his deputy in the performance of an official act. The deputy derives his powers from the sheriff, and his act is that of the sheriff. As soon as the sheriff ceased to have authority, that moment the deputy ceases to have any, whether he knew of the notice to the sheriff or not. The ignorance of the deputy could not legalize that which was without authority.

*245

But it is urged for the sheriff that Judge Aldrich at chambers had no authority to make an order restraining the enforcement of Judge Fraser's order to put the purchaser in possession. Upon this point it would, perhaps, be enough to suggest that that was not a matter to be judged of by the sheriff, who, as an executive officer, had nothing to do but to obey the last order, which directed him to do nothing—merely to refrain from acting. But we may add that, even if the sheriff had the right to question the legality of the order, his view of the law was more than doubtful. It may be that, under some circumstances, the court would not enjoin a sale of land under process, in the view that the mere sale of land cannot injure the rights of any one. Wilson v. Hyatt, McBurney & Co., 4 S. C. 369. But it is a very different question whether the court has the right to enjoin the delivery of possession by the officer of the law. In ordinary sheriff's sales there is no delivery of possession, but the purchaser is left to assert, in court, his right to possession, as well as all other rights. Under the code of procedure, Section 242, sub-division 1, it was within the judicial discretion of Judge Aldrich to restrain, temporarily, the enforcement of so much of Judge Fraser's order as directed possession to be given—that was a matter beyond the sale, and might work irreparable injury to one in possession under claim of title who was not a party to the proceeding in which the order to deliver possession was made. To that extent the order of Judge Fraser was in the nature of a writ of habere facias possessionem, which may be restrained in equity pending litigation. Dorn v. Beasley, 6 Rich. Eq. 408.

*246

*We think that the restraining order at the time the relative condition of the parties was changed by the delivery of possession, was not suspended by appeal. It was ex parte. No motion was made to vacate it. Even notice of appeal was not given until after the possession was changed. Besides, the order in its nature was not appealable. In no sense did it "involve the merits." It determined no rights but was purely administrative—to maintain the status pending the litigation. If its effect in this respect could be suspended by an appeal at any time, its very nature would be changed and this great preventive remedy of equity rendered perfectly nugatory. High on Injunc., § 16, and authorities cited.

But if the judge had jurisdiction to make the restraining order, it is urged that he had none to make the order No. 2, (January 8th,) which was not merely a restraining order, but required the sheriff to do a positive act in restoring possession. The act required to be done by the sheriff was simply to undo his own void act done through his deputy in ignorance of the facts. Both orders were in the possession of the sheriff, and binding upon him—one commanding him to refrain from delivering possession, and the other commanding him, if delivered, to restore possession. In fact, the delivery which was made was merely by accident, resulting from the ignorance of the deputy sheriff. If, under these circumstances, Mrs. Godfrey, who got possession by that accident, could defeat the plain purpose of the orders to maintain the statu quo, it would surely disclose great inefficiency in the administration of the law. Under particular circumstances mandatory injunctions are allowable. In Howe v. Searing, part of the injunction adjudged at the hearing was "that the defendant should not continue to use the name of 'Howe's Bakery' on any sign or wagon, and should remove a large sign with that name." Justice Hoffman, who pronounced the order, held that the power to forbid the continuance of a thing and to punish a party for continuing it, was the same thing as the power to command its removal, and that it was best to make the language express directly what was actually commanded. Hoffman's Prov. Rem. of Code 377.

*247

*The sheriff exhibited reluctance to disturb the statu quo of two o'clock in the evening, which had been created only an hour before by the mistake of his deputy in delivering possession. It would seem that a sense of official impartiality should make him equally reluctant to disturb the statu quo of ten o'clock that morning, or, that being disturbed by the mistake of his deputy, he should be prompt to correct the mistake.

This judgment is not intended to touch the merits of the case and is without prejudice. The only purpose being to restore the parties to the same condition in which they stood, as to possession, at the hour of 10:30 o'clock on the morning of January 6th, when the sheriff received notice of the first restraining order.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 247

(Case No. 933.)

FELL v. DIAL.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Bills and Notes ⇐423.]

Where one endorsed a promissory note, and after its maturity, with knowledge that there had been no demand for payment, nor notice of nonpayment, made arrangements with the endorsee to furnish a steam boiler in part payment, and also promised to pay every cent of the money—Held, that these were admissions of liability, and a waiver of presentment and notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1209, 1217; Dec. Dig. ⇐423.]

[2. Bills and Notes ⇐423.]

A promise by the endorser under like circumstances to give a new note for the amount claimed, would also be an admission and waiver, although he afterwards refused to give the new note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1215; Dec. Dig. ⇐423.]

3. Schmidt v. Radcliffe, 4 Strob. 296 [53 Am. Dec. 678], approved.

[4. Bills and Notes ⇐423.]

The question for the jury in such case is not what the endorser intended by his words, but whether what was said amounted to a plain admission of liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1209; Dec. Dig. ⇐423.]

[5. Trial ⇐252.]

The Circuit judge properly refused to charge the jury upon the effect of an act, as to which there had been no testimony in the case.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Heller, Hirsh & Co. v. Charleston Phosphate Co., 28 S. C. 233, 5 S. E. 611; Hay v. Carolina Midland Ry. Co., 41 S. C. 545, 19 S. E. 976.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 505, 596-612; Dec. Dig. ⇐252.]

[6. Bills and Notes ⇐138.]

The Circuit judge properly refused to charge the jury, that if they believed from the evidence that D. agreed to renew the note past due, he being endorser thereon, and the note was not renewed, that this was not a new promise to pay the said note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 338, 339; Dec. Dig. ⇐138.]

[7. Bills and Notes ⇐94; Frauds, Statute of, ⇐16.]

The original note and not the new promise, constituted the cause of action; and hence the new promise was not nudum pactum, nor within the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 206; Dec. Dig. ⇐94; Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 26; Dec. Dig. ⇐16.]

*248

*Before Wallace, J., Richland, July, 1879.

This was an action commenced in February, 1879, by William J. Fell, endorsee, against the endorsers of a promissory note for $835, made by Richard Tozer, payable to the order of George L. Dial, and endorsed by George L. Dial and John C. Dial.

The note was not presented at maturity for payment, nor was notice of non-payment given to the endorsers. The plaintiff claimed that these requisites to charge the endorsers were waived by the admissions and promises made by the endorsers after the maturity of the note. There was testimony on both sides upon these points, but enough is stated in the opinion to make clear the rulings of the court.

The defendants requested his Honor to charge as follows:

1. If the jury believe, from the evidence, that George L. Dial did not intend, from what passed between the plaintiff Fell and George L. Dial, to assume the responsibility of paying this note after maturity, then he is not liable as endorser thereon, and the jury must find a verdict for the defendant. His Honor charged the jury that they were to consider what Dial said.

2. If the jury believe, from the evidence, that an offer of waiver was made by George L. Dial in offering to allow the boiler in question to be credited on the note, and the said offer was not carried out by accepting the boiler and crediting its value on said note, that then they must find a verdict for the said defendant, George L. Dial. His Honor held that this was not involved in the case.

3. That if the jury believe, from the evidence, that John C. Dial agreed to renew the note past due, he being endorser thereon, and the note was not renewed, that this was not a new promise to pay the said note, and the jury must find a verdict for the defendant, John C. Dial. This request was refused.

4. That no verbal promise to pay the said note, made by a discharged endorser, could, under the law of South Carolina, renew the said note, or make the said endorser again liable thereon. This request was refused.

His Honor, after stating the facts to the jury, announced the law as stated in Schmidt v. Radcliffe, 4 Strob. 296 [53 Am. Dec. 678].

*249

To this *charge and the refusals to charge the defendants excepted; and verdict and judgment being for plaintiff, defendants appealed to this court.

Mr. John Bauskett, for appellant.

Mr. Andrew Crawford, contra.

October 16th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action against the defendants as endorsers of a promissory note. The defence was that there was no demand on the maker and no notice of non-payment given to the endorsers. To this it was replied that the defendants had waived such demand and notice. There was evidence tending to show that one of the defendants, after knowledge of the fact that there had been no demand or notice, made an arrangement with the plaintiff for the payment of the note, by agreeing to furnish the plaintiff with a boiler for a steam engine, and, in addition to this, by promising to pay the plaintiff "every cent of his money;" and that the other defendant had agreed to renew the note. The testimony as to what both of the defendants had agreed to do, was conflicting; but we must assume that the jury, by their verdict, have settled this conflict in favor of the plaintiff. The only question, therefore, for us to determine is, whether the jury were properly instructed as to the law. Exactly what the Circuit judge charged the jury the "case" does not inform us, as the only statement of the charge is, that "the court, after stating the facts to the jury, announced the law as stated in Schmidt v. Radcliffe, 4 Strob. 296 [53 Am. Dec. 678], to which defendant excepted." We do not see how such an exception can be sustained. The law, as laid down in the case cited, was certainly applicable to the facts of this case, and we see no reason for dissatisfaction with the rule, as there announced. There, as here, the question was, whether the endorser had waived the necessity for demand and notice, and O'Neall, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says that the rule laid down by Story, in his Treatise on Bills, "that a promise by the party entitled to notice to pay the bill, is deemed a full and complete waiver of the want of due *notice, seems now to be settled law. It is, however, subject to the qualification stated in the same section, 'in all cases of this sort the promise must be unequivocal and amount to an admission of the right of the holder, or the act done must be of a nature clearly importing a like admission of his right.'" In that case there had been no demand on the drawer and no notice to the endorser, and when the endorser was called on for payment, he said "he would see Cramer" [the maker of the note] "and try to get the money out of him, and if he could not he would have to pay it himself, as he was the endorser on the note;" and the court said "this was a plain admission of his liability and the plaintiff's right to receive the money from him." So here we think the conduct and language of the defendants amounted to a plain admission of their liability, and they cannot now dispute it upon the ground of the absence of proof that would otherwise have been necessary to fix their liability.

*250

It is contended, however, that there was error in refusing sundry requests to charge which are set out in the "case," and need not be quoted here. In response to the first request, that if the jury believed, from the evidence, that George L. Dial did not intend to assume the responsibility of paying the note, then he would not be liable as endorser, the Circuit judge properly instructed the jury that they were to consider what Dial said. It was possible, though we do not mean to intimate that such was the fact in the present case, that Dial may have intended to deceive or mislead the plaintiff in the belief that he would pay the note, when, in his own mind, he had no such real intention, and hence the jury were properly instructed that the questions for them to consider was what Dial said, and whether it amounted to "plain admission of his liability," and not what may have been his hidden intention.

The second request was properly refused, as not called for by any testimony in the case, as there was no pretence that the plaintiff had ever declined to accept the boiler and credit its value on the note.

The third request, that a promise to renew the note did not amount to admission of liability, was properly refused. It certainly amounted to a promise to take up the note in suit by *giving another, and that certainly was just as much an admission of liability as a promise to take up the note by paying it in money or giving a draft on a factor would be.

*251

The fourth request seems, from the argument, to be based upon two grounds. First. That a promise by an endorser to pay a note from which he had been discharged by a failure to make due presentment and notice, is nudum pactum, and therefore void. Second. That such a promise, unless in writing, is void under the statute of frauds, as being the promise to pay the debt of another. Neither of these grounds are tenable, for they both rest upon the unfounded assumption that it is the new promise, and not the original note, which is the cause of action. The new promise does not constitute the cause of action; it only operates as a waiver of the necessity of proving facts—demand and notice—which, but for such promise, would be necessary to sustain an action on the original note, which is the real cause of action, and the contract evidenced by the note cannot be said to be nudum pactum, nor is it within the statute of frauds. In support of these views, see 2 Daniel on Neg. Inst., § 1147, and 1 Ib., § 567, n. 5.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 251

(Case No. 934.)

DAVIDSON v. MOORE.

FICKLING v. SAME.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⇐303.]

Testator bequeathed "to my sons, T., S. and W., in trust, for the use and benefit of my granddaughters, A., L. and B., each $10,000, when they arrive at the age of eighteen years. * * * My sons, trustees aforesaid, may, if they deem it necessary and prudent, invest the above legacies in stocks or other property for the use and benefit of my said granddaughters severally," and the rest of his estate was given to his three sons. S., who alone undertook the trust set apart to two of the grand*daughters, at the age of eighteen, in 1863 and January, 1865, certain notes, all of which were due to a firm composed of testator and his three sons, except one note made in 1863, and payable to a new firm formed by the sons. The notes were appraised good when so set apart, but were only partially realized. There was no written assignment, and the notes were afterwards sued, presented against bankrupt estates, proved in court, &c., in the firm name. Held, that the pretended investments were not payments of the legacies.

*252

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1229; Dec. Dig. ⇐303.]

[2. Executors and Administrators ⇐303.]

The amounts received upon the notes of the firm of testator and sons, should be added to the firm assets, of which one-fourth belonged to testator; and the payments made by the executor to the cestuis que trust should be credited upon his accounts as executor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1229–1242, 1245; Dec. Dig. ⇐303.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐1022.]

A referee's finding of fact upon the conflicting testimony of witnesses examined before him, which was overruled by the Circuit judge, sustained by this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4015–4018; Dec. Dig. ⇐1022.]

[4. Executors and Administrators ⇐475.]

Certain stock in chartered companies, sold by the executor, charged to him at the appraisement, there being no other proof of value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 2061; Dec. Dig. ⇐475.]

[5. Executors and Administrators ⇐500.]

Executors are not entitled to commissions for years in which they failed to make returns prior to the adoption of the general statutes in February, 1872; since then, there is no law depriving them of commissions for such neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 2135; Dec. Dig. ⇐500.]

[6. Executors and Administrators ⇐495.]

Executors are entitled to commissions on the final balance in their hands paid over. Gee v. Hicks, Rich. Eq. Cas. 5.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Tompkins v. Tompkins, 18 S. C. 30.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2089, 2106, 2108; Dec. Dig. ⇐495.]

[7. Executors and Administrators ⇐315.]

Decree for the legacies against this executor personally, should only be for assets which came, or should have come into his hands, exclusive of the value of the slaves emancipated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1298–1314; Dec. Dig. ⇐315.]

[8. Trusts ⇐161.]

The trustee having attempted to sustain such improper investment, and being antagonized by this litigation, should no longer hold his office of trustee without bond and security.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 209–211; Dec. Dig. ⇐161.]

[This case is also cited in Moore v. Davidson, 22 S. C. 93, as to the facts.]

Before Wallace, J., York, November, 1879.

These two actions were tried together, being actions against Samuel R. Moore, executor, for the payment of legacies under the will of John S. Moore, to Laura S. Springs, now Davidson, and Buena V. Springs, now Fickling.

The report of C. E. Spencer, Esq., referee, in the case of Davidson v. Moore, thus states the facts:

1. John S. Moore, defendant's testator, died on September 21st, 1859, leaving in force his last will and testament, which was duly admitted to probate by the Ordinary of York county on January 4th, 1860. Defendant, T. A. Moore and W. A.

*253

*Moore, the three sons of the testator, were named as executors therein, but the defendant alone qualified.

2. The said testator bequeathed to his three said sons the sum of $10,000, in trust, for the use and benefit of his granddaughter, the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, upon her attaining eighteen years of age, for and during her natural life, with limitations over in the event of dying without issue alive. The defendant alone undertook the execution of the trust.

3. The plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, on October 18th, 1862, attained the age of eighteen years, and subsequently, on September 10th, 1867, intermarried with the plaintiff, Joseph S. M. Davidson.

4. The will of the testator provided that the trustees may, if they deem it necessary and prudent, vest the above legacies in stocks or other personal property, for the use and benefit of the said granddaughters as aforesaid, referring to his three granddaughters, of whom the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, was one, and to each of whom he had left a similar legacy upon her, each of them, attaining the age of eighteen.

5. The entire residue of the estate, after payment of debts, was willed to testator's three sons above named, to be equally divided between them.

6. The testator died seized and possessed of a considerable real and personal estate, a statement of which, together with the value thereof at the time of his death, is hereto attached, marked Exhibit A. He was also, at the time of his death, the owner of one-fourth interest in the firm of J. S. Moore & Sons, composed of testator and his three sons, each of whom owned a fourth interest. A statement of the assets of the firm at that time is attached to this report, and marked Exhibit B.

7. The estate of the testator was never sold by the executor. He admits that he has appropriated the entire estate, however, with the exception of the negroes, (who were emancipated in 1865,) the King's Mountain Iron Company stock, (which he traded off in good faith during the war with a view to benefit the estate, without ever having realized anything upon it,) and the King's Mountain Railroad stock, (which he claims still to hold in behalf of the estate, and which he has done in good faith, *having a care to the interest of the estate, although he might have realized as much as $10 a share for several years after the war, and although he has taken the new certificate of stock from the C. and L. Railroad Company in the name of different members of his own and his brother's family.)

*254

8. The account, as executor of the estate, is attached hereto, marked Exhibit C; an account of the receipts and disbursements of the survivors of J. S. Moore & Sons is also attached, marked Exhibit D. The settlement of the firm business has been conducted by the defendant.

9. On November 20th, 1862, defendant, with the knowledge, consent and approval of the other survivors of J. S. Moore & Sons, and with the expectation of being reimbursed at some future time out of the testator's estate, set aside from the assets of said firm the notes described in Exhibit E, hereto attached, in payment of the legacy of his testator to the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson. The parties owing these notes were solvent at the time, and would, doubtless, have continued so but for the results of the war. At the time of this setting aside no money investment was practicable, though the trustees might have made the debts more secure by the individual endorsements of the survivors, or, if the others could not have been obtained, by his own endorsement. Requiring a mortgage of a debtor's real estate was entirely impracticable at the time. I have not the least doubt in my mind that, aside from involving himself personally, the arrangement to secure the legacy was the best that presented itself to defendant, and that he undertook it with the best of motives. With the legal question whether, under the will, it was a proper investment, I have nothing to do. Defendant's account, as trustee of Mrs. Davidson, is hereto attached, marked Exhibit F.

The bill of appraisement is only prima facie evidence of the amount and value of a decedent's property. While testimony was offered to show that the stock of the King's Mountain Iron Company and the King's Mountain Railroad had no marketable value at the time of testator's death, yet no real value was proved, and, as I am satisfied, there was some real value, I accept that assessed by the appraisers.

*255

*In the payments of 1860 of the testator's debts, defendant has included an item of $3181.99, being the amount of the account of Miss J. A. Springs, a granddaughter of testator and one of the legatees provided for in his will. Defendant claims that under an arrangement between testator and two certain paternal uncles of the three granddaughters, (whose father had become insolvent,) entered into in 1857, the testator undertook to support the said Miss J. A. Springs until her education should be completed, each of said uncles undertaking, at the same time, to render similar support to one of the other granddaughters. As regards the undertaking of the testator, the testimony was conflicting, but I think the weight of the testimony fully warrants the conclusion that the testator did so undertake, and I so find. But I hold that the undertaking was discharged upon her attaining eighteen years of age in December, 1859, at which time, under the will, she became entitled to the income from her legacy, the interest on which was actually paid to her in December, 1860, out of the estate, and regularly thereafter until 1863, when the legacy was invested

Up to December, 1859, her account aggregated $1698.46, and to this extent I allow defendant credit.

In the case of Fickling et ux. v. Moore, the referee submitted a similar report, except as follows:

Buena V. Fickling attained the age of eighteen years March 24th, 1865, and married Jeremiah Fickling in February, 1875. On January 1st, 1865, defendant, with the knowledge, consent and approval of the other survivors of J. S. Moore & Sons, and of the members of the other firm of W. A. Moore & Co., to wit, W. A. Moore and T. A. Moore, his brothers, (who were also named as executors and trustees in the will of J. S. Moore, but who never qualified,) and with the expectation of being reimbursed at some time out of the testator's estate, set aside the notes described in Exhibit E 2, hereto attached, (all of which belonged to the assets of J. S. Moore & Sons, except the note of J. M. Smarr, which belonged to W. A. Moore & Co.) in the payment of the legacies of his testator to plaintiff, Buena Fickling. The parties owing these notes were solvent at the time, except that *J. M. Smarr could hardly have been considered entirely good for a debt of $6000, on a strict property basis. All of the notes would doubtless have been realized on, however, but for results of the war. Of course, no money investment was practical in January, 1865, though the trustee might have made these claims more secure by the individual endorsement of the members of the firm, defendants, W. A. Moore and T. A. Moore, or secured by his endorsement alone in case the other could not have been obtained. Requiring a mortgage of a debtor's real estate was entirely impracticable at the time, as the collection of debts was stayed. The note of J. M. Smarr was given for the loan of Confederate money on May 16th, 1863, to wit, $5600, worth in good money $1458.33; and while I have no doubt that the testimony of the defendant is true, that Smarr was to pay back in good money after the war, as he (Smarr) proved to be totally insolvent, the defendant cannot ask (against his own plan of making up accounts involving Confederate currency) that the investment be recognized for more than enough to cover the value of the said Confederate currency to the firm of W. A. Moore & Co., with interest to the date of the investment, to wit, $1621.67. With the exception of the Smarr note, I am satisfied the arrangement to secure the legacy was the best that presented itself to the defendant, aside from involving himself and his brothers personally, and even in the case of that note he acted with good motives, of course, as in the other case. I have nothing to do with the legal question whether the investments were proper, within the meaning of the will. Defendant's account as trustee of Mrs. Fickling is hereto attached, marked Exhibit F 2.

*256

Upon exceptions to this report, the Circuit judge filed the following decree:

These causes were tried together and came before me on exceptions by plaintiffs to the report of the referee, to whom it had been referred to take the testimony, state the accounts of the defendant, as executor under the will of J. S. Moore, deceased, and as trustees for plaintiff, and to report any special matter.

*257

*The will of the testator, John S. Moore, upon which these actions are founded, provides, inter alia, as follows: I will and bequeath unto Theodore A., Samuel R. and William A. Moore, in trust for my granddaughters, Amanda J. Springs, Laura B. Springs and Buena V. Springs, each $10,000, when they arrive at the age of eighteen years old, for and during their natural lives; and should either of them die, then to her issue; but if either die leaving no issue alive, then to her surviving sisters or their surviving issue forever. * * * My sons, trustees as aforesaid, may, if they deem it necessary and prudent, vest the above legacies in stocks or other property for the use and benefit of my said granddaughters severally, but the property so obtained to be held by said trustees upon and subject to the same terms and conditions aforesaid.

The testator died in 1859, and the defendant, S. R. Moore, alone qualified as executor, and assumed the trusts created under the will. The plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, one of the beneficiaries of this trust, attained the age of eighteen years on October 18th, 1862, and the plaintiff, Buena V. Fickling, another beneficiary, attained said age on March 24th, 1865.

The testator seems to have been possessed at the time of his death of very considerable estate, both real and personal, and largely in excess of what was necessary to provide for all the legacies mentioned in said will. Besides he held an interest of one-fourth part in a mercantile firm conducted under the name of J. S. Moore & Sons, of which the testator and the three sons named in the will are the partners, each to the extent of one-fourth part.

No part of testator's estate was sold by the executor, and it suffered serious depreciation in consequence of the emancipation of slaves after the war and the loss of debts due. Shortly after the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, reached the age of eighteen years, to wit, on October 18th, 1862, the defendant claimed to have set apart sundry notes payable to the firm of J. S. Moore & Sons, of the estimated value of $10,000, in satisfaction of her legacy, and as an investment for her use under the terms of the will. And on January 1st, 1865, sundry other notes, payable to said firm and to the firm of W. A. Moore & Co.,

*258

(in which *testator had no interest), of the like value, were claimed to have been set apart by the executor in satisfaction of the legacy of the plaintiff, Buena V. Fickling, and as an investment for her use under said will.

These alleged investments are attacked by plaintiffs and sought to be sustained by the defendant. The referee reports that these notes were set apart in good faith and computes the amount collected on each of the parcels of notes, and charges the defendant with the amounts actually realized upon said notes and interest as satisfaction in full of the legacies. The corpus realized for the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, from said notes is computed at $4255.69, and that realized for the plaintiff, Buena V. Fickling, from the notes set apart for her is computed at $2706.66 as of January 1st, 1865. The remaining estate of the testator in the hands of his executor, after deducting commissions, and including the allowance of sundry credits hereinafter mentioned, is reported by the referee at $29,053.72.

I cannot hold that the setting aside of these notes for the respective plaintiffs amounted to a satisfaction of the legacies; nor was it such an investment, under the will, of their respective shares as can be sustained.

It appears that neither of the beneficiaries was consulted as to the alleged investments, nor were they informed thereof, nor was any return filed stating such investment. That the notes were payable one day after date and were all over due at the time they were set apart; that there was no endorsement on any or either of them indicating a transfer to the trust estate; that the notes were without security and the members of the firm continued to treat the notes as partnership property long afterwards by putting them in suit and proving them against the estates of the debtors in the names of the original payees. One of the notes claimed to have been set apart for the plaintiff, Mrs. Fickling, was a note of over $6000, dated in May, 1863, and was admitted to have been in consideration of confederate currency at that time loaned. It was afterwards proved in bankruptcy by the defendant in the name of W. A. Moore & Co. against the estate of the debtor and alleged in the proof to have been worth only its value in such currency at the time it *was made. It was alleged by the defendant that at the time these notes were set apart an entry was made in a private book in defendant's possession, in which a list of notes due the firm was entered, showing an appropriation to the trust estates of the notes in question. Accepting this as true, it cannot alter the effect of the parties afterwards dealing with the notes as their own. Under this state of facts, I would find difficulty in holding that there had been such an appropriation of these notes to the trust estates as to distinctly make them out as trust property, even were I able to overcome the more serious obstacle to sustaining such an investment as one authorized by law. I am therefore compelled, both as to matters of law and fact, to hold that there had been no investment of the legacies of these plaintiffs by the defendant as trustee pursuant to the directions contained in the will.

*259

Exception is also taken by plaintiffs to an item of credit claimed by defendant as executor in the sum of $3181.99 and interest, alleged to be a disbursement on behalf of testator's estate in payment of an account to J. S. Moore & Sons for the maintenance of Miss A. J. Springs, another of the granddaughters, prior to her attaining the age of eighteen years.

The referee concluded that the weight of testimony is in favor of sustaining this account as a proper voucher up to the time that Miss Springs reached the age of eighteen years, when her legacy vested. He allows defendant credit for $1698.46 and interest thereon from the date of the alleged payment, being that part of the account which accrued prior to her attaining the age of eighteen years. After a careful consideration of the testimony, I am compelled to differ from the referee on this point, and to disallow the credit in the account of the defendant as executor. Exception is further taken to the allowance of commissions to the defendant, both as executor of the estate of the testator and as trustee for plaintiffs. The testimony is conclusive that he filed no returns as executor, and it seemed to be a matter of question whether he ever filed an inventory of the estate of testator in the proper office. Under this state of facts the law is imperative, and the defendant's commissions, as executor, cannot be allowed. He is entitled, however, to his proper *commissions as trustee on the amount of funds actually received and appropriated to the trust estates, and to the extent of the latter the plaintiff's exceptions are overruled.

*260

The referee omitted to charge the defendant with the appraised value of certain railroad and other stocks belonging to the testator. The subsequent appropriation of these stocks among the family of testator seems to me to forbid the view taken by the referee, and I hold that the defendant should be charged therewith. Exceptions were also taken by the plaintiffs to sundry items of credit in defendant's account as executor for notes paid in behalf of testator's estate, the allegations being that, although sundry of these notes were signed by the testator, they were given for money borrowed and put in the firm of J. S. Moore & Sons, and that their payment after testator's death should have been charged to this firm and not to the estate of testator. While there is some testimony that creates a doubt in my mind upon these points, I do not see sufficient force in it to cause me to overrule the decision of the referee allowing defendant these credits. It appears from the report of the referee that $3000 of the estate of Laura B. Davidson was invested by consent on December 13th, 1871, in a note and life policy of her husband. Also, that all the payments made by the trustee, with interest thereon to January 1st, 1879, including interest on the above $3000 to same date, amount to $6074. As this mode of accounting by the referee has not been objected to by either party, I shall follow it, though not strictly accurate. The account will then stand thus: * * *

It is, therefore, adjudged that the plaintiff, Laura B. Davidson, do recover of the defendant, Samuel R. Moore, personally and as executor of the estate of John A. Moore, deceased, the sum of $4084.92. It further appears from the report of the referee that all the payments made Buena V. Fickling by the trustee, with interest thereon to January 1st, 1879, amount to $5355.72. As this mode of accounting by the referee has not been objected to by either party, I shall follow it, though not strictly accurate. The account will then stand thus: * * *

It is, therefore, adjudged that the plaintiff, Buena V. Fickling, do recover of the defendant, Samuel R. Moore, deceased, the sum *of $2704.65. The views I entertain upon the law and facts of these cases make a further inquiry into the amount of the assets of the estate of John S. Moore, deceased, now or formerly in the hands of the defendant as executor, unnecessary.

*261

I have herein decided all the points raised respecting this part of the case. The assets and the real estate were sufficient in amount, as I have heretofore found, to pay all debts and the legacies provided in the will. Hence I adjudge the recovery against the defendant personally and as executor. The endeavor of the trustee to sustain, as an investment, the notes received by him, his necessary antagonism growing out of this litigation, and his antagonistic attitude towards cestuis' que trust claims under him, without any impeachment of his integrity of purpose or good faith, make him an improper person to be entrusted longer with the trust estates, unless he enter into bonds to secure the forthcoming of the same, as required by the provisions of the will of the testator, and the payment of the same annually to the cestuis que trust.

It is, therefore, adjudged and decreed that the defendant forthwith pay over to the clerk of this court the sum of $7,000, as the corpus of the trust estate of Laura B. Davidson now in his hands; also the sum of $10,000, the corpus of the trust estate of Buena V. Fickling, unless he, the said defendant, do give bonds to the said clerk, each with two good sureties, one in the penal sum of $14,000, and the other in the penal sum of $20,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duty as trustee of Laura B. Davidson and of Buena V. Fickling, respectively, in accordance with the provision of the will of John S. Moore, deceased. It is further adjudged and decreed that the plaintiffs, Laura B. Davidson and Buena V. Fickling, do respectively recover from the defendant, Samuel R. Moore, personally, as executor as aforesaid, their costs and disbursements in these actions, to be taxed by the clerk of this court. It is ordered that it be referred to Charles E. Spencer, Esq., the referee herein, to report a proper person in the case of each trust estate, to be appointed trustee of such estate respectively; and that upon the appointment of such persons by this court, and their qualification as such trustees and giving bonds, as hereinbefore specified, as the condition for the *defendant to retain the management of the trust estate, the clerk of the court do pay over to such trustees the corpus of the estates that may have been paid over to him by the defendant in pursuance of this decree.

*262

The defendant excepted to this decree upon the following grounds:

1. For error in holding that, both as matters of law and fact, there had been no investments of the legacies by the defendant as trustee, pursuant to the directions contained in the will.

2. For error in holding that the members of the firm of J. S. Moore & Sons continued to treat the notes as partnership property, because, in bringing suit and proving them against the estate of debtors, the names of the payees were used, though the same was done for the benefit of the plaintiffs and the trustee charged himself with all the collections made.

3. For error in holding that said notes were only entered in a "private book" in defendant's possession, when the evidence is uncontradicted that the entry was made at the date of the investments in a "firm book" open to inspection, and in utterly ignoring the positive evidence of J. A. McLean, P. J., as to the investment for Mrs. Davidson, and Exhibit A, filed with answer.

4. Because, if the investments were not valid, then his Honor should have decreed that the survivors of J. S. Moore & Sons be first refunded out of the estate of testator, the amounts, with interest, collected (on the notes set apart) and expended for the benefit of the legatees.

5. For error in excluding the credit of $1698.46 and interest (allowed by the referee in his report,) contrary to the overbearing weight of the evidence.

6. For error in charging the defendant with the appraised value of the railroad stock and iron stock.

7. For error in allowing a right in plaintiffs to object to defendant's commissions as executor.

8. For error in excluding defendant's commissions as executor on amounts to be paid.

9. For error in holding that the assets and the real estate in the hands of the defendant as executor, were sufficient in amount *to pay all debts and the legacies provided in the will, when the uncontradicted evidence shows to the contrary.

*263

10. Because, while the balance of the estate after paying debts, as reported by the referee up to January 1st, 1879, (viz., $29,053.-72,) in addition to the appraised value of the railroad and iron stocks and interest, executor's commissions and interest thereon, the item of $1698.46 and interest, only aggregate up to January 1st, 1879, $43,403.16, the three legacies and interest to said date amount to over $60,000.

11. For error in decreeing that Laura Davidson recover of the defendant $4084.72, and Buena V. Fickling $2704.66, when it appears from the referee's report and the overbearing weight of the testimony, that each is in debt to the defendant for advances of income.

12. For error in decreeing against the defendant personally, as well as executor, as to debt, costs and disbursements.

13. For error in decreeing the removal of the defendant as trustee, though his integrity and good faith are unimpeached.

14. Because the plaintiffs have realized more, both in corpus and income, than they could have done had the investments been postponed until the executor had paid the debts of the testator.

15. Because the decree is in conflict with law, equity and the evidence, and entails results never contemplated by the testator, and contrary to the intent and purposes of the will.

Upon these exceptions defendant appealed to this court.

[For subsequent opinion, see 22 S. C. 92.]

Mr. W. B. Wilson, for appellant.

Messrs. J. H. Rion and J. F. Hart, contra.

October 18th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. These cases depending upon the same principles, were heard together on Circuit, and the appeals will be considered together here.

The conclusion of the Circuit judge, that the investments of the trust funds claimed to have been made by the appellant, cannot be allowed, is so fully sustained by his reasoning that it *would be difficult for us to add anything to it. These cases differ materially from the case of Bolling v. Child, MS. decision filed March 5th, 1879, which has been cited by the counsel for the appellant. There the executor, who was also trustee, in pursuance of the directions of the will, had sold the whole estate and converted it into "well-secured" notes, and the court said that the executor having, as trustee, simply received the share of the cestui que trust "in the incidental assets in which the estate consisted, from which this share was derived, and allowed the investment to remain as it was, in notes, which both the referee and Circuit judge have found to have been then well secured, and to have become worthless only by reason of the results of the war and other causes over which the trustee had no control, and for which, therefore, he was not responsible, it is difficult to conceive of any principle of law or equity upon which the trustee could be held liable." In that case the property really given to the trustee for the benefit of the cestui que trust was, practically, the very notes which were in question, for the testator had directed his executor to sell his whole estate and divide the proceeds into four equal shares, to be held by the executor in trust for certain persons named. Here, however, the testator did not direct a sale of his estate, and it was not, in fact, sold, but he simply gives pecuniary legacies to the ex ecutors in trust for his granddaughters, the wives of the plaintiffs, and directs that the executors "may, if they deem it necessary and prudent, vest the above legacies in stocks or other property," and then gives the remainder of his estate to his three sons, who were also appointed executors. So that, practically, he said to his sons, "I give you all of my property, charged with the payment of my debts and these pecuniary legacies, and you may either continue debtors to my granddaughters for the amount of the legacies given to them, or, if you think it best to do so, you may invest the amount of these legacies in stocks or other property." If the executor, who alone qualified, chose, as he claims to have done, to adopt the latter alternative, his conduct in making the investment must be tested by the same rules as would apply in the case of any other trustee whose duty it was to invest trust funds. So tested, there cannot be a doubt but that these investments must be dis*allowed. The notes in which it is claimed the investments were made were not notes constituting a part of the testator's estate, specially given for the benefit of the cestui que trust, as in the case of Bolling v. Child, and which the executor, in his capacity as trustee, simply allowed to remain in the same form in which they came into his hands. Certainly the testator never had any interest in the note of Smarr to W. A. Moore & Co., and even the note to J. S. Moore & Sons did not constitute any part of the estate of the testator, for, upon his death, these notes became the property of the survivors of that concern, and the only claim that the estate of the testator had was against the survivors for an account. The transaction, then, simply amounted to this—that the executor, acting as trustee, purchased notes from third persons, many of which were past due and entirely unsecured, as an investment of the trust funds, and did not even take the precaution of having such notes legally transferred to him as trustee, but, on the contrary, left them in the hands and under the control of the payees, who continued to deal with them, in some respects at least, as their own property, and if disaster had overtaken the payees it might have proved a very difficult matter to rescue such notes from the creditors of the payees. Such a transaction cannot, certainly, be sustained as a proper investment of trust funds.

*264

*265

As to the appellant's fourth exception to the decree of the Circuit judge, we think, the investments being disallowed, the best way to make up the accounts is to treat the notes claimed to have been set aside as investments as continuing to be the property of J. S. Moore & Sons, for all of which the survivors should account, in order to ascertain the interest of the testator therein, and that such interest so ascertained should be charged to the executor as part of the assets of the testator's estate, and that any payments made to the legatees, whether such payments were made from collections on such notes, or from other sources, should be credited to the trustee in his accounts as such. The result will be that all money which may have been collected on these notes will be regarded as belonging to J. S. Moore & Sons, of which the testator's estate would only be entitled to one-fourth, and if the estate has already got the benefit of more than that *proportion of such money, its interest in the other assets of the partnership will be reduced to the extent of what the estate has already got the benefit of exceeds such one-fourth. This, it seems to us, would practically effect what we understand to be the object of that exception.

*266

We are unable to discover any sufficient reason for overruling the finding of fact by the referee in regard to the credit of $169S.-46, allowed the executor for the expense incurred in the support of Miss A. J. Springs up to the time she attained the age of eighteen years. It is true that the testimony upon this point is somewhat conflicting, but the referee, who had the witnesses before him, has reached the conclusion that the weight of the testimony was in favor of allowing the credit, and we think his conclusion should have been adopted, unless it was shown, as we do not think it has been, that his conclusion could not be sustained by the testimony. Dewitt v. Atkinson, 6 S. C. 140. The judgment of the Circuit Court is, in this respect, reversed, and the report of the referee, as to this matter, is confirmed.

Appellant's sixth exception cannot be sustained. The executor certainly undertook to dispose of the stock in question, and he has not accounted for the proceeds of it. He must, therefore, in the absence of any other proof as to its value, be charged with that fixed by the appraisers.

Upon the subject of the commissions claimed by the executor, there is no doubt that the Circuit judge was right in disallowing commissions on all receipts and disbursements prior to the adoption of the general statutes, upon the ground that the executor had failed to make annual returns, (Lay v. Lay, 10 S. C. 208,) but inasmuch as the act of 1789 was repealed by the general statutes, and the provisions enacted in lieu thereof do not contain a clause declaring that a failure to make annual returns shall work a forfeiture of the executor's commission, it is clear that the executor is entitled to commissions on all his receipts and disbursements since the adoption of the general statutes; and it is equally clear that the executor should, under the case of Gee v. Hicks, Rich. Eq. Cas. 5, be allowed commissions on the final balance. In these respects, therefore, the judgment of the Circuit Court is modified so as to conform to these views.

*267

*How the accounts will stand after these modifications, it will be for the Circuit Court to ascertain, and until that is done it is impossible to say whether the decree should be against the executor personally as well as in his representative character. If it shall appear that assets of the estate of the testator, including therein the real estate, and excluding the value of the slaves, have come or ought to have come into the hands of the executor, sufficient to enable him to pay the debts and the legacies, then the decree should be against him personally as well as in his representative character; but if the contrary appears, then the decree should be against him personally, only to the extent of the assets which have or ought to have come into his hands.

The reasons assigned by the Circuit judge for a change of trustee are quite sufficient, and in this respect the decree below is affirmed.

The cases are remanded to the Circuit Court for such further proceedings as may be necessary or proper to carry out the views herein announced.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 267

(Case No. 935.)

IVY v. CLAWSON.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Depositions ⟸88.]

Testimony taken by plaintiff before the clerk under the act of 1872, (15 Stat. 41,) under an order made at chambers before suit commenced, is inadmissible upon the trial of the cause, although the original defendant, since deceased, had notice of the application for the order, and was present at the examination, and cross-examined the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. §§ 17, 234–236½, 242–245; Dec. Dig. ⟸88.]

[2. Equity ⟸381.]

The Circuit judge may decree contrary to the findings of a jury upon an issue of fact submitted to them in a suit in equity.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Small v. Small, 16 S. C. 64.

For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. § 816; Dec. Dig. ⟸381.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⟸1014.]

The findings of fact by a Circuit judge, reversing the verdict of a jury on an issue ordered out of chancery, sustained by this court.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ostendorff v. Brown, 15 S. C. 616; Peake v. Peake, 17 S. C. 427.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3995½; Dec. Dig. ⟸1014.]

[4. Trial ⟸388.]

[Cited in Rynerson v. Allison, 28 S. C. 85, 5 S. E. 218, to the point that the judge, sitting as chancellor, must give his own opinion on the issues involved.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 908–911, 915; Dec. Dig. ⟸388.]

Before Pressley, J., York, April, 1879.

*268

*This was an action commenced June 21st, 1876, by James M. Ivy against W. I. Clawson, and after the death of defendant in 1877, revived against T. W. Clawson and C. E. Spencer, his executors. The prayer of the complaint was for an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling the property of the plaintiff, (who derived title through Sadler,) under an execution of W. I. Clawson against said Sadler.

The Circuit decree is as follows:

W. I. Clawson, having paid a debt as surety of L. P. Sadler, entered judgment for it against him on April 4th, 1867. He then owned real estate near Rock Hill, and, wishing to sell it free from encumbrance, he offered to pay Clawson fifty per cent. of said judgment in full satisfaction, which offer Clawson refused. On February 12th, 1869, Sadler sold his land to Kerr & Roach, who next day sold it to plaintiff for full value. He did not know of Clawson's judgment—never heard of it until 1876; but Kerr & Roach knew of it. They agreed with Sadler to settle for it with Clawson out of the price they were to pay Sadler and account to him for the remainder. Whether they ever made such settlement is not proved, and Kerr, who is supposed to have made it, is dead. The only proof of any payment by him to Clawson is a credit on his execution of $303.54, on September 2d, 1870, which refers to a receipt given to Kerr at same time. Clawson's answer states that the full terms of that settlement were inserted in said receipt, but it has not been offered in evidence.

At the time of the alleged settlement the executors of Blair held a large judgment against Sadler, and against Clawson as surety. This judgment was pressed against the latter, and he was compelled to pay it by a decree entered in March, 1876. Just before that decree he commenced to renew his execution against Sadler, and the order for that was entered on April 8th, 1876. Soon after that plaintiff commenced this suit, and his first step was an order, May 17th, 1876, by Judge Mackey, at Lancaster to take the testimony of Sadler who was then very feeble, and soon after died. Clawson had notice of the application for said order, but did not appear when it was moved for; he, however, cross-examined Sadler when his testimony was *taken. It was ruled out as incompetent on the trial in this case because Clawson had died before, and plaintiff excepted to that ruling.

*269

The complaint in this case alleges that Clawson had agreed with Sadler to receive one-half of said judgment in full satisfaction, which sum he had paid; but Clawson had not satisfied the judgment, and was about to sell plaintiff's land to pay the same.

Defendant denies the alleged compromise; admits one which was to take effect in case he should not be required to pay any part of the Blair debt, and which had failed because he had been required to pay it.

The case was referred by Judge Mackey to a jury, which was to try the issue of fact whether there was an unconditional compromise or only one "upon condition." That issue was tried before Judge Aldrich, and the jury found for the plaintiff; but I see nothing in the testimony to sustain their verdict. There is no proof whatever of any compromise by Clawson, except the admission in his answer; nor is there a particle of proof of any payment on said judgment except his admission and the credit which he entered on his execution. That credit was nearly two years after the alleged compromise and the sale of the land by Sadler, and in February, 1876, he had due notice of the motion to renew the judgment and did not resist it. All these circumstances corroborate Clawson's answer, and would sustain it against pretty strong evidence to contradict it. I, therefore, cannot decree against it upon the mere verdict, which has no evidence to support it.

Plaintiff's prayer for injunction is refused; but Clawson's answer admits that his execution is subject to a deduction for a bill for supplies which Sadler held against him. The amount of that bill is not stated, but, added to the credit of September 2d, 1870, it would have made that payment one-half of the judgment debt. Let it be thus credited of that date, and then the executors of Clawson have leave to proceed on their execution for the remainder.

Plaintiff appealed.

*270

*Mr. W. B. Wilson, for appellant.

Mr. J. S. R. Thomson, contra.

November 5th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action in the nature of a suit in equity to enjoin the sale of a tract of land (which the plaintiff held through L. P. Sadler) under an execution which W. I. Clawson, the testator of defendants, had against the said Sadler. The facts are so clearly stated in the Circuit decree that it will be unnecessary to repeat them here. The plaintiff alleged that the judgment was settled by a compromise to take one-half in full satisfaction between Clawson, the plaintiff, and Sadler, the defendant in execution. The question of the alleged compromise had been referred to a jury under an issue ordered at a previous term of the court, and the jury had found that issue for the plaintiff. This verdict, as well as the whole testimony in the case, was considered by the Circuit judge, who held that there was nothing in the evidence to sustain the verdict, and refused to grant the injunction. The plaintiff appeals to this court on the following exceptions:

"1. Because the verdict having been rendered before Judge Aldrich, and not set aside, was conclusive of the issue of fact tried, and it is respectfully submitted that Judge Pressley erred in discarding said verdict.

"2. Because his Honor erred in excluding as competent, the testimony of L. P. Sadler.

"3. Because the testimony of Sadler having been taken in the judicial proceeding under oath, in writing, and in the presence of W. I. Clawson, who cross-examined him, the testimony so given should not have been excluded on account of the subsequent death of Clawson.

"4. Because his Honor having held on the trial that there was sufficient evidence of consideration to support the compromise if the same was made, should have decreed in favor of the plaintiff."

The last exception is founded on a misapprehension of the decree. The Circuit judge held nothing as to the consideration *of the alleged compromise. He held that there was no proof of any compromise except the answer of W. I. Clawson, which stated that it was conditional and the condition never performed.

*271

The second and third exceptions relate to the exclusion of the depositions of L. P. Sadler as to transactions and communications between him and Clawson. Sadler and Clawson were both living at the time Sadler made his depositions, but at the time of the trial were both dead. If Sadler had been living at the time of the trial—Clawson being dead—the testimony would have been inadmissible, whether it was read from the depositions taken de bene esse or delivered orally by the witness himself. 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 163. It is insisted, however, that the death of Sadler between the time the depositions were taken and the trial made them admissible. It will not be necessary to consider the question whether depositions competent at the time taken, but afterwards becoming incompetent by the death of one of the parties, will be again made competent by the death also of the witness. Aside from the objection to these depositions as obnoxious to the code, section 415, on account of the character of the testimony, they were not testimony at all. The record shows that they were taken under an order made at chambers, before the suit was instituted in which they were to be offered. They could not be regarded as testimony taken before the clerk under the act of 1872, (15 Stat. 41,) which authorizes testimony to be taken "in all civil causes or proceedings hereafter to be instituted or now pending or at issue, * * * upon the application of either party to such cause or proceeding." That is clearly after such cause or proceeding has been instituted. The order was not a commission under the seal of the court "in a suit pending in the Court of Common Pleas." Gen. Stat. 511. Nor was that order a judgment in an action to perpetuate testimony, as no such case was made. The depositions, taken without proper authority, were, therefore, not testimony, and might, on motion, have been suppressed. Besides, the plaintiff really suffered no injury, for, while the depositions, as such, were rejected, the judge allowed Wallace, the clerk, to testify as to the substance of the depositions made before him as statements made by Sadler in the presence of Clawson. These exceptions are overruled.

*272

*The first exception is "that the verdict of the jury should have been regarded as conclusive of the issue referred." Since the abolition of the Court of Equity in this state and the adoption of the system of administering both law and equity by the same court there has been a tendency to confusion in regard to the modes of procedure appropriate to the new system. The constitution recognizes "chancery cases" as distinct from law cases, and for several reasons, and especially in view of the difference in the functions of this court in reviewing appeals in the two classes of cases, it is important that they should be kept separate and distinct. The code of procedure abolishes the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, and declares that there shall be but one form of action. That, however, does not reach the underlying principles of equity, which are untouched, although the tribunal to administer them and the form of action are changed. The court and the judges being the same, and the jury always present, it requires an effort to avoid confounding the methods of proceeding in the two classes of cases. This is especially true in reference to the practice as to what was formerly called issues out of chancery to be tried before a jury in a law court. Feigned issues are abolished, but the same purpose is accomplished in another way. Simple orders for trial are substituted in their place. This court has lately had occasion to consider the subject in several cases, and has endeavored to settle the practice as near as may be in conformity with the practice of the late Court of Equity in this state. When a judge, sitting in what would have been called a suit in equity, orders an issue upon any question of fact, it is an interlocutory order made to enlighten his conscience, reserving the consideration of further questions in the cause until after the trial of the issue. That should be set down on what we may call the law side of the court, not as an ordinary case for a jury, but a submission, [see Rules of Circuit Courts, rule 28,] and the verdict should not be generally for plaintiff or for defendant, but specifically on the matter submitted, somewhat in the nature of a special verdict. The judge before whom the issue is tried does not hear a motion for a new trial, nor is judgment entered on the verdict, but it is reported, to be dealt with in connection with the whole case in *which the issue was ordered. The judge who hears it finally, sitting as Chancellor, is not required to regard the finding of the jury as conclusive of the fact submitted any more than he would the report of a referee, but, on the contrary, is bound to consider all the evidence in the whole case, including the finding and the evidence to support it, and pronounce his judgment accordingly. 2 Daniell's Ch. Prac. 1085; Thomasson v. Kennedy, 3 Rich. Eq. 440; Drayton v. Logan, 3 Strob. Eq. 37, note; R. R. Co. v. Toomer, 9 Rich. Eq. 270; Sullivan v. Thomas, 3 S. C. 547; Flinn & Hart v. Brown, 6 S. C. 209; Gadsden v. Whaley, 9 S. C. 147; Sloan v. Westfield, 11 S. C. 447; C., C. & A. R. R. Co. v. Earle, 12 S. C. 53. In the case last cited the court says: "The parties in what is commonly called an equity case, have a right to the opinion of the Circuit judge, notwithstanding his right to refer issues of fact to the jury for the purpose of enlightening his conscience, but the verdict of the jury is not to be accepted as the conclusion which is to control and govern the case, and through the medium of which the judgment is to be pronounced in favor of one side or the other."

*273

Upon the merits we cannot say that the decree of the Circuit judge was wrong. The plaintiff was in no way deceived. He incautiously purchased land without inquiry, against which there was a judgment open in the office. That was constructive notice of its existence as it stood. When, years after, he heard of it he instituted this proceeding to enjoin the judgment, alleging that, although it stood open, it was in fact canceled by a verbal compromise between Clawson, the plaintiff, and Sadler, the defendant in execution. In this issue he held the affirmative and was bound to show that the judgment was satisfied, and that too against the prima facies arising from the existence of the record. What proof did he make? He knew nothing about it himself, and Sadler was estopped from denying the legal existence of the judgment, as he had allowed it to be renewed against him without objection in 1876, long after it is alleged he settled it. Jackson v. Patrick, 10 S. C. 197.

The Circuit judge says: "There is no proof whatever of any compromise by Clawson except the admission in his answer." And the answer which contained the admission of a conditional *promise stated "that R. M. Kerr well understood said agreement—taking a receipt for a payment made, in which the terms of the agreement were expressed." That agreement, the only writing as to the terms of the promise, should have been produced or accounted for.

*274

The Circuit decree is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 274

(Case No. 936.)

BLACK v. ROSE.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Payment ⇦12.]

A receipt given by the clerk of the court, in March, 1863, for money (confederate) paid into court in a cause then pending under order passed in October, 1860, should not be set aside, there being no proof of irregularity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. ⇦12.]

[2. Tender ⇦26.]

Money paid into court, under its order, is payment and not tender. Rule 94, Miller's Compilation, construed.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Salinas & Son v. Ellis, 26 S. C. 345, 2 S. E. 121; Reynolds v. Price, 88 S. C. 537, 71 S. E. 51.

For other cases, see Tender, Cent. Dig. §§ 88–92, 95; Dec. Dig. ⇦26.]

[3. Payment ⇐14.]

The clerk received the payment in confederate currency. Held, that such payment could not be sealed. State v. Moseley, 10 S. C. 1; Wiseman & Finley v. Hunter, 14 Rich. Eq. 174, recognized and followed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. ⇐14.]

[4. Tender ⇐26.]

[Where a tender is followed by bringing the money into court, the defendant cannot be afterwards allowed to withdraw it from court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tender, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. ⇐26.]

Before Wallace, J., York, October, 1879.

This case is fully stated in the Circuit decree and opinion of this court. The Circuit decree is as follows:

This cause was commenced originally in 1860, as an action on a sealed note, in which Samuel A. Black was plaintiff, and William E. Rose and another were defendants. The defendants plead, among other things, failure of consideration in the note to the extent of $1600 of the principal thereof, and on October 13th, 1860, an order was passed by the court allowing the defendant to pay into court the amount admitted by him to be due the plaintiff and the costs accrued. On March 24th, 1863, this defendant paid to the clerk of the court $3495.04 in Confederate *money, the balance at that day due on the note, less the $1600; and also paid the costs. The clerk gave the defendant his receipt, stating that the money was paid in pursuance of the order of court. The plaintiff admitted, as of record, that there was a failure of consideration as to $1600 of the note, and asked judgment against this defendant for the amount of the balance which had been paid in Confederate currency, less the value of the Confederate money at the date of payment. The Circuit judge decreed for the plaintiff; on appeal, the Supreme Court set aside the decree, holding, among other things, that the question decided by the Circuit judge, as to the Confederate money not being payment, was foreign to the issues made by the pleadings, and that the receipt of the clerk was conclusive until set aside, and remanded the case. The case now comes before me on a motion to vacate the receipt of the clerk, the defendant not having complied with the order of 1860, in paying the clerk Confederate money in 1863, when the order passed in 1860 contemplated payment in good money. The motion must be refused; under the order of court, the defendant had the right to pay the money and the clerk was the proper party to receive and receipt for it, and this has been done. There is no charge of fraud or mistake—not anything of that character on account of which receipts are sometimes set aside; the only ground of complaint was that the payment was in Confederate currency. Payment in the currency has been frequently recognized by the Supreme Court of this state as proper when made to sheriffs and commissioners and masters, and I see no difference between payments made to those officers and to the clerk that could avail the plaintiff anything.

*275

The plaintiff's attorney declined to accept the Confederate money from the clerk after he had accepted it from defendant; but although the order was standing open for over two years, and the Confederate money was constantly depreciating in value, the plaintiff gave no warning to the clerk not to accept it. He has been pushing this case for many years, and not until this motion, sixteen years after money is paid by the defendant, is there any allegation against the regularity of the receipts from the clerk.

The case of State of South Carolina v.

*276

Moseley, 10 S. C. 1, is a *case in many circumstances resembling this, and seems to me to be conclusive of it.

For the reasons above stated, and on the authority of the case just cited and others, I hold that the motion must be dismissed, and it is so ordered, with $10 costs for defendant for the motion.

Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. J. H. Rion, for appellant.

Messrs. Hemphill & Hemphill, contra.

November 5th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action on a note for negro slaves, commenced in 1860, and has a long history, which is fully given in the judgment of the Circuit Court, and need not be repeated here, except so far as to make the ruling of this court intelligible. The defendant got an order to pay the money into court upon the usual conditions and in the usual form. The money was paid and the clerk of the court gave his receipt for it, stating—"This payment made in pursuance of the order of court in this case," precisely in accordance with the 94th rule of court, Miller's Compilation. The money was paid in Confederate currency, then (March, 1863), the only currency in use, and the plaintiff refused to accept it. Judge Mackey held that it was allowable to go behind the terms of the receipt and inquire into the value of the money paid, and, in effect, annulled the receipt, except to the extent of the value of the money at the time it was paid. The Supreme Court set aside the decision and ordered a new trial, declaring "that the clerk's certificate must be regarded as part of the record in the case, and, if erroneous, should have been corrected by a direct proceeding, on timely notice, grounded upon its irregularity. It was too late to raise that question on the trial of the cause, nor was that the proper place to consider it. The certificate was treated by the Circuit judge as if merely prima facie proof of the facts stated in it, whereas it was conclusive, so long as it was permitted to stand."

*277

*In such a "direct proceeding" to vacate a receipt given by S. E. Moore, officially as clerk, he or his representative should have been made a party; but it does not appear from the record that the objection was made at the trial. The question was made simply by motion to vacate and set aside the receipt. The Circuit judge entertained the motion, but refused to grant it. The plaintiff alleging error in that judgment, appeals to this court.

The exceptions may be condensed into two points of alleged error:

First. That the judge should have held that the delivery of money into court by the defendant, under an order allowing him to do so, was not payment, but a mere tender, and inoperative until accepted by the plaintiff; and, that being established, Second. That he should have held that the plaintiff had been guilty of no such laches in attacking the receipt as should now preclude him.

The only question before us, in this phase of the case, is as to the correctness of Judge Wallace's rulings in regard to the alleged irregularity in the clerk's certificate of payment. That certificate was given by the proper officer, as the court directed, precisely in the form prescribed by the rule of court, without fraud, accident or mistake, and we agree with the Circuit judge that nothing was proved tending to show irregularity in it, and that it should not be set aside. McDowall & Black v. Le Maitre, 2 McC. 320; Dobbins v. Perry, 1 Rich. 33; Wheeler v. Alexander, 1 Strob. 61.

But, if we understand the bearing of the argument made, it was not directed to the point of setting aside the receipt itself, but to show that it was a mere tender, and in that way set aside its legal effect as a payment. If we are correct, that is renewing the controversy involved in the first appeal. The question as to the legal effect of a payment of money into court, under an order, was substantially decided by this court when it held that the receipt was "conclusive" until set aside. If the law were as now claimed it would have been entirely unnecessary to make the question of the irregularity of the receipt, which, in that case, would not have stood in the way. The payment of money into *court, under order, is certainly more than a simple tender. A tender is an offer to pay by the debtor before suit, and cannot be made after suit brought. It is purely ex parte. If it is not accepted the debtor must retain his money, and if established on plea, the only effect is to stop interest thenceforward on the amount tendered. But a payment into court is different. It is not ex parte, but done by order of the court, which represents both parties, and whose orders bind the plaintiff as well as the defendant. The money paid in is for the plaintiff, and the possession of it cannot be resumed by the debtor. In the further prosecution of the case that much is stricken from the record, whether the plaintiff takes out the money or not.

*278

The rule of court required that if the plaintiff should take the money out of court, the clerk shall, in the "receipt to be taken for the money, require such plaintiff to say, for information of defendant, whether he accepts the money in full discharge of the action, or takes it with the intention of proceeding further." This does not mean that the effect of the payment was to depend upon his acceptance or non-acceptance of it. The effect was fixed by the payment, but as he had the right to be dissatisfied with the amount and go for a larger sum, this statement was required simply for the information of the defendant whether he accepted the money in full discharge. That is, if he claimed more, the case went on—the controversy being limited to the excess so claimed, but if he claimed no more in amount, that was an end of it. Fishburne v. Sanders, 1 N. & McC. 242; Broughton v. Richardson, 2 Rich. 64; Bank of Columbia v. Southerland, 3 Cowen 336; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. 431; Murray v. Bethune, 1 Wend. 191; Boyden v. Moore, 5 Mass. 367. In this last-cited case the rule is stated clearly in these words: "The bringing money into court is a practice adopted to relieve the defendant against an unexpected suit for money which he is willing to pay, but which he has not tendered to the plaintiff before the commencement of the suit. After the defendant had brought in as much money as he thinks proper, and the plaintiff has refused to receive it in satisfaction, the defendant is entitled to have the same considered as a payment made on the day on which it was brought, and he is answerable only for further damages."

*279

*Accepting this view of the legal effect of a payment into court under order, the plaintiff further contends that whilst the receipt is regular and formal and cannot be set aside for irregularity, yet the clerk received Confederate money, which was not a legal tender; that he had no right to do so and give a receipt as for good money, and on that account the receipt should be set aside, at least in part, so as to make it correspond in amount with the real value of the money at the time it was received. In other words, that the payment should be scaled. Upon this point the case is identical with that of State v. Moseley, 10 S. C. 1. In that case a sheriff, who had an execution to collect, received Confederate money and gave a receipt for it, and the question was whether he had a right to do so. It was held that he had the right. So far as the right to receive Confederate money is concerned, we can see no difference between the sheriff in that case and the clerk in this. They were both public officers and received the money in discharge of a duty imposed. There, as here, there was no notice not to receive Confederate money, which was the only medium of exchange at the time. It is unnecessary to repeat the argument, which is so well stated in that case as follows: "The true foundation for the doctrine is the implied consent of the creditor. For when bank or other notes constitute the only currency, and is in universal use as such, while courts will still recognize the constitutional right of the creditor, when asserted at the proper time, to demand payment of his debt in that which is established by law as a legal tender, they will, in the absence of any such assertion, conclude that he assented to or authorized payment to be made in that currency, which every one regarded and used as money."

This case is stronger than that of Moseley in one important particular. That was not a proceeding to cancel the receipt and make the debtor pay again, as this is, but to make the sheriff and his sureties liable for a wrongful act on the part of the sheriff in receiving the money and giving receipt for it. In that case it seemed to be taken for granted that the receipt was a discharge. This court has always sustained the payment when the question was made by the obligor who produced a receipt from the proper person, and has in all cases refused to allow payments to be sealed *under the act of 1869, (Gen. Stat. 310,) for the reason that they were not executory, but executed. Austin v. Kinsman, 13 Rich. Eq. 265; McPherson v. Lynah, 14 Rich. Eq. 121; Wiseman & Finley v. Hunter, Id. 174; Fluitt v. Nelson, 15 Rich. 11; Mayer v. Mordecai, 1 S. C. 383 [7 Am. Rep. 26]; Johnstone v. Crooks, 3 S. C. 202.

*280

In the case above cited of Wiseman & Finley v. Hunter, Chancellor Dunkin said: "The question is not whether bank bills or Confederate treasury notes, or anything other than gold or silver, is a lawful tender in payment of debts, but whether where a debtor has paid to an officer of the court in these funds a debt which he was required to collect, and taken his receipt in discharge of the same, the court will, at this distance of time, and at the instance of a party in the cause, repudiate the act of its officer and set up the claim against the debtor. It concerns the interest of the public that there should be an end of litigation. Where a transaction has been consummated and rights vested, the repose of society demands that it should not be opened."

This case has been prosecuted for years with extraordinary energy and perseverance, in the view, probably, that it was a hardship that the plaintiff should be bound by the act of the clerk in receiving for him Confederate money, which became worthless. This court cannot prevent—may regret—but must not be controlled by what appear to be hardships. We cannot, however, shut our eyes to the fact in this case, that if the money became worthless, so did the property which was received in exchange for it. Both were lost from the same cause.

We see no error in the judgment of the Circuit judge. The judgment is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *281

*(Case No. 937.)

S. & A. RAILROAD COMPANY v. EZELL. SAME v. CATHCART. SAME v. NASH.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Railroads ⟸14.]

By the first section of an act of incorporation, a railroad company were declared to "be, and they are hereby created, a body politic and corporate;" and in a subsequent section it was enacted "that when $100,000 shall have been subscribed, and $1 on each share shall have been paid in, the said company may organize and proceed to work." Held, that this requirement was sufficiently complied with when $100,000 were subscribed, and a sum in gross paid in equal to $1 upon every share subscribed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 27–30; Dec. Dig. ⟸14.]

[2. Corporations ⟸16.]

Held, further, that a failure to comply strictly with these requirements would not have affected the corporate existence, but would have been an irregularity only, which could not defeat the right of the corporation to recover a stock subscription.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. ⟸16.]

Before Mackey, J., Richland, November, 1879.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Rion, Lyles & Barron, for appellants.

Mr. W. A. Clark, contra.

November 9th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. The three cases above stated, presenting the same state of facts, and governed by the same principles of law, were tried together on Circuit and will be considered together here.

They were actions brought by the plaintiff to recover the amounts of the subscriptions alleged to have been made by the defendants to the capital stock of the Spartanburg and Asheville Railroad Company. That company was chartered by an act passed February 20th, 1873, (15 Stat. 346), which, in its first *section, declared that certain persons therein named, together with their associates, successors and assigns, "be and they are hereby created a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of the Spartanburg and Asheville Railroad Company, and by that name may sue and be sued, * * * make contracts," &c. In the eighth section of that act it is, amongst other things, provided "that when one hundred thousand dollars shall have been subscribed, and one dollar on each share shall have been paid in, the said company may organize and proceed to work." On March 25th, 1874, a meeting of the corporators was held, at which it was duly ascertained that there was over $100,000 of bona fide subscriptions to the capital stock of the company, whereupon an aggregate amount equal to $1 per share of the amount subscribed was paid in, though each subscriber did not pay $1 on each share subscribed for by him, the defendants in the above-stated cases, with perhaps others, never having paid anything. The company was then organized and proceeded to work, and had constructed and put into operation a very considerable portion of the road before the commencement of these actions, more than $500,000 having been subscribed to the capital stock and paid in, leaving, at the time of the trial below, of the total amount subscribed only about $20,000 unpaid, of which the subscriptions alleged to have been made by defendants form a part.

*282

The Circuit judge charged the jury, among other things, that in order to enable the plaintiffs to maintain these actions, it "must show that the corporation had strictly complied with all of the conditions prescribed by the charter as precedent to its organization; that is, the plaintiff must show that before the organization of the company one hundred thousand dollars had been bona fide subscribed to its capital stock, and the one dollar per share, prescribed by section 8 of the charter, must have been paid by each subscriber upon each share by him subscribed, to the amount of at least two thousand shares, before the corporation could be legally organized so as to have a right of action against subscribers upon their subscriptions; the payment in gross of the two thousand dollars by several of the subscribers for themselves and others, not being sufficient." To this portion of the charge exception was duly taken, and the only question for us *to consider is, whether there was any error in the charge as above recited.

*283

It will be observed that the act chartering this company, unlike many other railroad charters, declares the persons named in the first section, with their associates, successors and assigns, a corporation with the powers usually conferred upon such bodies, among which was the power to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, and hence, when the defendants signed the paper set out in the "case," by which they bound themselves to take a specified number of shares "in the capital stock of the Spartanburg and Asheville Railroad Company, to be paid for when called upon, according to the regulations of said company," it is difficult to see what element of a valid contract was wanting. If the act chartering this company had, like some others, for example the act chartering the Charlotte and South Carolina Railroad Company, simply authorized the formation of "a corporate company, * * * which company, when formed in compliance with the conditions herein prescribed, shall have corporate existence as a body politic," and if one of the conditions prescribed had been here, as it was there, "that on each share of the stock subscribed for the subscriber shall pay to the commissioners who shall take the same, the sum of five dollars, * * * and on non-payment of said installment the subscription shall be void;" and if the charter of this company had provided, as the charter of that one did, "that whenever the sum of three hundred thousand dollars of said capital stock shall be subscribed for in manner aforesaid, the subscribers, their executors, administrators or assigns, shall be and they are hereby declared to be incorporated into a company, by the name and style of the Charlotte and South Carolina Railroad Company," &c., we could very readily understand why it should be held, as it was held in the case of C. & S. C. R. R. Co. v. Blakely, 3 Strob. 245, "that the mere signing of a paper by the defendant agreeing to take a certain number of shares of the stock of the company, without paying five dollars on each share at the time of subscribing, would not enable the company, after it was formed, to recover from the subscriber the amount so subscribed." In that case there was no legal person in existence at the time the alleged contract was *made, capable of contracting or being contracted with—no person capable of bringing a suit to enforce a contract—for the act did not constitute any particular persons a corporation, but only provided that those who had subscribed in the manner therein prescribed, should have the right to form a corporation after a certain amount had been subscribed in that manner; which corporation might, after it was thus formed, have the power to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, &c. Here, on the other hand, the act, in its very first section, created the corporation and gave it all the necessary powers to enable it to make contracts and enforce them by suit. In that case, too, the act expressly provided that, upon non-payment of the cash installment required the subscription should be void, while here there is no such provision. But the differences between the two cases are so very well marked as scarcely to justify further comment.

*284

The real question to be considered here is, first, whether the charter required the payment of $1 on each share, by each subscriber, to the amount of at least two thousand shares, as a condition precedent to the organization of the company; and, second, if so, whether a failure to comply strictly with this provision was not a mere irregularity in its organization, which would not have the effect of defeating the right of the plaintiff company to maintain these actions.

As to the first question, it is very obvious that the charter does not, in express terms, require that $1 per share shall be paid by each subscriber. To give the section that meaning it would be necessary to interpolate into the statute the words italicised. The language of the section is "that whenever one hundred thousand dollars shall have been subscribed, and one dollar on each share shall have been paid in, [by each subscriber,] the said company may organize and proceed to work." It does not declare by whom the $1 per share is to be paid, and we do not feel at liberty to interpolate words into the statute necessary to make such a declaration.

But, even if the statute did contain those words, it is manifest that there was a mere irregularity in the organization of the company which could not possibly have the effect of defeating the plaintiff's right of action upon a valid contract entered into *by the defendant previous to the formal organization of the company.

*285

In the case of Chubb v. Upton, 95 U. S. 667 [24 L. Ed. 523], the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It is settled by the decisions of the courts of the United States and by the decisions of many of the state courts, that one who contracts with an acting corporation cannot defend himself against a claim on such contract in a suit by the corporation by alleging the irregularity of its organization, [citing the cases.] The same principle applies to the case of a subscription to the capital stock in an organization which has attempted irregularly to create itself into a corporation and has acted as such."

In the case of Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway Co. v. Bassett, 20 Minn. 535; S. C., 18 Am. 376, the charter of the company provided that its capital stock should be divided into shares of $100 each, and $5 on each share should be paid at the time of subscribing. The action was brought to recover the amount of ten shares subscribed for by the defendant, upon which he had paid nothing at the time of subscribing, and his defence was rested upon that ground. It was held that he was liable. It is true that this case is not precisely in point, inasmuch as there the defendant subscribed after the incorporation and organization of the company; but it is, nevertheless, useful as affording a review of the authorities, in which it is shown that the cases relied upon to sustain such a defence are cases in which the statute required the payment to be made as a condition of corporate existence, while as we have seen, in the cases now before the court, the corporate existence of the plaintiff is derived directly from the express declaration of the legislative will contained in the first section of the act, and is not dependent upon any conditions whatsoever; and that the provision requiring the payment of $1 per share is, at most, a mere condition affecting, not the corporate existence of the plaintiff, but merely the regularity of its organization.

The judgment of the Circuit Court in each of the above-stated cases is set aside, and in each a new trial is ordered.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *286

*(Case No. 938.)

COLEMAN v. CHESTER.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Frauds, Statute of ⇐74.]

An agreement for the sale of land may not be proved by parol, but an agreement to compensate the owner of land for expenses incurred by him, by reason of the illegal appropriation of his land by a municipal corporation to the uses of widening a street, is not within the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 124; Dec. Dig. ⇐74.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇐855.]

The judgment of a Circuit Court based upon untenable conclusions, will not be disturbed, if it can be sustained upon any other grounds.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Callaham v. Robinson, 30 S. C. 255, 9 S. E. 120, 3 L. R. A. 497.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3406; Dec. Dig. ⇐855.]

[3. Witnesses ⇐153.]

In an action brought against a town, the plaintiff is not prevented by the proviso to section 415 of the code of procedure from testifying as to transactions between himself and a former intendant of the town, acting for the corporation, but at the time of trial deceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 660; Dec. Dig. ⇐153.]

[4. Municipal Corporations ⇐744.]

A municipal corporation is not liable to an action for damages for a trespass committed by its officers under the authority of the corporation, unless made so by statute. White v. City Council, 2 Hill, 571, recognized and followed, semble.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Black v. City of Columbia, 19 S. C. 413, 422, 45 Am. Rep. 785; Young v. City Council of Charleston, 20 S. C. 118, 47 Am. Rep. 827; Gibbes v. Town Council of Beaufort, 20 S. C. 218; Chapman v. City Council of Charleston, 28 S. C. 380, 6 S. E. 158, 13 Am. St. Rep. 681; Matheny v. Aiken, 68 S. C. 174, 182, 183, 47 S. E. 56; Bryant v. City Council of Orangeburg, 70 S. C. 140, 49 S. E. 229; Irvine v. Town of Greenwood, 89 S. C. 514, 72 S. E. 228, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 363; Parish v. Town of Yorkville, 96 S. C. 26, 79 S. E. 635.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1565; Dec. Dig. ⇐744.]

[5. Municipal Corporations ⇐860.]

But it may bind itself, by contract, to pay for benefits derived from such acts of trespass, or to compensate the party injured, if he would refrain from prosecuting a remedy given to him by statute.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Nurnberger v. Town of Barnwell, 42 S. C. 160, 20 S. E. 14.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1815; Dec. Dig. ⟸860.]

Before Wallace, J., Chester, October, 1879.

This was an action by J. K. Coleman, against the town of Chester. The complaint was as follows:

1. That the defendant is a body corporate, duly created and organized by and under the laws of said state.

2. That heretofore, to wit, on the eighth day of February, 1873, plaintiff was seized and possessed in fee simple of a certain lot or parcel of land situate in the town of Chester, at the southeast corner of Main and Columbia streets, containing a frontage on said Main street of twenty-three feet, and a depth on Columbia street of two hundred and nineteen feet.

3. That at the date above named, defendant, through its officers and agents, and for the purpose, as it is alleged, of widening said Main street, entered upon and seized and dedicated to the public use the whole of the front of said lot, bounding a distance of twenty-three feet on Main street and to the depth of *twelve feet, against the protest and objections of plaintiff, and to his damage $500.

*287

4. That plaintiff, at the time of said seizure, had begun to erect a certain building of brick on his said premises; and in consequence of said seizure of a part thereof was compelled to erect the same on more unfavorable ground, whereby the expense of erecting was greatly increased, and to the amount of $140.

5. That plaintiff, pursuant to the directions and ordinances of said defendant corporation, was also put to the further expense, in consequence of the seizure of his said premises, of making and erecting a new sidewalk or pavement upon the portion of the premises so seized, at a cost of $20.

6. That at the time of said seizure and dedication of plaintiff's said premises, and at divers times afterwards, the defendant, by its corporate authorities, faithfully promised and agreed with plaintiff, in consideration that he would acquiesce in said seizure and dedication to public use of the premises and abandon all further resistance and objection to said seizure and dedication of the same to public use, that defendant would pay to him the full value of said premises so seized, and also the additional expenses incurred by him in the erection of his building and sidewalk; but although plaintiff, relying upon said premises, did acquiesce in the dedication to public use of said premises, the defendant has neglected and refused, and still neglects and refuses, to pay the value of said premises according to its said promises, and plaintiff alleges that said premises so seized and dedicated and his increased expenses of sidewalk and building were reasonably of the value of $660, and that defendant should be required to pay said sum, with interest, by way of damage for its detention.

Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment against said defendant for relief, in that defendant be required to pay to him the value of his said premises and his expenses, pursuant to its promise and undertaking, and costs.

Defendant admitted the first two paragraphs of the complaint, and denied the others.

At the trial it was shown that the acts done towards widening the street, were done under the authority of the town council.

*288

*Plaintiff being on the stand, proved his damage. He was asked the following questions:

1. Was there any parol agreement or understanding had between yourself and Melton, intendant, respecting compensation for the land taken and occupied by defendant, if you would acquiesce therein?

2. Was there a parol arrangement between you and Melton, intendant, respecting compensation for increased expenses incurred by erecting your building on more unfavorable ground?

Upon objection made, both questions were ruled out, as obnoxious to the statute of frauds, and plaintiff excepted. It was also in evidence that G. W. Melton had said that Coleman and he had settled the matter. G. W. Melton was then the intendant of the town, but died before the trial. The Circuit judge ordered that the complaint be dismissed on the grounds: 1st. That no contract had been proved; and 2d. That the defendant was not liable to an action for damages under the facts proved.

The plaintiff appealed to this court upon the grounds of error in excluding his questions to the plaintiff, and in holding that an action for damages could not be maintained against defendant for the injury done plaintiff.

Mr. W. A. Sanders, for appellant.

Messrs. J. & J. Hemphill, contra.

November 22d, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. In this case the defendant a municipal corporation, supposing itself vested with authority so to do by the act of September 22d, 1868, (14 Stat. 89, re-enacted in Gen. Stat. 352,) proceeded to condemn certain land of the plaintiff for the purpose of widening one of the streets of the town. This proceeding was resisted by the plaintiff until, as he alleges, an agreement was made by George W. Melton, then intendant of the town, to compensate him for the damages done to his property by this appropriation of a portion of it for the purpose above mentioned. This agreement, however, was not in writing, and *when the plaintiff proposed to offer parol testimony tending to prove such agreement, it was ruled out as inadmissible under the statute of frauds. To this ruling exception was duly taken, and the first question presented by this appeal is, whether such ruling was correct.

*289

If the purpose of the testimony offered was to prove an agreement for the sale of lands, "or any interest in or concerning them," then, unquestionably, it was incompetent; but if, on the other hand, the object of the testimony was to prove an agreement to compensate the plaintiff for any damages which he had sustained by reason of the illegal acts of the servants or agents of the defendant, of the benefits of which the defendant continued to avail itself, then it was not amenable to the objection stated. The form in which the first question ruled out was submitted, clearly evinced a purpose to prove an agreement to pay the plaintiff the value of the land taken and occupied by the defendant, in consideration that plaintiff would acquiesce in such taking and occupation, and it was therefore properly ruled out. The second question, however, does not appear to us to have been obnoxious to the objection based upon the statute of frauds. It did not tend to elicit proof of an agreement for the sale of lands "or any interest in or concerning them," but simply proof of an agreement to compensate the plaintiff for certain expenses incurred by him by reason of the illegal acts of the agents or servants of the defendant, of the benefit of which the plaintiff continued to avail itself. The objection to this question was, therefore, improperly sustained, and upon this ground there must be a new trial.

Another objection to this testimony has been urged in the argument here, which, though not specifically mentioned in the court below, will next be considered; for while the rule is that a judgment of the Circuit Court will not be reversed upon exceptions not taken in that court, yet if it can be sustained upon any ground this court will affirm it, even though the ground upon which it has been placed in the court below may not be tenable. It is contended here that to permit the plaintiff in this case to prove a transaction between himself and Melton, as intendant of the town, who was dead at the time of the trial, would be in vio*lation of the provisions of Section 415 of the code of procedure. This position is not well taken. The defendant in this case does not stand towards Melton in any of the relations mentioned in that section of the code, and hence the exception made to the general rule of evidence by the proviso to that section, cannot be applied. Guery v. Kinsler, 3 S. C. 423; Jones v. Plunckett, 9 S. C. 392.

*290

The testimony tending to prove the parol agreement with the intendant of the town having been rejected, the plaintiff then contended that he could maintain his action as an action to recover damages for trespass committed by the agents of the defendant, but the Circuit judge held otherwise, and ordered "that the complaint be dismissed on the grounds—First. That no contract had been proved; and, Second. That the defendant was not liable to an action for damages under the facts proved." To all of which exception was duly taken.

The very important and interesting question which has been mainly discussed here—whether a municipal corporation is liable to an action for damages for a trespass committed by its officers or agents under the direction or authority of the corporation, where such right of action is not given by statute—can scarcely be said to properly arise in this case. For we do not think the frame of the complaint would support such an action; and if it would, the plaintiff, by his own showing, has compromised and waived any claim which he possibly might have had to bring such action by the agreement with Melton which he sets out in his complaint, whereby he acquiesced in the seizure and dedication of his premises to the public use. Besides, after the charter of the defendant had been amended so as to authorize it to proceed under the act of September 22d, 1868, it is very clear that the plaintiff would be compelled to adopt the mode of proceeding provided for by that act to obtain compensation, and could not resort to an action to recover damages for trespass. So that whatever may be the rule upon the subject, it is manifest that the plaintiff could not, in this case, maintain an action for damages.

But the question is important and it may be well for us to state our views. While it is quite true that in some of the states a contrary conclusion has been reached, we think it settled in *this state by the case of White v. City Council of Charleston, 2 Hill 571, that an action to recover damages for a tort, unless it be provided for by statute, cannot be maintained against a municipal corporation, characterized by Marshall, C. J., in Fowle v. Alexandria, 3 Pet. 409 [7 L. Ed. 719], as "a legislative corporation, established as part of the government of the country." The case of White v. City Council, so far from being shaken, is rather confirmed by the subsequent case of Main v. Railroad Co., 12 Rich. 82 [75 Am. Dec. 725]. In the last-named case it was held that an action of trespass could be maintained against a railroad company, a corporation formed and exercising its functions for the pecuniary benefit of its members, and not a public corporation, instituted for the purposes of government. Whitner, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The profession will readily recognize the distinction taken between corporations of different kinds, and a difference in the proceedings authorized in consequence," citing White v. City Council, supra; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247; Fowle v. Alexandria, supra; in all of which it was held that a municipal corporation, forming a part of the government of the country, was not liable to a civil action for a tort. Again, he says: "The present question is not as to a public corporation instituted for the purposes of government, or a quasi corporation created by statute and invested with particular powers without their consent, but as to a corporation exercising its functions for the benefit of its members and holding its franchises upon contract." He then proceeds to declare that corporations of the latter class have, in numerous cases, been held liable to an action for trespass, but there is no intimation of any dissatisfaction with the rule laid down in White v. City Council, as to corporations of the former class. Hence, whatever may be the rule elsewhere, we are bound to declare it as established by White v. City Council, unless we were to overrule that case, which we do not feel justified in doing.

*291

But a municipal corporation may make contracts, and it is bound by them, and if its officers or agents, acting under its directions, commit a trespass, of the benefits of which the corporation continues to avail itself, it may bind itself by contract to pay the damages resulting from such trespass. So, too, if the *plaintiff, after the charter of the defendant had been amended so as to authorize it to proceed according to the provisions of the act of September 22d, 1868, to condemn the land of the plaintiff for the purpose of widening the street, had been induced, by an agreement with defendant or through its authorized officer or agent, to forego any proceedings under that act to recover damages for the condemnation of his land until after the time limited by the act for the institution of such proceeding, we do not think such an agreement would be within the statute of frauds, and, therefore, parol evidence of such an agreement would be competent.

*292

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and a new trial is ordered.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 292

(Case No. 939.)

JONES v. MASSEY.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐1194; Judgment ⇐721; Wills ⇐725, 732.]

A was charged by a referee's report with the rental value of lands, and he excepted for that "he had been charged with rent of lands," but alleged no error in the amount of rents, or the mode of charging them. This report being confirmed by the Circuit Court, A appealed, alleging as error that his exception had been overruled. The Supreme Court directed that A should be required to account for the rents and profits of the land held by him, other than his own share, and set aside the decree of the Circuit Court, so far as it was inconsistent with their opinion. Held that A was not estopped, upon the principle of res adjudicata, from afterwards questioning this same amount of rents and the mode of charging them against him, adopted in the subsequent report of a referee.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Murray v. Aiken Mining & Porcelain Mfg. Co., 39 S. C. 464, 18 S. E. 5.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4651; Dec. Dig. ⇐1194; Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1238; Dec. Dig. ⇐721; Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1736; Dec. Dig. ⇐725, 732.]

[2. Tenancy in Common ⇐28.]

A distinction recognized between rents and profits and rental value.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Thomson v. Peake, 38 S. C. 440, 17 S. E. 45, 725.

For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–88; Dec. Dig. ⇐28.]

[3. Tenancy in Common ⇐28.]

A tenant in common in possession of the land, who has committed no ouster, is liable only for the rents received and the profits made upon so much of the tillable lands as he rented and cultivated in excess of his share.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Scaife v. Thomson, 15 S. C. 367; Maner v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 480; McCreary v. Burns, 17 S. C. 54; Annely v. De Saussure, 26 S. C. 502, 2 S. E. 490, 4 Am. St. Rep. 725; McGahan v. Crawford, 47 S. C. 582, 25 S. E. 123; Cain v. Cain, 53 S. C. 355, 31 S. E. 278, 69 Am. St. Rep. 863.

For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. § 79; Dec. Dig. ⇐28.]

[4. Wills ⇐736.]

A being entitled under a will to take all of the testatrix's lands at their appraised value, to be paid for in ten equal annual installments from the date of his election, made his election to take by way of exception to the *return of the commissioners in partition. The other legatees went into possession of their shares as allotted to them by this return and the return was confirmed by the Circuit Court, and the right of A to take the lands denied. Upon appeal, the Circuit decree was reversed and the election allowed. Held that the election should date from the Circuit decree.

*293

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1875–1887; Dec. Dig. ⇐736.]

[5. Partition ⇐90.]

Held further, that the bond and mortgage to secure the sums to be paid for the land taken under such election, should not be enforced until the accounts between all the parties were adjusted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. § 250; Dec. Dig. ⇐90.]

[6. Wills ⇐736.]

Held further, that the rents due to A. by the other parties for the time they were in possession under the return of the commissioners, should be credited on such bond of A.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1875–1887; Dec. Dig. ⇐736.]

[7. Tenancy in Common ⇐28.]

One entitled to an undivided share of slaves, having them in his exclusive possession, is liable to account to the other joint owners for the profits derived by him from the use of the slaves.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Cent. Dig. §§ 76–88; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 28.]

[8. Wills ⟸736.]

One of several residuary legatees having received and used property, a part of the residuum, consumable in its use, is liable to account for the value derived by him from its use, over and above his share.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Rabb v. Patterson, 42 S. C. 537, 20 S. E. 540, 46 Am. St. Rep. 743.

For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1881; Dec. Dig. ⟸736.]

[9. Reference ⟸100.]

A matter not excepted to, embraced in a referee's report, which is confirmed by the Circuit Court, but upon appeal to the Supreme Court, is modified in other particulars, cannot be made a subject of exception in subsequent stages of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. §§ 157–168; Dec. Dig. ⟸100.]

[10. Executors and Administrators ⟸314.]

Under an action for the division and settlement of an estate, one of the parties in interest cannot assert against his codistributees a claim for an illegal levy caused by them to be made upon his property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1274–1297; Dec. Dig. ⟸314.]

[This case is also cited in McCreary v. Burns, 17 S. C. 46, and rule governing accounting between tenants in common followed, and in Fitzpatrick v. Wylie, 76 S. C. 262, 280, 56 S. E. 364, 1039, as to the facts.]

Before Wallace, J., Lancaster, October, 1879.

This case having been heretofore twice before this court, will be found reported in 7 S. C. 134, and 9 S. C. 376. After it was last sent back to the Circuit Court, the orders of reference mentioned in the opinion were made. The referee submitted his report, consisting almost wholly of a statement of accounts; but the items objected to and brought to the attention of the Circuit Court, are indicated by the exceptions taken thereto.

Exceptions of James R. Massey.—1. For that said referee has therein charged Dr. James R. Massey with the abstract annual rental value of the lands described in the pleadings, whereas the said referee should have allowed the said Massey to "account for the rents and profits" of the said lands received by him, other than his own proportionate share thereof, and should have charged him with the said rents and profits as aforesaid, and not with the annual rental value thereof.

2. For that said referee has taken into the accounting the *appraised value of that portion of the lands which James R. Massey elected to take under the will of his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Massey, whereas said appraised value is in no way connected with the accounting for rentals and for personalty herein, and no authority to consider the same in connection therewith, is given by the orders of reference herein; James R. Massey, under the decision of the Supreme Court herein, being entitled to ten years within which to pay to the parties entitled their proportionate share of said appraised value.

*294

3. For that said referee has therein charged Dr. James R. Massey with interest on said appraised value of the lands, whereas Dr. James R. Massey should not have been charged with interest thereon.

4. For that said referee has failed to deduct from the total sum of the annual rentals above stated, the full proportionate share therein of Dr. J. R. Massey, having failed to deduct therefrom the $^{100}/_{1751}$st part thereof, whereas the said James R. Massey, if liable at all for the "rental value" of said lands, is only liable therefor according to the proportions stated in the conclusions of law contained in the report of W. M. Connors, Esq., referee, heretofore made, and is therefore entitled to credit for the $^{100}/_{1751}$st part thereof, as above stated.

5. For that said referee has calculated interest on the sum total of said rental value, whereas he should have charged interest only upon the $^{4453}/_{1400}$sth part thereof; said James R. Massey if liable at all, being only liable for interest upon that portion thereof, in accordance with the conclusions of law in the report of Referee Connors before stated.

6. For that said referee has, in stating the accounts upon the rentals of the land, compounded the interest thereon against Dr. J. R. Massey, by computing the same to September 16th, 1879, then deducting credits, with interest computed to that date, which credits were not sufficient to over-balance the interest then due, and afterwards on the balance thus found, computing interest to September 16th, 1879, whereas he should have computed the interest on the annual rentals from the end of each year to September 16th, 1879, and the interest on the credits to the same date, and have then ascertained the balance at that date.

*295

*Exceptions by Other Legatees to Report of Referee.

1. Because said referee has disregarded the decree of the Supreme Court and the orders of reference herein; and has opened up matters that were settled by the report of the former referee, and the orders of the Circuit and Supreme Court thereon. In this he has undertaken, without authority, to find that Dr. James R. Massey, in 1860, received personal property belonging to the estate of Elizabeth Massey, to the amount only of $75, and in 1864 to the amount of $100, the two items, with interest, aggregating $374. Whereas, the report of the former referees, W. M. Connors and Thomas H. Clyburne, show that he did receive personal property belonging to said estate, consisting principally of corn and other supplies, about January 1st, 1861, to the amount of $1156, with which he was charged, and interest thereon from January 1st, 1861, to September 16th, 1876. The former report in this particular was confirmed by the Circuit decree, and the Supreme Court decree in no way disturbed the same; and, certainly, the referee had no authority to ignore this item.

2. Because the said referee has erred in disregarding the former report in the particulars above stated, in disregarding all the testimony taken on this point by Referee W. M. Connors, Esq., and in refusing to charge James R. Massey with three-quarters of the said sum and interest, (he being entitled to one-quarter thereof,) especially as the decree of the Supreme Court does not disturb the same, but left it as adjudicated.

3. Because the orders of reference and the opinion of the Supreme Court directed said referee to charge Dr. James R. Massey with what he derived from the use of the slaves—and although the slaves were all in the use and employ of Dr. James R. Massey from about January 1st, A. D. 1861, to the time of their emancipation, yet the said referee concludes, in the face of a great mass of testimony, to the contrary, that Dr. James R. Massey derived no benefit from the use of the slaves, and charged him with nothing on this score; and in this it is submitted he erred.

4. Because he erred in allowing credit to Dr. James R. Massey for taxes for 1866, to wit, $36, and $17.64 interest thereon, which, he says in his report, was not noticed in the former report.

*296

*The order of reference did not authorize this; and the referee erred in allowing the same.

5. Because the referee erred in giving Dr. James R. Massey credit for $6750.30, an alleged guardianship account, when F. P. Ingrem had been, since 1861, the regularly appointed guardian of the said James R. Massey, in the room and stead of Elizabeth Massey, and the presumption is that the executor of Elizabeth Massey had already paid over this sum to the said F. P. Ingrem, guardian; especially in this case, when neither F. P. Ingrem nor his legal representative is a party to these proceedings.

6. Because the referee has erred in charging Elizabeth Beckham with $34.77; in charging Sarah Jones with the same sum; in charging J. R. Massey, Jr., and his two sisters, with the same sum; amounts alleged to be in the nature of damages for an alleged illegal levy of some cotton—matters which were improperly brought into the accounting, and which the accounting ordered between the parties did not embrace. These charges are wholly unwarranted by law and the orders of reference.

7. Because the referee has erred in charging in favor of Dr. James R. Massey against the other parties in interest, all the credits allowed to him in the former reports and decree thereon; and then in opening the charges made against him in the said reports and decree, thus acting contrary to equity and good conscience.

8. Because the referee has charged Elizabeth Beckham with improper charges and interest thereon, and all the others with too much interest.

9. Because he has failed to charge Dr. James R. Massey with the use of the negroes and interest thereon, as aforesaid, and also with the proper amount of interest on the other item.

Upon hearing the report of the referee and the exceptions thereto by the various parties, the Circuit Court made the following Decree.

The report of D. A. Williams, Esq., special referee herein, was filed September 16th, 1879, and exceptions thereto, by the defendant, James R. Massey, were filed September 19th, 1879, *and by the plaintiffs and the other defendants September 23d, 1879.

*297

The cause came on to be heard before this court at Lancaster, October 3d, 1879, upon these exceptions. The first exception by James R. Massey, the defendant, alleges as error in said report, that he is therein charged with the annual rental value of the lands described in the pleadings, whereas he should have been required to account for the rents and profits of the lands received by him other than his own proportionate share thereof, under the will of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey.

It is not denied that James R. Massey is a tenant in common with the other parties to this action, but it is claimed by them that the question as to whether he should be charged with the annual rental value of the lands or should account for the rents and profits, is res adjudicata, and cannot now be considered by this court. From an examination of the decree of the Circuit and Supreme Court herein, this court has come to a different conclusion. By the report of Referee Connors in this cause, filed October 3d, 1874, Dr. Massey was held liable for the rental value of the lands, but to that report exceptions were filed by him, alleging as error, among others, that he had been charged with "rent of lands belonging to said estate," and had been "adjudged chargeable with large balances of money upon said account."

This exception was overruled by the decree of the Circuit Court, made August 10th, 1876. James R. Massey appealed from said decree, and also from the Circuit order of October 24th, 1876, made in pursuance thereof upon the ground, amongst others, that the Circuit Court "erred in overruling said exceptions."

The question, upon the general exceptions above quoted, having thus been brought before the Supreme Court, it was held by a decision in this cause, filed March 21st, 1878, that James R. Massey should "account for the rents and profits of the lands other than his own share, down to the time of his election." The order of reference under which this report was made directed the present referee "to revise the reports of the former referee, so as to make the same conform to the decision of the Supreme Court," *above mentioned. The referee should have required James R. Massey to account for the rents and profits of the lands received by him, other than his own proportionate share thereof, down to the time of his election to take the same, and he erred in charging him with the annual rental value of said lands. The first exception by the defendant, James R. Massey, is therefore sustained.

*298

The second and third exceptions, by said defendant, are also sustained, on the ground that the referee, in stating the accounts between the parties to this action, should not have taken into the accounts the appraised value of the lands which James R. Massey elected to take under his mother's will. The rights of the parties in this particular, under the decision of the Supreme Court in this cause, will be considered by the court hereafter in this decree.

The third exception is also sustained, upon the further ground that interest can only be charged upon the said appraised value from the date of the Circuit order of February 13th, 1874, overruling the exceptions to the return of commissioners to the writ in partition and confirming said return. This, however, becomes unimportant in view of the above determination as to the propriety of considering the appraised value in stating the accounts.

The fourth, fifth and sixth exceptions by the said defendants are also sustained upon the several grounds in said exceptions mentioned, but these being contingent upon the overruling of the first exception, and that exception having been sustained, are now of no practical importance to the defendant.

The first exception on the part of the plaintiff and the other defendants, (except James R. Massey), charges error in the report that the referee undertook to find the amount of personal property actually received by Dr. James R. Massey, whereas in report of Referee Connors he is charged with the estimated value of certain corn and other plantation supplies to a much larger amount, which report was confirmed by a decree of the Circuit Court. The second exception by the same parties is to the same effect.

It appears that James R. Massey excepted to the report of Referee Connors, on the ground that the referee had erroneously decided that he was "bound to account for the value of certain *slaves and other property belonging to the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey, deceased," and this exception came before the Supreme Court on appeal from the Circuit decree overruling it.

*299

The Supreme Court say, in concluding this this decision, "the decree of the Circuit Court and the reports of referees must be set aside, so far as they are inconsistent with the conclusions already stated, and the cause must be remanded for the further proceedings conformable to this decree."

An examination of that decision shows, and this court holds, that the charge against James R. Massey, for corn and other personalty left on the plantation, unless it was used by James R. Massey for his individual benefit, is "inconsistent with the conclusions" stated in said decision. It is therein expressly held that the slaves and other personalty left by Mrs. Elizabeth Massey, "should have been kept together by the executor until partition could have been had," and that "the retaining of slaves upon the land cannot be made ground for holding James R. Massey to a measure of liability different from that fixed by the will."

It follows from these principles, that the mere fact that certain corn and other plantation supplies were left upon the land at the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey, is no ground for charging James R. Massey for the value of such supplies.

It is proper that he should be charged with so much thereof as was used for his individual benefit over and above his own proportionate share thereof.

With this explanation of the views of the court upon this question, the first and second exceptions are overruled. The third exception refers to the hire of the slaves. The referee has found that Dr. James R. Massey derived no benefit from the use of the slaves from January 1st, 1861, up to their emancipation. And this exception was filed to the report of the referee because he charged the said James R. Massey with nothing at all on that account. This exception will be sustained so far as to have this matter referred back to the referee for further inquiry, and report as to what the value of the services of the said slaves, for the time designated, would have been worth, under the control of a farmer or planter of average skill and diligence. The liability of Massey, therefore, is to be determined after a full report from the referee. *The fourth exception on the part of the same parties, alleges error in a credit allowed in said report, to Dr. James R. Massey, for certain taxes and interests thereon, which was not included in former reports, and (it is claimed) was not authorized by the orders of reference herein. One of these orders expressly directs the referee to allow James R. Massey, upon the accounts, all credits allowed by the report of former referees, as well as "such other credits as may appear to be proper." The credit for taxes appears to be proper. This exception is therefore overruled. The fifth exception by these parties as to error in the referee in allowing to the defendant, James R. Massey, credit for the guardianship account against the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey, cannot be considered. This credit was allowed in the report of Referee Connors, above mentioned, and no exception thereto was taken. If there was error in so allowing the credit, it should have been noticed by an exception before the confirmation of that report. It is now too late to make the question, and the exception must be overruled. In addition to the reasons just given, it may be added that one of the orders of reference expressly directs this referee to allow to James R. Massey all the credits allowed by the former reports, thus recognizing the fact that no question as to the propriety of these credits could now be made.

*300

The sixth exception charges error in the report in this: That Elizabeth Beckham, Sarah Jones, and James R. Massey, Jr., are each charged with $34.77, as damages caused to defendant, James R. Massey, by an alleged illegal levy made in this case. In this there was error: the referee should not have undertaken to estimate the damages caused by an illegal levy. The sixth exception is therefore sustained. The seventh exception by same parties is a general exception, and has, in effect, already been considered. The seventh exception is overruled. The eighth and ninth exceptions as to error in charges of interest, must be overruled. No such error has been shown to this court. The other question raised by the ninth exception has already been considered in one of the exceptions above. The eighth and ninth exceptions are overruled. It is ordered that it be referred back to D. A. Williams, Esq., special referee, to revise his report in this cause, so as to make the same conform to the conclusions herein stated. *It is further ordered that said referee do inquire and report how much of the lands of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey's estate the said Dr. James R. Massey worked and cultivated each year from January 1st, 1861, down to the day of his election to take the whole lands: what the same were worth each year, under the control and management of a farmer of good ordinary skill and industry, and what the rents and profits of the same other than his own share, were worth for the time specified.

*301

It is furthermore ordered that the referee do inquire and report the names and number of slaves belonging to the estate of Elizabeth Massey, that were under the control, and in the employ of Dr. James R. Massey, or his guardian, from January 1st, 1861, down to the time of their emancipation, and what the value of their services would have been worth for that period, in the hands and control of a farmer of average skill, industry, and perseverance: what they could have been hired for, and what benefit the said James R. Massey has derived from their use, so that the court that has to determine this question, may be enlightened on the facts bearing upon the points suggested. All the testimony heretofore taken by the former referees, and any further testimony that may be desired, may be used by the referee and the court in reaching a conclusion on all the points. Upon the hearing of this cause, a motion was made on behalf of the defendant, James R. Massey, for an order that so much of the return of the commissioners to the writ in partition, dated December 1st, 1873, as relates to their appraisal of the land therein mentioned and described, be confirmed, and that, upon the execution by James R. Massey, of his bond secured by a mortgage of the eleven hundred and sixty-six acres of land (which he elected to take under Mrs. Elizabeth Massey's will) to the clerk of this court, conditioned for the payment of three-eighths of the appraised value of the whole lands, (exclusive of the one hundred acres and the mills) to wit, for the payment of $2623.50 in ten equal annual installments, with interest from date hereof, to be restored by the sheriff of Lancaster county to the full possession of the whole of said lands. But this court is of the opinion that a proper construction of the decision of the Supreme Court upon this point, as filed March 15th, 1876, fixes the date at which the *ten years, credit to James R. Massey should commence, at the date of the Circuit order, confirming the return of the commissioners to the writ in partition, and overruling the exceptions to that return, namely, February 13th, 1874. This appears from that decision where it is said (7 S. C. 141) James R. Massey was clearly entitled to take the lands at their appraised value, and was not bound to make his election until the value of the lands was ascertained by the confirmation of the return of the commissioners.

*302

It was proper that he should be required to give his bond and mortgage, for the payment of the principal, in annual installments, and interest upon it from the date of the judgment.

It is therefore ordered that so much of the return of the commissioners to the writ in partition dated December 1st, 1873, as relates to the appraisal of the land therein mentioned and described be confirmed, and that upon the execution of James R. Massey of his bonds, secured by a mortgage of the eleven hundred and sixty-six acres of land, which he elected to take under the will, to the clerk of this court, conditioned for the payment of three-eighths of the appraised value of the whole lands, exclusive of the mills and the one hundred acres, to wit, for the payment of $2623.50, in ten equal annual installments, with interest from February 13th, 1874, he be restored by the sheriff of Lancaster county to the full possession of the whole of said lands. It appearing to the court that upon the coming in of the report of referee upon the revised accounts between the parties to this action, some or all of the other parties will probably be indebted to James R. Massey to a greater or less amount, and it also appearing that great loss, injury and wrong might result to the defendant, James R. Massey, by a suit upon the bond herein required, prior to the coming in of said reports, on motion of Ernest Moore, attorney for the defendant, James R. Massey, it is ordered that the clerk of this court, and all the parties to this action, be enjoined from assigning, transferring or suing upon said bond, or foreclosing said mortgage for any installment due thereon until the coming in of the report upon the reference to revise the accounts herein ordered, and until the final and complete adjudication of the issues upon the accounts between the parties to this action. It is further ordered that, upon the coming in of said report, such balance upon the accounts as may be found due by any of the *other parties to the defendant, James R. Massey, be credited upon the interest or share of each of said parties, respectively, in said bond and be considered to that extent a payment upon the said bond.

*303

Exceptions to this decree were duly served and filed, and notice of appeal therefrom was duly given, on behalf of the defendant, James R. Massey, and of the plaintiff and the other defendants.

The grounds of appeal are numerous and lengthy; the points decided are sufficiently indicated in the opinion.

[For subsequent opinion, see 15 S. C. 615.]

Mr. Ernest Moore, for J. R. Massey.

Messrs. Allison & Connors, contra.

November 22d, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. Elizabeth Massey died in 1858, leaving a large estate, real and personal. She had one son, James R. Massey, two daughters, Elizabeth Beckham and Sarah Jones, and three grandchildren, children of a deceased daughter Jane, viz., Mary E. Massey, Charlotte A. Beckham and James R. Massey, Jr. The deceased left a will, of which Dixon Barnes was executor, and after his death, his executor, Daniel W. Brown, by which she devised and bequeathed to her son, James R. Massey, the mills on the Catawba river, and a hundred acres of land adjoining, one-half of the remainder of her real estate, and also some personal property, horses, stock, library, silver cup, &c. Besides the foregoing exclusively to James R., she directed the residue of her estate to be divided into four equal parts, one-fourth to her said son, James R.; the same to Churchill B. Jones, in trust for his wife, Sarah; the same to Elizabeth Beckham, and the same to be divided among the children of Jane. The testatrix named the negroes that were to be allotted to the different parties in the division; and to her son, James R., she gave the right of election to take all of the real estate at valuation on the partition and division of the same.

*304

*In 1861 the shares were valued by certain persons, called together for that purpose by Dixon Barnes, the executor, and placed in the possession of the parties to whom they were given. But, for some reason, there was no effort to partition the real estate, which was left in the possession of James R. Massey, who remained at the homestead until 1871, when this action was commenced by C. B. Jones, trustee, against James R. Massey for partition and account of the rents and profits of the lands, &c., including an account of D. W. Brown, then executor, and a settlement of the estate of Elizabeth Massey. No objection was made. Writ of partition was issued to lay off to James R. Massey the mills and a hundred acres, and to divide the remainder of the land among the parties according to the will. The commissioners made return laying off mill and lands for James R., and recommending that the remainder of the land be divided according to the interest of the respective parties. James R. Massey objected to the return and declared his election to take the whole land at valuation. Judge Mackey confirmed the return and ordered it executed to February 23d, 1874. James R. Massey appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that "he was entitled to take the land at appraisement," and that he "should be required to account for the rents and profits of the lands held by him other than his own share down to the time of his election." * * * "The judgment must be set aside and the case remanded to carry out the requirements of the judgment." Jones v. Massey, 7 S. C. 142.

Before the above appeal upon the subject of election the matters of account had been referred, and W. M. Connors, Esq., was appointed special referee, who made a report affirming the consent partition of slaves, and charging James R. Massey with the yearly rental value of all the lands from 1861 to 1873, which, with interest, amounted in the aggregate to $13,748.20; that there were articles of personal property, not willed, to the value of $1256, consisting principally of corn and provisions, and that there was due to James R. Massey from the estate of the testatrix, on account of guardianship, $3114, &c. To this report James R. Massey excepted. In May, 1876, Judge Mackey overruled the exceptions and confirmed the report. From his order James R. Massey again appealed to this court, which (March *21st, 1878), rendered a judgment reversing the Circuit order confirming the consent partition of slaves, and directing that James R. Massey "should be charged with whatever value he has derived from the use of the slaves, prior to the emancipation, over and above the proportion of such value he was entitled to under the will, on the same ground upon which he was required by the judgment of this court to account for the rents and profits of the lands. The decree of the Circuit Court and the reports of the referee must be set aside as far as they are inconsistent with the conclusion already stated, and the same remanded for further proceedings conformable to this decision." Jones v. Massey, 9 S. C. 391.

*305

The case went back a second time. May 20th, 1878, Judge Mackey, at Chambers, granted an order appointing D. A. Williams, referee, and directed him to "revise" the former reports and make a report conformable to the judgment of the Supreme Court. March 7th, 1879, Judge Pressley presiding, at Lancaster, made an order appointing the same referee, and directing the parties in possession of the land to account to James R. Massey. [It does not appear, but we suppose these parties had been put into possession under the writ of partition before that part of it was set aside.] Exceptions were filed to the order of Judge Mackey by James R. Massey, and to that of Judge Pressley by Jones et al. Referee Williams, under both orders, made a report, which, amongst other things, transferred into his own report so much of the report of Connors as charged James R. Massey with the rental of the lands, bringing the interest down to September 16th, 1876, and making the aggregate of $22,742.87. To this report both sides filed exceptions, which were argued before Judge Wallace, from whose decree the appeal comes to this court.

We shall not consider as distinct the exceptions taken to the orders of May, 1878, and March, 1879. So far as they were orders of reference to carry out the second judgment of this court they were merely administrative and not final. The same referee was appointed by both orders. He made his report under both, and in considering the exceptions to that report and the decree based upon it, all exceptions previously taken to the orders may come under review. The exceptions to the report and the decree *are numerous—made by both parties—and to prevent confusion we shall not take them up seriatim but according to the subject matter.

*306

The most important question in the case is as to the principle of the accounting of James R. Massey for occupation of the lands between the death of his mother and the time he became sole owner by election. This subject is made somewhat complicated by the claim that it is res adjudicata. Connor's report, made before the second judgment of this court, charged James R. Massey with the rental value of the land and interest for fifteen years, as if he were a stranger, and this on action for use and occupation. Judge Mackey confirmed that report, and it is claimed, although the second appeal was from that decree, and it was set aside, so far as inconsistent with the conclusion therein stated, that the particular part of the report and decree which had reference to the account for rent was not reversed because it was not appealed from and was not inconsistent with the judgment of the Supreme Court. The allegation is that Judge Wallace had no right to consider that part of the report of the referee, Williams, for the reason that Williams merely transferred it and incorporated it into his report from that of Connors, where it had been confirmed by Judge Mackey and not appealed from, and, therefore, was res adjudicata.

We have looked carefully through the record of this case back to the original complaint and answer. We find that James R. Massey did except to the report of Connors as to rents, and did appeal from the order confirming it. To the report he excepted, "that he had been charged with rent of lands belonging to the estate," and to the order confirming the report, upon the ground, among others, "that the court erred in overruling said exception." Jones v. Massey, 9 S. C. 382, 386. That, it is said, was a general appeal as to all rents and not as to the difference between "rents and profits" and "rental value." That is true; but the whole includes all its parts. It is said that point was not argued. It may be that upon that appeal the weight of the argument was directed to the point of accountability for the slaves; but whether the matter of the land rent was argued or not, it was in the record, and this court ruled upon it, repeating almost the same *words as the former judgment. [See quotation from that judgment hereinbefore made.] The decree and the reports of the referee were set aside, "so far as they are inconsistent with the conclusion herein stated." Under these circumstances we cannot accept the view that the item for the rental value, in the report of Connors, was finally adjudged by the Circuit decree of 1876, on the ground that it was not appealed from; that Referee Williams had the right to transfer it to his report, and that Judge Wallace had no right to consider it, because it had been adjudged. We agree with him that the matter was not adjudged, and that the charge as to rents was "inconsistent" with the judgment of the Supreme Court and vacated.

*307

If we were not reluctant to shut off inquiry we would hold that the proper principle of the accounting had been adjudged by this court to be for "rents and profits," and not for "rental value." This court, in both of its judgments pronounced by the same judge, so expressed its view in words, and, in the last, particularly declared that the account for the slaves and the land should stand "on the same grounds." But the precise difference between "rents and profits" and "rental value," had not been argued before this court, and as we are inclined to the opinion that the words "rents and profits" in the judgments, were used in their general sense, we entertain that point now as for the first time before this court.

The question then being open, what principle should govern in stating the account of James R. Massey for use and occupation of the lands up to the time he took them by election? Upon the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Massey the title to these lands devised rested in the respective devisees, subject, of course, to all just claims against the testatrix. They stood to each other as tenants in common in unequal interests. Each had the same right to occupy his proportion of the land. James R. Massey had the largest interest, and, in common with the others, he had the right to be there. One tenant in common cannot maintain a possessory action against his co-tenant except for an actual ouster. If James R. Massey had ousted the other co-tenants, and kept them out by force, which is not alleged, then he would have been liable as a trespasser for the rental value beyond his *share. But as it is not alleged that he kept the other tenants out of the possession of their respective parts, they were in default in not occupying or claiming partition, and he is liable for the rents and profits which he received from the lands beyond his own share, just as he was held to account for whatever value he "derived from the use of the slaves over and above the portion of such value he was entitled to under the will." Jones v. Massey, 9 S. C. 376; Volentine v. Johnson, 1 Hill's Eq. 49; Lyles v. Lyles, Id. 86.

*308

We cannot suppose that the application of this principle to the case will work any injustice. From 1861 to 1874 the country was in an unsettled state. For a portion of that period James R. Massey was a minor; for a large portion war was raging, and he was absent in the service of the Confederate States; and after military operations ceased the labor of the country was disorganized, affecting injuriously the income from lands. We note that James R. Massey states in his answer "that so far from having received any profit from said plantation for which he should account, the possession of the same entailed upon him great loss." But be that as it may, the rule as to the accountability between tenants in common is established, and is nowhere better expressed than by an elementary writer of high standing, (Adams), who says: "In addition to the decree for a partition, the court may, also, if either of the co-owners has been in the exclusive reception of the rents, decree an account of his receipts. But the mere fact of his having occupied the property will not, of itself, make him liable for an occupation rent, for the effect of such a rule would be that one tenant in common, by keeping out of the actual occupation of the premises, might convert the other into his bailiff, and prevent him from occupying them, except upon the terms of paying rent." Adams' Eq. 233.

We concur with the Circuit judge as to the principle upon which the accounting should be stated, but it seems to us that his orders of reference embrace more than his ruling required. We cannot see that it is necessary or that it will promote progress in this long litigation to order an inquiry—outside of the rights of the parties—as to "what the same lands were worth each year under the control and management of a farmer of good *ordinary skill and industry." According to the foregoing principles, the relation of the parties does not authorize them to hold James R. Massey responsible for bad husbandry, or to require him to make good any deficiency which may have arisen from his not being "a farmer of good ordinary skill and industry." He was not a lessee for value, but part owner. His possession was not tortious but permissive, and might have been ended at any moment by the parties claiming their own. The accounting should be conducted as follows: Ascertain whether James R. Massey cultivated more of the tillable land than his proportion before election. If not, then there is nothing due by him. If he did, then he should be charged with the rents and profits of that excess; that is to say, if he rented the land he should be charged with the rents received; and if he cultivated them himself, then with the profits actually received from such cultivation, without regard to the skill which he happened to possess as a farmer or his habits as to industry.

*309

As to the time when the bond for the land should bear date and put in motion the credit of ten years, it cannot be as contended when the commissioners in partition made their return, for if there was no other reason that return never recommended election, but ignored it. In this respect the case is not analogous to that of Huson v. Wallace, 1 Rich. Eq. 6, in which the parties were in possession under the return that was afterwards, nunc pro tunc, confirmed. Here the exact reverse is the case—the possession was held in opposition to the right of election. The bond should bear date when the election was consummated. At that moment the relative rights of the parties changed. Massey became the owner of the lands and the account against him as tenant in common must cease. He never indicated his election until after the return of the commissioners had been made, December, 1873. To that return he excepted and declared his election. His exceptions were overruled. The return was confirmed and ordered to be enforced February, 1874. That order was reversed by judgment of this court, (1876), which allowed the election. It should have received legal sanction in the order of February, 1874, but it was refused, and, pending the appeal, he was denied the rights incident to it. When must he be consid*ered to have elected? When the Circuit order was passed which should have decreed it, or when he realized the fruits of it? We concur with the Circuit judge that the election must be considered to have been legally made at the date of the Circuit order. It is true his enjoyment was postponed until after the judgment of the Supreme Court, but that judgment did not create the right, it only declared error in the Circuit order, and it must be referred back and read for that order. The judgment itself indicates this view, for it says that James R. Massey should give his bond and mortgage "for the principal in annual installments, with interest upon it from the date of the judgment." This may operate hardly on Massey, but what has been done cannot be undone; all that can be done is to put the parties, as nearly as possible, in the condition in which a correct judgment would have placed them at that time. The right of Massey attached at the date of the Circuit order, so as to give him from that time an account of rents from those in possession of the lands, and he must be held to the corresponding obligation of arranging the purchase money by giving the bond and mortgage at that date. What is the proper date of that order? The first order of Judge Mackey was rescinded and replaced by another. In the first report of the case, (7 S. C. 139), the date is given as February 23d, 1874, but in the decree of Judge Wallace it is referred to as February 13th. We conclude that this is a mistake, and that the proper date is February 23d, 1874, and that fixes the time for the date of the bond and mortgage from which the credit of ten years began to run.

*310

We see no objection to the temporary injunction against "foreclosing said mortgage for any installment due thereon until the coming in of the report and the adjudication upon the accounts between the parties." It is manifest that some of the parties will be indebted to James R. Massey in some amounts growing out of this litigation. They have cross equities, which, as far as they go, should be set off one against the other. This cannot be done with certainty unless the parties are kept in statu quo until their rights are determined. There seems to be propriety in it, for the reason that James R. Massey is required to give bond for the purchase money of lands two years before his right was *declared to the lands so purchased, and the possession of which was held by those who are entitled to receive the purchase money secured by the bond. The rents for these lands during the very years in which the interest was running and the installments falling due, most certainly should be credited on the bond.

*311

In regard to the slaves, this court, after argument, directed in what manner the account should be stated. Under that direction the referee reported "that under the decision of the Supreme Court in this cause, James R. Massey should account for whatever value he derived from the use of the slaves and not for their hiring value, and, accordingly, reports from the testimony that James R. Massey derived no benefit from the use of the slaves over and above their expenses." The Circuit judge referred it back to report "what the value of their services would have been in the hands and control of a person of average skill, industry and perseverance. What they would have hired for," &c. In the view which we expressed as to the rents and profits of the lands, we think this reference was unnecessary and would only increase the expenses and cause further delay in the case. The principle of the account for the possession of the slaves was settled by this court in its second judgment, and we can do no more than re-affirm it in the words there stated. "It is proper that he [James R. Massey] should be charged with whatever value he has derived from the use of the slaves prior to emancipation, over and above the proportion of such value he was entitled to under the will, on the same ground upon which he was required by the judgment of this court to account for the rents and profits of the lands." The evidence is not before us upon which the referee based his report, and we can pronounce no judgment thereon.

We concur with the Circuit judge in reference to the account for corn, plantation supplies, &c., alleged to have been on the place at the death of Mrs. Massey. That property, not specifically disposed of, like the slaves, fell under the residue clause of the will. The report of Referee Connors upon the subject of this property, was excepted to in the words "slaves and other property." The matter was before the Supreme Court in the exception for error "in overruling said exceptions." The same prin*ciple of accountability, which was expressly declared as to the slaves, should be applied to this property, which, in its nature, was consumable in the use.

*312

We also concur with the judge in refusing to disturb the report of the referee in regard to the guardianship claim against the estate of Mrs. Massey. That was a distinct claim by James R. Massey, having no connection with the points argued, and the objection now made for the first time comes too late. And we concur in refusing to allow the charge against Elizabeth Beckham, Sarah Jones and James R. Massey, Jr., for damages caused, as alleged, by an illegal levy upon the property of James R. Massey. This claim was properly disallowed.

Subject to the modifications herein made, the decree is affirmed and the appeals dismissed.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 312

(Case No. 940.)

BLACK v. CHILDS.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸220.]

To sustain a plea of purchase bona fide without notice, three things are necessary: (1) that he has paid in full the purchase money; (2) that he has the legal title, or the best right to it; (3) that he purchased bona fide without notice.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Sweatman v. Edmunds, 28 S. C. 62, 5 S. E. 165; Robert v. Ellis, 59 S. C. 147, 37 S. E. 250.

For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 461–465, 720; Dec. Dig. ⟸220.]

[2. Judicial Sales ⟸17.]

Section 8 of the act of 1791 (7 Stat. 263,) forbidding certain officers from being interested in the purchase of property sold by them officially, was superseded and repealed as to commissioners in equity by section 6 of the master's act of 1840. 11 Stat. 108, 120.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Johnson v. Southern Ry., 69 S. C. 326, 48 S. E. 260.

For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. ⟸17.]

[3. Judicial Sales ⟸17.]

It seems to be the settled conclusion from the authorities, that where a trustee to sell purchases at his own sale, the sale is not void, but will be set aside upon the application of any one interested, whether the sale was fair, and a full price obtained, or not.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Finch v. Finch, 28 S. C. 168, 5 S. E. 348, 13 Am. St. Rep. 665.

For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. ⟸17.]

[4. Notice ⟸13.]

Denial of notice "directly or indirectly," is denial of notice had by an agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Notice, Cent. Dig. § 37; Dec. Dig. ⟸13.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⟸194.]

The objection that a defence of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice is not sufficiently pleaded, should be taken by motion to make the answer more definite, or by demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1241–1246; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

[6. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸229.]

Where circumstances are sufficient to put a party upon inquiry, he is *chargeable with constructive notice of every fact which such inquiry, properly conducted, will certainly disclose.

*313

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Carrigan v. Byrd, 23 S. C. 95; Hampton & B. R. & Lumber Co. v. Bank of Charleston, 48 S. C. 135, 26 S. E. 238; Brayton v. Beall, 73 S. C. 311, 53 S. E. 641.

For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 477–494; Dec. Dig. ⟸229.]

[7. Trusts ⟸357.]

Where P. a commissioner in equity, at his own sale procured his friend F. to purchase the property sold, and F. was announced as the bidder, took titles in his own name, and executed to the commissioner the required bond and mortgage, and P. took control of the property, a subsequent purchaser for value from F., under negotiations had with P., (who claimed to act for F., and who as commissioner, received payment in full of such bond and mortgage before maturity) is not chargeable with notice of P.'s interest, or of the private arrangement between P. and F., at the commissioner's sale.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Jones v. Hudson, 23 S. C. 501; Kinard v. Glenn, 29 S. C. 595, 8 S. E. 203; Aultman v. Utsey, 34 S. C. 568, 13 S. E. 848; Merck v. Merck, 83 S. C. 339, 65 S. E. 347.

For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 544; Dec. Dig. ⟸357.]

[This case is also cited in Garlington v. Copeland, 32 S. C. 68, 10 S. E. 616, without specific application.]

Before Thomson, J., Richland, April, 1879.

This was an action commenced in 1869. The facts are fully stated in the opinion of this court. The Circuit decree, after stating the facts, concluded as follows:

What title passed by such sale? The answer is given by the act of assembly, "That * * * no master or commissioner in equity * * * shall be concerned or interested, directly or indirectly, in the purchase or acquisition of any property sold by them respectively by virtue of or in obedience to any process, execution or order of court or law; and if any such officer shall presume to be concerned or interested in any such purchase or acquisition, * * * the purchase made shall be utterly void and of no effect."

Against J. H. Pearson it is clear the plaintiffs could demand and have resale of the premises.

Here it may be urged that, though the sale be wholly void as to Pearson, yet it may be valid as to his vendees or alienees, that is, to L. D. Childs and associates. In other words, is the sale so wholly void, the defect so total, that no title will vest in Pearson or Fair, although the purchaser can plead that he purchased without notice and for a valuable consideration?

An obligation or other instrument of writing declared void by statute is as if it never had existence. What is void cannot be confirmed. The statute against gaming declares all securities given for a gaming consideration void. Our courts have held such notes, though negotiable, void in the hands of an innocent holder. This construction was given upon the force of the words *used in the statute. So our court has held a purchase at a sheriff's sale by a deputy sheriff, through or by a third party, would, under the act recited, fail to convey the estate of the heirs-at-law, who, it is said, were as much owners as before the sale.

*314

L. D. Childs, however, alleges that J. H.

Pearson was, as to himself and associates, unknown in the transaction. That their purchase was from S. Fair, who had complied with the terms of the sale. That they were ignorant of any understanding between J. H. Pearson and S. Fair. That their purchase rests upon papers which did not indicate ownership in Pearson or suggest inquiry; in short, that, in the fullest sense, they are purchasers for valuable consideration without notice.

Admitting this to be true as to Childs and associates, what shall be said of A. G. Baskin, the agent?

L. D. Childs states that he employed A. G. Baskin as his attorney to examine the title to the property; that he placed the whole matter in his hands. That he (Childs) had confidence in his judgment, and so expressed himself. Notice in such case to an agent is notice to the principal, and notice to a solicitor is actual notice to the client.

What notice, then, had A. G. Baskin of the transaction? As a matter of course, A. G. Baskin must have known the contents of the record, must have known the order of the court directing the sale and its terms, the credit given to the purchaser, and that the installments fell due successively on the first days of January, A. D. 1864, 1865 and 1866; that a bond and mortgage were given conforming to these terms of sale; the direction that the money was to be retained until the further order of the court; the possession of the lot by Pearson and his conduct like that of an owner, which, of itself, made inquiry necessary, and the transaction which anticipated the payment and surrendered the mortgage to perfect the title to Childs. These were circumstances and acts sufficient to give notice to a prudent man, suggesting inquiry and disclosing peril to a purchaser. In a sale for partition by order of court, in a certain sense the court is the vendor, but not without reference to the will of the heirs-at-law. The court collects this will and embodies it in an order. Thus declared, it expresses the will of the parties in interest, and which *the court itself will not change or alter without their consent or notice to them.

*315

No such power is vested in the commissioner. A vendee of a title resting upon a commissioner's sale, who knows that in obtaining it the order of sale has been destroyed, purchases without the consent of the heirs-at-law. He alters the terms of sale and does not purchase as the heirs-at-law proposed.

The following are the conclusions of law of the court:

1. That the sale by the commissioner, Pearson, of lot "C" and the purchase thereof by S. Fair, are void transactions under the statute, and that no interest passed to L. D. Childs and his associates, under the conveyance by S. Fair.

2. That notice was given to L. D. Childs through his agent, A. G. Baskin, of facts and circumstances affecting the title before the purchase was completed, and that L. D. Childs and his associates are not bona fide purchasers without notice.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed:

1. That the sale of lot "C" by J. H. Pearson is invalid, and the deed of conveyance thereof to S. Fair transfers no interest; and that the deed of S. Fair to L. D. Childs and others is invalid and conveys no interest, and it is ordered that the said deeds be delivered up to the master to be canceled.

2. That it be referred to the master to inquire and report the time L. D. Childs and associates have been in possession of lot "C," and the value of the rents and profits or of the use and occupation, reserving to the defendants the question of liability therefor.

3. That the master call in by the usual practice the creditors of the estate of A. Brodie to present and prove their demands by a given day, and report the same to the court.

4. That it be referred to the master to report upon testimony who are the heirs-at-law and distributees of A. Brodie, deceased, who are entitled to an interest in his estate under the statute of distributions, and for this purpose may use testimony already taken in this case.

5. That parties have leave to apply for an order of sale of lot "C," described in the pleadings.

*316

*Defendants L. D. Childs, William Johnston and W. H. Willard, the purchasers, appealed to this court.

Messrs. Pope & Haskell, for appellants.

Mr. J. P. Carroll, contra.

A trustee to sell is by law disabled from purchasing the trust property. Sugd. on V. & P. 161–2; Hill on Trustees 159. Under act of 1791, § 8, (7 Stat. 263,) a commissioner could not purchase at his own sales; such purchase was a nullity, and prohibited under penalty. This section was not repealed by act of 1840. 11 Stat. 132, § 31. The penalty attached makes the purchase absolutely void. Story on Agency, § 240; 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 306; Potter's Dwarris 250–1. Defendants do not deny notice to their agent, Baskin. Le Neve v. Le Neve, 2 Lead. Cas. in Eq. 27; 2 Sugd. on V. & P. 1041. The facts led up to notice. Besides, Pearson was in possession. 19 Ves. 254; Adams' Eq. 158; 4 Rich. Eq. 114; Spears' Eq. 27. The facts show that Pearson was not acting as agent for Fair, but for himself. The money was not due, and the record of the case showed it; therefore the bond is still subsisting. 1 Sugd. on V. & P. 48; Story on Agency, § 98.

November 22d, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. Alexander Brodie died intestate in 1861, seized of real estate. Charles H. Black administered upon his estate. In 1862 proceedings were instituted in the then court of equity, in a case entitled Charles H. Black v. James Black and others to partition or sell the land of which the intestate died seized. The record in the case in some way got out of its proper place, and as we now have it is not complete. There is, however, an order of sale of Chancellor Inglis, bearing date June 21st, 1862, which directed the commissioner to sell the lands in January then next or some succeeding sales day, "upon the following terms to wit: so much cash as will pay the costs of these proceedings and the sale, and the balance upon a credit of one, two and *three years, with interest from the day of sale, payable annually, secured by bond and personal security and a mortgage of the premises. After paying the costs that the commissioner retain the residue subject to the future order of the court."

*317

John H. Pearson was at that time commissioner for Richland county, and on February 2d, 1863, he offered for sale the different parcels of land, and among them a lot marked "C," described as containing two acres and a fraction, which was bid off by Simeon Fair for $5075. The sale was in accordance with the order; was open, fair and for full value. The purchaser complied with the terms of sale, received titles from the commissioner, and executed to him bond and mortgage to secure the purchase money. From what remains of the record, it does not appear that this sale was confirmed by the court or that there ever was an order to pay out the proceeds of sale. Soon after the sale John H. Pearson went into possession of the lot and retained it until, in the same year, he contracted to sell it to Childs & Co., for $13,000 cash. The negotiation was conducted entirely by Childs and Pearson, and the latter told the former that the title was in Simeon Fair. Childs employed A. G. Baskin, Esq., to examine the titles, and he and Pearson being in the commissioner's office, called Childs in and informed him that "papers were all ready." They offered to show him a bundle of papers to satisfy him that it was "all straight and right," but he declined, saying that if his attorney was satisfied, he was. Baskin handed the title of Fair to Childs, and he paid the purchase money in cash, and went into possession, and still retains it. Pearson died in 1864, and James R. Scott is the representative of his estate.

Some time after the war (1869) some of the plaintiffs, claiming to be heirs of Alexander Brodie, deceased, filed a bill against the defendants, Simeon Fair and the representative of Pearson, to set aside the sale; upon what ground, does not appear (the original record is not before us); and to that bill Simeon Fair, on August 16th, 1869, answered: "That said lot was bid off by him at the instance and for the benefit of John H. Pearson, and although he took title and complied with the terms of sale, it was for the benefit of John H. Pearson; that afterwards on being informed *by the said Pearson that he had bargained the same to Childs & Co., this defendant made titles to them, they agreeing to pay the bond for the purchase money." After this disclosure (1872) the plaintiffs filed this amended complaint to have the sale of lot "C" rescinded, vacated and annulled, and that the purchasers account for rents and profits since they went into possession. Baskin, Fair and Childs are all now dead. The defence is, that the defendants are innocent purchasers, without notice of any defect in the title. The Circuit judge decided that the sale was absolutely void, and also that Childs had notice, if not in person, through his attorney, A. G. Baskin, of facts and circumstances affecting the title before the purchase was completed. Childs and his co-purchasers except to this decree, and appeal to this court.

*318

It is too well settled to need citation of authority that a purchaser, bona fide, without notice of any defect in his title may stand upon the plea of purchaser. Equity does not disarm a purchaser, but assists him. But to sustain the plea three things are necessary:

1. That he has paid in full the purchase money.

2. That he has the legal title or the best right to it.

3. That he purchased bona fide without notice.

In this case, there is no doubt that the purchasers paid the purchase money. Have they the legal title? The defence is purely equitable and cannot avail against the legal title, which might be established at law. The defendants have a perfect chain of paper title; but it is said that the sale by Pearson for his own benefit was absolutely void under section 8 of the act of 1791, (7 Stat. 263,) and that therefore they have no title upon which to rest their plea. That act declares that "no commissioner in equity [also other officers] shall be concerned or interested, directly or indirectly, in the purchase or acquisition of any property sold by him by virtue of, or in obedience to any process, execution, order of court or law; and if such officer shall presume to be concerned or interested in any such purchase or acquisition at any sale by him made, he shall, on conviction thereof, be deprived of his office, and the purchase so made shall be utterly void and of no effect."

In 1840, the legislature passed what is known as the commis*sioner's act, the title of which is "to ascertain and define the powers, duties and liabilities of masters, commissioners and registers in equity, and to prescribe for the organization and regulation of their respective offices." This act purports to be a codification of all the laws upon the subject and does include other old provisions, but entirely omits the section above referred to in the act of 1791. The only provision which it contains upon the subject of sales by the commissioner is in section 6, "that masters and commissioners in equity shall make all sales ordered by the said court and execute conveyances thereto." 11 Stat. 108, 120.

*319

It is contended that the act of 1840 was a collection in convenient form of the whole law upon the subject, and that by excluding the provision of 1791, it was thereby repealed so far as it related to commissioners in equity. It may throw some light upon this subject to make a brief reference to the history of the act of 1840. The records show that in 1837 the legislature passed "an act concerning district officers and their offices," (6 Stat. 577,) which required the attorney-general and Circuit solicitor to examine and report as to the condition of the district offices, clerk, sheriff, commissioner in equity, &c., &c. These officers made a report to the session of 1838, whereupon the legislature passed a joint resolution appointing the attorney-general and the Circuit solicitors "special commissioners to sit during the recess, and at the next session to report a bill or bills containing in a condensed form the various duties and liabilities as required of, and imposed upon, the several officers whose offices are enumerated, together with such amendments, additions or alterations, as, after a full and careful examination of statute law, rules and practice of the courts and judicial decisions, the attorney-general and Circuit solicitors shall deem necessary or expedient relative to said officers." Resolutions 1838, 128. The result of the labors of these able commissioners was reported in separate bills in relation to the different offices—sheriff, commissioner, &c. All of these bills passed the legislature in 1839 except the commissioner's act, which passed the next year (1840). The same persons learned in the law who were charged with the preparation of the commissioner's act, also prepared that of the sheriff. In the latter (the sheriff's act) the penal provision of 1791 was in*serted, but it was omitted in the commissioner's act. There were reasons for that provision in regard to the sheriff, which did not exist as to the commissioner, and we have no doubt that under the authority to make alterations, it was intentionally omitted in the act of 1840 for the purpose of effecting its repeal. It is not so clear that the exclusion of the provision of 1791 from the act and the insertion therein of only a simple power of sale, were the only appropriate means of accomplishing the purpose of repeal. But, considering the nature and object of the act of 1840, the intelligence of the commissioners who framed it, and the great improbability that they would insert so important a provision in one bill, and merely by accident omit it in another, we feel constrained to hold that the act of 1840 superseded and repealed so much of the act of 1791 as related to the duties and liabilities of commissioners in equity.

*320

This view is incidentally supported by the decision of this court in the case of McCelvey v. Thomson, 7 S. C. 185. That was an action to set aside a sale of a commissioner upon the allegation that he was interested in the sale. The first purchaser had sold the land to innocent parties, who were also included in the proceedings. The principle upon which the relief was granted is not apparent, for there was no fraud, and the interest of the commissioner in the property sold was acquired after the sale; but, being granted, it is manifest that the court did not consider the sale as utterly void under the act of 1791, for they held the first purchaser and the commissioner to account only as trustees for the profits, and allowed the defence of innocent purchasers on the part of those who purchased without notice. Justice Wright in delivering the opinion of the court said: "The sale to Reed and Brown must stand. In addition to the reasons already given, they were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration and not affected with notice of any equity on the part of McCelvey sufficient to overreach legal title." This is a distinct declaration that McCelvey had only an equity and that the legal title was in the purchasers, which could not possibly be upon the assumption that the sale by the commissioner was utterly void.

Assuming, then, that the provision in the act of 1791, in regard to sales made by commissioners in equity, cannot control this *case, as it did not control the above-stated case, yet the fact still remains that Pearson, the commissioner, by a private arrangement made in advance with a friend, purchased the lot in question. The commissioner was, in one sense, a trustee for the parties in interest; he was a trustee to sell, and indirectly purchased at his own sale. That sale must be tested by the equitable principles applicable in such cases. We shall not enter into the question, which has been much discussed in our courts, as to the exact status of such a sale, but accept what seems to be the settled conclusion from all the authorities, that whilst such a sale is not utterly void, it will be set aside on the application of any one interested, and that without reference to the question whether the sale was fairly conducted or whether a full and fair price was paid. Davoue v. Fanning, 2 Johns. Ch. 252; Ex parte Wiggins, 1 Hill's Eq. 353; Farr v. Sims' Rich. Eq. Cas. 138 [24 Am. Dec. 396]; Huger v. Huger, 9 Rich. Eq. 225, and cases there cited.

*321

The only exception to this rule is made in behalf of the bona fide purchaser for full value without notice; and the next question is, whether the defendants, when they purchased from Pearson in possession and received title from Fair, who was the apparent owner, had notice of the private arrangement under which the purchase was made. So far as the pleadings are concerned, we think the defence is stated with sufficient fullness. The denial of notice, "directly or indirectly," includes a denial of notice by the agent. But if it had been otherwise, it is now too late to make the objection. It should have been made by notice to make the answer more definite, or by demurrer. Pom., § 596.

There are two kinds of notice—actual and constructive. Childs alone conducted the negotiation for the purchase of the lot, and it is clear that he had no actual notice. He was not at the sale. There is no proof that any one informed him of the agreement, and he swears that he had no such notice. The inquiry is, then, narrowed down to the question whether Childs, in person or through his attorney, had constructive notice. If there are circumstances sufficient to put a party upon the inquiry, he is held to have notice of everything which that inquiry, properly conducted, would certainly disclose; but constructive notice goes no further. It stands upon the principle that the party is bound *to the exercise of due diligence, and is assumed to have the knowledge to which that diligence would lead him; but he is not held to have notice of matter which lies beyond the range of that inquiry and which that diligence might not disclose. "There must appear to be, in the nature of the case, such a connection between the facts disclosed and the further facts to be discovered, that the former could justly be viewed as furnishing a clue to the latter." Birdsall v. Russell, 29 N. Y. 220; Cambridge Valley Bank v. Delano, 48 N. Y. 326; Le Neve v. Le Neve, White & Tudor, Part I., § 11, par. 161, notes.

*322

It does not appear that Childs had any reason to doubt the title so as to be put upon the inquiry against the hidden equity. He had some notice about a disputed lien, but that was a different matter. We are unable to see that either Childs or his attorney had knowledge of such facts as should fix upon Childs constructive notice of the private agreement at the time of the sale, which was the isolated fact that caused the defect in the title. Baskin was employed to examine the title. He was in the commissioner's office with Pearson, and they had the books and papers before them, and Childs must be regarded as having had notice of all that they disclosed or upon examination would have disclosed to Baskin. We know of no facts thus within his reach other than these, viz.: That the lot was sold by Pearson, as commissioner, under an order of court, upon a credit of one, two and three years; that Fair purchased it and complied with the terms of sale; took title and executed bond and mortgage; that Pearson was in possession and controlling the lot in the name of his brother-in-law, who had title; that upon the receipt of the money and before due, he, as commissioner and payee, marked the bond and mortgage paid, and handed to Childs the deed of Fair. It may have been improper in Pearson to cancel the bond and mortgage before due. It concerned the discharge of his duty as commissioner, and might make him and his sureties liable on his official bond, or by possibility the act might be a nullity, leaving the mortgage a subsisting lien; but still that did not reach to the infirmity in the title which had vested. The only fact which could create that infirmity was the private arrangement at the sale, of which none of these circumstances, nor all of *them together, furnished knowledge. That fact was, in its nature, secret—out of the usual course of things—and not reasonably nor naturally inferable from what appeared. There is no proof that Pearson disclosed his secret, either to Baskin or Childs. There was no necessity for him to do so, and it does not appear that defendants had notice of it until Fair's answer to the original bill was filed. Looking back after that admission, it may be thought that there was enough to excite some general suspicions in a distrustful mind; but before the fact was disclosed by Fair, the circumstances were not, in our judgment, sufficient to lead up to this particular fact. It is said in the case of Birdsall v. Russell, before cited, that "the mere knowledge that the numbers on the bonds had been changed, gave the purchaser no clue, which, if followed up, would necessarily or even probably lead to knowledge."

*323

It is said that Pearson was in possession, and that fact fixed Childs with all the equities of Pearson. That is true, but what equities had Pearson? The possession naturally implied only that Fair, the legal owner, allowed him to occupy it either as a tenant or as his friend and kinsman.

The plea of the defendants, Childs, Johnston and Willard, that they are bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, is sustained, and in that respect the Circuit decree is reversed. But as the plaintiffs may desire to set up the claim that the act of the commissioner in satisfying the mortgage before the debt was due, was a nullity, and that, therefore, they have a right now to demand a foreclosure of the mortgage, which was not considered by the court below, and could not, therefore, be considered here, and which the frame of the complaint, as it now stands, would not permit, the case is remanded to the Circuit Court, and the plaintiff may, if so advised, apply to that court for such amendment as may be necessary to effect that purpose. If within a reasonable time after notice of this judgment, no such application is made, then the Circuit Court is instructed to dismiss the complaint as to the defendants, Childs, Johnston and Willard.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *324

*(Case No. 941.)

STEELE v. C., C. & A. RAILROAD COMPANY.

(April Term, 1880.)

[1. Motions ⇐43.]

The order of a Circuit judge granting leave to a party to make a motion before another judge, is without force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. ⇐43.]

[2. New Trial ⇐11.]

A motion on the minutes for a new trial, upon the ground of excessive damages, made without argument, was refused by the trial judge, and an appeal therefrom dismissed by the Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction. Held, that a succeeding Circuit judge had no power to grant an application for a new trial upon a case settled, but based upon the same grounds as before.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 14–16; Dec. Dig. ⇐11.]

[3. Judges ⇐24; Motions ⇐42.]

The decision of one judge is not subject to be reviewed by another: and a motion once heard and decided, will only be reviewed upon a new state of facts arising after the decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. ⇐24; Motions, Cent. Dig. § 53; Dec. Dig. ⇐42.]

[4. New Trial ⇐165.]

Neither the judgment nor the order refusing a new trial on the minutes, could be opened as matter of favor under Section 197 of the code of procedure, because of a misinterpretation of law by counsel.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Clark Bros. v. Wimberly, 24 S. C. 141; Kaminitsky v. Northeastern R. Co., 25 S. C. 68; Hubbard v. Camperdown Mills, 26 S. C. 589, 2 S. E. 576; Ex parte Jones, 47 S. C. 396, 25 S. E. 285; Peeples v. Ulmer, 64 S. C. 501, 42 S. E. 429; Dixon v. Floyd, 73 S. C. 207, 53 S. E. 167.

For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 334, 335; Dec. Dig. ⇐165.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐1195; Courts ⇐104.]

An expression of opinion ore tenus by one of the justices of the Supreme Court, after judgment pronounced, cannot affect the law of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4664; Dec. Dig. ⇐1195; Courts, Cent. Dig. § 353; Dec. Dig. ⇐104.]

[6. Appeal and Error ⇐1015.]

[Cited in State v. Nance, 25 S. C. 174, to the point that the refusal by circuit court of a new trial on the facts is not reviewable by Supreme Court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3860–3876; Dec. Dig. ⇐1015.]

Before Wallace, J., York, November, 1879.

This case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. H. Rion, for appellant.

A motion may always be renewed upon sufficient grounds. 1 Till. & Shear. Pr. 432; 4 Abb. Pr. 404; 4 Wait's Pr. 612; 26 How. Pr. 396; Voorh. Code, 634 b; 75 N. Y. 599. The code, Section 197, authorizes the relief asked here. Counsel here, as other distinguished counsel in Brickman's case and others, thought Judge Aldrich's order appealable. And the direct provisions of the statute misled. The motion now is not too late. Wait's An. Code 333. Motion renewed was under circumstances different from when motion was made; but if facts were not different, court had power to hear. 33 Barb. 654; 74 N. Y. 379. Even the Supreme Court allows a rehearing. Judges Aldrich and Mackey do not object; and another judge may hear. 1 S. C. 141; 3 Wait's Pr. 423. See, too, 3 Wait's Pr. 442, s.

*325

*Mr. W. B. Wilson, contra.

November 22d, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. In July, 1878, John G. Steele, the plaintiff, brought an action against the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad Company for damages on account of personal injuries received by him when a passenger on the railroad of the said company, in an accident at the bridge over the South Fork of Fishing creek, in York county, November 23d, 1877. The case was tried before Judge Aldrich, September, 1878, and, after much testimony, the jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $10,000. A motion was made on the minutes of the judge for a new trial on the grounds—

"1. Because the verdict was contrary to the legal preponderance of the testimony.

"2. Because the damages are excessive."

Judge Aldrich refused to grant the motion. An appeal was taken from the order refusing the motion and the Supreme Court dismissed the appeal, not upon the merits, but upon the ground that the decision of the Circuit judge upon the facts was final and could not be reviewed by this court. Steele v. Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta R. R. Co., 11 S. C. 590.

May 3d, 1879, the attorney of the defendant corporation, after notice and on copies of the brief, the order of the Supreme Court and the affidavits, made a motion before Judge Mackey, at chambers, "for a new trial, and also for an order staying all proceedings upon the judgment of the plaintiff until the determination of this motion. The following are the affidavits referred to:

"State of South Carolina, county of Fairfield.—Personally appeared James H. Rion, and makes oath that he, as attorney for the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad Company, defendant in the case of John G.

Steele v. Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad Company, made the motion for a new trial in said case upon the judge's minutes, before his Honor, Judge A. P. Aldrich, the presiding judge, and that at the time of making the motion deponent was not aware of the decision of *the Supreme Court in the case of Brickman v. South Carolina Railroad Company, [8 S. C. 173] and hence did not support his motion by an argument, he, at that time, supposing that the refusal of the presiding judge to grant the motion would be reviewable in the Supreme Court. That deponent is informed and believes that his Honor, the presiding judge, was also of the opinion that his refusal to grant the motion was reviewable in the Supreme Court. That deponents' inquiries and information produce the firm belief on his part that the Circuit judges and the bar of the state were not aware that the Supreme Court of the state would not review such refusal, before the publication of Volume VIII., South Carolina Reports, which were issued since said motion was made. James H. Rion.

*326

"Sworn to before me, this 14th day of April, 1879. Henry N. Obear, N. P."

"State of South Carolina, county of Fairfield.—Personally appears James H. Rion and makes oath that on the 23d day of April, 1879, the Supreme Court of said state rendered a decision in the case of John G. Steele v. Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad Company, in which they did not pass upon the merits, and dismissed the appeal without prejudice to any right of the defendants; and at the time of rendering said decision the said court ore tenus stated that there was nothing to prevent the defendants from applying to the Circuit judge for a re-hearing of this motion for a new trial.

"James H. Rion,
"Attorney for defendants."

"Sworn to before me, this 23d day of April, 1879. Henry N. Obear, N. P."

Judge Mackey, after the affidavits were read and argument heard, refused the motion for a new trial, but July 26th, 1879, granted an order "that all proceedings under the judgment herein, be and the same are hereby stayed and enjoined, pending the determination of a motion for a new trial, to be made on behalf of the defendants herein at the next ensuing term of the Court of Common Pleas of the county of York."

*327

*From this order the plaintiff appealed upon the following grounds:

"1. Because it is respectfully submitted that his Honor had no jurisdiction in the premises, and that said order and decree are without the authority of law.

"2. That his Honor erred in holding that a motion for a new trial could be made at the next ensuing term of the Court of Common Pleas for York county.

"3. That in the proceedings had before his Honor no such application as above was made and no notice thereof given to the plaintiff or his attorneys.

"4. That said injunction was not in accordance with law, no levy having been made or affidavit that the same was threatened, and no bond required of defendant in said order.

"5. That said cause was res adjudicata, having been heard and decided by the Supreme Court, and that the motion for leave to renew motion for new trial before the Circuit judge who heard the cause had also been refused by said Supreme Court.

"6. That the motion for a new trial before Judge Aldrich was made upon the case as heard, and on the sole grounds that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and excessive, and no exception was taken to his rulings upon the law pending said trial, and that defendants cannot now renew their motion for a new trial before any Circuit judge or Court of Common Pleas."

Whilst this appeal was pending in the Supreme Court, the defendants, upon the papers before referred to and the decree of Judge Mackey, made a third motion for a new trial before Judge Wallace, sitting in term time for York county, who heard the motion, and November 7th, 1879, ordered that "said motion is hereby refused upon the ground that I have no power to grant it. That proceedings upon the plaintiff's judgment be stayed until the determination by the Supreme Court of the appeal from this order, which, it is agreed by the counsel, shall be heard by said court at the November Term, 1879, in connection with the appeal now pending in the above case, and which is now on the calendar of said court."

*328

*The defendants excepted to this order and appeal to this court for that, "His Honor held that he had no power to grant the motion for a new trial then made."

Judge Mackey's order granted leave to the defendants to renew their motion for a new trial before the judge who might hold the court for the next ensuing term for York county, and in the meantime restrained the enforcement of the judgment. The plaintiff appealed from this order, but afterwards consented that his appeal might be considered in connection with defendants' appeal from Judge Wallace's order. We shall not now consider whether Judge Mackey, at chambers, had the right to make the order appealed from. So much of that order as granted leave to make the motion before another judge was without force, as the judge before whom the motion was to be made, could, if necessary, as well grant leave as any other judge; and so much of that order as restrained the plaintiff from proceeding on his judgment until the motion could be made, was adopted by Judge Wallace and extended until the appeals could be heard, and is no longer important. We shall, therefore, confine ourselves to the last appeal, the consideration of which, so far as practical issues are concerned, will dispose of the whole matter.

Was it error of law for Judge Wallace to refuse to grant a new trial, on the ground that he had no power to grant it, Judge Aldrich having refused it? The original motion for a new trial was exclusively upon the facts of the case. It is quite certain that Judge Aldrich, who heard the case, had the right to hear and determine that motion, and, if he had refused to do so, upon the ground that he had no power, it would have been error in law and appealable to this court. "Circuit Courts shall have the power to grant new trials in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law in the United States." Gen. Stat. 497. The phrase "Circuit Courts shall" clearly means not in union, but each separately. The right to grant implies the right to refuse, and Judge Aldrich did refuse the motion for a new trial. Was that order made by the authority provided by law to decide applications in cases of this character and final in its nature, or was it *reviewable for error by any authority known to the laws of the state? The terms of the code cited, indicate that the Circuit judge is the appellate authority provided in that class of cases, as it directs upon what principles new trials shall be granted. The law makes the Circuit judges acting separately, the Court of Appeals, to hear and determine motions for new trials upon the facts in jury cases. The Circuit judge hears the case and is supposed to be familiar with the facts, but whether this is the wisest provision that could be made is a matter for the legislature and not for us to discuss. It is certain that the decision of the Circuit judge refusing the new trial on the facts, could not be reviewed by this court, which, in the class of cases to which this belongs, is only a "court for the correction of errors at law." There was no error of law charged in the case and, therefore, it is clear that this court, as it has decided, could not review the order of Judge Aldrich. Is there any other authority competent to consider and review it on the ground of error of judgment? We think not. The Court of Common Pleas is a unity, although its jurisdiction is administered by a number of judges who are, in some sense, the exponents of the court. When one of these judges makes a decision upon the merits of a matter within his jurisdiction, that is not merely the personal opinion of the judge, but a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, which exhausts the power of the court upon that subject and must stand until reversed or set aside in the manner prescribed by law. There is no appeal from one Circuit judge to another. All are of equal dignity and have the same right to pronounce the judgments of the court. One Circuit judge upon the same state of facts, has no power to change, alter or reverse a decision of a brother judge of the same Circuit. Otherwise, there would be no end to litigation. No one could tell where it would stop. Nothing could be considered as finally adjudged, and all rights of person and property would be set afloat. This rule results from the nature of the case and well-established principles. Its propriety is so obvious that it has not been thought necessary to enforce it by constitutional prohibition or express enactment, but for the sake of symmetry and convenience in practice it has been embodied in our 61st rule of the Circuit Courts, which declares that "if any application for an *order be made to any judge, and such order be refused, in whole or in part, or be granted conditionally, or on terms, no subsequent application upon the same state of facts, shall be made to any other judge; and if upon such subsequent application, any order be made, it shall be revoked," &c. This is precisely the same as the 31st rule of the New York courts, and Mr. Wait, in his practice, tells us that in that state "the courts enforce the rule rigidly." It seems that there are doubts whether the refusal of a motion even on the merits, is, as in the decision of a case, absolutely res adjudicata. The judge may sometimes reconsider his own orders, but all the authorities agree as to the general doctrine, "that the decision of one judge is not subject to be reviewed by another." 1 Greenleaf on Ev. 543; Smith v. Spalding, 30 How. Pr. 340; Dollfus v. Frosch, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 495; Cazneau v. Bryant, 4 Abb. 103; 3 Waite's Pr. 423; 4 Waite 611; Till. & Shear. 430.

*329

*330

But conceding this, it is said that there are circumstances under which the Court of Common Pleas will allow its own decisions to be assailed and set aside in its own courts. That is true, but we think it is never allowed indirectly by an appeal from one judge to another, or by renewing a motion before one judge which has been refused by another on the same state of facts. The court will not change its own orders (except they are merely administrative) without a direct proceeding to set aside one order and substitute another for good cause; and the fact that one of the judges may differ in judgment upon the subject, from the judge who made the order complained of, is not of itself regarded as sufficient cause.

A motion once heard and decided fully will only be reviewed upon a new state of facts arising after the decision. The new state of facts must be such as to make a new case, as misconduct in the judge granting the order, newly-discovered evidence, or that the ground of the order has been removed, as in the case of Gilchrist v. Comfort, 26 How. 394, where an order refusing a new trial was based upon an adjudication, which was afterwards reversed. We cannot see that the facts of this case were changed in any important particular between the first application and the last. When the motion was made before Judge Wallace, the *facts, which the affidavits did not touch, were the same as when Judge Aldrich refused the original motion. The truth is, the motion before Judge Wallace was not to vacate for cause the order of Judge Aldrich, nor an application for a rehearing, but a renewed motion seeking a different judgment in the matter of the new trial, simply ignoring the order of Judge Aldrich. It was in substance really, an appeal from the judgment of one judge to that of another.

*331

But it is ingeniously argued that the order of Judge Aldrich may be regarded as in the class which are sometimes "opened as matter of favor." Mr. Whittaker says these arise more particularly under the power of relief conferred by the code, (Gen. Stat. 612, § 197) as follows: "The court may, * * * upon such terms as may be just, at any time within one year after notice thereof, relieve a party from a judgment order or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect," &c. The relief allowed by this provision does not apply to this case. That section of the code was intended only for the relief of parties who, by reason of some mistake, inadvertence, &c., may have lost the opportunity to be present at the trial or to be represented there, as is suggested by the words "taken against him." In commenting on this provision, Freeman says that "if the parties were represented at the trial, they can only obtain relief by an application made in conformity to the rules of procedure provided by law in reference to new trials. But if they were not at the trial or not represented there on account of some mistake or excusable neglect, then their remedy is not by application for a new trial, but by an application addressed to the discretion of the court and made under the statute authorizing relief to be granted from judgments rendered against a party through "his mistake, inadvertence or excusable neglect." Freeman on Judgments, § 105; McKinley v. Tuttle, 34 Cal. 239; Williams ex parte, In re Campbell v. County of Charleston, 7 S. C. 71; Gibbes v. Elliott, 8 S. C. 60. In this case the defendants were ably represented at the trial and made vigorous defence. It is difficult to see what "relief" could be granted against an order "taken against him," when the complaint was for non-action in refusing to grant the order for a new trial.

*332

*If this "relief provision" could be made to embrace an order refusing a new trial, a case for relief was not made out. No relief can be granted against the judgment, for so far as that is concerned there is no allegation of any mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable negligence. As to the order refusing the new trial, it is stated in one of the affidavits that the defendants' attorney omitted to argue the motion, induced by "not being aware of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Brickman v. South Carolina Railroad Company, and supposing that the refusal of the presiding judge to grant the motion would be reviewable." That was not enough to make out a case for relief "against the order" for several reasons. It was a mistake in law. In all cases the surprise complained of must be in some matter of fact and not of law. 3 Waite's Pr. 403. The mistake was in matter extrinsic and had no connection with the case, except as it influenced the conduct of the attorney. The new matter must be such as could not by reasonable diligence have been known. As we understand it, the case of Brickman, then not published, declared no new principle as to the hearing of appeals. The same doctrine had been held in the cases of State v. Bailey, 1 S. C. 1; Floyd v. Abney, Id. 114; Abrahams & Son v. Kelly & Barrett, 2 S. C. 235; Byrd v. Small, 2 S. C. 388; Massey v. Adams, 3 S. C. 254.

Besides, it does not appear that the order of Judge Aldrich would probably have been different if the distinguished attorney of the defendants had argued the motion with all his accustomed ability. Judge Aldrich was fresh from hearing the whole case, and may not have desired further argument. It is not unusual for the most zealous and able lawyers to submit such motions without argument to the judge who heard the case. The judge does not say that his judgment was in any way affected by the want of argument on the facts, and we think it improbable that his opinion would have been changed by any argument that could have been made. We cannot suppose that his judgment was affected by any opinion he might have as to the appealable nature of his order, or that he failed to consider the subject gravely, and made merely a pro forma order in the expectation that the Supreme Court would correct it. The high character of the *judge forbids any such supposition. Whittaker, in his Practice, states the rule as follows: "In motions for new trials on the ground of surprise or newly-discovered evidence, the strongest possible case must be made out. * * * Enough ought to be shown to raise at least a fair and bona fide inference that had the surprise not occurred, or had the newly-discovered evidence been introduced, the result might and probably would have been different." 2 Whittaker's Pr. (4th Ed.) 465.

*333

The expression of opinion ore tenus on the part of one of the members of this court at the time the order was announced dismissing the appeal, can have no bearing upon the law of the case. The court had just decided that they had no jurisdiction therein, and what was then said could not possibly be considered in the light of an "interpretation as to the effect of the opinion." It was simply the statement of an impression, prompted probably by regret at the necessary result of the case and sympathy for the losing party. In no possible view could it amount to more than an individual opinion upon a matter which had not been argued, and which, from its character, was not and could not be before the court for adjudication.

This was an action sounding in damages and peculiarly for the jury. We may think the verdict was too large, but we have no standard by which to measure it with exactness. Courts are more reluctant to grant new trials for excessive damages in actions for personal injury than in any other class of cases. The judge who heard the testimony, and who, by the law, was the proper officer to decide the question, refused to grant a motion for a new trial. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court and there dismissed for want of jurisdiction. At a subsequent term of the Circuit Court the motion was renewed before another judge, who refused it on the ground that under the circumstances he had no power to grant it. We cannot say that this was error. The appeals should be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *334

*(Case No. 944.)

HARRISON v. BAILEY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Trusts ⇐17, 18.]

A verbal contract with a judgment debtor to purchase his land at the execution sale, and then to transfer one-half of it to the debtor, is within the terms of the statute of frauds, and may not be established by parol evidence.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Lamar v. Wright, 31 S. C. 75, 9 S. E. 736.

For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. ⇐17, 18.]

[2. Contracts ⇐47.]

An agreement made by a stranger with a judgment debtor to purchase the judgment, and allow the debtor one-half of the profits to be made by a sale of his land under the judgment, is without consideration, and therefore not binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 256; Dec. Dig. ⇐47.]

[3. Equity ⇐25.]

A court of equity will not lend its aid to enforce an agreement, whose object appears to have been to defeat the claims of the creditors of the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 77–85; Dec. Dig. ⇐25.]

Before Mackey, J., Greenville, April, 1878.

Action by William A. Harrison against John Bailey, commenced in 1877. The complaint was as follows:

The plaintiff, by Earle & Wells, his attorneys, complaining of the defendant, for cause of action shows as follows, to wit:

The plaintiff was largely indebted, and having a large family was sorely pressed to support them, and his homestead having been set off to him under an execution in favor of G. F. Townes for about $2100, he was residing at Reidville, in Spartanburg county, where the defendant came to him and pretended greatly to sympathize with him and with his family, and being his brother-in-law, proposed to befriend him and enable him again to start in the world, and said that he personally had some special means of acquiring the judgment of Townes, with whom he had intimate relations, and of having it transferred to him at chambers, and it was agreed by and between them that the defendant should acquire said judgment and bring the land into sale and buy it, unless it should sell too largely in excess of the whole amount of the judgment, and the defendant, Bailey, was to buy the said judgment and incur all expenses himself, and then transfer one-half of the land to the plaintiff in such manner as plaintiff should direct, in order to secure to his family the uninterrupted *enjoyment thereof, but if it should sell largely in excess of the judgment, then the costs of the judgment and the necessary expenses were to be deducted, and the plaintiff was to receive the balance of the money.

*335

2. Plaintiff subsequently learned that this visit and conversation was on the Saturday previous to the sale on Monday of the Townes judgment by his assignee, as a portion of his assets in bankruptcy.

That the defendant, Bailey, suppressed the truth as to the judgment being for sale at auction, and misled and deceived the plaintiff by pretending that he possessed special means of obtaining the judgment and of having it transferred to himself.

3. That shortly after this defendant came again to plaintiff's house and informed plaintiff that he had secured the judgment, but evading the cost of it, gave plaintiff to understand that it was between $700 and $800, and it was agreed that the land should at once be brought into sale and that plaintiff should go up and attend the same. A few days after this, however, the defendant wrote that he "must on no account come to Greenville on the day of sale, that these were days of injunctions, and that the matter must be done secretly and cautiously;" and plaintiff, reposing implicit confidence in the defendant's disposition to aid him in his embarrassment, and being impressed by his assumed kindly disposition to serve him, did not go to the sale on the first Monday in April, 1874, and it was not until afterwards that plaintiff learned that defendant had craftily and subtilely deceived him by the disguise of his pretended sympathy and friendship, and in utter violation of his agreement had allowed the land to be sold for some $200 or $300 less than the judgment and received the money himself.

4. Defendant, Bailey, paid plaintiff $800, which plaintiff thought it better to accept, as the land was irretrievably gone, and said Bailey promised to arrange the remainder to plaintiff's satisfaction, but plaintiff has sought, on two occasions, to meet the defendant, who has adroitly evaded meeting him, and he has been unable to obtain the balance due him.

5. And this plaintiff alleges and charges that the defendant has adroitly deceived and defrauded him, and by this means has *succeeded in preventing his purchasing said judgment, and has obtained it, according to his own statement, with all expenses thereof paid, for $250, and having done so has basely disregarded his contract to buy the land, pay the costs of the judgment and all expenses, and divide the same as herein set forth; that having obtained an unconscionable advantage of the plaintiff by abusing his confidence, has obtained the proceeds of said judgment and refused to pay over the same.

*336

Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment—

1. That said defendant, in this purchase of said judgment, may be deemed to be the trustee of this plaintiff, and to have purchased the same for him and on his behalf.

2. That an accounting may be had, and that, after allowing defendant all just credits for amounts actually paid out, and for the amount paid plaintiff, the defendant be decreed to pay him the remainder of the money received on said judgment, together with interest from sales-day in April, A. D. 1874.

3. For such other and further relief as the court shall deem meet and to equity pertains.

4. For his costs herein.

The answer denied the statements of the complaint, set up a different agreement, of which there had been full performance, and plead the statute of frauds.

Upon the pleadings, the Circuit judge dismissed the complaint as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and as the contract alleged was obnoxious to the statute of frauds, it being a parol agreement for the purchase of land, and without consideration.

Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. W. E. Earle, for appellant.

Mr. J. S. Cothran, contra.

November 29th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. In this case the Circuit judge dismissed the complaint upon two grounds: First. Because it did not state *facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Second. Because the contract sued upon was obnoxious to the statute of frauds. The case must therefore be considered as though all the allegations contained in the complaint, which are properly pleaded, were true. So considering it, we agree entirely with the Circuit judge. If the cause of action be regarded as a contract by which the defendant undertook to purchase the land of the present plaintiff under the execution in favor of Townes, "and then transfer one-half of the land to the plaintiff in such manner as plaintiff should direct, in order to secure to his family the uninterrupted enjoyment thereof," as some of the allegations in the complaint would seem to imply, then, clearly, it was a contract for an interest in lands which is within the terms of the statute of frauds, and parol evidence, upon which alone it is alleged to rest, would not be sufficient to establish it. McDonald v. May, 1 Rich. Eq. 91.

*337

If, on the other hand, the cause of action alleged be regarded as an agreement on the part of the present defendant to buy the judgment in favor of Townes against the present plaintiff, and to allow him one-half of any profit that might be made by the transaction, then, clearly, there was no consideration alleged for such an agreement, and hence it does not constitute a cause of action. The present plaintiff was under an obligation to pay the whole amount of the judgment, and his property, as the event proved was sufficient for that purpose, and although something is said in the complaint about a homestead having been set off to him under the Townes judgment, there is no allegation that such homestead was set off to him in the land which was subsequently sold, or that it was a part of the agreement that the present plaintiff should abandon or waive his claim of homestead, if indeed, he could do so, whereby the land out of which it was carved might be sold by the present defendant for its full value, and that in consideration thereof the defendant had agreed to divide with the plaintiff any profit made by the transaction.

There is another view of this matter which would be fatal to the claim of the plaintiff. There is no principle of equity better settled than that he who seeks equity must himself do equity—that one who comes into the court of equity must come with *clean hands. In this case it is impossible to avoid the impression that the whole object of the alleged arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendant was to defeat the claims of the creditors of the plaintiff, and to such purpose no court should lend its aid.

*338

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 338

(Case No. 946.)

DILL v. MOON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇨91.]

A refusal by the Circuit judge to grant a stay of judgment for the possession of land, pending an action for improvements under the betterment act of 1870, (Gen. Stat. 559,) is a denial of a substantial right, involving the merits, and is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 612–641; Dec. Dig. ⇨ 91.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇨91.]

There being nothing in the record to show that the improvements were not made in good faith—Held, that the stay should have been ordered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 638; Dec. Dig. ⇨91.]

[3. Improvements ⇨4.]

[The court will presume, in the absence of contrary proof, that the title to land under which improvements were made was colorable, and that the improvements were made in good faith.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Improvements, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. ⇨4.]

Before Kershaw, J., Greenville, July, 1878.

This case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. G. G. Wells, for appellant.

Messrs. Garlington & Moore, contra.

November 30th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. John P. Moon brought an action against John P. Dill to recover possession of five acres of land in Greenville county. Dill denied plaintiff's right, setting up title in himself. Each claimed under different grantors, but nothing further appears as to the manner in which Dill came into possession. The case was heard July 18th, 1878, and the *jury found for the plaintiff, Moon, the land in dispute and $1 damages. On July 19th, at 9:45 o'clock a. m., Dill filed in the clerk's office the complaint required by the statute to recover the value of alleged improvements on the land. July 22d the Circuit Court refused a motion for an order "that all proceedings in the case of John P. Moon against John P. Dill be suspended until the trial of this case." From this refusal Dill appeals to this court upon the following ground:

*339

"Because the plaintiff was entitled to the stay prayed for as of right, and it is respectfully submitted that his Honor, the presiding judge, was without discretion and erred in refusing the order prayed for."

It does not appear upon what ground the Circuit judge refused the motion, but it is insisted here that his order was "intermediate," which did not involve the merits of the action, nor affect any substantial right in said action, but related only to a matter of procedure, and is not appealable. It is true that an order involving merely the exercise of discretion on the part of the court is not appealable, as error of law cannot be alleged against such an order. But it appears to us that this order denied a substantial right. The words of the amendment to the code of 1873 are "involving the merits," and it has been held that an order refusing a motion to transfer a case to the county where the defendants resided, after the law upon that subject had been changed, was a denial of a substantial right secured by statute, and appealable. Blakely & Copeland v. Frazier et al., 11 S. C. 123.

What is said in that case is applicable to this: "The word 'merits' naturally bears the sense of including all that the party may claim of right in reference to his case. * * * It may be concluded that whenever a substantial right of the party to an action material to obtaining a judgment in such action is denied, a right of appeal lies to this court."

Did the refusal of the order deny to Dill, who had lost the land in the case of Moon against him, anything which he could claim of right in reference to his case? That must depend upon the question whether the facts of his case brought it within the provisions of the act of 1879, (Gen. Stat. 559,) in regard to im*provements or betterments. If the case comes within that act, it was error of law to refuse the order. The first section of the act provides: "That after final judgment in an action to recover lands and tenements in favor of the plaintiff, if the defendant has purchased the lands and tenements recovered in such action, or taken a lease thereof, or those under whom he holds has purchased a title to such lands and tenements, or taken a lease thereof, supposing at the time of such purchase such title to be good in fee, or such lease to convey and secure the title and interest therein expressed, such defendant shall be entitled to recover of the plaintiff in such action the full value of all improvements made upon such land by such defendant or those under whom he claims, in the manner hereinafter provided." * * *

*340

"Section 4. The court, on the entry of such action, shall stay all proceedings upon the judgment obtained in the prior action until a final judgment shall be rendered in this action," &c.

Within the time and in the manner prescribed, Dill claimed the right given by the first section of the act, and made a motion to stay all proceedings in the case of John P. Moon against him until the trial of the case, which was refused. Clearly, Dill had the right under the statute to have the case suspended, if he held, as a purchaser, a title which he had reason to believe was good. It is not alleged that he entered on the land by virtue of a contract with the legal owner, Moon, who had performed such contract on his part. Nor does it appear that he was a mere trespasser.

"Dill denied plaintiff's title, setting up title in himself." That was not precisely in the words of the act that he "had purchased the lands, supposing at the time of such purchase such title to be good in fee," but it does appear that each claimed under a different grantor, which, considering the purpose of the act, was equivalent to a claim as purchaser. It is not to be assumed that the title under which the improvements were made was fraudulent or pretensive. It must be considered to be bona fide until the contrary is made to appear, and there is nothing tending to negative the claim that he held under a title which he supposed to be good. Fraud is not lightly presumed. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the court assumes that the *improvements were made in good faith. If they were not, the jury can so find. The defendant in the action for the land should have an opportunity to have that question decided, and, in the meantime, by the express terms of the act, the judgment should be suspended. The motion should have been granted, and the order refusing it is reversed.

*341

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 341

(Case No. 947.)

SHARPE v. LEE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Bills and Notes ⇨125.]

A note payable one day after date, "with interest from date at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum, interest to be paid annually," draws twelve per cent. interest after maturity.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Mobley v. Davega, 16 S. C. 75, 42 Am. Rep. 632; Maner v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 476; Watkins v. Lang, 17 S. C. 17; Westfield v. Westfield, 19 S. C. 90; Wilson v. Kelly, Id. 168; Thatcher & Co. v. Massey, 20 S. C. 547; Piester v. Piester, 22 S. C. 140, 53 Am. Rep. 711; Smith v. Smith, 33 S. C. 215, 216, 11 S. E. 761; Baum v. Raley, 53 S. C. 40, 30 S. E. 713.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 281; Dec. Dig. ⇨125.]

Before Mackey, J., Anderson, September, 1880.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Brown & Tribble, for appellants.

Mr. W. H. Lyles, contra, contended that there was no difference between a note payable one year after date and one payable one day after date: if so, at what period would the line be drawn? That the words, "interest to be paid annually," apply to the manner of payment, and not to the rate, as in 2 S. C. 253.

December 6th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action on a sealed note in the following words:

*342

*"Anderson C. H., S. C.

"$1616.51.

"One day after date we, or either of us, promise to pay W. S. Sharpe, trustee of Jane N. Neville, one thousand six hundred and sixteen 51-100 dollars, for value received, with interest from date at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum. Interest to be paid annually, as witness our hands and seals.

"May 1st, 1875.

(Signed) "Thos. B. Lee. [L. S.]
"Miriam E. Lee. [L. S.]
"E. Preston Earle." [L. S.]

On April 3d, 1880, the sum of $2255 was paid, which left due the sum of $447.63, if interest is counted at "twelve per cent. per annum and payable annually," but if it is counted at seven per cent. per annum, after it became due, the note was paid in full. The defendant made that question by way of demurrer "that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." Judge Mackey sustained the demurrer and dismissed the complaint. The defendant appeals to this court on several grounds, which all state nearly the same proposition, in different forms, as that contained in the following:

"1. Because the sealed note was a due paper to bear interest at twelve per cent. annually."

The note was given on May 1st, 1875, prior to the re-enactment of the usury law of 1877, (16 Stat. 325,) when it was not unlawful for the parties to agree in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, for any specific rate of interest. Gen. Stat. 318. The question, then, is purely one of construction. What was the contract of the parties as expressed by the instrument itself? Was it to bear interest at twelve or seven per cent., or at twelve per cent. until due and seven per cent. after due? It is not necessary to review the many cases in our books upon the subject. They have been collected and arranged under proper heads in the appendix to Johnstone's Equity Digest, p. 165. The general rule may be stated in the words of the court in the case of Langston v. S. C. Railroad Company, 2 S. C. 248: "If the debt bears a fixed rate of interest *on its face higher or lower than that provided by law, the interest fixed by law attaches on it for the detention of the principal sum when the parties do not contract that it shall be the rate after the debt becomes due." In construing a paper every word, if possible, should have its full effect. Here the note is made payable "one day after date, with interest from date at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum, interest to be paid annually." There can be no doubt of the intention—that the parties contracted that the interest at twelve per cent. should run for a longer time than one day, as indicated by the declaration that it should be "paid annually," otherwise the word "annually" would not have been used. As Judge Wardlaw says in the case of O'Neall v. Sims, 1 Strob. 115: "It amounted to a mutual stipulation for an indefinite extension of credit, and annual payment of interest during the extension. * * * The same reason would apply to a case of the principal payable one day after date with annual payment of the interest." On a bond due at twelve months, with annual interest from its date, the interest accrues annually as well after as before the debt falls due. Singleton v. Lewis, 2 Hill 408; O'Neall v. Bookman, 9 Rich. 80; Wright v. Eaves, 10 Rich. Eq. 582. The words "payable annually" do not occur in the case of Briggs v. Winsmith, 10 S. C. 133 [30 Am. Rep. 46].

*343

It is not the province of the court to make contracts for parties, but to construe them in order to give effect to the intention. We have no doubt of the intention here.

The order dismissing the complaint should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *344

*(Case No. 948.)

STATE v. JONES.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐49.]

An indictment will lie at common law for forcible entry and detainer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, Cent. Dig. § 190; Dec. Dig. ⇐49.]

Before Mackey, J., Abbeville, October, 1880.

This was an indictment for forcible entry and detainer at common law against W. T. Jones and J. W. Ware. Defendants moved to quash the indictment on the ground that there is no such offence in this state; and after a verdict of guilty, they moved in arrest of judgment upon the same ground. Both motions were overruled and the defendants were sentenced. They appealed, alleging error in the Circuit judge in refusing their motions.

Mr. E. B. Gary, for appellants.

Mr. Solicitor Cothran, contra.

December 7th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. In this case the defendants were convicted of forcible entry and detainer under an indictment at common law, and the only question raised by this appeal is, whether such an indictment can be maintained. In a leading case upon the subject of forcible entry and detainer, (State v. Speirin, 1 Brev. 123,) the court uses this language: "An indictment at common law lies for a forcible entry, because it tends to disturb the peace, and in such an indictment it is not necessary to allege that the party trespassed upon had any estate in the land, but only that he was in quiet possession thereof." Citing 3 Burr. 1698, 1731; 8 T. R. 357. It is true that the language just quoted is a mere dictum, inasmuch as the indictment in that case was under the statute, and not at common law, yet, as we shall presently see, *this dictum has the support of high authority; for while the cases cited from Burrows' Reports do not distinctly decide the point in question, though in one of them, (Rex v. Bake, 3 Burr. 1732,) Mr. Justice Wilmot does say: "No doubt an indictment will lie at common law for a forcible entry, though they are generally brought on the acts of parliament. On the acts of parliament it is necessary to state the nature of the estate, because there must be restitution, but they may be brought at common law," yet in the case of The King v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 357, the question was distinctly made, and it was held that an indictment at common law for this offence could be maintained. In that case Lord Kenyon, C. J., says: "There is no doubt but that the offence of forcible entry is indictable at common law, though the statutes give other remedies to the parties grieved—restitution and damages." Indeed, an examination of the various cases referred to in the above-cited cases will show that there never was any doubt entertained that an indictment at common law for this offence will lie; but that the only question was as to the allegations necessary to be made in such an indictment. In the case now before the court no exception seems to have been taken to the form of the indictment, as no copy of the indictment has been incorporated in the case, and, as we understand it, the naked question presented is, whether an indictment for forcible entry at common law in any form will lie. In 1 Russ. on Crimes 304, it is said: "It is clear that in many cases an indictment will lie at common law for forcible entry if it contain not merely the common technical words 'with force and arms,' but also such a statement as shows that the facts charged amount to more than a bare trespass," as for example, where the entry is charged to have been made "unlawfully and with a strong hand," as was done in the case of The King v. Wilson, supra.

*345

From this brief review of the authorities it is clear that even after the passage of the various statutes giving additional remedies in cases of forcible entry and detainer, an indictment at common law for this offense would lie, provided it contained the necessary allegations.

Under this view the question raised in the argument here as to whether the repeal of the various statutes in regard to this *offence, which are referred to in the case of State v. Speirin, supra, by ch. CXLVI., Gen. Stat. 778, restores the remedy by indictment previously existing at common law, does not properly arise and need not, therefore, be considered, inasmuch as the offence, as we have seen, continued to be indictable at common law, even while those statutes were undoubtedly in full force.

*346

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 346

(Case No. 949.)

STATE v. McKETTRICK.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Indictment and Information ⟸32.]

The punishment for both grades of assault and battery being now prescribed by statute, all indictments for this offence must conclude contra formam statuti.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. ⟸32.]

[2. Criminal Law ⟸93.]

Trial justices have exclusive jurisdiction of assaults and batteries which are not of a high and aggravated nature.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Cooler, 30 S. C. 109, 8 S. E. 692, 3 L. R. A. 181.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129, 137–166; Dec. Dig. ⟸93.]

[3. Criminal Law ⟸93.]

Courts of General Sessions have exclusive jurisdiction of assaults and batteries of a high and aggravated nature; but to give jurisdiction the aggravation must be set forth in the indictment more specifically than in the technical terms usual at common law.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Sims, 16 S. C. 486, 491, 492; State v. Beadon, 17 S. C. 55; State v. Smalls, Id. 64, 65; State v. Robinson, 31 S. C. 456, 10 S. E. 101; State v. Grant, 34 S. C. 109, 12 S. E. 1070.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129, 137–166; Dec. Dig. ⟸93.]

[4. Criminal Law ⟸240.]

If a trial justice determines that a case of assault and battery brought before him is beyond his jurisdiction, and binds the defendant over to the Court of General Sessions, such determination of the grade of the offence is not conclusive upon the higher court.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Burch, 43 S. C. 4, 20 S. E. 758; State v. Glover, 90 S. C. 167, 72 S. E. 1087.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 500; Dec. Dig. ⟸240.]

[5. Criminal Law ⟸93.]

[Cited in State v. Sims, 16 S. C. 491; State v. Padgett, 18 S. C. 320; State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 223; State v. Pickett, 47 S. C. 105, 25 S. E. 46, to the point that under Const. art. 4, § 18, giving the court of general sessions exclusive jurisdiction over all criminal cases not otherwise provided for by law, and article 1, § 19, providing that all offenses less than felony in which punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment for 30 days, shall be tried summarily before a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law, the court of general sessions has no jurisdiction over an ordinary assault and battery.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 161; Dec. Dig. ⟸93.]

[This case is also cited in State v. Evans, 18 S. C. 138; State v. Jeter, 47 S. C. 5, 24 S. E. 889; State v. Jeffcoat, 54 S. C. 199, 32 S. E. 298, as to the requisites of an indictment.]

Before Pressley, J., Abbeville, September, 1879.

Upon the call of this case at April Term, 1880, of the Supreme Court, it was found that the defendant's sentence had not been pronounced. The hearing of the case was suspended, this court holding that the appeal should be from the sentence. See 13 S. C. 439. At the next succeeding term of the Circuit Court for Abbeville, the sealed sentence was opened and pronounced, and defendant appealed.

*347

*The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. C. Benet, for appellant.

Simple assault and battery was made a statutory offence by the act of 1870, (Gen. Stat. 195,) to which the common law must give place. 1 Bl. Com. 89; 14 Rich. 174; 2 Brev. 300. Otherwise, there would be two different punishments for the same offence. Where a statute changes the nature and degree, or the punishment of an offence, the indictment should conclude contra formam. 10 S. C. 193; Whart. Prec. 25; Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 290.

Of simple assault and battery courts of trial justices have exclusive jurisdiction under the constitution, (art. I., § 19, and art. IV., § 18,) they being the "other officer authorized by law." 2 S. C. 404. This is fully shown by the reasoning of the court in State v. Harper, 6 S. C. 464; see, too, 2 S. C. 1, and Dud. 167. The ground upon which this court, in State v. Williams, 13 S. C. 585, overruled State v. Harper, supra, as to petit larceny, sustains this position. In Williams' case it was held that petit larceny was not without the jurisdiction of the Court of General Sessions, because the punishment provided by statute was in excess of that within the competency of trial justices. But in cases of simple assault and battery the special punishment provided is not in excess of the competency of trial justices. Gen. Stat., ch. XXV., §§ 9, 10. Trial justices have exclusive jurisdiction. Apply the severe tests laid down in 14 Rich. 37 and Id. 283, and we have an exclusive jurisdiction declared in the words of article I., section 19: "All offences less than felony, &c., shall be tried summarily by a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law, on information under oath, without indictment or intervention of a grand jury." These are clearly exclusive of the Court of General Sessions. See Gen. Stat. 708, § 2. The incongruity—and a striking one it is—which this court met in interpreting the law and the constitution with reference to petit larceny in State v. Williams, does not appear with reference to common assault and battery.

As a case of aggravated assault, which is within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, the indictment is fatally defective in *not setting out in terms the aggravation. Indictments must be certain to every intent, (1 Chit. Cr. Law 171–2,) both in matter charged and in manner of charging it. Id. 169, 171; Bac. Ab., tit. "Indictment," G 1; 1 Rich. 184. Not one aggravating fact is set forth. The charge is general and by way of recital. But an aggravated assault is not a simple assault. Gen. Stat. 195; 2 Bish. on C. L., §§ 42–3; Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 926–7; 3 Chit. on Cr. Law 821, et seq.; 1 Bish. on Cr. Proc., §§ 77–88.

*348

Mr. Solicitor Cothran, contra.

When a statute prescribing punishment is simply cumulative, the contra formam statuti may be disregarded. Trial justices clearly have a discretion to say whether a case of assault is within their jurisdiction. In this case the trial justice said he had no jurisdiction, and the sentence of the higher court proves that it was so. His discretion cannot be controlled.

The "other enormities" charged in the indictment sufficiently includes acts of aggravation; dragging by the hair, &c., as in this case.

Assault and battery is a common law offence. The statutes so recognize it, and simply prescribe the punishment.

December 7th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. In this case, the appellant was put upon trial at the September Term, 1879, of the Court of General Sessions for Abbeville county, under charge of assault and battery.

The indictment was as follows:

"The State of South Carolina, county of Abbeville, to wit:

"At a Court of Sessions, begun to be holden in and for the county of Abbeville, in the State of South Carolina, at Abbeville courthouse, in the county and state aforesaid, on the first Monday of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, the jurors of and for the county aforesaid, in the state aforesaid, upon their oaths, present that George McD. McKettrick, on the fourth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, *with force and arms, at Abbeville court-house, in the county and state aforesaid, in and upon one Amanda McKettrick, in the peace of God and of said state, then and there being, did make an assault, and the said Amanda McKettrick, then and there, did beat, wound and ill-treat, and other wrongs and enormities to the said Amanda McKettrick then and there did, against the peace and dignity of the same state aforesaid.

*349

"And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present that the said George McD. McKettrick, on the fifth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, with force and arms, at Abbeville courthouse, in the county and state aforesaid, in and upon Amanda McKettrick, in the peace of God and of this state, then and there being, did make an assault, and the said Amanda McKettrick then and there did beat, wound and ill-treat, and other wrongs and enormities to the said Amanda McKettrick then and there did, against the peace and dignity of the same state aforesaid.

"J. S. Cothran, Solicitor.

"True bill—Wm. Z. McGhee, Foreman."

Upon this indictment the defendant was found guilty, with recommendation by the jury "to the mercy of the court." Thereupon, a motion was made in his behalf in arrest of judgment, upon grounds substantially which appear in the grounds of appeal herein.

This motion in arrest of judgment was refused by the Circuit judge, and the defendant has appealed to this court upon the following grounds:

1. Because simple assault and battery, i. e., assault and battery without aggravation, being a statutory offense under the general statutes of South Carolina, it is plain on the face of the indictment that both counts thereof are fatally defective in that they fail to allege that the offense charged was committed contrary to "the form of the statute in such case made and provided."

2. Because the Court of General Sessions has not jurisdiction *in cases of assault and battery, except in such as are of a high and aggravated nature, requiring greater punishment than that prescribed by the statutes made and provided in cases of simple assault and battery; and because the general statutes of South Carolina vest courts of trial justices with exclusive jurisdiction in cases of common or simple assault and battery.

*350

3. Because if the offence charged were one of assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, in which the Court of General Sessions would have jurisdiction, the said indictment is fatally defective in that it does not set out the aggravation.

The grounds of appeal raise the questions—

1. As to the conclusion of the indictment.

2. As to the jurisdiction of the Court of General Sessions in cases of assault and battery.

3. As to the allegations necessary in an indictment for assault and battery.

The constitution, Article IV, section 31, requires that "all indictments shall conclude against the peace and dignity of the state."

And it is well-settled law, that in all statutory offences the indictment should conclude "against the form of the act," &c. This was held in the recent case of State v. Strickland, 10 S. C. 191; and is found in all the books on criminal practice and pleadings, and a failure in this respect renders the indictment fatally defective. State v. Strickland, supra. Is the offence charged in this indictment a statutory or a common law offence?

All assaults and batteries previous to the act of 1870, (Gen. Stat. 195), were punishable at common law, and hence up to the passage of that act, they were all common law offences. The act of 1870, however, conferred upon trial justices jurisdiction in cases of assault and battery where the offence "is not of a high and aggravated nature," and fixed the punishment for such assaults and batteries by fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, and since the passage of this act, this class of assaults and batteries has been punishable under its provisions, the common law punishment having been repealed thereby. State v. Ripley, 2 Brev, 300; State v. Gray, 14 Rich. 174. "The common law is superseded by a statute, in so far as it is repugnant to the latter." 1 Bl. Com. 89.

*351

*The effect of the act of 1870, was to divide assaults and batteries into two classes: First. Those "of a high and aggravated nature;" and, Second. Those below that grade, jurisdiction as to the latter being conferred by the act upon trial justices, with authority to inflict punishment by fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. The first class was left to the common law until 1878, when the general assembly passed "An act entitled 'An act to amend the law respecting the punishment for crime.'" 16 Stat. 453. This act altered and changed the common law punishments, in which imprisonment had been provided as a punishment in whole or in part, and subjected offenders in such cases to imprisonment in the penitentiary with or without hard labor, or in the county jail, with or without hard labor, at the discretion of the Circuit judge. This included assaults and batteries of the second class, and under the operation of the principle referred to above, this class by that act and immediately upon its passage, became a statutory offence, so that now all assaults and batteries are punishable by statute, and consequently all are statutory offences. Such being the fact, whether the offence charged in this indictment be assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature or one below that grade, the law absolutely requires that the indictment upon which a party is put upon his trial in such cases must conclude "against the form of the act," &c., &c. State v. Strickland, supra. The indictment in this case in neither of its counts thus concludes. It follows, therefore, that in this respect it is fatally defective.

Next: As to the jurisdiction of the Court of General Sessions in cases of assault and battery. Article IV., section 18, of the constitution provides "that the Court of General Sessions shall have exclusive jurisdiction over all criminal cases which shall not be otherwise provided for by law."

Article I., section 19, of the same instrument provides "that all offences less than felony and in which the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or imprisonment for thirty days, shall be tried summarily before a justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law," &c.

The Justice of the Peace Court has never been established, but a Trial Justice Court has been, by act of 1870, and its jurisdic*tion therein defined almost in the same language as that of article I., section 19, above, of the constitution, conferring jurisdiction upon justices of the peace or other officer authorized by law. In the case of State v. Fillebrown, 2 S. C. 404, it was held that the general assembly might confer on an inferior tribunal, created by itself, the same powers which the constitution intended for justices of the peace. The Trial Justice Court is, therefore, a constitutional court, or rather its creation was authorized by the constitution, and it is entitled to exercise the powers which the act creating it has conferred upon it. This act, as we have seen, has given this court jurisdiction in cases of assault and battery of a grade below that of a high and aggravated nature, and where the punishment does not exceed a fine of $100 or by imprisonment of thirty days; and it has conferred this jurisdiction in language which indicates that it was the intention of the general assembly that it should be exclusive. The jurisdiction is conferred upon the trial justice, as the other officer than the justice of the peace, referred to in article I., section 19.

*352

There can be no doubt that had the Justice of the Peace Court been established and the powers embraced in section 19 had devolved upon that court, as would have been the case by virtue of the section itself, that that court would have had exclusive jurisdiction in all offences less than felony where the punishment did not exceed $100 fine or imprisonment for thirty days.

This conclusion is reached by the very strong language of the section itself, and is sustained by the principle upon which the State v. Williams, 13 S. C. 546, overruled the case of the State v. Harper, 6 S. C. 464.

In the case of the State v. Harper the court had decided that trial justices had exclusive jurisdiction in cases of petit larceny. This decision was overruled in the case of State v. Williams on the ground that the punishment in petit larceny had not been limited to $100 fine and thirty days, imprisonment, which was required to make exclusive jurisdiction attach to Trial Justice Courts under Article I., Section 19, of the constitution.

The punishment of assault and battery, however, below the grade "of a high and aggravated nature," is thus limited. This fact distinguishes assaults and batteries of that class from petit *larceny, and is the fact, on account of which the trial justice is entitled to exclusive jurisdiction in such cases.

*353

It follows, from the construction thus given to Section 19, Article I., and to Section 18, Article IV., of the constitution, construed in the light of the case of State v. Williams and the act of 1870 in reference to trial justices, that trial justices have exclusive jurisdiction in cases of assault and battery not of a "high and aggravated nature," and that the Court of General Sessions has exclusive jurisdiction in cases of "a high and aggravated nature."

Now there is nothing on the face of this indictment which marks it as a case of a high and aggravated nature, and in the absence of some distinguishing feature of that kind the Court of General Sessions was without jurisdiction in the case.

We come now to the third ground of appeal, which involves an examination into the necessary allegations in an indictment for assault and battery in the Court of General Sessions. An indictment is the complaint of the state against the accused. Upon this the accused is put upon his trial. It should charge some offence cognizable by the court, and this offence, whatever it may be, should be clearly and distinctly set forth. The crime charged should be described with certainty, for "no latitude of intention will be allowed to include anything more than is expressed." Chit. on Cr. L. 171.

"Every crime must appear on the face of the record with scrupulous certainty." Id. 172. And in this respect it is needless to say that greater strictness is required in criminal than in civil proceedings. This is due to that tenderness which, as Lord [illegible] observes, should always prevail in criminal cases; and this is necessary, to the end that the accused may be fully informed of the offence which he is called to answer, and that the record may protect him in future. An indictment which fails to conform to these requisites is fatally defective. Now we have seen that assaults and batteries have been divided by the act of 1870 into two classes: First, "those of a high and aggravated nature," and, Second, those below that grade: the first class being exclusively cognizable by a trial justice, and the second exclusively cognizable in the Court of General Sessions.

*354

Where *a party then is charged with assault and battery before the Court of General Sessions, the indictment should show on its face that the assault and battery charged is of a high and aggravated nature. This is necessary to give the court jurisdiction and to put the accused to answer in that court.

Does the indictment, in this case, contain a charge of assault and battery of that kind on its face? The indictment is in the ordinary form. There is nothing in the description of the offence which would distinguish it from an ordinary simple assault and battery. It is not alleged, even in general terms, that it was high and aggravated, nor are there any special circumstances of aggravation stated; "beat, wound and ill treat," are the words used descriptive of the offence.

These are sufficient to show that an assault and battery is charged, but they do not indicate its character; whether the beating, wounding and ill treatment was mild—comparatively mild—or high and aggravated, does not appear. This is left to conjecture, and yet this is the essence of the offence in the Court of General Sessions. In the absence in the indictment of something showing the character and grade of the offence, how can it be said, even after conviction, that the accused has been convicted of an assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, and how could the court graduate the punishment? The description in this indictment would be proper in a charge of the lowest grade, but where a high and aggravated offence is intended, something more is necessary. Serious bodily harm, intent to kill, intent to commit a felony, the use of a stick or deadly weapon, or something showing aggravation, should appear.

Did the jury in this case know that they were passing upon the question whether the offence was high and aggravated? This they should have known, because the punishment of that offence is very different from the offence below that grade, being the difference between the penitentiary for years perhaps, and a small punishment by fine and not more than thirty days in the county jail.

It is true that the act of 1870, defining the jurisdiction of trial justices in criminal cases in reference to assaults and batteries, leaves it to the discretion of the trial justice in the first *instance when a party is brought before him to determine whether he will take jurisdiction or bind the accused over; but the act certainly never intended that his judgment in this matter should be final, and that he should have the power to fix, indisputably, the character of the offence when it came before the higher court.

*355

The offence in the higher court consists of two ingredients: First. That it should be an assault and battery. Second. That it should be of a high and aggravated nature. If the trial justice's judgment, as to the last ingredient when he sends the case up, is conclusive, then this strange result would follow: That of the two ingredients which make up the offence before the Court of Sessions, the trial justice has already tried one without jury and without opportunity to the accused to defend, and the jury in the Court of Sessions is to try the other, and which, perhaps, is the least important—two tribunals adjudicating different ingredients of the same offence. Such could not have been the intent of the act of 1870.

The indictment in this case, in the judgment of the court, is fatally defective on its face, in the fact that it does not charge an assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, either in general terms or in words descriptive of such an offence. The assault and battery charged, being upon the wife of the accused, he is certainly entitled to no sympathy if guilty, but he is entitled to be tried and punished, if guilty, according to law.

The order of the Circuit judge made on the motion in arrest of judgment is reversed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 355

(Case No. 950.)

VAUGHAN v. FOWLER.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Alteration of Instruments ⇐8, 20.]

Putting a seal on a note after its execution, without the maker's knowledge or consent, is a material alteration and vitiates the contract.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Kennedy v. Moore, 17 S. C. 466; Plyler v. Elliott, 19 S. C. 263; Heath v. Blake, 28 S. C. 416, 5 S. E. 842; Sloan v. Latimer, 41 S. C. 219, 19 S. E. 491, 691; Powell v. Pearlstine, 43 S. C. 409, 21 S. E. 328; Gunter v. Addy, 58 S. C. 183, 36 S. E. 553; Central National Bank of Kansas City v. Efird, 91 S. C. 138, 74 S. E. 136.

For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 44, 182; Dec. Dig. ⇐8, 20.]

[2. Alteration of Instruments ⇐27.]

[Cited in Kennedy v. Moore, 17 S. C. 466; Gunter v. Addy, 58 S. C. 183, 36 S. E. 553, to the point that it is incumbent upon the party producing the instrument to explain its appearance.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 230–247; Dec. Dig. ⇐27.]

*356

*Before Wallace, J., Greenville, July, 1880.

Action by W. P. Vaughan, payee, against Elizabeth Fowler. The case is fully stated in the opinion of this court.

Messrs. Garlington & Moore, for appellant.

Whether the seal was put to the note before or after its execution, the alteration of the note thereby made was not of a character to invalidate the note. To render it void there must be a material alteration. 2 Pars. on Cont. (3d ed.) 226–7. An immaterial alteration will not avoid. 2 Chit. on Cont. 1168, note f. The seal here may be treated as surplusage, as it adds no strength to the contract, and impairs no right of defence.

Mr. W. L. Wait, contra.

December 8th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action on a note for $100, dated July 19th, 1872, signed by Fowler & Walker, and Elizabeth Fowler, the defendant, with a seal after her name. Fowler & Walker were a firm, and as such executed the note at the time of its date, when Fowler was alive. He afterwards died, and the defendant, as his widow, signed the note. It does not appear in the case at what time she signed it. It is stated in the argument of counsel that it was "in the spring of 1876," but that fact not appearing in the case, it cannot be considered. The evidence was conflicting as to the circumstances under which she signed, and as to the seal being on the note at the time she signed it. The defence was the statute of limitations, want of consideration and the alteration of the paper by adding the seal after its execution by some other than the defendant, and without her knowledge or consent. The jury found for the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, and that being refused, appeals to this court upon the following grounds:

"1. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the instrument in writing sued on, if it was shown by the proof that the seal which ap*peared to said instrument was not affixed at the time the defendant signed the same."

*357

"2. His Honor should have charged the jury that the alteration of the instrument by affixing the seal thereto could not invalidate said instrument, unless said seal was essential in law to such recovery."

"3. Because the alteration of the instrument sued on by affixing the seal thereto although it may have been done after its execution, was not a material alteration in law, and worked no detriment or injury to the defendant, because the plaintiff was entitled to recover on said instrument against the defendant without its being sealed."

These exceptions relate entirely to the charge of the Circuit judge upon the subject of the addition of the seal, which was in these words: "That the seal, if put on the note after the execution and without the knowledge or consent of the defendant, was such a material alteration as would vitiate the contract, and the plaintiff could not recover."

It is insisted that this was error. That the alteration of the instrument by affixing the seal thereto was not a material alteration in law to invalidate it, unless the seal was essential to the recovery, and that it was not so essential for the reason that the note was recoverable without the seal.

It is well settled that "any alteration of a written security in a material part renders it altogether void." Stagg v. Pepoon, 1 N. & McC. 102; Mills v. Starr, 2 Bail. 359; Smith v. Cheney, 1 Hill. 148. Was the addition of the seal a material alteration? We have not been cited to any case in our own reports deciding the precise point, but upon principle it seems to us that there can be no doubt that it is a material alteration. "A change in the character or effect of the instrument, whether in respect to its obligation or to its weight in evidence, is a material alteration. Thus, the addition of a seal to the signature of the maker of a note converts it into a bond against which no plea of want of consideration can be made, and this invests his contract with attributes which he declined to impart to it. Consequently, the note is avoided." 2 Dani. on Neg. Instruments (2d ed.) § 1391; United States v. Linn, 1 How. 104 [11 L. Ed. 64].

*358

*It does not appear who made the alteration, but when on the production of an instrument it appears to have been altered, it is incumbent on the party offering it in evidence to explain this appearance. 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 569.

We see no error in the charge of the judge. The judgment is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 358

(Case No. 951.)

SULLIVAN v. SPEIGHTS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐1219.]

This court cannot entertain a motion for a rehearing of a case decided by it, after the remittitur has been properly sent to the court below.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Carpenter v. Lewis, 65 S. C. 403, 43 S. E. 881; Jones v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 65 S. C. 418, 43 S. E. 884; Halsall v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 100 S. C. 489, 85 S. E. 434.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4720; Dec. Dig. ⇐1219.]

[2. Courts ⇐101.]

There being a vacancy in the Supreme Court, the two remaining justices constitute the court, under the terms of Article IV., Section 2, of the constitution, and are competent to discharge all of its functions.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Williams v. Benet, 35 S. C. 150, 14 S. E. 311, 14 L. R. A. 825; Aultman v. Utsey, 35 S. C. 597, 14 S. E. 351.

For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 347; Dec. Dig. ⇐101.]

This was a motion for a rehearing of the points decided in Sullivan v. Speights, 12 S. C. 561. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. C. C. Featherston, for the motion.

December 9th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. At the November Term of this court, 1879, the appeal of Hewlett Sullivan, appellant, v. A. M. Speights, W. T. Shumate et al., respondents, after full hearing by the court, was dismissed, upon the ground that the exceptions of the appellant had not been served on the presiding judge within the time limited by the statute on that subject. The remittitur in the case was sent to the court below on January 6th, 1880, in accordance with the rules of this court, and filed by the clerk of the court below on the 10th of the same month. On April 16th *thereafter the appellant gave notice that he "would move the Supreme Court for a new hearing" of said case on the grounds—

*359

1. That the court which dismissed the appeal was not a constitutional court, there being but two judges in the Supreme Court at the time.

2. That the Circuit judge regarded the service of the exceptions as sufficient and went on and settled the facts, and that the respondents should not have been allowed to object for him.

3. That the appellant has discovered that he had written acceptance of notice and grounds of appeal within the ten days by the clerk of the Circuit Court, and that this was sufficient notice to the judge of the Circuit Court.

In accordance with this notice the petition has been presented here and is now for consideration.

This court, under the constitution, is a court for the correction of errors of law in cases at law, with appellate jurisdiction in cases of chancery. It has also original jurisdiction in certain cases, and it is authorized to hear motions with reference to cases already on its docket, brought there according to the rules prescribed in appeal cases. If the motion can be heard then, it must come before the court through one of these channels; it cannot be heard as an independent motion.

It does not claim to come by appeal to have an error either of law or fact below corrected, nor is it made in a motion within the original jurisdiction of the court.

Is it a motion with reference to a case on the docket of this court?

According to the facts stated, the case to which it refers was heard and determined at the November Term, 1879, about one year since. Under the rules of this court, when a case is heard here and determined, the remittitur to the court below is not sent down immediately, but it is retained in every case for ten days, unless the court directs otherwise. And on application, showing sufficient cause, either of the justices, at chambers, may direct by order that it be further retained until the third day of the next session. The object of this is to reserve jurisdiction over the case, so that, should either of the parties desire to make any *motion in reference thereto they might have the opportunity to do so and the court the power to hear it. After the remittitur, however, is sent down, the case passes beyond the reach of this court and its jurisdiction is lost, and no motion can be heard by this court on the matter thereafter.

*360

Now it appears that the remittitur in this case, as has been already stated, after being retained for ten days under the rules by the clerk of this court, was sent down on January 6th, 1880, and was then filed in the office of the clerk of the court below on the 10th of the same month.

Such being the fact, if there was nothing else in this petition but the two last grounds upon which it is based, it would be dismissed at once as beyond our reach. The petition, however, states that the court, when it heard and determined the motion to dismiss the appeal in the case of Sullivan, appellant, v. Speights, W. T. Shumate et al., respondents, was composed of but two justices—Associate Justice Heskell having resigned and no one having been elected to fill the vacancy. And it is contended that this was not a constitutional court, and therefore its judgment dismissing the appeal was void. If this proposition of the petitioner can be sustained, then the case of Sullivan v. Speights, W. T. Shumate et al., is still, or ought to be, on the docket of this court, and this petition would be proper.

The question, then, in the case is, was the court which dismissed the appeal a constitutional court?

Article IV., Section 2, of the constitution provides that the Supreme Court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, two of whom shall constitute a quorum.

Now, it is manifest, from the provision in this section in reference to a quorum, that the framers of the constitution contemplated the possibility of but two of the justices of the court being present at some time or other, and this provision was adopted to meet that contingency. The fact of but two of the justices being able to be present may result from but two causes: First, a vacancy by death, resignation or otherwise of one; and, Second, by the absence of one. Can the section referred to, by any rule of construction, be confined and limited in its applica*tion to but one of these contingencies? If so, to which one? It is evident that the framers of the constitution intended that in some contingency the presence of two of the justices was sufficient for a quorum. This they have expressly declared: and inasmuch as there are but two causes, vacancy and absence, which could produce a state of facts where but two of the justices could be present, is there any reason for the conclusion that they intended to provide for the one and not the other? The question involved is one of intention on their part. And is it not much more reasonable to suppose that they intended to provide for both contingencies rather than to leave one unprovided for?

*361

The evil which was to be met by this provision of the constitution was the delay which the framers knew might sometimes take place in the business of the court, if the entire court had always to be present to discharge its functions; and to prevent this delay the constitution invested two of the justices, when present, with all of the powers of the court, declaring, in express terms, that they should constitute a quorum. It is hardly necessary to go into an investigation of the powers of a quorum; this is well understood and needs no elaboration.

Now, it is one of the rules of construction, in endeavoring to reach the true intent and meaning of a remedial act, so to construe it as to suppress, as far as possible, the evil and to enlarge the remedy. This applies to the constitution as well as to acts of legislation. Applying this rule to the section of the constitution under consideration, can it be confined to but one of the two causes resulting in the presence of but two justices at any session of this court? This would be narrow, contracted and unreasonable, and would violate the rule itself.

Article II., Section 4, of the constitution provides that the house of representatives shall consist of one hundred and twenty-four members, and that a majority shall constitute a quorum. Has it ever been suggested that if one or more of the whole number of that body should die or resign, that this would divest the majority of the powers of a quorum? And yet if the principle contended for here be sound, such would be the result in reference to the house of representatives and all other bodies where a quorum is provided for in a number less than the whole.

*362

*The opinion of the court is, that the constitution, in the section referred to, has invested any two of the justices with full power to discharge all of the functions of this court.

The motion is, therefore, dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

14 S. C. 362

(Case No. 952.)

SULLIVAN v. JONES.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⟸215.]

Grounds of appeal which complain of omissions by the Circuit judge to charge upon points not brought to his attention during the trial, are not properly before this court for consideration.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Sawyer, Wallace & Co. v. Macaulay, 18 S. C. 546; Acker v. County of Anderson, 20 S. C. 499.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1309–1314; Dec. Dig. ⟸215.]

[2. Estoppel ⟸78.]

One claiming property in millstones under the terms of the agreement made with the owner of the mill when the stones were put there, is not estopped from asserting his claim by reason of a lease made with a subsequent owner of the mill and lands adjacent, binding him to pay as rent, one-fourth of the crops made on the farm, and one-third of the toll taken at the mill, the owner to pay half of the expenses of the mill, and possession to be surrendered at the end of the year—the testimony showing that both before and after this lease, the millstones were treated as distinct from mill-house and water-power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 204–210; Dec. Dig. ⟸78.]

[3. Fixtures ⟸9.]

Millstones put by a stranger into a mill-house, under agreement with the owner of the mill that they may be removed at pleasure, do not become a part of the freehold.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in De Laine v. Alderman, 31 S. C. 275, 9 S. E. 950.

For other cases, see Fixtures, Dec. Dig. ⟸9.]

[4. Fixtures ⟸27.]

And such agreement may be proved in an action brought by a subsequent owner of the mill against the owner of the millstones, affecting the ownership of such stones.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. ⟸27.]

Before Pressley, J., Greenville, November, 1879.

Action by Hewlet Sullivan to recover $150 from John R. Jones, for an alleged trespass in taking and carrying away certain millstones, of the value of $100. Defendant took the millstones from plaintiff's mill, without injury to the freehold. The case is stated in the opinion.

The plaintiff appealed upon the following grounds:

1. Because his Honor erred in refusing to hold that the rental *obligation of John R. Jones, defendant, to Hewlet Sullivan, plaintiff, for the mill, said obligation dated May 4th, 1875, estopped the defendant from setting up any claim to mill, millstones, or any appurtenances thereto.

*363

2. Because his Honor erred in not holding that as the millstones were part of the freehold, that defendant had no right to remove the same, to the injury of the plaintiff.

3. Because his Honor erred in permitting defendant to prove an agreement with Messrs. Hughes that he was to have an interest in said mill and appurtenances, when the property was sold as the property of William McNeely and bought by the plaintiff as judgment creditor of William McNeely.

There were four other grounds alleging error in not charging certain propositions of law.

Mr. J. C. C. Featherston, for appellant.

Mr. George Westmoreland, contra.

December 13th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action to recover damages for a trespass alleged to have been committed by the defendant in taking and carrying away certain millstones from a mill-house on the land of the plaintiff. The defence was that the millstones were the property of the defendant and were taken by him under an agreement made with a former owner of the land at the time the millstones were placed in the mill-house.

The testimony tended to show that the land upon which the mill-house was located originally belonged to one William McNeely, who conveyed it to G. T. Hughes by deed dated May 26th, 1866, which deed was not recorded. G. T. Hughes, on January 22d, 1867, conveyed to T. J. and G. T. L. Hughes by a deed of that date, which was duly recorded. Soon after the purchase by these last-named purchasers they entered into an agreement with the defendant and his brother, James H. Jones, whereby the Messrs. Jones were "to furnish the millstones and fixtures thereto and put the mill in running order; that the Messrs. Hughes were *to furnish the mill-house and water-power," and the proceeds of the mill were to be equally divided. It was also agreed that "the millstones and fixtures were to be and to remain the separate property of the Jones', and if at any time the business of grinding should become unprofitable, or should the parties disagree, the Jones' were at liberty to enter and remove said stones and fixtures. Under this agreement said stones and fixtures were put in said mill-house by the Jones'." The plaintiff having subsequently obtained a judgment against McNeely, the land was sold by the sheriff under it, and bought by the plaintiff in January, 1874. At this sale public notice was given that the millstones and fixtures on said land were the property of the Jones', and that whoever bought the land would buy subject to their claim; but so far as appears from the "case" no controversy was raised as to the title to the land. When the defendant was offered as a witness to prove the agreement above referred to between himself and brother and the Messrs. Hughes, the plaintiff objected to his testifying upon that point, "on the ground that his rental agreement with the plaintiff, in which he agreed to pay Sullivan rent for the use of the mill, estopped him."

*364

The agreement referred to as an estoppel, is in the following words:

"Greenville, S. C., May 4th, 1875.

"In consideration that I am to have the use and possession of a certain tract of land, called the mill tract, lying in Greenville county, South Carolina, belonging to Hewlet Sullivan, for the purpose of making a crop thereon the present year, I do hereby bind myself to cultivate said place in a husband-like manner, and when the crop is made and gathered, I agree to give said Sullivan the one-fourth part of all the crops made on said place. I further agree to give said Sullivan the one-third part of the toll taken in at the mill on said place. If there is any expense attached to running said mill said Sullivan is to pay one-half the expense. I further agree to return the possession of said place to said Sullivan at the end of the present year.

"Witness my hand and seal.

"Attest: W. L. Wait.

"J. R. Jones. [L. S.]"

*365

*The Circuit judge, after hearing the agreement read over, overruled the objection, and the plaintiff excepted. There was also testimony to the effect that one White, who rented the mill in 1878, paid the Jones' for the use of the stones and fixtures, and the plaintiff for the use of the house and water-power.

The Circuit judge charged the jury that if they came to the conclusion that there was such an agreement, as the one above stated, between the Messrs. Jones and the Messrs. Hughes, "that the millstones and fixtures never became a part of the freehold, and hence could not pass with the land at the sale, and that it was not necessary for notice to have been given at the sale, that the intention of the parties at the time the millstones and fixtures were put there must govern."

The jury having found a verdict for the defendant, the plaintiff gave notice of appeal, upon various grounds, which are set out in the "case." All of these grounds, except the first, second and third, complain of omissions on the part of the Circuit judge to charge the jury upon points, which, so far as the "case" discloses, were not brought to his attention during the trial, either by a request to charge or otherwise, and, therefore, are not properly before us for consideration. We presume, however, that the appellant does not regard them as material, as they were not insisted upon in the argument here, and, therefore, no practical evil will result from the failure to present those points in such a way as that they could be properly considered by this court.

The first ground of appeal presents the point which seems to be mainly relied upon by the appellant, and that is that the "rental agreement," above set forth, estops the defendant from setting up any claim to the millstones. Without entering into a discussion of the principles upon which the doctrine of estoppel rests, it seems to us sufficient to say that the agreement relied upon wholly fails to show any recognition whatever, on the part of the defendant, of the right of the plaintiff to the millstones; and certainly something of this kind would be necessary to create an estoppel. The millstones are not mentioned in the agreement, and the testimony, as we have seen, shows that both before and after the date of the agreement, the millstones were *treated as separate and distinct from the mill-house and water-power. The former owners of the mill, by their agreement with the Jones', expressly recognized the title of the defendant and his brother to the millstones, and after the agreement was made, there is strong ground for the inference that the plaintiff himself had likewise recognized the right of the defendant and his brother to the millstones by allowing White, who rented the mill in 1878, to pay the Jones' for the use of the millstones, while he only paid the plaintiff for the use of the mill-house and water-power.

*366

The principle object of the agreement seems to have been to secure the rent of the tract of land as a farm, and what is said in it about the mill, so far from tending to show that the defendant recognized the right of the plaintiff to the millstones, would rather seem to indicate the contrary. For while the defendant agreed to give the plaintiff only one-third of the toll taken at the mill, the plaintiff was to pay one-half of any expense that might be incurred in running the mill—rather a singular arrangement, if the mill, with all its appurtenances, including the millstones, belonged to the plaintiff. We agree, therefore, with the Circuit judge that there was nothing in that agreement which estopped the defendant from setting up a claim to the millstones.

The second ground of appeal was not urged in the argument here, but was, as we understood, abandoned, and very properly abandoned, as it is very clear that it could not be sustained.

The third ground of appeal alleges error on the part of the Circuit judge in permitting the defendant to prove the agreement above referred to with the Messrs. Hughes, when the property was sold as the property of McNeely, under a judgment against him, and bought by the plaintiff. We do not find that any such objection was made to the testimony when it was offered, and, therefore, according to a well-settled rule, it cannot be interposed here. We may remark, however, that we are unable to perceive how such an objection could be sustained even if made at the proper time. The Hughes' were unquestionably the owners of the land at the time the agreement in question was made, and if it was afterwards sold under a judgment against McNeely, their vendor, that certainly would not *prevent proof of the agreement under which the millstones were put in the mill by the Jones'. The judgment could not bind the millstones which were put in the mill after McNeely had parted with his title, unless they had become a part of the freehold, which, as we have seen, was not the case.

*367

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 367

(Case No. 955.)

MACOY v. CURTIS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Officers ⇐19.]

Quere: If an office is forfeited by reason of failure of the officer elected to qualify within the time prescribed by law, could such forfeiture be avoided by an act of the legislature, passed after the time limited?

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 22, 23; Dec. Dig. ⇐19.]

[2. Clerks of Courts ⇐7.]

A clerk of court, elected his own successor at the general election, November 7th, 1876, gave bond, December 18th, which was approved January 1st, 1877, but he did not receive his commission until May 3d, upon which he endorsed the usual oaths June 20th, 1877. Another person was elected clerk at the general election, November 2d, 1880, and qualified and was commissioned in December following. Held, that the term of the first clerk was four years from the general election in November 1876, and until his successor, then elected, was qualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Clerks of Courts, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. ⇐7.]

[3. Officers ⇐52.]

The commission, which is only evidence of the election, may affect the time of actual enjoyment, but it cannot affect the constitutional term of office, which is for four years from the election.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Smith v. McConnell, 44 S. C. 493, 22 S. E. 721; Verner v. Seibels, 60 S. C. Append. 576, 39 S. E. 274.

For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. ⇐52.]

[This case is also cited in Carolina Groc. Co. v. Burnet, 61 S. C. 206, 39 S. E. 381, 58 L. R. A. 687, as to jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in matters submitted on an agreed statement of facts, and in McDowell v. Burnett, 92 S. C. 472, 75 S. E. 873, to the fact that the tenure must depend on the act creating the office or upon the Constitution.]

Original application to the Supreme Court. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. A. Lynch, for plaintiff.

Mr. J. F. Hart, same side.

1. The constitution requires (Art. II., §

*368

30,) that before enter*ing upon the duties of their respective offices, all officers of the state shall take the oath therein prescribed.

It is evident that plaintiff had not qualified until this oath was taken.

2. The constitution further requires (Art. III., §§ 17, 19,) that the governor shall commission all officers; and that all grants and commissions shall be in the name and under the seal of the state.

The commission being a constitutional requirement, would seem of necessity to constitute the essential qualification necessary to inception in office.

The case at bar is to be distinguished from a line of cases of which State v. Toomer, 7 Rich. 225, is perhaps the leading exponent, and which held in effect that the commission was merely evidence of the election, and that the term of the office after commission sued out, related back to the election. Those cases were decided under certain acts creating the office, which limited the term of the incumbent to an exact number of years, without containing the further provision found in Article IV., Section 27, "and until his successor is elected and qualified." They were decided a convenienti: no other result could have been reached, for a hiatus in the office would constantly have occurred whenever accident or laches prevented the successor from being qualified to enter upon the duties of the office the instant it became vacant by the expiration of the term of his predecessor.

But in this case there could be no relation back, for the office was never vacant. The same office cannot be held by two persons at one and the same time. There could be no holding by relation back, under the new title, for the tenure had never been divested under the old title until full qualification under the new title had been accomplished.

Were the old decisions forced into application to the new case, the sureties of predecessor and successor would each be liable for the acts of their respective principals during the annexed period; or the different sureties where successor and predecessor were united in the same person, would be held liable during such period.

We must recognize that the organic law from which the title *arises in this case, is essentially different from that creating the office of commissioner and Ordinary in former days. Here a vacancy can never occur in the office of clerk, by bare expiration, where there is no qualified successor at hand ready to assume it. The original term lawfully continues in all its original force and vigor until the officer under his new tenure is substituted by qualification following election. 4 S. C. 178; 9 S. C. 6; 25 Ohio St. 588; 19 How. 73; 17 Cal. 11; 1 Nev. 133; 9 Penna. St. 513.

*369

The constitution, in reference to the office of governor, provides that he shall hold the office for two years and until his successor is "elected and qualified"—the same words as respects the office of clerk.

Mr. Justice Willard, interpreting this clause, says: "Two things are essential to perfect a present right of possession—election and installation. Election determines the right to succeed the existing incumbent at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and installation establishes a present right to exercise the functions of the office." 8 S. C. 483; Id. 514.

If the election, without the further act of qualifying, conferred the office, how could the governor elected in 1874 resign the office thirty days after his successor had been elected in 1876? The office would not be his to resign. The election, and not the oath, would have made the successor the governor.

The entire scope of the opinions in the two foregoing important cases, concedes that but for the renunciation of the title acquired in 1874, by an attempted installation under a new title, Chamberlain might have successfully retained the office as governor de jure long after his defeat in the election of 1876, and until the governor elect had qualified under all the forms of law to receive the office.

The oath in Article II., Section 30, was all that was required to qualify the governor, as he gave no bond, &c. But in the case of the clerk, he must first, execute his bond, and have it approved; second, subscribe to the oath in Article II., Section 30; third, receive his commission under the seal of the state, and signed by the governor; fourth, and before entering upon the duties of his office, take and subscribe to a further oath, to be endorsed on his *commission, not to share the profits of his office, &c.; and lastly, to sign the roll of county officers. See Gen. Stat. 174.

*370

3. But it will be said that as predecessor and successor were united in the same person after the election of 1876, it was plaintiff's duty to immediately qualify; that he could not prolong his coming term by neglecting to qualify, so as to cut off the existing term; and that principles of public policy are at variance with such a right; and that he cannot take advantage of his own laches.

The statutory provisions in force, and affecting this branch of the case, and the political status of the executive offices of the state government, through whom the acts of qualification were to be perfected, completely answer this argument. Gen. Stat. 125; 15 Stat. 322.

By reason of the revolution through which the state government passed between November, 1876, and May, 1877, many of the officers elect, had not been able to receive commissions and to "qualify according to law," by taking the oaths required to be endorsed on the commission; consequently, by act of May 23d, 1877, all officers elect in 1876 who had not already qualified, were allowed thirty days from that date "to qualify and enter upon the duties of their respective offices."

The plaintiff here, received his commission May 3d, 1877. He qualified under it June 20th, 1877, within the time allowed by this act.

But aside from this, there are other facts attending this branch of the case, entitled to consideration.

It was the duty of the secretary of state to notify plaintiff of his election in 1876; and after notification he had thirty days in which to qualify. There is no evidence that he was ever notified. If not, the fault is not his.

His bond was executed December 18th, 1876, but not approved until January 1st, 1877. It will hardly be asserted that he could have controlled an earlier approval.

Before either of these acts was accomplished, the state was undergoing a revolution. When plaintiff's bond was executed and approved, Chamberlain and his secretary of state held the executive offices of the state and its great seal, without which no commission could issue, and the rightful governor and secretary *were excluded from their offices in the state-house and the election returns and certificates therein, by an armed force. Circumstances entirely beyond his control prevented an earlier qualification. If he was guilty of any laches, it was only that he did not apply for a mandamus against the governor and R. M. Sims, as secretary of state, (the title of the latter to the office being still in dispute,) to issue his commission under seal.

*371

Messrs. J. J. Hemphill, and T. C. Gaston, contra.

January 10th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This is a case in the original jurisdiction of this court, submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, under the provisions of Section 389 of the code of procedure. At the general election, November 2d, 1880, George W. Curtis was elected clerk of the Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions for Chester county, gave bond November 27th, and was commissioned clerk December, 1880, for four years. On December 4th, 1880, he took the special statutory oaths in such cases provided, and on the same day signed the roll of county officers and demanded possession of said office. His predecessor in the office, C. C. Macoy, refused to deliver possession, upon the allegation that his term of office had not expired. Whereupon the said Curtis took possession of the office, and this is an action in the nature of a quo warranto, instituted by the said C. C. Macoy to recover possession of the said office of clerk.

His claim is as follows: At the general election, held October 16th, 1872, the plaintiff, C. C. Macoy, was elected clerk of the court for Chester county, and on November 22d, 1872, gave bond, qualified and received his commission. At the general election, November 7th, 1876, he was again elected his own successor. His second bond bears date December 18th, 1876, and was approved by the board of county commissioners January 1st, 1877: but on account of confusion in the government of the state, which existed at that time, his commission was not issued until May 3d, 1877. The usual oaths endorsed on the commission bear date as late as June 20th, 1877. Under these circumstances the question propounded for decision by the court, is this: * "Has the term of office of C. C. Macoy, as clerk of the Court of Common Pleas and General Sessions for Chester county, expired? If that question is decided in the negative, it is agreed that judgment be given for C. C. Macoy for the possession of said office: and if in the affirmative, that judgment be given for George W. Curtis for the possession of said office."

*372

The constitution of the state (Art. IV., § 27,) provides that "there shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk for the Court of Common Pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified."

Article XIV., Section 10, further provides "that the election of all state officers shall take place at the same time as is provided for that of members of the general assembly, and the election for those officers whose term of service is for four years shall be held at the time of each alternate general election."

The act of March, 1874, provides "that the next general election shall be held pursuant to the provisions of the amendment to Article II., Section 2, of the constitution of the State of South Carolina, on the Tuesday following the first Monday in November, 1874, and forever thereafter, on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November in every second year," &c.

The construction placed upon these provisions by those who framed the constitution and enacted the laws to carry it into effect was, that the term of county officers—including that of the clerk of the court, like that of state officers—was a fixed and unshifting period. This is shown by the act of 1870, (Gen. Stat. 38); act of 1877, (16 Stat. 230); and act of 1878: "To provide for the filling of vacancies of county offices, and to regulate the holding of elections therefor." 16 Stat. 507. These acts, giving the governor the right to fill a vacancy for an unexpired term of a former incumbent, and in providing that the person so appointed and elected, "shall hold his office until the next general election and until his successor shall qualify," &c., are manifestly based upon the view that the term of county offices was from one general election to another, with the possibility of unexpired terms. Under this construction, making the general elections the commencement of the terms of all offices, state and *county, the question in this case could never have arisen. But the case of Wright v. Charles, 4 S. C. 178, judicially interpreting the constitution, declared a different construction and authoritatively determined that there can be no unexpired term in the office of clerk, but that each incumbent is entitled to hold the office for four years, whether elected at a general election or at a special election at some intermediate time. From this decision it follows that the term being four years, and not necessarily commencing at a general election, the end must depend upon the time it legally commenced to run.

*373

The plaintiff, C. C. Macoy, claims possession of the office in controversy upon the allegation that being clerk in 1876, at the general election of that year he was elected his own successor, but prevented by well known circumstances, he did not receive his commission under that election until May 3d, 1877. He held and enjoyed the office from the general election in 1876 until May, 1877, but as up to that time he had no commission under the new election, he claims that he was holding under the supplemental authority of his term of 1872, which gave him the right to hold "until his successor should be elected and qualified," and that, being his own successor, he cannot be considered to have been "elected and qualified" before he received his commission in May, 1877; and starting at that point, four years carries his term to May, 1881. The defendant, George W. Curtis, who was elected at the general election in 1880, and who is qualified and commissioned and in possession of the office, denies the claim, insisting that the right of the plaintiff to hold the office ceased as soon as he, his successor, was elected and qualified, and that he should not be disturbed in the possession of the office.

In the first place the defendant insists that the plaintiff never, in fact, was entitled to a term under the election of 1876; that he did not legally qualify under that election—the consequence being a forfeiture of the office—under the act of 1873, and that during all the time after 1876 he was holding the office under the supplemental authority of the term of 1872, and of course the moment his successor was elected and qualified he was entitled to the office. The act of 1873 (15 Stat. 322), declares "that it shall be the duty of every state and county officer *elected by the people to qualify within thirty days after receiving official notification thereof, and upon the filing of such bond and qualifying according to law, he shall enter upon the duties of said office. * * * If any officer elected by the people shall fail to qualify and enter upon the duties of his office, as required by the provisions of this act, he shall forfeit the office to which he shall have been elected, and the governor is hereby authorized to order an election to be holden within ninety days to fill the vacancy." 15 Stat. 322.

*374

If the plaintiff did not, as he insists, qualify and enter upon the duties of his office until May 3d, 1877, his office was then forfeited, unless that forfeiture was cured by the act of May 23d, 1877, which provides "that all county officers elected at the last general election who have not qualified, be and they are hereby allowed thirty days from and after the passage of this act to qualify and enter upon the duties of their respective offices," &c. 16 Stat. 224.

It may be as alleged, that the onus is upon the plaintiff, and he must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his title which he has himself put in issue in a judicial proceeding; yet the court will always hesitate to declare a forfeiture, except in a proceeding instituted expressly for that purpose, and especially in a case where the alleged forfeiture was the result of extraordinary events and involving no personal blame. From the view which the court takes, it will not be necessary to consider what effect the act of 1877, called the validating act, which was passed after the expiration of the thirty days allowed before forfeiture, could have in dispensing the alleged forfeiture declared by the act of 1873. According to our view, the plaintiff was not one of those who needed further time to qualify, and as he was not liable to forfeiture, the last act was not applicable to him.

Assuming, then, that the plaintiff did have a term under the election of 1876, the defendant further insists that the term had expired before the defendant was elected and qualified. The precise question involved is as to the time when the last term of the plaintiff commenced to run: the election, the qualification or the date of the commission.

The following sections of the constitution and provisions of law are referred to:

*375

*Article II., Section 30, of the constitution requires "that before entering upon the duties of their respective offices all officers of the state shall take the oath therein prescribed."

Article III., Section 17, requires that the "governor shall commission all officers, and that all grants and commissions shall be in the name and under the seal of the state."

"Every clerk, before entering upon the duties of his office, in addition to the oath required by the constitution for persons chosen or appointed to any office of profit or trust, shall take the oath, [not to share profits], which said oaths shall be endorsed on the commission. * * * That the clerks, before receiving their commissions, shall enter into bond, to be approved by the county commissioners." Gen. Stat. 174.

"No executive, judicial or other officer elected to any office shall be entitled to receive any pay * * * until he shall have been duly commissioned and qualified." Gen. Stat. 125.

The facts are, that the plaintiff being clerk, was re-elected at the general election in November, 1876. He executed bond December 18th, which was approved January 1st, 1877, and, as his attorney says, "presumably forwarded with the constitutional oath." There was no difficulty in his way as to the oath, and in the absence of statement to the contrary, we assume that he took the oath when he forwarded the bond. Then he was in possession of the office, and had done everything the law had required of him, except receive his commission with endorsements, which, at the time, had not been issued. On January 1st, 1877, after he had been elected, had given bond, taken the constitutional oath, and was in possession of the office, was not the plaintiff, in fact and in law, clerk of the court under the election of 1876, even without his new commission?

To have the full possession and emoluments of his office several things were made pre-requisites—election, bond, qualification and commission. Is it reasonable that the performance of all of these, except the last, should have no effect whatever in clothing him with the office, and that even his right to it and its tenures should be made to depend upon the single fact of his receiving a commission which, but the incident of what had gone before and not the act of the electors, but his own, might be prevented by accident or omitted by design? So far as election, *bond and constitutional oath were concerned, he was then elected and qualified. Nothing remained to be done but to receive his commission. That was more than four years ago, and if he was then clerk, elected and qualified, his term has expired and he is not now entitled to the office.

*376

But if the plaintiff was not then clerk de jure under the election of 1876, for lack of his commission, he certainly was clerk after he received his commission, which, when issued without regard to its date, had reference back to the election. We do not understand that the provision in the constitution makes short terms and long terms—some four years and some more than four years, depending upon the time the incumbent may happen to hold over, but the terms of four years only, succeeding each other according to the calendar, the words, "and until his successor shall be elected and qualified," being added merely to prevent a chasm in the discharge of the duties of the office, and amount to no more than an authorized occupation of so much of the succeeding term. Such, of necessity, is the construction in its application to all that class of offices, the term of which runs from one general election to another, as, for example, that of governor. Such is the meaning of the whole provision taken together, and its enforcement is necessary to preserve order and symmetry. In our government certainly the election is the origin and foundation of the right to all elective offices. This would seem to be the correct view from principle, and we also regard it well settled by authority of this state, that neither the existence of an office nor the term of time for which it exists, depends upon the commission, which is only evidence of the appointment or election. State v. Billy, 2 N. & McC. 356; State v. Jeter, 1 McC. 233; State v. Lyles, Id. 239; Kottman v. Ayer, 3 Strob. 92; State v. Toomer, 7 Rich. 227; Ex parte Smith, 8 S. C. 515.

It is said in the case of Jeter that the "tenure by which an office is held does not depend upon the commission which the governor may think proper to give; it is only evidence of the appointment. The tenure must depend upon the act creating the office or upon the constitution."

In the case of Lyles, the court decides that

*377

"the commission *does not confer the office, it is only evidence of it, and cannot change the term by which the constitution declares it shall be held. As soon as an Ordinary is elected he is an officer under the constitution, and entitled to all the rights and immunities conferred by that instrument."

In the case of Ex parte Smith, Judge McIver says: "It is very obvious in a government like ours, where the people are the source of all powers, that the title to all elective offices depends upon and is derived from the election, the choice of the people, as manifested at the ballot-box."

The case of State v. Toomer was strikingly analogous, and, in some respects, stronger than this. Henry R. Laurens was master in equity for Charleston county, and was reelected in December, 1844. He executed his bond December 3d, which was approved December 24th, 1844, but his commission did not issue until May 7th, 1845, and it was without seal and had endorsed on it only the constitutional oath. The term of office was "for four years and until his successor was elected and qualified." The act of 1840 required a master in equity within three weeks after his election to tender his bond, duly executed, and immediately after it has been approved shall sue out his commission; and upon his neglect or failure to do so within the said time, his office shall be deemed absolutely vacant, &c. Notwithstanding these stringent provisions and the failure of Mr. Laurens to sue out his commission within the time, his sureties were held liable for a default under the bond of 1844, the court declaring that the statutory provisions prescribing the manner of executing the bond, suing out commission or taking the oath of office, were merely directory. Judge Munro, as the organ of a unanimous court, says: "The only efficacy imparted to the official title of an officer elect by a strict compliance with the directions of the law, such as giving bond, suing out his commission, taking the oath of office, &c., within the prescribed times, is to protect the title against forfeiture. If the state sees proper to excuse his delinquency by granting him a commission, the defects in his title are cured, and if he be already in office his title 'de facto' is immediately converted into a title 'de jure,' having relation back to the time of his election."

*378

*It has been held in New Hampshire: "On general principles, the choice of a person to fill an office constitutes the essence of his appointment. * * * After the choice, if there be a commission or an oath of office, or any ceremony or inauguration, these are forms only, which may or may not be necessary to the validity of any acts under the appointment, according as usage or positive statutes may or may not render them indispensable." Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202.

It is true that the constitution makes it the duty of the governor to issue a commission, which seems to be necessary to put the officer into full practical possession of his office. One elected clerk is not to enter upon the duties of his office or receive its emoluments until he is commissioned. It has been held that before there can be such vacancy, by the death of a person elected to office, as to require it to be filled by executive appointment, the person elected must have been qualified and entered upon the duties thereof. Commonwealth v. Hanley, Brightly's Lead. Cas. on Elections 675. But whilst the commission may be a formal pre-requisite to enable one out of possession to obtain it, we do not see how that necessarily affects the term—the time the office has to run. Actual enjoyment may not be identical with the term, which is a creature of the law and cannot be set afloat and made to vary, shift, or change, according to the caprice, interest or laches of any one who may happen to be incumbent. As illustrated by this case: Should the beginning of the second term be pushed up because there was no commission to May, 1877, the result would be that the election for clerk of the court for the county of Chester would be thrown out of regular connection with all other elections in the state, and possibly a special act of the legislature every four years would be necessary.

If the suing out the commission is, in one sense, a condition precedent to full enjoyment, it certainly does not create the office—for by the terms of the very law which creates the obstacle as to enjoyment the existence of the office is assumed. The abstract right is recognized as a matter prior to and independent of the commission. "No officer elected to any office shall receive pay until he shall have been commissioned and qualified." The *industry and research of the counsel for the plaintiff found a case in which it is contended that a different doctrine was held. Brodie v. Campbell, 17 Cal. 21. In that case Judge Norton, of the twelfth judicial district of California, held his office for six years under an appointment of the governor, "and until the election and qualification of his successor." He was elected September 6th, 1854, and January 2d, 1855, took the oath of office and was commissioned. At a general election, September 7th, 1859, Brodie was elected his successor, but the governor refused to commission him as prematurely elected. At a general election, November 6th, 1860, Campbell was elected and commissioned. The controversy was between Brodie and Campbell, who was the judge, and that was made to depend upon the question whether 1859 or 1860 was the proper time to elect a successor to Judge Norton. If Norton's term ran from his election, 1859 was the proper time and Brodie was judge. If it ran from the time he qualified and was commissioned, 1860 was the proper time and Campbell was judge. The court held that Norton's full term ran from January 2d, 1855, when he was qualified and commissioned and gave judgment for Campbell. This case does touch the principle involved here, but it is, in several respects, quite different from the case at bar. There the judge elect was not required to give bond and had not taken the constitutional oath. He had done nothing whatever towards perfecting his title before January 2d, 1855, when he took the constitutional oath and was commissioned. It is stated that there was no unusual delay, January being the time fixed by the legislation of the state for the commencement of the terms of district judges. Strong as the facts were, Judges Baldwin and Cope, whilst they concurred with Chief Justice Field, who delivered the judgment of the court, filed a separate opinion, which states: "We do not mean to say that a person appointed to a vacancy may delay to qualify as long as he chooses and then fix his regular term from the act of qualification, for that would be to perpetuate the office in himself; nor even that the governor could defer signing the commission for as long a time as he chose, for that would give him the power to *prolong the term of his appointee indefinitely; but that the rule in this case is that the new term commences with the qualification; the modification of the proposition being that this qualification must not be unreasonably deferred." But if the case were in all respects analogous to this, the judgment could only influence us so far as the argument and the dignity of the court which pronounced it are entitled to our consideration and respect. Our own cases are binding upon us as authority and we conceive are in accord with reason and the analogies of the law of our republican institutions and system of popular elections.

*379

*380

The question propounded in the case, whether the term of office of C. C. Macoy, as clerk of the court for Chester county, has expired, is answered in the affirmative, and it is therefore ordered that judgment be rendered in favor of George W. Curtis, the defendant.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 380

(Case No. 956.)

STATE v. BROWN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Highways ⟸112.]

County commissioners may require road hands to open a new road, and a refusal to obey without proper excuse, is a misdemeanor, cognizable by a trial justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 346, 347, 351–355; Dec. Dig. ⟸ 112.]

[2. Highways ⟸151.]

A road worker cannot excuse his default by the objection that the road ordered to be opened will injuriously affect the constitutional rights of the owners of the land through which it passes, the land-owners themselves making no complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 415; Dec. Dig. ⟸151.]

[3. Indictment and Information ⟸3.]

No formal indictment is required in a trial justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 9–23; Dec. Dig. ⟸3.]

[4. Criminal Law ⟸260.]

Where an appeal is taken from the sentence of a trial justice to the Court of General Sessions, the case should not be heard de novo.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 379, 19 S. E. 5.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 584; Dec. Dig. ⟸260.]

Before Aldrich, J., Hampton, March, 1880.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

*381

*Mr. W. S. Tillinghast, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Gantt, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. The defendant was tried in a court of trial justice for failing to work in opening a new road in Hampton county, found guilty and sentenced to pay a fine of $5 or be committed for twenty days. He appealed to the Court of General Sessions, and a trial was there had de novo before a jury. No indictment was found, but the case was tried on the warrant of arrest, which, with the verdict and sentence, came up from the trial justice's court, and did not allege that the offence was committed "contra formam statuti;" but, after stating the charge plainly, commanded the constable, as follows: "These are therefore to command you to apprehend the said Charles Brown and bring him before me to be dealt with according to law." Citizens were summoned from an area of ten miles around to open the new road, of whom the defendant was one. A motion was made to quash the proceeding, which the Circuit judge refused, and submitted the case to a jury upon the facts, who found the defendant guilty, and the judgment was "sentence of trial justice is confirmed with additional costs of appeal."

The defendant appeals, and renews his motion in this court upon the following exceptions:

"1. That the warrant or information was entirely insufficient in law, in that there was no allegation in the same that the charge was committed against any law, or contrary to the form of any statute.

"2. That the county commissioners, or any one of them, are not authorized to appoint a warner, or by themselves to summon citizens of the county living within the area of ten miles to open new highways, and if they had, the act of 1874, Section 4, under which defendant was tried, applied solely to failure or refusal to work existing highways, and not to the construction or opening of new ones."

We will first consider the last exception, which makes the *point that the conviction was erroneous for the reason that the county commissioners had no right to warn out persons liable to do road duty to open a new road, but only to repair old ones.

*382

By the act of 1874 "to amend Chapter XLV., of Title XI., Part I., of the general statutes relating to the repair of highways and bridges," it is provided "if any person of the legal age refuse to work upon the highways and roads (having no justifiable excuse) according to the direction of the overseer, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in a trial justice's court, shall be fined in a sum not less than $5 nor more than $10, or be imprisoned in the county jail, for a period of not less than five nor more than twenty days." 15 Stat. 784.

The question is whether the defendant was properly convicted under this act for refusing, when warned by authority of the county commissioners, to work in opening a new road. If not, it is difficult to understand how new roads could be opened.

Article IV., Section 19, of the Constitution declares that "the qualified electors of each county shall elect three persons for the term of two years, who shall constitute a board of county commissioners, which shall have jurisdiction over roads, highways, ferries, bridges, and in all matters relating to taxes, disbursement of money for county purposes, and in every other case that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the respective counties," &c.

In 1868, an act was passed declaring that "the boards of county commissioners have power, and they are hereby authorized to appoint special commissioners to lay out public highways in those cases where they shall be satisfied that the road applied for is important: provided, however, that the said commissioners shall have no power to open any new road until they shall have given three months previous notice by advertisement in the settlement through which the intended road is to be opened. * * * The roads so to be laid out by such special commissioners, or the same as settled on appeal, shall be recorded, opened and worked as public highways of the towns, cities or counties in which they are respectively situated, in the same manner as other highways of the town, city or county are required by law to be recorded, opened and worked." Gen. Stat. 265.

*383

*The same provisions, substantially, are re-enacted in the act of 1875, "to reduce all acts and parts of acts in relation to county commissioners, their powers and duties, into one act and to amend the same." 15 Stat. 990. From these provisions there can be no doubt that the county commissioners have the right, upon giving notice as required, to have new roads laid out and opened and worked "as other highways of the town, city or county," and to require all persons liable to said duty to work in opening the same.

The argument drawn from Section 23, Article I., of the constitution, that "private property shall not be taken or applied for public use without the consent of the owner or just compensation being made therefor" is not well founded. It does not appear that any private property has been taken without the consent of the owner. There is no allegation that the county commissioners did not give notice in the settlement through which the road is to pass as the law requires. No land-owner is before the court objecting to the opening of the road. Until the contrary is made to appear, we assume that the county commissioners have complied with the law in all respects; and under these circumstances a road worker will not be heard to make objection, in order to escape the discharge of a public duty, that the constitutional rights of other citizens through whose lands the proposed road runs, are injuriously affected by the opening of the road.

The trial justice had the same right to try a defaulter for refusing to work in opening a new road as for refusing to work in repairing an old road. So far as the court of trial justice is concerned we can see no fatal defect in the conviction either as to irregularity in the proceedings or as to the terms of the warrant, which directs the constable to arrest the defendant and "carry him before the trial justice, to be dealt with as required by law." In a trial justice's court no formal indictment "contra formam statuti" is necessary. All proceedings before trial justices in criminal cases shall be commenced on information under oath, plainly and substantially setting forth the offence charged—the information may be amended at any time before trial. All proceedings before trial justices shall be summary, &c.

*384

Gen. Stat. *196. The conviction of the defendant in the court of the trial justice must stand.

But it is urged in the first exception that the warrant or information was entirely insufficient in law, in that there was no allegation in same that the charge was committed against any law or contrary to the form of any statute. We have seen that this exception is not well taken so far as the court of trial justice is concerned, but it may be different as to the trial of the appeal in the Court of Sessions. It appears that the Circuit judge did not decide the case himself, nor have an indictment found by the grand jury, but simply referred it to the jury on the papers as they came from the trial justice. It is not clear what should be the character and form of the proceeding in the Circuit Court upon an appeal from a conviction in a trial justice's court. The act of 1870 provides that "every person convicted before a trial justice of any offence whatever, and sentenced, may appeal from the sentence to the next term of the Court of General Sessions for the county. The appellant shall be committed to abide the sentence of the said court * * * until the final decree, sentence or order of the court therein, and to abide such final sentence, order or decree," &c. Gen. Stat. 748. The words "final decree, sentence or order" indicate that the appeal should be heard by the Circuit judge sitting in an appellate character. It was clearly error to try the case de novo. Without a formal indictment "no person shall be held to answer in any court for an alleged crime or offence, unless upon an indictment by a grand jury, except in the following: First. Where a prosecution by information is expressly authorized by statute. Second. In proceedings before a police court or trial justice; and, third, in proceedings before court martial." Gen. Stat. 708.

Since this case was heard the legislature has passed an act in conformity with these views, providing in Section 6, "that the said appeal shall be heard by the Court of General Sessions on the grounds of exceptions made, and upon the papers hereinbefore required, and without the examination of witnesses in said court. And the said court may either confirm the sentence appealed from, reverse or modify the same, or grant a new trial, as to the said court may seem meet and conformable to law.

*385

*The judgment of the Circuit Court is set aside, and the case remanded, that the appeal from the trial justice may be heard according to law.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 385

(Case No. 957.)

GIBBES v. G. & C. RAILROAD COMPANY. STATE, ex relatione ATTORNEY-GENERAL, v. SAME. Ex parte CLYDE et al. Ex parte COURTENAY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Courts ⇐82.]

In the administration of its own rules, this court, as far as practicable, will not permit mere forms to override substance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 295; Dec. Dig. ⇐82.]

[2. Exceptions, Bill of ⇐39.]

The first section of the act of 1878 (16 Stat. 698), regulating appeals to the Supreme Court, applies to all cases where the order, decree or judgment appealed from was made during the term at which the case was tried.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 51, 52, 54–56, 60; Dec. Dig. ⇐39.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐425, 564.]

To be entitled to an appeal from a decree rendered during the term at which the case was tried, the appellant, within ten days after the rising of the court, must furnish the presiding judge, and serve the respondent's attorney with notice of his intention to appeal, and within thirty days thereafter must serve his case upon the respondent. Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560, affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Re Fifty-Four First Mortgage Bonds, 15 S. C. 304.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2155–2161, 2501–2506, 2555–2559; Dec. Dig. ⇐425, 564.]

[4. Appeal and Error ⇐429.]

After the time had expired for furnishing the presiding judge with notice of intention to appeal, the respondent, in ignorance of appellant's failure so to furnish his notice, signed an agreement as to the papers which should constitute the appeal record, and the time within which it should be prepared. Held, that there was no waiver of the failure to furnish the presiding judge with such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2172; Dec. Dig. ⇐429.]

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐329.]

A cestui que trust has the right to appear in this court and avail himself of the appeal of his trustee. This case distinguished from Shaw v. Railroad Company, 10 Otto 611 [25 L. Ed. 757] and Annely v. De Saussure, 12 S. C. 512.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1836; Dec. Dig. ⇐329.]

[6. Appeal and Error ⇐329.]

But such cestui que trust must secure to the trustee all expenses necessary to the prosecution of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1836; Dec. Dig. ⇐329.]

*386

*Motions to dismiss appeals. The cases are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. H. Simonton and James Conner, for Clyde et al.

Messrs. Samuel Lord, Jr., and J. P. K. Bryan, for Courtenay.

Messrs. Pope & Haskell, for Clark, trustee.

Messrs. D. T. Corbin, A. G. Magrath and Julian Mitchell, for Fisher, receiver.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. Proceedings were originally instituted in the above-entitled cases in the Court of Common Pleas for Richland county, on behalf of creditors, to sell the property of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company. To this end an order was made by Judge T. J. Mackey on November 29th, 1879. Under this order Mr. Barnwell, the master, exposed the road to sale, at public auction, in the city of Columbia, on April 15th, 1880. At this sale several bidders appeared, among them W. P. Clyde, T. M. Logan, Joseph Bryan and W. A. Courtenay, as a committee of second mortgage bondholders. At a certain stage of the bidding, when Mr. Courtenay, as the agent of this committee, had bid the sum of $2,303,600, the hammer of the auctioneer fell. The cash payment of $20,000, required by the order of sale, was handed over to the master, and the names of the committee entered upon the auctioneer's book. After this was done, but before the master and his auctioneer had left the block, it was brought to the attention of the master that another party had bid a higher sum than that at which the property had just been knocked down to the committee, and this before the hammer fell. Upon investigation of the facts, and upon the advice of his counsel, the master concluded to re-open the biddings, which was immediately done, but against the protests of the committee. The cash payment, however, was returned to Courtenay and the biddings reopened. Finally, at a bid of *$2,963,400 by Courtenay, the property was again knocked down, the cash payment of $20,000 again turned over to the master and the sale ended. On July 10th, 1880, thereafter, W. P. Clyde, T. M. Logan and Joseph Bryan filed their petition in re to the July Term of the court, claiming that the sale was complete to the committee at the bid of $2,393,600, and that the master erred in opening the biddings after the property had been knocked down to them at that price; that the receipt of the master of the cash payment of $20,000, and the entry in the book of the auctioneer of the names of the committee as purchasers, fixed and bound the bargain, and that it was thereafter irrevocable, and they prayed relief on that basis. After some further proceedings, and with the proper parties before the court, the whole matter, by order of the presiding judge, was referred to the master, with instructions to take testimony upon the issues raised and report the same to the court. Upon the coming in of the report, Judge Hudson, on August 21st, 1880, and in open court, delivered his decree, which was filed during the session of the court.

*387

It is unnecessary here to state the terms of this decree. It is sufficient for the questions now involved to say that it was unsatisfactory at least to W. A. Clark, trustee, and John H. Fisher, a holder of second mortgage bonds, and that each of these parties gave immediate notice of his intention to appeal; the notice of Fisher being dated August 25th, and that of Clark August 30th, 1880.

It will contribute to the better understanding of the facts of the case to state at this point that the prominent parties before the court, interested in the issues raised, were W. P. Clyde, T. M. Logan and Joseph Bryan, acting for the committee, W. A. Courtenay individually, W. A. Clark, as trustee for second mortgage bondholders, and John H. Fisher as receiver of the South Carolina Railroad Company, holding a large amount of second mortgage bonds. These parties, as it distinctly appears in the record, from their first appearance in the proceedings below, up to the time the case reached this court, have been respectively represented by their own and different attorneys—W. P. Clyde & Co. by Messrs. Simonton & Barker;

*388

W. A. *Courtenay by Messrs. Bryan & Bryan at first, and afterwards assisted by Messrs. Lord & Inglesby; W. A. Clark, as trustee, by Messrs. Pope & Haskell; and John H. Fisher by Mr. Corbin.

It also appears that the appealing parties, immediately after the decree was filed, began, each for himself, to prepare and serve the papers necessary to perfect their respective appeals.

To this end Messrs. Pope & Haskell, as attorneys for W. A. Clark, trustee, gave notice of Clark's intention to appeal on August 30th, as above stated. This notice seems to have been properly served within the ten days required by the act. They also prepared and served exceptions, as required, upon the presiding judge and the other parties within ten days after the rising of the court, but they failed to serve any case, either with or without exceptions, on the attorneys of record of Courtenay.

Mr. Fisher failed to have the presiding judge served with his exceptions either within the ten days after the rising of the court or any time thereafter. He failed, too, altogether in having the attorneys of Courtenay served with a case or exceptions, or a case with exceptions, within thirty days after notice of appeal, or at any other time.

Upon the above state of facts, W. P. Clyde & Co. and Mr. Courtenay, after due notice, on December 14th, 1880, moved this court to dismiss the appeal of W. A. Clark, trustee. The court, upon hearing these motions and after full argument, on December 20th, 1880, filed an order dismissing the appeal of John H. Fisher, generally, and the appeal also of W. A. Clark as to W. A. Courtenay individually, but retaining the appeal of Clark as to W. P. Clyde & Co., with the right of Clark's cestuis que trust, should any desire to do so, to come in and avail themselves of the benefits of Clark's appeal against Clyde & Co.; the parties thus coming in to contribute their pro rata share of the expenses incurred, now or hereafter, in prosecuting this appeal.

The duty of preparing the opinion of the court upon this order has been assigned to me, which duty I will now proceed to discharge as clearly and succinctly as I can.

The law in reference to appeals in cases like this now before the court, and especially as to the steps necessary to be taken to perfect an appeal, in their order, will be found in the act entitled *"An act to alter and amend the law in relation to appeals from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court," passed in 1878. 16 Stat. 698. This being an act of the general assembly of the state, is equally binding upon this court, upon the bar and upon all parties litigant, and although it may seem, to some extent, harsh and technical, and may, in its enforcement, sometimes sacrifice merit to mere forms, yet ita lex scripta est, and that, too, by a power higher than courts or parties, and it can be neither modified or evaded. It affords this court no pleasure to consummate, by its order or judgment, mere technical victories in contests before the court, especially where it is apparent that justice or right may be sacrificed thereby; and I may say that in the adoption and administration of its own rules, while a proper regard will always be had to forms of procedure, in so far at least as to prevent uncertainty and confusion in the conduct of causes before the court, yet, as far as practicable, this court will also always see to it that mere forms shall not override substance. But, while this is the spirit of the court in the adoption of its own rules, yet this court has no power to look through and beyond an act of the general assembly to its consequences, with the view to modify its operation, especially where the requirements of the act are plain and its terms are imperative and peremptory. On the contrary, it is the duty of the court to enforce the law as it stands, regardless of results, relying upon the wisdom of the legislature, in the belief that the general benefits resulting from a full observance of the law, will more than compensate for all evils falling to individual or exceptional cases.

*389

The act of 1878, referred to above, in its first section provides that for the purpose of appeal to the Supreme Court from the rulings of the presiding judge in the court below, exceptions may be taken within ten days after the rising of the court at which the case was tried, by service thereof upon the presiding judge and the attorney of the respondent within the ten days.

In the opinion of the court this section applies to all cases, both at law and in chancery, where the order, decree or judgment appealed from is made during the term of the court at which the case is tried.

Before the passage of this act exceptions were required to be *made in open court during the trial of the case, which were either entered at once upon the minutes of the judge or reduced to writing, so that they might be fixed and remain certain. This seems to have been regarded as an evil or an inconvenience in the practice, and the act of 1878 was enacted to remedy this evil, and for that purpose the time for exceptions was extended by this act to ten days after the rising of the court. This extension of time is a privilege allowed by the act to litigants, and is limited to ten days, and it applies, in express words, without exception, to all cases tried by the court.

*390

The second section further provides that within ten days after the rising of the court, as to all orders, decrees and judgments rendered during the term, or if rendered at chambers, then within ten days after written notice thereof, the appellant shall serve the respondent or his attorneys with notice of his intention to appeal, and within thirty days after this notice he shall, in either case, prepare and serve a case or exceptions, or a case with exceptions, unless, as to this last requirement, the judge before whom the case was heard shall extend the time.

The fourth section provides that a failure on the part of the appellant to comply with either of the foregoing sections shall amount to a waiver of his appeal. The language employed in these sections presents their meaning and intent so plainly that it needs no critical analysis to reach that intent. All that is necessary for this purpose is simply to read the sections. Upon this reading it will be seen at once that in every case where tried in open court and disposed of during the term, whether it be at law or a case in chancery, in order to perfect an appeal to this court this act requires three distinct steps to be taken by the appellants within a time limited as to each; a failure as to either of which is fatal—fatal not by the rules of this court, but by the express terms of the fourth section of the act itself.

These steps are as follows: First. Exceptions must be served on the presiding judge and the attorney of the respondent within ten days after the rising of the court. Second. Notice of intention to appeal must be served, also, within ten days after the rising of the court, upon the respondent or his attorney. Third. A case or exceptions, or a case with exceptions, must be served within thirty days after the notice of appeal.

*391

*This is the meaning of the act as interpreted from its terms, and it has been so construed by this court in accordance with this intent. In the case of Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560, which was an equity case, the decree being rendered in open court, the court dismissed the appeal, because the appellant had failed to comply with this act, both as to service of exceptions on the presiding judge and as to the service of his case within the time prescribed, the court holding that a failure in either respect was fatal.

The authority of this case was recognized in the recent case of Scurry v. Coleman, ante p. 166; and upon mature consideration, it is now re-affirmed as the law regulating appeals in cases of this kind.

What steps may be necessary in an appeal from an order, decree or judgment rendered at chambers, is not involved in this case, and the court does not feel called upon here to express any opinion on that subject.

Now apply these principles to the facts of this case and the motions made thereon. It is admitted that Fisher failed to have his exceptions served on the presiding judge within ten days after the rising of the court. This, without more, would be fatal under the act. Rogers v. Nash, supra. Can Fisher be relieved from it?

His counsel contends that this defect has been waived by agreement of parties, and he has submitted the following as the agreement:

"It is agreed that the following shall constitute the record for the purposes of the appeal in the above-entitled causes: All the decrees, orders, petitions, answers and exceptions contained in the printed pamphlet thereof, used in said causes at the hearing on August 18th, 19th and 20th, 1880, and the testimony in said cause reported by Barnwell, master, and the opinion and decree of Judge Hudson. It is agreed that said record may be made up at any time before the meeting of the next term of the Supreme Court.

(Signed) "Simonton & Barker.
"D. T. Corbin.
"Pope & Haskell.

"September 1st, 1880."

*392

*The court recognizes the right of parties to make written agreements and to waive irregularities; and where there is no misunderstanding as to the stipulations, the court would be disposed to enforce such agreements according to the intent of the parties.

In this case, however, there is a misunderstanding. The claim of Mr. Corbin that the agreement here waived preceding conditions is denied by the attorneys of Clyde & Co. Under such circumstances, the court must look to the paper itself. The paper bears date on September 1st, 1880, several days after the time had expired for the service of the exceptions on the presiding judge. There is not a word in it which refers to the exceptions. The appeal at that time was lost and beyond the reach of remedy, but there is nothing in the paper which shows that this was known to the attorneys of Clyde, who signed it. In the absence of such knowledge, the court cannot conclude that it was understood on both sides to cover past defects, especially when we look at the agreement itself, and find that it is confined entirely to stipulations as to what shall constitute the record, and as to the time within which this record should be prepared in the future. This, then, is sufficient to dismiss the appeal of Fisher as to Clyde & Co., and as to Courtenay individually.

Fisher and Clark each failed to have their case served on the attorneys of Courtenay, or on Courtenay himself. This failure is also attributed to the agreement already discussed. It seems to have been understood by these parties that Messrs. Simonton & Barker represented Courtenay as well as Clyde & Co., and that the agreement signed by Messrs. Simonton & Barker covered Courtenay's case as well as that of Clyde & Co.

The court is satisfied that there has been an honest misunderstanding on this subject, growing out of the fact that the attorneys of Clyde & Co. and of Courtenay were sometimes found together in the various contests below, fighting on the same line and contending for the same ends. But when we look to the history of the case, as found in the record and in the different steps taken by each party, we find a clear and distinct line of cleavage, so to speak, marked step by step on the record, from the first moment the parties appeared in the court below until *they reached this court, between Courtenay as an individual and Clyde & Co. as the committee, each being represented on the record by his own and different attorneys. Such being the fact, even if Mr. Simonton intended to bind Courtenay, of which we have no evidence, yet his act being without the knowledge of Courtenay, and not only not ratified subsequently but repudiated by him, could not bind him. The misunderstanding was a natural one, and without fault on either side, and we cannot suppose for a moment that there was any intention to deceive or entrap.

*393

Now, whatever may have been the cause of the failure to perfect their appeal, the parties failing must take the consequences. This disposes of so much of the order as refers to the appeals dismissed.

The appeal of Clark is retained as to W. P. Clyde & Co., with the right of his cestuis que trust, should they desire to do so, to come in and avail themselves of his appeal. Mr. Clark has no personal interest in this matter whatever; he is a mere naked trustee of an express trust, and he is in court solely as the representative, and for the benefit, of his cestuis que trust. In his notice of appeal he recognizes this fact, and expressly states that he appeals in behalf of the holders of the bonds secured by said mortgage. How, then, as long as Clark's appeal stands, can any second mortgage bondholder who may desire to come in be shut out? Nothing, it appears to the court, would be more inequitable and unjust, and it would require an authority so well settled and controlling that the court could not but yield to it, before the court could be led to a conclusion so subversive of the equities of the parties. So far as the court can see, there remains but one of the second mortgage bondholders unsheltered. He may have no merit in his claim, but with this the court has nothing to do. He is a bondholder to a large amount; his representative and trustee is properly in court with his appeal perfected. Who did the trustee appeal for, if not for him; and can the trustee be permitted now to shut the door upon him and exclude him from the right of appealing and assisting to defend and protect his own interests?

It is a familiar doctrine of equity that a trustee can do no act to the prejudice of his cestui que trust, and he will be restrained *by injunction from using his powers to the sacrifice of his trust. Even in an action at law in the name of the trustee, he cannot release or discontinue the action without the consent of his beneficiary. Perry on Trusts 467, § 520.

*394

The cases of Shaw v. Railroad Co., 100 U. S. (10 Otto) 611 [25 L. Ed. 757], and Annely v. De Saussure, 12 S. C. 512, relied on in the argument, do not reach the point involved here. In the case of Shaw and the railroad company the cestuis que trust were not parties to the original suit—they were represented therein by their trustee. The case ended without appeal, and the cestuis que trust attempted to have the decree reviewed and reversed by a new proceeding in their own names, and this, too, without any charge of bad faith or otherwise against their trustee.

Their bill or demurrer was dismissed, and the Supreme Court sustained the judgment below, on the ground that the trustee in the suit below represented the bondholders, and whatever bound him bound them. On the same principle, had the trustee appealed, the cestuis que trust would certainly have been entitled to the benefit of the appeal.

In the case of Annely v. De Saussure, supra, the defendant, as executor of a deceased mortgagor, sold at private sale the mortgaged property, as alleged by him, with the knowledge and consent of the parties interested under the mortgage. The plaintiff, who was one of the devisees and executrix of the mortgagee, filed her complaint to vacate this sale of the executor and to foreclose the mortgage. Two other devisees, interested under the mortgage, were made defendants in this proceeding because they had consented to the private sale by the executor. The complaint was dismissed below, but, upon appeal by the executrix, this judgment was reversed and a re-sale ordered. The two defendants, however, who, as it appeared from the report of the referee, had consented to private sale and had received a portion of the proceeds thereof, were excluded from the benefits of the re-sale, the court holding that the successful appeal of the executrix could not inure to their relief. This was upon the ground that they, by consenting to, and ratifying the private sale of, the executor, had separated themselves, to some extent, from the other parties interested in the mortgage, and they should be held *bound by their own independent acts. Their rights had been adjudicated below upon facts which distinguished them from the others. They did not appeal, nor does it appear that they claimed the benefit of the appeal of the executrix, who represented herself as devisee as well as executrix, and they were properly held bound by their own acts.

*395

In the case now before the court, Clark has no individual interest. He does not occupy the position both of trustee and cestui que trust as Miss Annely did, nor has his cestui que trust, who now seeks to avail himself of his appeal, separated himself from the trust deed by any positive act of his own, which was adjudicated against him on the trial below, rendering it necessary for him to have appealed in his own behalf and independent of the trustee, as was the case with the two cestuis que trust in Annely v. De Saussure.

The principle decided, therefore, in Annely v. De Saussure, while right on the facts of that case, has no application here.

The holders of bonds secured by the mortgage to Clark, must be allowed the benefit of his appeal, but in coming in they must secure to Clark all expenses necessary to its prosecution which Clark has already incurred or may hereafter incur. Clark's appeal has been retained as to the committee, and as to the questions raised in his exceptions involving the rights of the committee, and none other. A cestui que trust coming in can rise no higher than Clark. On the contrary he must stand on the same plane with Clark, and must be confined to the same questions and against the same parties as has already been directed by the order of this court, which order is hereto appended as the conclusion of this opinion.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

The order dismissing the appeal of Fisher, receiver, and sustaining that of Clark, trustee, was filed December 20th, 1880, No. 954, and is as follows:

These were motions to dismiss two appeals from the same judgment, and they were taken up together.

After hearing argument, it is ordered—

*396

*1. That the motions of Clyde, Logan and Bryan, and W. A. Courtenay, to dismiss the appeal of John B. Fisher, receiver, be granted, and that the said appeal be dismissed.

2. It is ordered that the motion of W. A. Courtenay to dismiss the appeal of W. A. Clark, trustee, be granted, and that said appeal be dismissed, so far as it affects the said William A. Courtenay individually, but not as one of the Clyde committee.

3. It is further ordered that the appeal of William A. Clark, trustee, stand as to all other parties, unaffected by anything contained in this order; with the right on the part of any of the holders of bonds under the second mortgage to Clark, as trustee, who may come in and contribute their pro rata share of the expenses, to avail themselves of the benefit of said appeal. The said right to be limited to the questions made by said appeal as to the parties against whom said appeal is permitted to stand.

The opinion of the court to be filed hereafter.

14 S. C. 396

(Case No. 958.)

DEVEREUX v. CHAMPION COTTON PRESS COMPANY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Trial ⇐325.]

Where a jury, before dispersing, assented to a verdict, which was duly written and sealed up, but upon the re-assembling of court and before publication the foreman openly stated that some of the jurors now dissented from their finding—Held, that such verdict should not have been received. Perry v. Mays, 2 Bail. 354, recognized and approved.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Lagrone v. Timmerman, 46 S. C. 373, 414, 24 S. E. 290.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 767; Dec. Dig. ⇐325.]

Before Pressley, J., Charleston, February, 1880.

Action by John H. Devereux against the Champion Cotton Press Company for injury to his realty by reason of the unlawful use by the defendant of its property near that of plaintiff. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,000, under the circumstances stated in the opinion of the court. The defendant moved for a new trial upon three grounds: (1) that the verdict was without evidence to sustain it; (2) that the damages *were excessive; and (3) that the verdict was not the verdict of the jury, but only of a majority of them. The presiding judge overruled the motion. Defendant appealed upon the third ground taken in support of his motion for a new trial.

*397

Mr. C. H. Simonton, for appellant.

Mr. L. De B. McCrady, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. In this case, at the trial below, "the jury had been authorized to seal up their verdict and render it next morning. Then, before rendering it, the foreman * * * stated that the jury had agreed on a verdict, which had been sealed as directed, and that, subsequently, in the morning, some of them had notified him that they did not assent to the said verdict." The Circuit judge, upon being informed that there was no dissent until after the jury had separated for the night, received the verdict and directed the clerk to publish and record it. A motion for a new trial was made on various grounds, one of which was "because the verdict was not the verdict of the jury, but only of a majority of them," which motion was refused, and the defendant now appeals upon the ground above stated. So that the precise question made by this appeal is, whether a sealed verdict, which was assented to by all of the jurors at the time it was sealed and before the jury were permitted to separate, can be afterwards received by the court, published and recorded, in face of the statement made by the foreman as the organ of the jury, that some of the jurors did not then assent to the verdict. This question is, we think, conclusively settled by the case of Perry v. Mays, 2 Bail. 354. In that case, the jury not having agreed when the court was about to adjourn for the day, leave was granted them, with the consent of the parties, to separate after they had agreed and to deliver their verdict next morning. At the opening of the court on the next day the foreman delivered a sealed verdict, when one of the jurors stated that "it was not his verdict, but he had agreed not to oppose it, *in order to get out." The verdict was received and recorded, and this was made the basis of the last ground of appeal. Harper, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "No doubt a new trial must be granted on the last ground taken for that purpose. It is said by Blackstone, (3 Com. 377), 'a privy verdict is where the judge hath left or adjourned the court, and the jury being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave to give their verdict privily out of court; which verdict is of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court, wherein the jury may, if they please, vary from their privy verdict; so that the privy verdict is, indeed, a mere nullity, and yet it is a dangerous practice, allowing time to tamper with the jury, and, therefore, very seldom indulged. But the only effectual and legal verdict is the public verdict, in which they openly declare to have found the issue for the plaintiff or for the defendant.' The case of Root v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. 68, seems in point to the present question. Before the jury retired the parties agreed that the jury might deliver a sealed verdict; yet it was held that when the jury came into court to deliver the sealed verdict either party might have the jury polled, and any of the jurors might dissent from the verdict to which they had previously agreed. See, also, the cases of Blackley v. Sheldon, 7 Johns. 32, and Saunders v. Freeman, Plowd. 211. The practice of allowing a jury to give a privy verdict, or to seal up their verdict, is considered by our courts to be a dangerous one, and is never allowed without the consent of the parties. If the parties will consent that the verdict may be thus given, they must take the risk of the jury being tampered with." In addition to the authorities cited in this case, which, upon examination, will be found fully to support it, we may add the cases of Bunn v. Hoyt, 3 Johns. 255; Douglas v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352; Lawrence v. Stearnes, 11 Pick. 501. In the last-named case the verdict was agreed upon during the night, though not reduced to writing, when the jury was permitted to separate, with the understanding that they would meet in the morning and put the verdict in proper form. When they assembled the next morning one of the jurors refused to concur in the verdict which had been agreed upon the night before, and stated to the court that a verdict had *been agreed upon the night before in which he then concurred, but that after their separation he had more maturely considered the whole subject, and could not conscientiously assent to the verdict. Shaw, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The only verdict which can be received and regarded as a complete and valid verdict of a jury upon which a judgment can be rendered, is an open and public verdict, given and assented to in open court as the unanimous act of the jury, and affirmed and entered of record in the presence and under the sanction of the court." Then, after alluding to "a convenient practice," which had been adopted in this country, of permitting a jury to seal up their verdict and separate, in case they should come to an agreement while the court was not in session, proceeds to say: "But in such case the verdict is to be affirmed in open court as the unanimous act of the jury and in presence of the whole panel. * * * Such an affirmation is the only evidence the court can receive of the free and unanimous assent of the jury to the verdict." These authorities establish the proposition that until a verdict has been published and recorded, it may be recalled and altered by the jury, and if it is made known to the court, when it is proposed to render the verdict, that any one of the jurors does not then assent to it, such verdict cannot be received, but the record should be recommitted to the jury with directions to retire to their room until they have agreed, as seems to have been done in Bunn v. Hoyt, supra, and in Douglas v. Tousey, supra.

*398

*399

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and a new trial is ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *400

*(Case No. 959.)

STATE v. WEEKS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Criminal Law ⇐94.]

Trial justices have no jurisdiction of the offence of stealing, taking away or letting loose a boat under the act of 1695, (2 Stat. 105, and Gen. Stat., ch. CXXIX., § 10,) for whether the offence be larceny or trespass, subject to criminal prosecution, the penalty, being indefinite in amount, may exceed the limits prescribed for such inferior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 137–166; Dec. Dig. ⇐94.]

[2. Justices of the Peace, ⇐38.]

Damages, indefinite in amount, given by statute for a trespass, may not be sued for in a trial justice's court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. ⇐38.]

[3. Justices of the Peace ⇐34.]

A forfeiture of $20 cannot be recovered in a trial justice's court, under a statute which provides for its recovery in a court of record.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hasten Furn. Co. v. Southern Ry., 82 S. C. 242, 64 S. E. 223.

For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. §§ 77, 78, 80–82; Dec. Dig. ⇐34.]

[4. Criminal Law ⇐90.]

A trial justice's court being an inferior court, has jurisdiction only of matters expressly conferred; and the act of 1695 does not expressly confer jurisdiction, nor are the penalties therein provided within the terms of the general grant contained in Chapter XXV., of the general statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129–136; Dec. Dig. ⇐90.]

Before Aldrich, J., Orangeburg, October, 1879.

The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph M. Skinner, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Jervey, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the Circuit Court affirming a judgment rendered by a trial justice in a prosecution under an old act passed in 1695, (2 Stat. 105), incorporated in General Statutes, Chapter CXXIX., Section 10, page 716. The phraseology of the act is not free from obscurity, and is as follows: "Whoever shall steal, take away or let loose any boat * * * shall be liable to such fine or fines as the court shall, in their discretion, think fit, if the matter of fact be felony or larceny, and make good to the person or persons injured all damages they shall sustain; and in case the matter of fact be a trespass only, the person or persons commit*ting such offence shall make good to the person injured all damages that may accrue thereby, and moreover forfeit and pay, for every time he or they shall be found guilty thereof, the sum of twenty dollars, one moiety to him or them that will sue and prosecute for the same in any court of record in this state, besides his charges therein expended."

*401

In this case proceedings were commenced in the usual way by an affidavit, in which the prosecutor charged that the defendant "did feloniously break loose, steal and take away" a certain boat belonging to the prosecutor, upon which a warrant, in the usual form, was issued. Under this warrant the defendant was arrested and carried before the trial justice, who upon a preliminary examination, decided "that there is no cause of action for a felony but sufficient cause for a trespass," whereupon the words "feloniously" and "steal" were erased from the papers and the defendant was tried for trespass. The jury charged with the case returned the following verdict: "We find for the plaintiff $5." For some reason, not disclosed by the "case" submitted here, this verdict was erased, but by what authority or by whose directions, does not appear, and another verdict was returned in the following words: "We, the jurymen on this case, after mature consideration, unanimously find the defendant, R. F. Weeks, guilty of trespass, and in consideration thereof find [meaning fine, we suppose,] the said R. F. Weeks the sum total of $5 for damages." Upon this verdict the trial justice rendered judgment for $20 forfeiture under the statute, and $5 damages found by the jury, together with $16.05 costs.

As it is very clear that the trial justice had no jurisdiction of the case, it will not be necessary to consider in detail the several errors alleged in the grounds of appeal as having been committed in the course of this anomalous proceeding.

If the offence charged should prove to be a larceny, then, certainly, the trial justice had no jurisdiction, for the only limit to the amount of the fine to be imposed is the discretion of the court, while a trial justice's jurisdiction is limited to the trial of such offences as are punishable by a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. If, however, the offence should prove to be "a trespass only," then, conceding *what is by no means clear, that it was the intention of the act to make it the subject of a criminal prosecution, the penalty is not limited in amount but is indefinite, and may exceed the limits prescribed for the jurisdiction of a trial justice; for the act provides that "the person or persons committing such offence shall make good to the person injured all damages that may accrue thereby, and moreover forfeit and pay for every time he or they shall be found guilty thereof the sum of twenty dollars, one moiety thereof to be paid to the state treasurer for the public use, the other moiety to him or them that will sue and prosecute for the same in any court of record in this state." Now if this language should be construed as providing for two proceedings—one in which the person injured seeks damages, and the other in which an informer sues for the forfeiture—it is still obvious that the trial justice could not take jurisdiction of either; for in the former case the damages to be recovered being indefinite in amount, cannot be said to be within the jurisdiction of an officer who is limited to a certain definite amount: while in the latter, though the amount of the forfeiture is within the jurisdiction of a trial justice, yet, as the statute expressly provides that the forfeiture is to be sued for in a court of record, and as a trial justice's court is not a court of record, that officer is thereby excluded from taking jurisdiction. In addition to this, trial justices' courts being courts of inferior and limited jurisdiction, cannot take jurisdiction of any case except where it is conferred by some statute. The statute under which the prosecution in this case was commenced does not confer jurisdiction upon a trial justice, and the offence here charged is not specifically mentioned among those enumerated in Chapter XXV., general statutes, in which the "criminal jurisdiction" of trial justices is defined; and it does not come within that general class which is there described as "offences which may be subject to the penalties of either fine or forfeiture not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the jail or work-house not exceeding thirty days," because, while the forfeiture attached to this offence is less than the sum above stated, that is not the only penalty; for, as we have seen, the statute provides that the person committing this offence "shall make good to the person injured all damages *that may accrue thereby, and moreover forfeit and pay for every time he or they shall be found guilty thereof the sum of twenty dollars."

*402

*403

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 403

(Case No. 960.)

OSTENDORFF v. COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF CHARLESTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Clerks of Courts ⇐29.]

For work done by a clerk of court officially, he can recover only such compensation as is fixed by the fee-bill; but preparing a new index to judgments and decrees is no part of the regular and ordinary duties of such office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Clerks of Courts, Cent. Dig. § 39; Dec. Dig. ⇐29.]

[2. Counties ⇐113.]

A Circuit judge has no power to bind the county to pay for work done upon the public records of his court, in accordance with the recommendation of the grand jury, nor can he refer it to a master of the court to fix the proper compensation for such work, nor, upon report made, order payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. ⇐113.]

[3. Counties ⇐125.]

In the absence of contract no action will lie against the county commissioners demanding payment for work done upon public records of the Circuit Court, although such work, when done, was used by the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 186; Dec. Dig. ⇐125.]

[4. Counties ⇐113.]

The county commissioners are the legally constituted agents of the county, and to them alone is given the power to contract county obligations.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Edmondston v. County of Aiken, 14 S. C. 622; Richland County v. Miller, 16 S. C. 249; Walpole v. City Council, 32 S. C. 554, 11 S. E. 391; Day & Co. v. Pickens County, 53 S. C. 47, 30 S. E. 681.

For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 178; Dec. Dig. ⇐113.]

Before Wallace, J., February, 1878, Aldrich, J., December, 1879, and Pressley, J., February, 1880, Charleston.

This case is fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. E. Burke, for appellants.

Mr. H. A. M. Smith, contra.

*404

*January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts. At the February Term of the court for Charleston county, 1878, the grand jury made a presentment, recommending "that the books containing the index of judgments and decrees from January 1st, 1870, to the present time, be written and arranged lexicographically, under the directions of the court." Whereupon Judge Wallace ordered "that the clerk have the index re-written and lexicographically arranged." It seems that under this order the clerk commenced to do the work himself, and October 1st, 1879, rendered a bill against the county commissioners for the sum of $1636, for the performance of about one-third of the whole work, embracing only judgments and decrees, "where the names of the defendants commence with the letters A, B, C, D, E and F."

The county commissioners refused to allow the account, so far as it exceeded the rates fixed by the act of 1878 for copying papers, which would, by a liberal construction, give for the services then rendered, the sum of $122.40. From this audit the clerk appealed to the Court of Common Pleas. Judge Aldrich heard the appeal and ordered that the claim be referred to W. D. Porter, Esq., one of the masters, "to ascertain and report what would be proper compensation for the work done by the clerk, with leave to report any special matter." The county commissioners excepted to this ruling. The master, conceiving that under the order of Judge Aldrich he had no right to consider any question but that expressly referred to him, "to ascertain and report what would be a proper compensation for the work done by the clerk," took testimony and recommended that he should be paid at the rate of forty cents per name, which would amount to the sum of $654.40. The county commissioners also excepted to this report.

The case, upon the exceptions, came on to be heard before Judge Pressley, who, announcing that "the legal questions had been virtually decided by the previous orders, and that it would be improper in him to set aside the order of another Circuit judge," confirmed the report and ordered the county commission*ers to pay the plaintiff the sum of $654.40. From this and both the previous orders the county commissioners except, upon the following grounds:

*405

"1. Because the law imposes upon the county the obligation to pay for the services of the clerk at the rates allowed by law; that these rates for copying and recording are fixed in the fee-bill for the clerk; that these rates furnish the proper measure of compensation for the work done, and that the amount allowed is greatly in excess of these rates.

"2. Because if the services of the clerk are not to be paid according to the fee-bill, then, by act of 1878, he can charge nothing for his services at all, and the appeal from the county commissioners should be dismissed.

"3. Because the only obligation upon the county to pay for said services is that imposed by statute—that such obligation is not imposed by order of this court, made by Judge Wallace, directing the work to be done, the county not being a party in that proceeding—and the obligation imposed by statute is to pay at the rate fixed by law.

"4. That the work is still unfinished as a whole and the bill was prematurely presented for audit.

"5. That the order of reference did not necessarily imply that the clerk was not to be paid according to the fee-bill.

"6. At most, under the fee-bill, the clerk was entitled to no more than the amount stated in the master's report, as the value by the said fee-bill of copying the said names three times."

In order to prevent confusion it is necessary to understand clearly in what character this claim is made. In form, it is a proceeding by the clerk of the court, as such, against the county commissioners of Charleston county for services rendered as clerk. But, as we understand it, from the character and amount of the claim, it is, in reality, an action by John H. Ostendorff, as an individual, against the county of Charleston for the value of said services. If we are to consider this as a claim by the clerk in his official character for ordinary services rendered in the discharge of his official duties, and in reference to which a Circuit judge, in enforcing the law, had the right to make orders, then of course the clerk must look to the law as fixing the compensa*tion for such services. "Fees of the clerks of the Circuit Court in state cases, and for all other services, to be paid by the county at the rates allowed by law." 15 Stat. 991.

*406

In this view there is no controversy in the case. The aggregate of the "fees" at the rate allowed by law for the work done, amounts, as is admitted, to $122.40, the sum allowed by the county commissioners.

But it is manifest that something more is claimed. The work done was in restoring and improving the public records in the clerk's office, and while it was closely connected with the regular and ordinary duties of the clerk, it was not part of them. The clerk was not bound to perform the work without special agreement with those authorized to contract, and the order of Judge Wallace neither dispensed with the necessity of a contract, nor in itself constituted one. It is not denied that the work was proper, if not necessary. It was done under an order of a judge, suggested by the presentment of a grand jury of the county, and, so far as performed, it has been done well. The proof seems to show that it required particularity, and was something more than mere copying, within the meaning of the "Act to regulate the costs of plaintiffs' and defendants' attorneys, and the costs and fees of clerks of courts, Probate judges, sheriffs and other officers." 16 Stat. 624.

Under the circumstances it would be only just that the plaintiff should be paid, not an extravagant price because of the accidental circumstance that as clerk he had control of the books and papers which gave him a sort of monopoly of the work, but, considering all the facts, reasonable compensation. The question of strict legal right, however, has been made, and our duty is simply to announce the law. If the plaintiff should receive less than a just compensation, it will be the result of his own act in doing work without legal authority or agreement with the proper parties. In so far as this is an action by John H. Ostendorff, as an individual, for the value of work done upon contract, express or implied, we think it cannot be maintained, and that there was error on the Circuit, both in referring the matter of compensation to the master and in confirming his report, which could have been made only on the ground of contract. No legal con*tract, nor assent to the work from which a contract would be implied by the proper party, appears in the case. No assent can be presumed from the use by the public of so much of the work as was done. The public, as matter of right, are entitled to the use of public records without imposing any obligation upon the county commissioners against their protest. Nor could the plaintiff, by voluntarily doing work which was useful to the county, make himself a creditor of the county, so as to enable him to sue and recover upon an assumpsit for its value. Neither the grand jury, nor the judge himself presiding in the Circuit Court, could make a contract to bind the county. The judge, under the law, might direct the clerk in all matters pertaining to his office, but he had no authority to order him to perform work for the county beyond the scope of his official duties, and thereby make a contract for the county, nor to fix the compensation therefor. Although the work may have been proper to be done and upon the records of the clerk's office, to which the clerk alone had access, yet the order of the judge could not make a legal county claim. The grand jury, if they think proper, may make recommendations as to the propriety of having work done for the benefit of the county, which the judge may refer to the county commissioners for their action, but they alone, the county commissioners, can make contracts binding on the county. Lesley v. Com'rs of Public Buildings, 1 Speers 32; State v. Com'rs of Public Buildings, 12 Rich. 300.

*407

In this last case cited, Judge Withers, as the organ of the court, said: "The presentment of grand juries upon matters within the discretion vested in other bodies, are but advisory to such bodies and suggestive to the court. Successive judges are as little qualified by proper information as they would be inclined by disposition to determine any matter such as is in controversy here; and a matter not expressly enjoined upon the commissioners by law, but referred to discretion, should be left with those whom the legislature have directly appointed to exercise that discretion."

In the case from Speers, David Lesley was Ordinary of Abbeville county. He desired a seal for his office, which he purchased, and sued the commissioners of public buildings for the *money paid for it, and the court held that "they were not liable to be sued for money expended by the Ordinary in purchasing articles for the use of his office, when the articles were not furnished at the request of the commissioners."

*408

The board of county commissioners is one of the most important agencies created by the constitution of 1868. It is the local administrative body of the county—both to contract and provide payment. Before the present constitution there existed in the state for the purpose of facilitating local government, a number of district boards—such as commissioners of roads; of the poor; to approve public securities; and commissioners of public buildings. The powers and duties of all these boards were, by the constitution, united in the boards of county commissioners, and others no less important were added, including the payment of contingent accounts, formerly paid by the state. The act of 1875, "to reduce all acts and parts of acts in relation to county commissioners, their powers and duties, into one act, and to amend the same," (15 Stat. 985), contains, among others, these provisions:

"That county commissioners elected in pursuance of Section 19, of Article IV. of the constitution, shall have jurisdiction over * * * all matters relating to taxes and disbursements of money for county purposes, and in every case that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns in their respective counties." § 1.

"To cause to be levied, collected and paid to the county treasurer a certain sum of money, which, in their judgment, may be necessary to pay all claims against the county for fees, disbursements, services or labor," &c. § 10, subd. 4.

"And all work given out by the county commissioners to be done on public buildings as aforesaid, when the amount shall exceed the sum of one hundred dollars, shall be done by contract, and the commissioners are hereby required to advertise the same," &c. § 14.

"No accounts shall be audited and required to be paid by the county commissioners for any labor performed—fees, services or disbursements, or any other matter, unless such account shall be made out, &c. * * *

*409

No allowance or payment beyond *legal claims shall ever be allowed, and the board of county commissioners in any county may refuse to audit or allow any claim or demand, whatever, unless made out and verified in the manner herein specified." § 21.

"County commissioners shall, annually, on or before the first day of November of each year, prepare and make up the estimate for all county charges and debts for the fiscal year then ensuing, * * * and the rate of taxation necessary to raise money to meet the same." § 31.

It thus appears that the county commissioners are the legally constituted agents of the county, and, as such, make all estimates and disbursements for county purposes. They are supposed to know best the needs and means of the county, as they are charged with the duty of liquidating, so they alone are given the power to contract county obligations. It would necessarily lead to confusion to allow one official, who may not be a citizen, to make, by a simple order, contracts binding upon the county, and thus to administer their local affairs without the checks imposed by the law, and without the knowledge, consent or request of those upon whom the duty and responsibility are imposed.

The orders in the Circuit Court of February Term, 1878, of December 19th, 1879, and of May 27th, 1880, which recognize and impose as a legal demand, recoverable against the county of Charleston, the claim of John H. Ostendorff for compensation for doing the work aforesaid in the clerk's office of Charleston county under an order of court, without the request or consent of the county commissioners of that county, should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *410

*(Case No. 961.)

STATE v. GILL.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Jury ⇐110.]

Objection by a prisoner that jurors were improperly excused by the Circuit judge, comes too late after verdict, unless it appears that defendant was injured thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 520; Dec. Dig. ⇐110.]

[2. Criminal Law ⇐968.]

The Circuit judge excused two jurors, one of whom, summoned under the general venire, lived at a distance from the court-house, and in his stead was called a juror from that vicinity; but the prisoner, afterwards put upon his trial for murder committed at the court-house, did not exhaust his peremptory challenges. Held, that there was no ground for arresting the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 460.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2423–2432, 2435–2444; Dec. Dig. ⇐968.]

[3. Homicide ⇐200.]

In a trial for murder, A was not permitted to repeat declarations made by deceased, a short time before his death, which deceased prefaced with the words "If I die." B, a brother of deceased, afterwards testified that deceased, a few moments before his death, when fully aware of his condition, made a statement, charging the prisoner with cutting him, and that A was then present. Held, that the Circuit judge did not err in permitting this declaration of deceased to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Nance, 25 S. C. 172; State v. Johnson, 26 S. C. 153, 1 S. E. 510.

For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 425; Dec. Dig. ⇐200.]

[4. Homicide ⇐207.]

Dying declarations, to be admissible in evidence, need not be, in any case, reduced to writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 439; Dec. Dig. ⇐207.]

[5. Criminal Law ⇐885.]

The jury before agreeing upon a verdict in a capital case, returned into court and inquired of the presiding judge, whether they could, upon conviction, recommend the defendant to mercy; to which inquiry he replied affirmatively. Held, that the judge committed no error in this, or in failing then to instruct the jury that such recommendation could not affect the sentence.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 462; State v. Murrell, 33 S. C. 100, 11 S. E. 682; State v. Bennett, 40 S. C. 311, 18 S. E. 886.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2108; Dec. Dig. ⇐885.]

[6. Jury ⇐75.]

[In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the action of the court in excusing two jurors was based on affidavits, as required by statute.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. ⇐75.]

[7. Jury ⇐135.]

[Cited in State v. Prater, 26 S. C. 202, 2 S. E. 108; State v. Anderson, 26 S. C. 601, 2 S. E. 699; State v. Weaver, 58 S. C. 109, 36 S. E. 499, to the point that the right of peremptory challenge is not a right to select the jury, but only the right to reject a certain number of jurors.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 599–606; Dec. Dig. ⇐135.]

[8. Criminal Law ⇐731.]

[Cited in State v. Robinson, 27 S. C. 618, 4 S. E. 570, to the point that the province of the jury is to pass upon issues of fact, and that they have nothing to do with the consequences of their verdict.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1694, 1695; Dec. Dig. ⇐731.]

Before Pressley, J., Hampton, June, 1880.

The case is fully stated in the opinion of the court. The prisoner was not in this court at the hearing, his presence having been waived by his counsel of record.

Messrs. W. P. Murphy, M. W. Gary and J. W. Moore, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Gantt, contra.

*411

*January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. The defendant in this case having been convicted of murder, made a motion in arrest of judgment, and also for a new trial in the Circuit Court, and his motions there being refused, he now renews them here upon the same grounds taken in the court below.

The motion in arrest of judgment is based upon the ground that the Circuit judge erred in discharging two of the jurors, one of whom had been drawn from the county at large and summoned under the general venire. It appears that when the list of jurors, drawn and summoned for the term at which this case was tried, was called over, only twenty-eight answered. The court thereupon ordered sixteen additional jurors to be drawn from the box containing the names of persons residing within five miles of the court-house. After the jurors so drawn had been summoned, ten of them appeared, making, with those already in attendance, thirty-eight jurors, whereupon the Circuit judge, of his own motion, and for cause satisfactory to himself, excused two of the jurors, one of whom lived at a considerable distance from the court-house. It does not appear that there was any challenge of the array, nor was there any objection made until after the verdict in this case was rendered. So that even if these jurors were improperly excused, the objection could not avail the defendant, unless it appeared that he was injured thereby. Gen. Stat., ch. CXI., § 29, p. 523; State v. Stephens, 11 S. C. 319.

In this case there is nothing to show that the defendant's rights were impaired or in any way interfered with by the discharge of these two jurors. It does not appear that his right of peremptory challenge, which, it must be remembered, is a right to reject and not a right to select jurors, (State v. Wise & Johnson, 7 Rich. 412,) was in any way abridged, and we are at a loss to conceive how the discharge of these jurors, even if it had been illegal or irregular, could operate to the prejudice of any of the rights of the defendant. We are unable to appreciate the force of the argument urged here, that the discharge of a juror who lived at a considerable distance from the court-house, and the substitution of one drawn "from the vicinity in which the hom*icide was committed, where the prejudice would naturally be strongest against defendant," was necessarily injurious to him. We have always supposed that one of the peculiar merits of our system of trial by jury, is that the jurors were of the vicinage, and Blackstone, in 3 Com. 379, speaks of the right of a person accused of crime to be tried by his neighbors and equals as a "transcendent privilege." But even if there was any force in this argument, the defendant could, by the exercise of his right of peremptory challenge, have excluded every one of those who were drawn from the immediate vicinity where the homicide was committed, to supply the deficiency in the original panel, and, as it does not appear that his peremptory challenges were exhausted, the objection taken cannot avail the defendant. State v. Price, 10 Rich. 351; State v. McQuaige, 5 S. C. 429.

*412

But we are by no means satisfied that any error was committed in discharging the two jurors. The Circuit judge undoubtedly had the right to excuse jurors for good and sufficient cause, and certainly in the absence of any proof to the contrary, we would assume that the judge in this instance had complied with the law by requiring the affidavits provided for by the statute. We are satisfied, therefore, that there was no error in refusing the motion in arrest of judgment.

The first ground on which the motion for a new trial is based, is that, under the circumstances of the case, the dying declarations of the deceased should not have been admitted in evidence. It seems that the first witness offered by the state to prove the dying declarations, one W. H. Bartless, testified as follows: "Was with Connolly [the deceased] some time before, and continued with him to the time of his death; deceased was rapidly sinking; I said to him: 'You are going to die, and if you have anything to say you had better say it.' He then said: 'If I die,'" at which point he was stopped, and objection was made that the form of expression used indicated that the deceased had not then lost hope, and, therefore, the declarations were incompetent; and the objection was sustained. Subsequently another witness, J. Q. Connolly, a brother of the deceased, was offered by the state for the same purpose, who testified as follows: "Was with deceased at the time of his death; he was very low; asked for *his wife; was told that she was sent for; replied: 'Lord, I'll never see her—I am going to die.' W. H. Bartless was also there. I said to deceased: 'Who cut you?' He said: 'Gouthe held me and Gill cut me.' Deceased was conscious of his approaching death; asked for a preacher to pray for him; took my hand; told me good-bye and died a few minutes afterwards. W. H. Bartless was present at the time; I am brother to the deceased."

*413

The rule as to the admissibility of dying declarations is, that two things must be made to appear before the declarations can be admitted. First. That the death of the declarant was imminent. Second. That he was so fully aware of this as to be without any hope of life. State v. Quick, 15 Rich. 349; State v. McEvoy, 9 S. C. 212.

It is very clear that the testimony of J. Q. Connolly, if believed by the judge before whom the case was tried, was amply sufficient to establish both of these propositions, and whether it should be believed was a question for the Circuit judge alone, so far as the competency of the declarations was concerned. It is argued, however, that the testimony of J. Q. Connolly should not have been regarded as sufficient to warrant the admission of the dying declarations, because, as it is contended, he was contradicted by the other witness offered by the state. Even were this so, we do not see how we could impute error to the Circuit judge in holding the testimony of Connolly sufficient proof of the preliminary facts necessary to the admissibility of the declarations. But we are unable to perceive any necessary conflict between the two witnesses. They might have been, and probably were, speaking of two different conversations, or, at least, of two different parts of the same conversation. Bartless, manifestly, was speaking of a conversation between himself and the deceased, while Connolly was speaking of a conversation which he had with deceased. Bartless was with the deceased some time before his death, and at what particular time the conversation he was proceeding to narrate took place, does not appear, while the conversation testified to by Connolly was only a few minutes before the death of the deceased. It is true that Bartless was present when the conversation testified to by Connolly took place, but he *does not say that no such language was used, or that he did not hear deceased say what was testified to by Connolly: and it may be that if Bartless had been permitted to proceed with his testimony, he would have testified as Connolly did as to what deceased said a few minutes before his death. Be that as it may, however, it is very certain that the Circuit judge had before him testimony amply sufficient to establish the facts necessary to be proved, in order to render the dying declarations competent evidence, and we see no error in admitting them.

*414

The next ground is, that there was error in admitting parol testimony, showing the dying declarations of the deceased, without first requiring proof that there was no opportunity to reduce the same to writing at the time they were made. We are not aware of any authority for the proposition upon which this ground is based, and none has been cited to us. Indeed, from the fact that this ground was not urged in the argument here, we presume that the counsel have felt themselves unable to sustain it; and we know of no law which requires that dying declarations should be reduced to writing before they can be received in evidence, where there is opportunity to do so at the time they are made.

The last ground upon which the motion for a new trial is based is stated in the following language: "It is respectfully submitted that when the jury having returned into court and asked instructions of the presiding judge 'if they [the jury] could, upon conviction, recommend the defendant to mercy,' his Honor erred in this, that, though he instructed them that they could so bring in a verdict, he omitted to instruct them that such recommendation would, in no way, affect the sentence." It appears from the "case" as submitted here, that after the jury charged with this case had retired to their room they returned into court and asked the judge "if they [the jury] could add to their verdict a recommendation of the defendant to mercy." They were told that they might do so, but they were not informed that such a recommendation "would in no wise alter the sentence of the law or mitigate the punishment." The verdict, as rendered, was in the following form: "Guilty, and recommended to mercy."

It will be observed that the judge was simply asked whether *the jury could recommend the prisoner to mercy in case they convicted him, and not what would be the consequence or effect of such a recommendation. If, therefore, the judge, instead of simply answering the question put to him by the jury, had volunteered a statement of the consequences which would or would not follow from such a recommendation, we think there would have been more reason for complaint. The province of the jury was simply to pass upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, and they had nothing whatever to do with the consequences flowing from their verdict; and if the judge had undertaken to explain to them what would be the effect of their finding, his conduct might have exposed him to the charge of endeavoring improperly to influence the minds of the jurors. But when, in response to their inquiry, he simply informed them that they could do that which it has been the long-established practice for juries to do—a practice extending back as far as our earliest reported cases, (State v. Frink, 1 Bay 168)—we cannot say that there was any error in so doing. After most diligent search, we have been unable to find any authority condemning this practice, and, on the contrary, in the case of State v. Frink, supra, the practice was not only sanctioned but was allowed to operate to the benefit of the prisoner by securing a postponement of the execution of the sentence until an opportunity could be had for applying for executive clemency. So, also, we find that in case of State v. O'Brian, 22 La. An. 27, it was held that the addition to a verdict of a recommendation to mercy did not vitiate the verdict.

*415

It is argued here that there was error in informing the jury that they might add to their verdict a recommendation to mercy, because the fact that they made such an inquiry indicated that there were some on the jury who would not consent to a verdict of guilty upon any other terms. This argument rests wholly on conjecture, and one which we could not for a moment entertain, because, without the shadow of evidence to support it, such a conjecture necessarily involves the gravest imputations upon the jury. Their business was to try the issue presented to them, and if they were satisfied, from the evidence, of the prisoner's *guilt, it was their duty to say so, no matter what might be the consequences. If, on the other hand, they were not satisfied of his guilt, it was equally their duty to say so; and to suppose that any juror who doubted as to the guilt of the prisoner could be induced to unite in a verdict which his judgment did not approve, would be to suppose that such juror was willing to violate his oath, and that, too, in a case involving the gravest consequences. Such a supposition we do not feel at liberty to make in the absence of any evidence to sustain it. On the contrary, we think that the more reasonable supposition, and one which involves no imputation whatever upon the jury, is, that the jury being all satisfied of the guilt of the prisoner, saw some extenuating circumstances in the case which induced a desire to recommend the prisoner to mercy, in the hope that it would have some weight with that department of the government to which such appeals are properly addressed, and only desired to know whether they would be permitted by the court to add such a recommendation to their verdict. We see no error, therefore, in the answer which the Circuit judge made to the question propounded by the jury, and, on the contrary, think, if he had answered otherwise, he would have deprived the defendant of a benefit secured to him by a long and well-established practice which we nowhere find condemned, but, on the contrary, sanctioned, and which, in this case, may, as it has in others, prove to be of inestimable value.†

*416

The Tennessee cases cited in the argument for appellant (State v. Crawford, 2 Yerg. 60, and Cochran v. State, 7 Humph. 544,) do not apply, for in each of those cases there was evidence submitted showing that one of the jurors was not satisfied of the guilt of the prisoner, and only consented to the verdict because he believed that the recommendation to mercy would secure the pardon of the prisoner. Here, however, there is no such evidence, and in the absence of such evidence it would be a most unwarrantable assumption on our part to presume that any one of the *jurors in this case had perjured himself by agreeing to a verdict which he did not believe was sustained by the testimony.

*417

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

† The sentence of the prisoner, in this case, has been commuted by the governor to imprisonment at hard labor in the state penitentiary for life.—REPORTER.

14 S. C. 417

(Case No. 962.)

STATE, ex relatione HAMER v. STACKHOUSE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Constitutional Law ⇦60, 278.]

The act of February 15th, 1872, (15 Stat. 42), which empowers a landowner to secure a right of way over the lands of another, violates none of the provisions of the constitution of this state.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ex parte Bacot, 36 S. C. 134, 15 S. E. 204, 16 L. R. A. 586; Beaudrot v. Murphy, 53 S. C. 120, 30 S. E. 825; Gilmer v. Hunnicutt, 57 S. C. 171, 35 S. E. 521.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 89, 908; Dec. Dig. ⇦60, 278.]

[2. Private Roads ⇦2.]

This act, in authorizing a road or highway to the nearest highway, was intended to secure to parties a way of ingress and egress, by whatever name called, to the nearest highway, and does not confine the referees to a location upon the nearest line to the highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Private Roads, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. ⇦2.]

[3. Eminent Domain ⇦19; Private Roads ⇦2.]

This act is of force throughout the state, as well within the limits of incorporated cities and towns as elsewhere, except where acts of incorporation, by express words or by necessary implication, exclude it. There is no such exclusion in the charter of Little Rock, Marion county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. ⇦19; Private Roads, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. ⇦2.]

[4. Estoppel ⇦27; Private Roads ⇦2.]

Where one opens a road over his own land, from the back part to the highway, and afterwards, by deeds without reservation of a right of way, conveys the intervening lots to others, who close up this road, he is not estopped from demanding that a road be opened to him over those lots under the act of 1872.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 63; Dec. Dig. ⇦27; Private Roads, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. ⇦2.]

[5. Prohibition ⇦5.]

Prohibition is the proper remedy for keeping referees appointed under this act within the limits of their jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. ⇦5.]

[6. Prohibition ⇦13.]

But prohibition is preventive only, and, therefore, after the road has been opened and this quasi court dissolved, redress cannot be obtained under this remedy.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Spencer v. Mahon, 75 S. C. 236, 55 S. E. 321.

For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 62; Dec. Dig. ⇦13.]

[7. Highways ⇦50.]

[Cited in State v. Kendall, 54 S. C. 195, 32 S. E. 300, to the point that persons laying out a highway under the provisions of the statute constitute a quasi court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 151–154, 169–172; Dec. Dig. ⇦50.]

[This case is also cited in State ex rel. Gibbes v. Kirkland, 41 S. C. 35, 19 S. E. 215, as to the object of writs of prohibition.]

Before Hudson, J., Marion, April, 1880.

Application for a writ of prohibition upon the relation of R. P. Hamer against E. T. Stackhouse, R. Murchison, A. Schafer, referees, and D. W. McLaurin and R. R. Hays, restraining the defendants from proceeding further in the matter of establishing *a road from the lands of McLaurin and Hays over land belonging to the relator. This road was established by the referees named, under their hands and seals, March 19th, 1880; notice of the application for this writ was dated March 20th; and the hearing was had by the Circuit judge April 10th.

*418

For a few years prior to 1877, McLaurin owned a lot of land in the town of Little Rock, in Marion county. About the same time the wife of McLaurin purchased from Hamer another lot of land adjoining and took titles. Her husband assumed control of this lot also, and laid out a road from the back part of his own lot across other parts of his lot and on the edge of the lot of his wife, to the public highway leading through Little Rock to Marion C. H. In 1877, McLaurin sold to Hays a part of the back of his lot, and to Mrs. Sternberger the front part of his lot. In 1878, Mrs. McLaurin having failed to pay for her purchase, reconveyed to Hamer. In neither the deed to Sternberger nor in the deed to Hamer was there any reservation of a right of way over this road; and the land so conveyed intervened between the land retained by McLaurin and the land sold to Hays on the one part, and the highway on the other part, along the line of this road.

Sternberger and Hamer afterwards moved their fences so as to obstruct this road. McLaurin and Hays, in February, 1880, gave the necessary notice under the act of February 15th, 1872, of their intention to establish a right of way over the lands of Sternberger and Hamer, one or both, to the highway. Hamer protested and declined to name a referee, whereupon the referee named by McLaurin and Hays, and the referee named by Sternberger, selected a referee for Hamer; and these three referees made their report, whereby they established a road just where the former road had been, and awarded the damages. In their report they state that the road was not located by the most direct line to the highway, and gave their reasons for the location selected.

The order of the Circuit judge is as follows:

D. W. McLaurin, a citizen and resident of the town of Little Rock, in the county of Marion, is the owner of a parcel or lot of *land in the said town without a right of way thereto, or mode of ingress and egress to any public road or highway.

*419

To obtain this communication with the highway, he applied to the persons whose lots shut him out from the main street for permission to open a street of sufficient width from the public road or main street to his lot. This consent he failed to obtain from Mr. R. P. Hamer, one of the owners of intervening land. Whereupon he proceeded, under act of February 15th, 1872, to have the said street laid out by a board of referees, whose action is set forth in a report or finding accompanying these proceedings, with a plat of the road, street or highway which they have given to D. W. McLaurin over the lands of R. P. Hamer and others. In order to prevent the accomplishment of this matter, R. P. Hamer, the only dissenting landowner, applies for this writ of prohibition against D. W. McLaurin and the said board of referees.

The town of Little Rock was incorporated March 9th, 1872. 15 Stat. 130. In that act no power is given to the town council to open a street except by consent of the owner of the land through which it runs; and unless relief can be had under the act of February 15th, 1872 (15 Stat. 42), D. W. McLaurin is without the means to obtain access to the public road from his lot by any existing law. The sole question presented by the record, which it is necessary to determine, in my opinion, is whether the act of February 15th, 1872, is in operation within the limits of an incorporated town. It is to be observed that the power conferred by that act upon referees is not conferred upon any of the authorities of the town of Little Rock; but by the tenth section thereof all similar or like power is denied to them; and if the act of February 15th, 1872, cannot be enforced within the limits of that town, its citizens are in a worse plight in this regard than those without the corporate limits, in the event of being without access to a public highway.

The act in question is general, and, in our judgment, is of force in every part of the state, as well within as without the limits of incorporated towns, unless the act of incorporation, by express words or by necessary implication, excludes it. It was a general law before Little Rock was incorporated, and we find *nothing in the act of incorporation which expressly or by implication excludes its operation within the town.

*420

We therefore adjudge the referees aforesaid have jurisdiction of the subject matter of this action sought to be prohibited, and that, having jurisdiction thereof, they have not exceeded it in their findings and proceedings. We deem it useless to notice other points raised in the application for the writ and in the argument of counsel.

It is adjudged that the petitions or suggestions in prohibition be dismissed with costs, and the writ is denied.

The relator appealed upon the following grounds:

1. Because his Honor, J. H. Hudson, erred in holding that the referees have jurisdiction of the subject matter of their action sought to be prohibited herein.

2. Because his Honor, J. H. Hudson, erred in holding that the act of the legislature of February 15th, 1872, is of force throughout the state as well within the limits of incorporated cities and towns, as elsewhere, except where acts of incorporation, by express words or by necessary implication, exclude it, and that it is neither excluded by express words nor by necessary implication by the act of incorporation of the village of Little Rock, S. C.

3. Because his Honor, J. H. Hudson, erred in holding that said referees having jurisdiction in the premises, did not exceed their jurisdiction in their findings and proceedings.

4. Because his Honor erred in holding that it was useless to notice the point raised (which is hereby renewed) that said act of February 15th, 1872, is unconstitutional, null and void.

5. That his Honor erred in overruling the position that D. W. McLaurin could not lawfully demand a way or right of way over lands of others after having deliberately sold off the very lands without reservation.

Mr. J. M. Johnson, for appellant.

1st Ground of Appeal.—The act of February 15th, 1872, providing for referees, authorizes said referees to construct, first, a highway or road; and, second, to the nearest highway then *existing. "A highway is not a street, either technically or in common parlance." 12 Rich. 418; Dill. on Mun. Corp. 518. As the act provides for highway or roads, and not streets, the referees had no jurisdiction. The act provides that it shall be to the nearest highway. The relator set forth in his prayer that the right of way would not be to the nearest highway if opened through his land. The referees find the prayer true. Dill. on Mun. Corp., § 469, and authorities cited; Cooley on Const. Lim. 528, 541. Hence, the referees, not having complied with the only mode prescribed by the statute, their act is void.

*421

2d Exception.—General road acts do not apply to incorporated cities and towns, having special power to regulate and improve streets. 12 Rich. 407; 18 N. J. Eq. 305; 14 S. & R. 448. A general act in the nature of the act of February 15th, 1872, does not apply to the streets of a town, the charter of which confers on the corporation the authority to regulate streets and sidewalks, on the principle that the general legislation on a particular subject must give way to special legislation on the same subject. 33 N. J. L. 280; 16 Pick. 508; 1 Overton (Tenn.) 311. So that the power being placed in the intendant and wardens of Little Rock under the charter, (§ 10), by special legislation, the act of February 15th did not apply and the referees had no jurisdiction.

3d Exception.—The fourth section of the act defines the duties of the referees—first, to faithfully determine the location; and the first section defines the location to be "to the nearest highway then existing." The referees find, as a fact, in their report, "that to pass over the lands of the relator would lengthen the way to the public way," so, by their own finding, they have exceeded the power placed in them by the act, and, therefore, their act is void.

4th Exception.—The act of February 15th, 1872, authorizing three persons, styled "referees," to open highways, is unconstitutional, for the following reason, to wit: It contravenes Article I., Section 14 of the constitution. The law of the land in regard to taking private property for public purposes, rests upon the right of eminent domain; to put that right into active energy a power is lodged with the legislature by the people. The legislature holds the position of a trustee, burthened with the perform*ance of a specific trust. This trust cannot be delegated. Again, the right of eminent domain can only be brought into active energy where the public is to be benefited, and it was never meant to benefit one private individual at the expense of another. Cooley on Const. Lim. 530, 531.

*422

5th Exception.—D. W. McLaurin, the respondent, is estopped from demanding this right of way on the well-established rule of estoppel. The principle is that where a man has entered into a solemn engagement by deed, under his hand and seal, as to certain facts, he shall not be permitted to deny any matter which he has so asserted. D. W. McLaurin, in executing title to the relator, parted with all right, title and interest in and to said land. That in now demanding and obtaining this right of way or highway, D. W. McLaurin becomes possessed necessarily with an easement—which vests in him an interest in said highway—and this, under his deed to the relator, he is estopped from doing under all the principles laid down in the books.

Mr. C. A. Woods, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. The question which arises first in this case, is that presented in the fourth ground of appeal. It is this: Is the act of February 15th, 1872, under which these proceedings were instituted, constitutional? This should be considered first, because the decision of this question will determine whether or not it will be necessary for the court to proceed further.

If the act of 1872 is unconstitutional and void, then there is an end of this case. If, on the contrary, that act is constitutional and valid, then it will be necessary for the court to pass upon the other questions involved.

Section 14, Article I., of the constitution, provides that no person shall be despoiled of his property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

Section 23 of the same article provides that "private property shall not be taken or applied for public use, or for the use of corporations, or for private use, without the consent of the owner *or a just compensation being made therefor; provided, however, that laws may be made securing to persons or corporations the right of way over the lands of either persons or corporations and for works of internal improvement, the right to establish depots, stations, turnouts, &c., but a just compensation shall, in all cases, be first made to the owner." These two sections are in the same constitution and in the same article. They must be construed as parts of the same instrument, and to each must be given its legitimate effect and intent. It cannot be supposed that either was intended to be an unmeaning jargon; on the contrary, we must suppose that the framers of the constitution had a purpose in each.

*423

The first guarantees to every citizen the constitutional right to demand the judgment of his peers and the application of the laws of the land before he shall be despoiled of his property. It throws around the citizen the protection of the courts and of the law, and it ensures to him the right of trial by jury—that inestimable right for which so many sacrifices have been made by our ancestors, and which has long been regarded as the bulwark of our liberties. It is a descendant of Runnymede and Magna Charta, and will never be yielded without a struggle by any free people to whom it may be or has been secured. But while this is true in a general sense, yet this right, great as it is, has a legitimate boundary. No citizen, under any circumstances, should be made to forfeit or be despoiled of his property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land; yet every citizen should be willing, under proper conditions, under proper laws and upon just compensation, to surrender his property when demanded by public necessities or the welfare of society. It is in this sense that the second section referred to above should be construed in connection with the first. They tend to the same end—the welfare of the people—and there is no conflict between them.

Hence the framers of the constitution, while recognizing the sanctity of the rights guaranteed in the first section, thought proper to make provision in the second, not only in the appropriation of private property for public use, but, in the matter of the right of way, private property even for private use; and to *this end, in the second section above, will be found an express grant of power to the legislature to secure, by proper laws, a right of way, both to corporations and to persons, over the lands of others, upon just compensation being first made to the owner of said lands. The act of February 15th, 1872, is a law of this kind. Its very end and purpose is to secure a right of way to parties walled in by the lands of others. It has no other object, and it provides the necessary machinery for ascertaining the just compensation required by the constitution in such cases.

*424

It does not say what law shall be enacted to ensure the enjoyment of the right intended to be secured, nor does it indicate any special provision or limitation which, in the opinion of the framers of the constitution, might be necessary; it simply delegates the power, in general terms, to make laws for that purpose, leaving the character and terms of the laws to the law-making power of the state, the only condition being that just compensation shall be first made to the owner of the property required to be sacrificed.

The act in question seems to have been passed in pursuance of the authority of this section, and we cannot understand how, when looked at in the light of that section, it can be regarded as unconstitutional, and, therefore, null and void.

Holding the act to be constitutional, it now becomes necessary to proceed to the consideration of the other questions presented in the grounds of appeal.

1. Did the presiding judge err in holding that the referees had jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action sought to be prohibited?

The act of February 15th, 1872, authorizes the referees to construct a highway or road to the nearest highway then existing; and the argument relied on here to show that the referees did not have jurisdiction is, first, that the way opened by them is neither a highway or a road; and, second, that it does not run to the nearest highway.

In a strict technical sense, it may be that the way opened is not a highway or a public road; but this is clearly not the character of the wrongs intended to be provided for in this act. The purpose of this act is to open to parties, otherwise cut off, a way *of ingress and egress to and from their lands to the nearest public highway, and the terms used in the act must be construed under the control of that object; and whether it be called a highway or a road—in that the end intended is accomplished—the act is satisfied.

*425

The construction contended for by the appellant is too strict and narrow, and, if enforced, would negative the act entirely and leave it a dead letter on the statute book. Parties never, or seldom, desire a highway or public road, in the ordinary sense, leading from their private premises to the nearest highway, and this act was not passed to accomplish any such purpose. The appellant, too, has failed to apprehend the true intent of the act as to the second point. The act does not say that the road must be opened on the nearest line to the highway, but to the nearest highway; leaving it to the referees to determine the exact route. This seems to have been done in this case, and it does not appear that the referees transcended their jurisdiction in this respect.

"The presiding judge held that the act is of force throughout the state, as well within the limits of incorporated cities and towns as elsewhere, except where acts of incorporation, by express words or by necessary implication, exclude it," and that it is neither excluded by express words or by necessary implication by the charter of the village of Little Rock; and this ruling is made the subject of the third ground of appeal. We see no error in the presiding judge in this respect.

The act is a general and public act, and it is limited to no special locality, and it necessarily applies to the whole state, including towns and cities, unless excluded by express words or by necessary implication in the act of incorporation of some town or city. No such express words or necessary implication are found in the act incorporating the village of Little Rock.

This act was passed to meet a necessity which is left unprovided for both in the powers of the county commissioners and the municipal authorities of Little Rock. The county commissioners are confined in their jurisdiction to the public roads and highways of the county, and the municipal authorities of Little Rock to the public roads and streets of the village.

This is a contest in reference to a special private way provided *for in this act of 1872, in which the public has no interest whatever, and which is altogether beyond and outside of the jurisdiction of either of the agencies above referred to. Such being the fact, the judge was right in his ruling objected to in the second ground of appeal.

*426

We can see no error in that part of the judge's order in which he ruled that the referees had not exceeded their jurisdiction in their findings and proceedings, as contradistinguished from the subject matter.

There appears nothing in their mode of proceeding contrary to law or the act under which they were acting; nor can we say that the judge erred in declining to overrule and reverse their finding.

In the fifth ground of appeal it is stated that McLaurin deliberately cut himself off from the nearest highway by selling to other parties intervening lots, without reservation, and upon that ground the presiding judge should have held that he could not claim this right of way over the lands of Hamer. If the facts sustained this position there might be reason to consider this exception, but the record shows a different state of facts. It is stated in the record, or rather in the uncontradicted affidavit of McLaurin, that McLaurin, at one time, had control of all the lots and lands embraced in this contest; that, while thus in control, he opened the precise way which has been opened by the referees, and that this way was in existence when he sold off the lots to Hays and Mrs. Sternberger, and so continued until he sold to Hamer afterwards, when it was closed up by Hamer and Mrs. Sternberger moving in their fences. It is true that McLaurin made no reservation, in his different deeds, of this road, but he sold the lands with this road established and in his use, and it can hardly be supposed that he intended to yield this right of way—the only one he had—and that he deliberately cut himself off from the highway leading from Little Rock to Marion Court House. He no doubt supposed that this road, being already open and in use, would remain so.

This being so, we do not think this act precluded the referees from taking jurisdiction.

The question whether the referees, under this act, constitute *such a tribunal as would be subject to the restraining powers of prohibition when transcending their jurisdiction, has not been raised in the pleadings or argument. But in considering and passing upon the grounds of appeal, we have impliedly recognized the right of the appellant to apply for this mode of redress, and it may not be out of place to present our views on that subject. Originally, the writ of prohibition was understood to be a writ issuing out of some superior court, "directed to the judge and parties of an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of a suit upon a suggestion that either the cause originally or some collateral matter therein does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court." 3 Bl. Com. 112. But in practice this writ has subsequently gone beyond this limit, and it has not only been used to restrain inferior judicial tribunals within the orbit of their jurisdiction as to the subject matter conferred upon them, but it has also reached to their collateral proceedings when contrary to the common law or some statutory provision. Nor has it been confined entirely to inferior judicial tribunals, as seemed first to be intended; on the contrary, it has been extended to other public functionaries, officials and persons charged with the performance of a duty not wholly judicial, and not even very extensively or strongly marked with a judicial character. State v. Com'rs of Roads of Christ Church Parish, 1 Mills' Const. 55 [12 Am. Dec. 596]; State, ex rel. Mrs. Kohne, v. James Simons and B. C. Pressley, 2 Speers 761.

*427

The referees provided for under the act of 1872 are constituted a sort of court to hear and determine the question of right of way of one citizen over the lands of another, and its action is without appeal. And we have no hesitation in saying that prohibition, under the latitude above, is not only a peculiarly proper, but a necessary remedy to keep this quasi court within the boundary of its extraordinary powers: and, consequently, we have felt fully warranted in entertaining this appeal.

We might say further, as applicable to the facts of this case, that the writ of prohibition is a preventive remedy and not remedial. It comes too late after the mischief, if any has been done. *While the hand is uplifted it can arrest and prevent the blow, but, the blow once received, this writ is powerless to redress.

*428

It seems in this case, that, whether legally or not, the road in controversy is open, the court dissolved and the parties dispersed. Under this view, even though the appellant had the right and the law on his side, he could not obtain redress through this proceeding.

The order below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

14 S. C. 428

(Case No. 963.)

STATE v. DAVID.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Criminal Law ⇐951.]

One convicted of murder moved at the same term for a new trial, upon the ground of insufficiency of evidence, which motion was overruled, and sentence was passed. At a subsequent term, but before execution of the sentence, this defendant moved for a new trial upon affidavits of after-discovered evidence, which motion was refused, upon the ground that there was no power to grant it. Held, that the Circuit Court did possess this power, but that it should be exercised with great caution.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Altee v. South Carolina Ry. Co., 21 S. C. 559; State v. Price, 35 S. C. 278, 14 S. E. 490; State v. Don Carlos, 38 S. C. 227, 16 S. E. 832; Turner's Motion, 39 S. C. 416, 17 S. E. 888; State v. Turner, 39 S. C. 424, 17 S. E. 885; State v. Rhodes, 44 S. C. 331, 21 S. E. 807, 22 S. E. 306; State v. Johnson, 45 S. C. 491, 23 S. E. 619; Jones & Williams v. Fitzpatrick, 47 S. C. 58, 24 S. E. 1030; Varn v. Green, 50 S. C. 405, 27 S. E. 862; Brown v. Carolina Midland Ry., 67 S. C. 490, 46 S. E. 283, 100 Am. St. Rep. 756; Reed v. Southern Ry., 75 S. C. 172, 55 S. E. 218; Mills v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R., 87 S. C. 157, 69 S. E. 97, 99; State v. Bradford, 87 S. C. 549, 70 S. E. 308; State v. Jones, 89 S. C. 53, 71 S. E. 291, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1298; State v. Bethune, 93 S. C. 202, 75 S. E. 281; Miller v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 95 S. C. 475, 79 S. E. 645.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2352; Dec. Dig. ⇐951.]

[2. Criminal Law ⇐1132.]

Appellant having waived the right to be present in this court at the hearing of his appeal—Held, that his presence was not necessary.†

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Jefcoat, 20 S. C. 386; State v. Williams, 40 S. C. 379, 19 S. E. 5.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2982; Dec. Dig. ⇐1132.]

[3. New Trial ⇐1.]

[Cited in State v. Nance, 25 S. C. 174; Southern Power Co. v. White, 92 S. C. 221, 75 S. E. 459, to the point that the power to grant new trials is denied to the Supreme Court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 1–3; Dec. Dig. ⇐1.]

[4. New Trial ⇐1.]

[Cited in State v. Turner, 39 S. C. 423, 17 S. E. 885; Southern Power Co. v. White, 92 S. C. 222, 75 S. E. 459, to the point that the power to grant new trials in cases tried by the circuit courts was one of their inherent powers.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 1–3; Dec. Dig. ⇐1.]

[This case is also cited in Sams v. Hoover, 33 S. C. 403, 12 S. E. 8; State v. Chavis, 34 S. C. 135, 13 S. E. 317, as to when circuit court may entertain motions for new trial; in Boyd v. Munro, 32 S. C. 252, 10 S. E. 963; Sams v. Hoover, 33 S. C. 404, 12 S. E. 8, as to appeals from denial of motions for new trial; in Durant v. Philpot, 16 S. C. 126; Ex parte Carolina Nat. Bank, 56 S. C. 20, 33 S. E. 781, as to procedure for vacating judgments; and in City Council of Anderson v. O'Donnell, 29 S. C. 365, 7 S. E. 523, 1 L. R. A. 632, 13 Am. St. Rep. 728, without specific application.]

Before Mackey, J., Abbeville, October, 1880.

At the request of the defendant's counsel, this court heard this appeal in the absence of the prisoner. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. C. Benet, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Cothran, contra.

*429

*January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. The appellant, Jeff David, at a special term of the Court of General Sessions for Abbeville county, April, 1878, stood charged with murder. He was tried and found guilty. Before sentence his counsel made a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. The motion was refused and the appellant was sentenced to be hanged on May 17th, 1878.

The execution of this sentence has been stayed by executive clemency until now; the last respite fixes the day of execution upon March 18th, 1881.

In October, 1880, a motion was made before Judge Mackey, in General Sessions, at Abbeville, for a renewal and rehearing of the motion for a new trial, Judge Mackey having presided at the session of the court when appellant was convicted. This last motion was made on the ground of after-discovered evidence. Upon the hearing of this motion Judge Mackey passed the following order:

† See State v. Gill, ante p. 410.

"A motion for a new trial in the above case having been made before me by the defendant, on the ground of after-discovered evidence, and argument of defendant's counsel and of the solicitor for the state having been heard thereon:

"It is ordered, that although on the strength of the affidavits of after-discovered evidence submitted by defendant's counsel, I should grant the motion for a new trial if I had the power to do so, the motion is hereby refused, because I conceive that I have not the power to grant it in the case stated.

(Signed) "T. J. Mackey,
"Presiding Judge.

"October 20th, 1880."

The defendant, by his attorney, Mr. W. C. Benet, appealed on the ground that the Circuit judge erred as to a matter of law in holding that he had no power to grant a new trial in the case stated; at the same time stating in his order that if he had the power, upon the affidavits submitted, he would grant the motion.

The only question raised in the appeal is this: Was there *error of law on the part of the Circuit judge in holding that he had no power to grant the motion? Whether the affidavits submitted by the appellant, on his motion, were sufficient to call for the exercise of this power is not involved here, nor could it be reviewed if it were; but the question is, admitting that these affidavits were sufficient for this purpose, had the power of the judge been exhausted in his refusal of the first motion at the trial, and from which there had been no appeal?

*430

Formerly, in this state, the Circuit judges had no power to hear motions for new trials. These motions were made before the Appeal Court, which court alone was invested with this power. Since the adoption of the present constitution, however, the grant of power therein to the present Supreme Court does not embrace the hearing of such motions. The power to hear motions for new trial is, in its nature, an appellate power, and appellate jurisdiction is expressly denied to the Supreme Court by the constitution, except as to cases in chancery. State v. Bailey, 1 S. C. 1.

While this is true as to the Supreme Court of this state, yet the Circuit Courts are invested with full powers on this subject. It belongs to these courts as an incident to their original jurisdiction, and, besides, by act of general assembly, (14 Stat. 136), it is expressly declared "that Circuit Courts shall have power to grant new trials in all cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in courts of law of the United States."

The act of 1869 (Gen. Stat. 497), which prescribes the mode for vacating erroneous judgments and the time within which motions may be made for this purpose, has no application to criminal cases; it is confined in its terms to judgments and decrees rendered by the Court of Common Pleas.

Before the amalgamation of the two courts of law and equity in this state each of these courts had power under certain circumstances to set aside judgments and decrees and to grant trials de novo; not strictly by motion for new trials, but upon other principles in the nature of a bill of review and rehearing for after-discovered testimony. The mode of procedure in these courts being different after the adoption of the constitution of *1868, all the power of the two courts was, by that constitution, vested in the Court of Common Pleas, and the act of 1869, supra, seems to have been passed to provide a uniform mode of procedure in such cases, so that now, since that act, erroneous judgments and decrees, which formerly had to be assailed according to the forms in use in the respective courts, may be vacated on motion in the Circuit Courts under the provisions of the act of 1869, provided that the motion is made within two years after the rendition of the judgment assailed; but this act, as has already been stated, has no application to criminal cases. The power of the Circuit Courts to grant new trials in criminal cases comes directly from the act of 1868, supra, and also as an incident to its original powers. State v. Bailey, supra.

*431

The Circuit judge, in this case, gives no reason in his order why, in his judgment, he was without power in the premises. The only facts which distinguished this case from others where motions for new trials have been heard and granted are, first, this is a second motion after the refusal of the first; and, second, this is made after sentence.

Generally motions for a new trial must be made upon the minutes of the court and before the adjournment of the court at which the trial was had, or before sentence or judgment, or upon a case made up and settled by the judge who tried the case, and, when once thus heard, it is final. The order in such case cannot afterwards be reviewed either by the judge himself, who heard it, or by another judge. These motions, however, are made upon matters growing out of the trial, and as to facts occurring at the trial, and, when once passed upon, the action of the court is conclusive, unless an error of law is involved, giving a right of appeal to this court.

But in the courts of law of the United States a party may, under certain circumstances, become entitled to a new trial on account of newly-discovered testimony; the ground being that the facts upon which he now relies are external to those which transpired at the trial.

Can this appellant be cut off, then, from the opportunity of availing himself of this testimony because, at the time of his conviction, he moved for a new trial on the then existing facts, *and, failing in that, sentence had been pronounced against him? If this be so, the right of a new trial on the ground of after-discovered testimony is a delusion and a snare. It is a promise to the ear, but broken to the hope. If this be so, the only possible case in which such testimony could be made available would be where the party had waived his motion at the trial.

*432

The right to a new trial on newly-discovered testimony, when sufficient, is as fully settled and guaranteed by the law as any other, and this right cannot be lost because a new trial had once been refused upon facts wholly different from and not involving this newly-discovered testimony.

It is true, as a general rule, such applications come too late if made after judgment, but it is within the discretionary power of the court still to hear, even after judgment entered, and even after the judgment has been affirmed on appeal. McMicken v. Webb, 6 How. 293 [12 L. Ed. 443]. If this is so in civil cases, how much more important is it in criminal cases, involving liberty and life. There can be no doubt that motions of this sort should be received with the utmost caution, because, as it is said by a learned judge, there are but few cases tried in which something new may not be hunted up, and also because it tends to perjury; and, as was said in the case of State v. Harding, 2 Bay 268, it would have a mischievous tendency after all the evidence on the part of the state had been fully disclosed to allow one with his life in danger an opportunity, by the assistance of confederates, to procure unprincipled witnesses to contradict the evidence on the part of the state, and thereby defeat the ends of justice; but this case does not involve the discussion of the facts and principles which should control the court on motions of this kind.

The only question involved is the existence of this power; if it exists, no doubt it will be exercised wisely and discreetly. Our judgment in this case may be of no practical benefit to the appellant, but the case has come up in the regular channel of appeal, and it has become our duty to decide the questions of law involved. It is our opinion that the Circuit Court has discretionary power to hear and determine motions of the kind made in this case, and, therefore, that the Circuit judge was in *error when he refused the motion on the ground of the want of legal power: and it is so adjudged.

*433

At the hearing of this case, the appellant being absent, the question was raised whether his presence was necessary; the court ruled that the hearing might proceed without the presence of the prisoner. As this is a departure from the practice heretofore obtaining in this state, although not embraced in the appeal, it may not be improper for the court to state briefly the grounds of this ruling. The practice of having the prisoner in cases of felony present in the appellate court was because of the ancient practice and precedents in the English courts. This practice grew up in England because a person indicted for felony could not at common law appear by attorney or counsel. Therefore his presence was always required in every stage of the proceedings.

In the United States a different system prevails. In all criminal cases and in all the courts the accused is entitled to counsel. In this state he is entitled, by Article I., Sec. 13, of the constitution, to be fully heard in his defence by himself or by his counsel, or by both; and if he claimed the right to be present and be heard in his defence, he would be entitled to that privilege, but his personal presence is not necessary in this court as a condition precedent to the hearing of such questions as may be raised here by appeal.

In Commonwealth v. Castello, 121 Mass. 371, indictment for forgery, it was held that a defendant in a criminal case had no right to be personally present at the hearing of a motion on his behalf for a new trial, and his absence would not invalidate sentence subsequently passed upon him. See also 2 Dutcher 605, where the same doctrine in substance is held.

The court therefore deemed it unnecessary in this case for the prisoner to be personally present.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *434

*(Case No. 964.)

MOON v. JOHNSON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐103.]

In an action to recover the possession of real estate, an order refusing plaintiff leave to file a supplemental complaint, setting up a title deed to the land in question, is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 701; Dec. Dig. ⇐103.]

[2. Ejectment ⇐115.]

Plaintiff can recover only upon the cause of action existing when suit was commenced; and therefore in an action for the recovery of real property, he cannot, by supplemental complaint, set up a legal title acquired after suit brought. Bank v. Manufacturing Company, 3 Strob. 190 [49 Am. Dec. 640], recognized and followed.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in McCaslan v. Latimer, 17 S. C. 128; Johnson v. Johnson, 27 S. C. 313, 3 S. E. 606, 13 Am. St. Rep. 636; Anderson v. Pilgram, 30 S. C. 504, 9 S. E. 587, 4 L. R. A. 205, 14 Am. St. Rep. 917; Garlington v. Copeland, 32 S. C. 66, 10 S. E. 616; Correll v. Georgia Construction & Investment Co., 37 S. C. 449, 16 S. E. 156; Jacobs v. Gilreath, 41

S. C. 146, 19 S. E. 308, 310; Bank of Charleston v. Dowling, 45 S. C. 682, 23 S. E. 982; Martin v. Jennings, 52 S. C. 375, 29 S. E. 807; Cauthen v. Lancaster Cotton Oil Mills, 96 S. C. 345, 80 S. E. 615.

For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 373; Dec. Dig. ⟸115.]

[3. Pleading ⟸276.]

[Cited in Copeland v. Copeland, 60 S. C. 139, 140, 38 S. E. 269, to the point that the leave of the court is necessary to file a supplemental complaint.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 833, 835; Dec. Dig. ⟸276.]

Before Thomson, J., Greenville, April, 1880.

The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Garlington & Moore, for appellant.

Messrs. Earle, Wells & Westmoreland, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. This was an action by appellant to recover possession of real estate. The title deed set up by the appellant was a deed from the Probate judge in partition. After the cause was on the calendar the decision in Davenport v. Caldwell, 10 S. C. 317, was announced. The appellant then commenced proceedings in the Court of Common Pleas to confirm the partition of the Probate Court. Under these proceedings this partition was confirmed, and by order of the court the master executed titles to the appellant of the land in question. The respondent was not a party to the confirmation proceedings.

The appellant then made a motion to the Circuit Court for leave to file a supplemental complaint so as to set up the deed of the master.

This motion was refused by the Circuit judge "on the ground *that a cause of action, under a different deed, is set out in the alleged complaint, and the same relief sought as in the first complaint."

*435

The appellant appealed on the grounds:

1. Because the plaintiff was entitled to a supplemental complaint as a matter of course.

2. Because the code allows the plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint, alleging facts material to his case occurring after the former complaint, and of which he was ignorant at the time.

3. Because, under the code, the plaintiff is entitled to file a supplemental complaint to set up a judgment or decree of a court of competent jurisdiction rendered since the commencement of the action.

The leave of the court is necessary, in all cases, to file a supplemental complaint, and although this leave will be generally granted, yet it is by no means a matter of course order to which a party is entitled whenever he may choose to apply for it. On the contrary, the motion must be made in due time, in good faith, and upon facts warranting the favorable action of the court, and, when thus made, it rests in the discretion of the court whether it shall be refused or granted, and even after granted it may be withdrawn when proper. Whitaker's Pr. 213.

In this case the motion was refused. The respondent makes the point that an order granting or denying a supplemental complaint is within the discretion of the court, and therefore not appealable.

This is the first question involved, and we find it at the threshhold of the case. Under the code, Section 11, any intermediate judgment, order or decree, involving the merits of the action, is the subject of appeal. Does this order involve the merits of the action? The action is one to recover the possession of real estate. In the judgment of the appellant his recovery depends upon setting up the deed which he desires to bring before the court by means of the supplemental complaint. The order of the judge has denied him this privilege. This order, then, strikes at the very foundation of the appellant's action, and clearly involves its merits. Whitaker's Pr., vol. II., p. 216, § 193.

Mr. Whitaker says, "An order granting or refusing leave to *plead supplementarily, involves the merits and is appealable." Harrington v. Slade, 22 Barb. 161; St. John et al. v. Croel, 10 How. Pr. 253; Brown et al. v. Irish Presbyterian Congregation, 6 Bosw. 259.

*436

In the case of Edwards v. Edwards, ante p. 11, in this state, though the question was not directly involved, yet this court reviewed the order of the court below, allowing a supplemental complaint.

In our judgment the order in this case is appealable.

In the second and third grounds of appeal the appellant states correctly the facts and circumstances under which a party is generally entitled to a supplemental complaint; but we do not see that the Circuit judge, in refusing the appellant's motion, has violated any legal right of the appellant as claimed in these grounds. While in a supplemental complaint a party may allege facts material to his case, and of which he was ignorant at the commencement of his action, as stated in the second ground of appeal, and while, under certain circumstances, he may set up a judgment or decree of a competent jurisdiction, rendered since, as stated in the third ground, yet it is a well-settled rule of pleading that the matter of a supplemental complaint must be consistent with and in aid of the case made by the original pleadings, and that it cannot make a new and different case. Wait's Pr. 476. Nor can a suit, originally defective, be sustained or cured by means of a supplemental pleading. Whitaker, vol. II., p. 214; McCullough v. Colby, 4 Bosw.

603. In the case of McCullough v. Colby, the very point arose, and the court said "that facts accruing after suit brought cannot be inserted under any circumstances in the original complaint by way of amendment, nor by supplemental complaint when the original complaint failed to state a cause of action."

"No party," says the court, "can recover in an action which was commenced when the cause of action had not accrued." So, too, in the case of Bank of State of South Carolina v. S. C. Manufacturing Co., 3 Strob. 190 [49 Am. Dec. 640], which was an action, like this, to try titles, the court held that in an action to try titles, as well as in all other actions, the question always is, did the plaintiff have a cause of action when the suit was commenced? In this case the plaintiff had purchased land at sheriff's sale, and commenced *his action before he obtained the deed of the sheriff, but he received the deed after the commencement of the action. Upon these facts being developed, he was nonsuited, and the non-suit was sustained in the Appeal Court, that court deciding that whatever may have been the equity of the plaintiff, the title to the land was inchoate—it was executory—and that the legal estate could never pass until the deed was executed and delivered. Such a defect, it is well settled, cannot be cured by supplemental complaint. The case before the court is very similar to the one of Bank v. Manufacturing Company.

*437

At the commencement of the action it is admitted that the appellant had no legal title to the land. He claims to have obtained title since, and while his original action was still pending; and he seeks, by supplemental complaint, to set up this title in his original suit, and to recover upon that. According to the above authorities, this is a fruitless effort. He must stand or fall on the cause of action as it existed when he began his suit. His difficulty, therefore, is beyond the reach of a supplemenal complaint.

The order of the court below is affirmed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 437

(Case No. 965.)

CRENSHAW v. THACKSTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⇐427.]

A mortgaged his land to B, to secure a debt. A afterwards sold a part of this land to C, who agreed to pay the mortgage debt, and reserved enough of the purchase money for that purpose. C. sold to D, who made no promise to pay this debt, but had knowledge of the mortgage and also of the agreement between A and C. B being about to foreclose the mortgage, D paid it off, taking an assignment, and then assigned it to E. Held, that A was a necessary party to an action brought by E to foreclose this mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1280; Dec. Dig. ⇐427.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐280.]

The land in the possession of D is primarily liable for the payment of the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 737, 740–750, 757–760; Dec. Dig. ⇐280.]

*438

*Before Pressley, J., Pickens, October, 1879.

Action by S. D. Crenshaw against John S. Thackston and N. T. Wilson, commenced in August or September, 1879. The mortgage bears date February 8, 1876, and was given to secure the payment of a sealed note for $346.55, with ten per cent. interest, due January 1st, 1877. Sometime during the year 1876, Thackston sold to M. W. Ford one hundred acres of this land, for about $1400, of which Ford retained $378.25, to pay off the mortgage debt, under agreement to do so, and paid the balance, about $1000, in cash. In January, 1877, Ford sold to N. T. Wilson for $1000. The witnesses agree that Wilson did not agree to pay the mortgage debt, or to pay more than $1000 for the land. N. T. Wilson paid the debt and took an assignment of the mortgage, December 1st, 1877, and assigned the same to plaintiff, in trust for R. T. Wilson & Co., August 18th, 1879.

All other facts, and the findings of disputed facts, are stated in the Circuit decree, which is as follows:

In this case, plaintiff seeks the foreclosure of a mortgage held by him as assignee of N. T. Wilson. The defendant Thackston was the owner of two hundred and sixteen acres of land, which he mortgaged to R. Lenhardt, to secure payment of a note of $346.55. Subsequently, he sold one hundred acres of said land to M. W. Ford, who retained enough of the purchase money to pay the mortgage, and signed an agreement to pay the same. Afterwards, being in failing circumstances, he conveyed the land to defendant N. T. Wilson, in payment of a debt due to R. T. Wilson & Co. The weight of testimony leads me to the conclusion that N. T. Wilson then knew of the said mortgage, and that Ford was to pay it. He admits, in his own testimony, that at the time of this purchase, Ford told him that he owed that much on the purchase of the land from defendant Thackston, and this was sufficient notice to put him upon further inquiry in the matter. Subsequently, the two hundred and sixteen acres were advertised for sale by Lenhardt, to foreclose his mortgage, and Wilson, to prevent the sale, paid *the mortgage debt and took an assignment of the same, which he thereafter assigned to the plaintiff, in trust for R. T. Wilson & Co. On this state of facts, I decide that Ford's agreement with Thackston made the hundred acres, then sold to Ford, first liable for the said mortgage debt, and that by reason of sufficient notice, it remained so liable in the hands of Wilson. Plaintiff, as his assignee, is bound by the equities between him and Thackston, and they discharged the land of the latter from the lien of said mortgage when Wilson became the owner thereof, with liability to pay it out of his own land.

*439

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that, as to the defendant Thackston, the complaint be dismissed, with costs.

If plaintiff desires to press his case against the land of Wilson, leave is hereby granted him to move, in term time or at chambers, for a decree of foreclosure and order of sale in that respect.

The plaintiff and the defendant Wilson excepted to this decree and appealed to the Supreme Court, upon the following grounds:

1. Plaintiff and defendant Wilson except to so much of said decree as holds that the defendant Wilson's knowledge that Ford owed $346.55 to Thackston, as a part of the purchase money, was sufficient notice to put him upon further inquiry in this matter; this plaintiff and defendant Wilson taking the position that the agreement between Ford and Thackston was a mere personal covenant between them, and not a covenant running with the land, there being no mention made in the deed from Thackston to Ford of the same.

2. Plaintiff and defendant Wilson except to said decree upon the further ground that, even if Wilson had knowledge, at the time of his purchase of the one hundred acres of the land, there was an agreement between Thackston and Ford that the latter was to pay the Lenhardt mortgage, it was a mere personal confidence reposed in Ford by Thackston, and Ford says was not assumed in any manner by Wilson, who paid to Ford $1000 for the land, alleged by all parties to have been the full value of the same.

*440

*3. Plaintiff and defendant Wilson further except to said decree upon the further ground that, if Wilson knew of the agreement between Thackston and Ford that Ford was to pay off the Lenhardt mortgage, but did not assume or agree to assume the same himself—and the testimony shows that he did not assume or agree to assume the said debt—then his afterwards becoming the owner of the mortgage on the two hundred and sixteen acres does not make his one hundred acres first liable to the payment of said mortgage debt, the deed from Ford to Wilson containing the covenant of warranty, which embraces all the five English covenants, the covenant of warranty was itself a covenant to pay the encumbrance, and consequently, Wilson or his one hundred acres of land is not first liable for the mortgage debt. The court, in Evans v. McLucas, 12 S. C. 56, say that "a parol contract in addition to this formal one would have been senseless and useless."

4. Plaintiff and defendant Wilson further except to said decree upon the ground that he, the plaintiff, being the assignee of the Lenhardt note and mortgage, stands in the shoes of Lenhardt, and is entitled to have all the land to stand as a security for his mortgage debt, and it was error in the Circuit judge to dismiss the complaint as to the defendant Thackston.

5. Plaintiff and defendant Wilson except further to said decree upon the ground that Thackston, by the terms of the note and mortgage now sued on, was liable to pay off the same; that he claims that Ford assumed this liability by special agreement; that Ford has not paid the same; that Wilson never promised to pay the said debt; has received no consideration from which the law would imply a promise or agreement to pay, and consequently, Thackston's one hundred and sixteen acres of land are first liable for the mortgage debt.

6. Because the decree is in other respects contrary to law.

Messrs. Cothran & Ansel, for appellants.

Mr. T. H. Cooke, contra.

January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

*441

*SIMPSON, C. J. The appeal in this case is from the decree of Judge Pressley above, and in this decree will be found a statement of all the facts material to the questions presented for our consideration.

We concur with the presiding judge as to the result, except so far as he dismissed the complaint as to the respondent, Thackston, with costs. If the appellant is a bona fide holder and owner of the mortgage debt, we think that Thackston was a proper party to these proceedings, and the appellant is entitled to hold him responsible until his note is satisfied out of some portion of the lands covered by the mortgage. The presiding judge may have believed that the assignment of the note and mortgage by Wilson to the appellant was pretensive and fraudulent, but he does not say so, and does not give that as his reason for dismissing the complaint as to Thackston, and we can find no sufficient warrant for this portion of his decree.

The basis of appellant's action is the note of Thackston and the mortgage which he executed, and in a suit on that note and for the foreclosure of this mortgage he, Thackston, was a necessary party, whatever may be the equities between him and the other defendant. But, as already stated, we concur with Judge Pressley in holding that portion of the mortgaged premises in the possession of the appellant, Wilson, primarily liable for this debt as between Wilson and Thackston.

In the case of Marsh v. Pike, 10 Paige 596, Marsh had mortgaged certain real estate in New York to Pike. Marsh afterwards conveyed the premises to another party, deducting the amount of the mortgage from the purchase money; the purchaser agreeing to pay off and discharge the mortgage.

Some time after this the grantee of Marsh conveyed to a third party, who also agreed with his grantor to pay off and satisfy the mortgage.

The court held that the effect of these several conveyances and agreements was, in equity, to place Marsh as a surety for the payment of the bond and mortgage, and to make the two purchasers the principal debtors—the first being primarily and the latter secondarily liable to him for the payment of the debt—and while he, Marsh, could not compel the mortgagee to pro*ceed for foreclosure against the subsequent purchasers in possession, yet, by having the mortgage assigned to him, he would be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee and could proceed himself against the land. This case, in its facts, is nearly on all fours with the case now under consideration. The only difference is that the record does not show that Wilson, when he purchased from Ford, agreed to satisfy the mortgage debt. He had knowledge, however, of this statement of Ford, and he knew that Ford, when he conveyed to him, Wilson, was in failing circumstances, and these facts will be found sufficient, we think, to bring Wilson under the operation of the doctrine announced in Marsh v. Pike, in accordance with the fundamental and well-established principles of equity—principles that commend themselves to every lover of justice and fair dealing between man and man.

*442

Thackston sold his land to Ford; leaving in the hands of Ford enough of the purchase money to pay off the mortgage which Ford solemnly agreed in writing to discharge. Ford, on approaching insolvency, sold to Wilson for the precise sum which Ford had paid in cash to Thackston—$1000—Wilson being fully informed of the mortgage and the agreement of Ford. Wilson then paid off the mortgage and had it assigned to himself, and instead of instituting proceedings thereon in his own name, as assignee, assigned it to the present appellant, who has brought the action.

All this may have been fair and bona fide, but it has the appearance of an arrangement to defeat Thackston of his just rights. Whether this be so or not, abstract justice is with him, and it is gratifying to know that there are well-established principles of equity which will protect him.

In the case of Massey v. McIlwain et al., 2 Hill's Eq. 421, the high, equitable doctrine that where one purchases property subject to the equity of another, with notice of this equity, he is bound by it, and holds the property subject to the equitable rights of the other, was recognized and enforced. The rule in equity, as was said in that case, being, that an agreement in writing to convey land in consideration of an adequate price will, in equity, bind the estate and prevail against any subsequent lien; *and, as was done in that case, will follow the land into the hands of any subsequent purchaser, with knowledge of the equity growing out of the agreement. In that case this doctrine was fully discussed by Chancellor Johnson, who delivered the opinion of the court, sustaining it by various authorities. And many other cases might be referred to, but the general principle is familiar, and has been long established.

*443

Now, in the case before this court, there can be no doubt that had Lenhardt, the original mortgagee, instituted proceedings to foreclose this mortgage against Thackston and Ford before Ford conveyed to Wilson, Thackston's equity arising under the agreement by Ford to pay off the mortgage and the bond which he had retained as part of the purchase money to pay would have entitled Thackston to claim that the mortgage of Lenhardt should be primarily foreclosed on that portion of the land which he had conveyed to Ford. And under the code, (Section 298,) which authorizes the court to adjust the rights between defendants, as well as enforce those of the plaintiff, the court would not have hesitated to afford him that relief.

Such being the fact, and Wilson, according to the finding of Judge Pressley, having bought, not only with a knowledge of the mortgage, but also of the express agreement of Ford, will not the equity of Thackston, as held in the cases referred to above, follow the land into the possession of Wilson? We think so, and it is so adjudged.

The decree of Judge Pressley is affirmed except as to the dismissal of the complaint as to Thackston, with costs. The mortgage should be foreclosed on the land in possession of Wilson first, and if that should fail to satisfy the debt, then the remainder should be paid from the land covered by the mortgage in the possession of Thackston, and the case is remanded for this purpose, should the plaintiff desire to proceed further.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

14 S. C. *444

*(Case No. 969.)

THE BANK OF CHARLESTON NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATION v. ZORN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Reported and Annotated in 37 Am. Rep. 733.]

[1. Motions ⇐19.]

A motion, made at the trial and without notice, to strike out a part of the answer, may be entertained by the Circuit judge, if the defendant does not object to the hearing of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. ⇐19.]

[2. Bills and Notes ⇐427.]

In an action by the endorsee of a promissory note against the maker, the Circuit judge properly refused to strike out a defence, which, in substance, was a plea of payment without notice of transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233–1244; Dec. Dig. ⇐427.]

[3. Witnesses ⇐255.]

A witness, to refresh his memory, may refer to an account current furnished him by his factor, if such examination enables him then to testify from his own recollection. The rules stated.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Collins, 15 S. C. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 697; State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 226, 7 S. E. 296; Fritz v. Burriss, 41 S. C. 153, 19 S. E. 304; Rose v. Winnsboro National Bank, 41 S. C. 193, 19 S. E. 487; Ragsdale v. Southern Ry., 72 S. C. 124, 51 S. E. 540; Franklin v. Atlanta & C. A. L. Ry. Co., 74 S. C. 337, 54 S. E. 578.

For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 888; Dec. Dig. ⇐255.]

[4. Trial ⇐199.]

In charging the jury that if they believed the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not demanding payment of the note at the office of W. & D. before their failure, and that plaintiff would have received the money if the note had been presented, and by their failure to do so the defendant lost his money, they should find for defendant, the Circuit judge did not leave to the jury the legal question of what was laches.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 520, 25 S. E. 797.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 467–470; Dec. Dig. ⇐199.]

[5. Bills and Notes ⇐394.]

The maker of a promissory note, which was payable to his factors at their office, placed there funds sufficient to meet the note at maturity, and afterwards, in settlement, was charged with the amount, and a balance in cash was paid to him, but the note was not produced or taken up. After the subsequent failure of the factors, the note was presented by an endorsee, who had received it before due for value. Held, that the maker was not responsible for the payment of the note, by reason of his failure to take up the note at the time of the settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1045; Dec. Dig. ⇐394.]

[6. Bills and Notes ⇐452.]

While it is not necessary, as a prerequisite to action brought, that such endorsee should have demanded payment on or after maturity, at the place designated, yet for any loss which the maker shows to have resulted from the failure to make such presentment and demand, the holder is responsible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1303, 1352–1364, 1367–1376; Dec. Dig. ⇐452.]

[This case is also cited in McNair v. Moore, 58 S. C. 435, 33 S. E. 491, 74 Am. St. Rep. 760, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Aldrich, J., Barnwell, February, 1880.

This action was commenced January 7th, 1878, and was upon a promissory note, made by J. B. Zorn, the defendant, on January 29th, 1876, for $157.51, and payable to the order of Wroton & Dowling, at their office, in Charleston, on October 1st, 1876, and endorsed before maturity to the Bank of Charleston Na*tional Banking Association, as collateral security to a note of Wroton & Dowling, given for money borrowed from plaintiff, the collaterals being in the proportion of about $2 for every $1 of the principal debt. The note of Wroton & Dowling was renewed several times after October 1st, 1876, the defendant's note, with other collaterals, remaining in the possession of the bank.

*445

The complaint was in the usual form, endorsee versus maker. A motion was made at the trial without previous notice, to strike out the first defence in the answer as irrelevant, which was overruled and the ruling excepted to. This defence was as follows:

Alleges for a first defence:

1. That Wroton & Dowling, the payees of the note mentioned in the complaint, were, at the time it was delivered, and from thence hitherto until their failure in business as hereinafter mentioned, factors and commission merchants, doing business in the city of Charleston, and the said note was given for advances made by them to this defendant.

2. That according to the regular course of dealing universally recognized and observed between factors and their country customers, such advances, even when secured by negotiable paper, were also accustomed to be met by shipments of cotton in the fall and winter following, to be sold by the factor on commission, the net proceeds to be applied to the customer's account of the current year.

3. That besides the sum expressed in the said note, other advances to a considerable amount were made to this defendant by said Wroton & Dowling during the year 1876, to meet which, this defendant, from time to time, during the fall of that year and up to January 18th, 1877, forwarded cotton to said firm, the net proceeds of which were applied to his credit on general account, and on the day last mentioned his entire indebtedness to said firm, including the sum for which said note was given, was fully paid and satisfied.

4. That plaintiff received the said note from Wroton & Dowling, together with a number of other notes of their country customers, as collateral security to a note of said firm, given to plaintiff for a loan of money. That the plaintiff well knew the *course of dealing hereinbefore referred to, had uniformly acquiesced in the same when such collaterals were delivered to it, and knew further that the note of this defendant came within the scope of said usage, and was in due course to be paid by proceeds of cotton to be forwarded as aforesaid.

*446

5. That this defendant never had notice, or even an intimation, that his said note was held by plaintiff, nor that payment direct to the plaintiff instead of the said Wroton & Dowling was expected or required until April, 1877, after said firm had failed in business and become insolvent.

The evidence showed that Wroton & Dowling were cotton factors and commission merchants in Charleston, and the defendant, a farmer, resident in Barnwell county, was one of their customers, the note in suit having been given for supplies of merchandise advanced defendant by them, the understanding being that it was to be met by the proceeds of cotton to be shipped to them by defendant for sale on commission, as was the general custom in Charleston between factors and their country customers. Defendant testified that he knew the note would be put in some bank by Wroton & Dowling as collateral to their own notes for loans. The custom between Wroton & Dowling and the bank (which was a general custom between factors and banks in Charleston), was that when a note was paid, Wroton & Dowling would call at the bank and take out the paid note, either paying to the bank the amount of their own note when due, or depositing other notes in the place of the collateral note. Plaintiff never demanded payment of the collateral note at the office of Wroton & Dowling. The collection and lifting of such notes was left invariably to the factor.

On January 18th, 1877, Zorn had a settlement with Wroton & Dowling, when they paid him a balance, as per account current, then delivered to him by them, in which the amount of the note in suit, as well as other indebtedness, was charged and deducted from the credits. Zorn, at this settlement, asked that the note be delivered to him, when Wroton said that it had been misplaced, but that he would get it and send it to him in a few days. The note was never sent, and Zorn made no further *inquiry about it. Wroton testified that if Zorn had insisted on it the note would have been procured for him, or its amount paid to him when the settlement was made. About six weeks after this settlement, Wroton & Dowling failed. They had become embarrassed in business by reason of the failure of their customers to forward cotton to meet their engagements in the fall of 1876, and in November suspended. The banks that held their paper, including the plaintiff, through its president, Mr. Johnson, agreed, after consultation together, that the firm should go on collecting, and apply proceeds of after-collections towards payment of their country customers, the $5000 then on hand to be distributed in paying the several banks pro rata. In February, 1877, $5000, proceeds of collections on hand at date of agreement, were so applied, the plaintiff receiving $1000, and delivering up, with its collaterals, another note of Wroton & Dowling held by plaintiff. The pro rata distribution thus made, pursuant to agreement, was without reference to the collaterals of country customers, from whom the collections were made. Wroton testifies that but for this arrangement to apply collections pro rata, without reference to the source of collection, the firm would have been able to take up the paid collaterals held by the banks. The note of Wroton & Dowling to the plaintiff, to which the note in suit was collateral, was renewed several times after their suspension in November; the collaterals, including the note in suit, remaining in pledge. Wroton & Dowling finally failed in February or March, 1877. Defendant never had any intimation of their embarrassment or suspension until March or April, 1877, after their failure; nor was he informed until then that the plaintiff held his note.

*447

There was a further arrangement or custom between plaintiff and Wroton & Dowling, that demand for payment at the office of the latter was waived, they agreeing to pay at the bank. But there was no proof that defendant was privy to such arrangement or was informed of it. He testified that he had no special understanding with Wroton & Dowling as to the manner of payment, other than the terms of the note indicated, and that he would meet it by forwarding cotton.

An account current between defendant and

*448

Wroton & Dow*ling was introduced to show that Zorn had in their hands, on October 1st, 1876, funds more than sufficient to pay the note, and that the note was charged in the account, and the amount thereof was never withdrawn by defendant. This account was objected to as not the best evidence, and the objection was sustained, but the witness was allowed to state that the account was received by him from Wroton & Dowling on January 18th, 1877, when they settled; that defendant then compared the bills of goods, memoranda and account sales of cotton sent to him at the times of the several transactions itemized in said account with the several items of the account, and found them to correspond, and the account to be correct in all particulars, and now testifies to its correctness, and that if, by the account, it appeared that he had sufficient funds in their hands on October 1st, it was correct. Witness was then allowed to refresh his memory by the account, and then to state that he had such funds there on the day named, and that he had not, since October 1st, 1876, withdrawn so much of said fund as covered the amount then due on said note. Counsel was also allowed to use this account in his argument, to show to the jury that by deducting the debits from the credits on October 1st, defendant had to his credit more than enough to pay the note, and that enough to pay the note remained in the hands of Wroton & Dowling to his credit, from October 1st, 1876, up to the time of their failure in February or March, 1877.

No demand for payment was ever made at the office of Wroton & Dowling, and Wroton testified that if such demand had been made the note would have been paid.

The testimony adduced was altogether on the part of the defendant, who, under the pleadings assumed the burden of proof. The plaintiff offered no testimony.

The court charged the jury that if they believed the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not demanding payment of the note at the office of Wroton & Dowling before their failure, and that plaintiff would have received the money if the note had been presented, and by their failure to do so the defendant lost his money, they should find for defendant; and further, that the bank was bound to demand payment at the said office, if funds *to meet it were there on October 1st, 1876, and remained there up to the time of the failure of Wroton & Dowling.

*449

The court refused to charge that the defendant was bound to take up his note when he settled with Wroton & Dowling, and that his loss was caused by his failure so to do.

The jury found for defendant.

The plaintiff appealed to this court upon the following grounds, to wit:

1. Because his Honor erred in not ruling out, as irrelevant, the first defence in said defendant's answer contained, and in permitting testimony to go to the jury to establish said defence.

2. Because his Honor erred in permitting the account current between Wroton & Dowling and defendant to be used in evidence, and to be commented upon by counsel, to show that on October 1st, 1876, defendant had in the hands of Wroton & Dowling more than sufficient funds to meet the payment of the note in suit on that day.

3. Because his Honor charged the jury that if they believed the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not demanding payment of the note at the office of Wroton & Dowling, and by that means the defendant lost his money, they should find for defendant; whereas, it is respectfully submitted that the question of laches is one of law for the court, and not of fact for the jury, the facts upon which it was based being admitted.

4. Because his Honor should have charged the jury that the defendant was bound to take up his note when he settled with Wroton & Dowling, and that his loss was caused by his failure so to do.

5. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury that the bank was bound to demand payment at the office of Wroton & Dowling, for the proof was clear that the uniform custom, acquiesced in by all parties, was that payment should be made at the bank.

Mr. John R. Bellinger, for appellant.

Mr. John J. Maher, contra.

*450

*January 10th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. Did the Circuit judge err in not ruling out the first defence stated in the answer, is the first question for our consideration.

In Cohrs v. Fraser, 5 S. C. 351, where a similar question arose, the court said: "A motion to strike out a part of defendant's answer as inconsistent, contradictory, or for any other cause, should be made after notice in a reasonable time from the filing of the answer." This was regarded necessary to prevent surprise, and perhaps a continuance of the cause. This course was not pursued here, and the judge, therefore, might have declined to hear the motion, but it was heard, and it seems without objection by the defendant, respondent. The question involved is, consequently, properly before us.

The complainant claimed that plaintiff, appellant, was the legal owner and holder of a note on defendant, respondent, made payable to the order of Wroton & Dowling, no part of which had been paid. The first defence set up in the answer was, in substance, payment. It is true that the circumstances and transactions out of which it is claimed by defendant, respondent, that payment had been made, are stated with unnecessary circumlocution and detail, but, when analyzed, the point of this defence seems to be payment without notice of any transfer to the plaintiff.

This was no new contract, changing and altering the original by verbal testimony, but it was a substantial and material defence which the defendant, respondent, had the right to set up, and which the Circuit judge properly refused to strike out.

It is objected, second, that an account current between the respondent and Wroton & Dowling was allowed to be made use of by the defendant, respondent, as a witness, to refresh his memory as to the amount of money in the hands of Wroton & Dowling, at a certain date, sufficient to have discharged the note in question and this is made the second ground of appeal.

The rule upon this subject, in its broadest outline, embraces two classes of cases: first, where the witness, after referring to the paper, speaks from his own memory, and depends upon his *own recollection as to the facts testified to; second, where he relies upon the paper and testifies only because he finds the facts contained therein. In the first class the paper is always permitted to be used by the witness without regard to when or by whom made.

*451

In the second class this rule of admission is much more stringent. In fact, it cannot be used unless it be an original paper made by the witness himself, and contemporaneously with the transaction referred to.

Admitted under any other circumstances, it would be obnoxious to the doctrine of hearsay and other important principles regulating the admission of evidence, and would render the administration of justice uncertain and doubtful. The principles above laid down will be found sustained in 1 Greenl., § 436; State v. Rawls, 2 N. & McC. 331; Cleverly v. McCullough, 2 Hill 446; and O'Neale v. Walton, 1 Rich. 234. In this case the account current was offered as evidence, but, upon objection, was ruled out. The witness was afterwards permitted to examine it, and upon this examination he was prepared to speak from recollections, and did so speak, as it appears from the record—at least so we understand from the brief agreed upon by the counsel. Whether he was entitled to credit, testifying under such circumstances, or could speak from memory after examining the paper, was for the jury, and is not a matter before us. The question here is, was it legally competent for him thus to testify? We think this case falls within the first class above referred to, and that there was no error on the part of the Circuit judge in ruling the testimony competent.

We see nothing objectionable in the charge of the judge on the third exception. It is true he did not define to the jury in general terms what, as a matter of law, was the meaning of the term laches. He, however, states "that if the jury believed the plaintiff did not demand payment of the note at the office of Wroton & Dowling [the place of payment] before their failure, and that plaintiff would have received the money if the note had been presented, and by their failure to do so the defendant lost his money, they should find for defendant," on account of laches. In this he kept the question of law and the facts separate and *distinct, and the facts only seem to have been submitted to the jury.

*452

The fourth exception raises the question that the respondent was bound to take up his note when he settled with Wroton & Dowling, and that it was error on the part of the judge not to so charge when requested.

The note was due on the 1st of October, 1876, and payable at the office of Wroton & Dowling, in Charleston. The respondents lived in Barnwell county, and the final settlement was made between the parties on the 18th of January, 1877, whether in Charleston or Barnwell does not appear. The theory of the defence is that funds had been left in the hands of Wroton & Dowling to pay this note as far back as October of the preceding year. It seems that it was known by respondent that his note might be deposited with some bank and that the bank was entitled to these funds in the hands of Wroton & Dowling. All, therefore, that the respondent was concerned about in the settlement was that he should get credit for this amount which he had left at the place of payment. This he received in the settlement, and we do not see that his failure to demand and take up the note was in violation of his legal duty; nor was it error in the presiding judge to decline to so charge; parties are presumed to know the law.

This note on its face was payable at the office of Wroton & Dowling on October 1st, 1876, and when the respondent left there on that day the amount required to pay it, it was in effect discharged in the hands either of the payee or any other holder. If he had withdrawn the funds from Wroton & Dowling and paid the note on the day of settlement without taking it up, then he might have been responsible to any third party who may have held it, but this was not done.

The settlement embraced the transactions of the year between the parties, and in the settlement, as we understand it, the respondent was allowed a credit for this note on October 1st preceding, when it fell due.

The last exception alleges error in that the judge charged that the bank was bound to demand payment at the office of Wroton & Dowling, &c. The English commercial law, when *strictly applied and enforced, seems to require that demand shall be made at the place of payment, when specified in the note, either on the day of payment or at some future time, and without this, no default arises on the part of the maker for nonpayment.

*453

The American doctrine, however, is not so rigid; demand is not a precedent condition here, and suit may be brought against the maker under that doctrine without presentment or demand at the place mentioned, subject, however, to the right of the maker to prove by way of defence that on the day and at the place specified he had the necessary funds to make payment, and that if any loss has occurred it should be the loss of the holder of the note and not his; in other words, the burden of proof is shifted; instead of requiring the plaintiff to prove that he made demand, the maker, defendant, is required to prove that he deposited the money according to the terms of the note, and that it was lost to the plaintiff on account of his failure to demand it at the proper place. Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Peters 136 [10 L. Ed. 95]; Story on Promissory Notes, §§ 227, 228, and note to page 287; Walcott v. Van Santvoord, 17 Johns. 248; Clarke v. Gordon, 3 Rich. 313, [45 Am. Dec. 768].

Now, if the matter complained of in the last exception had stood alone in the judge's charge, the exception would be well founded, as the charge in this respect is not in accordance with the above principles, but when the whole charge on this branch of the case is taken together, as appears in the brief, it is apparent that the judge properly qualified the doctrine as a whole when he instructed the jury "that if they believed the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not demanding payment of the note at the office of Wroton & Dowling before their failure, and that plaintiff would have received the money if the note had been presented, and by their failure to do so the defendant lost the money, they should find for the defendant."

This is, we think, in accordance with the American doctrine, and was a part of the judge's charge, and properly qualified that which, when taken in detached portions, might be regarded as error.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *454

*(Case No. 971.)

RILEY v. GAINES.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Execution ⟸111.]

The lien of a judgment upon the share of a joint tenant is subordinate to the right of his co-tenants to have partition made; and, after partition, the lien is transferred to the interest of the judgment debtor in the land assigned to him, or in the proceeds of the sale.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Pendergrass v. Pendergrass, 26 S. C. 29, 1 S. E. 45; Ex parte Crawford & Sons, 27 S. C. 162, 163, 3 S. E. 75; Ketchin v. Patrick, 32 S. C. 453, 11 S. E. 301; Holley v. Glover, 36 S. C. 417, 15 S. E. 605, 16 L. R. A. 776, 31 Am. St. Rep. 883.

For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 219; Dec. Dig. ⟸111.]

[2. Homestead ⟸84.]

One tract in severalty being assigned under partition proceedings to one of the tenants, he is entitled to a homestead in such tract, as against a judgment then having a lien upon his real estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 122; Dec. Dig. ⟸84.]

[3. Evidence ⟸83; Partition ⟸113.]

In the absence of evidence upon the subject, it must be assumed that the commissioners in partition acted impartially towards all parties interested.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Aldrich v. Aldrich, 75 S. C. 373, 55 S. E. 887, 117 Am. St. Rep. 909.

For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. ⟸83; Partition, Cent. Dig. § 434; Dec. Dig. ⟸113.]

[4. Homestead ⟸70.]

Lands cultivated by a judgment debtor, adjoining the tract upon which he resides, with his mother, may properly be assigned to him as a homestead exemption.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Harrell v. Kea, 37 S. C. 377, 16 S. E. 42; McClenaghan v. McEachers, 47 S. C. 449, 25 S. E. 296.

For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. §§ 100–103; Dec. Dig. ⟸70.]

Before Pressley, J., Anderson, September, 1879.

Hon. THOMAS B. FRASER, judge of the third circuit, sat at the hearing in this court, in the place of Associate Justice McGOWAN, who had been of counsel in the court below.

This was an action by Frances S. Riley, one of the distributees of Nathaniel Gaines, who died intestate, against Clarisy Gaines, Marshall B. Gaines and others, distributees of the said Nathaniel, and also against the State Savings and Insurance Bank of Anderson, South Carolina, for a partition of five tracts of land of which Nathaniel Gaines died seized and possessed. The defendant bank held a judgment against Marshall B. Gaines, obtained before the death of the intestate. The interest of Marshall B. Gaines in these five tracts, according to their appraisement by the commissioners in partition, amounted in the aggregate to $279; and the tract assigned to him in severalty was appraised at $350. The excess he was ordered to pay. All other matters necessary to a full understanding of the case are stated in the opinion of the court.

The defendant bank appealed.

Mr. Jos. N. Brown, for appellant, cited

*455

Const. of S. C., Art. *II., § 32; 15 Stat. 369; 11 S. C. 333; Thomp. on Home. and Exemp., §§ 100, 145; 5 Cal. 244; 6 Id. 416; 26 Wis. 579; Smith on Homes., § 137; 5 S. C. 11.

Messrs. Moore and Allen, contra.

January 13th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. Marshall B. Gaines, as one of the heirs-at-law, was entitled to an undivided interest in the real estate of his deceased father, Nathaniel Gaines. Such real estate "consisted of five several tracts or parcels, three of them adjoining each other, one of which embraced the homestead of said Nathaniel Gaines, with whom the respondent [M. B. Gaines] resided, and containing in the aggregate four hundred and ten acres. The other tracts or parcels, containing in the aggregate two hundred and sixty acres, were not connected with the three places constituting the home place, and were two or three miles distant." The bank, appellant, having obtained a judgment against Marshall B. Gaines, prior to the death of his father, levied on his undivided interest in the said several tracts of land, and advertised the same for sale, when the said Marshall B. Gaines interposed his claim of homestead. It was then agreed that one of the heirs—the plaintiff in this case—should file a complaint for partition, making the said bank and the other heirs parties, so that the rights of the several parties might be determined. To this complaint Marshall B. Gaines filed an answer assenting to the prayer for partition, and setting up his claim of homestead in the portion, whether of money or land, which should be allotted to him on such partition. The bank also answered, denying the claim of Marshall B. Gaines to homestead upon various grounds, which are hereinafter stated. It was conceded at the hearing below that Marshall B. Gaines was the head of a family and resided on the home place with his mother, which, though composed of three tracts, in fact constituted one body of land. The return of the commissioners in partition was made, in which they recommended that the land be divided into five tracts, that tract

*456

No. 1, embrac*ing the dwelling-house, where the widow and Marshall B. Gaines resided, be allotted to the widow; that tract No. 2, adjoining No. 1 and being a part of the home place and under cultivation by Marshall B. Gaines, be allotted to him, and that the other three tracts be sold. This return was confirmed, except as to the tract allotted to the widow, which was also ordered to be sold, and the Circuit judge having held that Marshall B. Gaines was entitled to claim a homestead in the tract of land assigned to him in the partition, the bank gave notice of appeal upon the following grounds:

"1. Because the said Marshall B. Gaines is not entitled to have a homestead assigned to him in his undivided interest in the real estate of his father, the same not being his family homestead.

"2. Because a defendant in execution has no right of homestead in separate parcels of real estate not adjoining each other.

"3. Because the interest of Marshall B. Gaines in one or more tracts of real estate under levy cannot be transferred to other parcels so as to give him a homestead therein.

"4. Because the interest of said Marshall B. Gaines in said several tracts cannot be assigned to him, whether in money or land, so as to divest the lien of the judgment and execution, and to protect said supposed right of homestead.

"5. Because in no point of view could he be entitled to homestead in any portion except that on which he, with his mother, resided, being the family homestead of his father.

"6. Because the family homestead on which said defendant resided, 'consisting of dwelling-house, out-buildings and lands appurtenant,' was first assigned to his mother and then sold, and he was not entitled to homestead in any other."

Marshall B. Gaines was entitled to an undivided interest in the whole of the real estate of which his father died seized, but where that interest would be located—whether in a single tract or in one-eighth of two-thirds of each of the five tracts, could not be determined until partition was made. It could not be said that he had an interest in any particular tract, or, in fact, in any of the land, for it was quite possible that his interest might have been assigned to him in money, and it was not im*possible that he might have no interest at all, if he had received advancements to the full value of his share of the estate. Hence, as said by Duncan, Ch., in Keckeley v. Moore, 2 Strob. Eq. 23, "It is quite manifest that until partition made, it is impossible to determine whether the child will be entitled to any, or to what portion of the estate." Thus, while it is true that the judgment of the appellant was a lien upon the undivided interest of Marshall B. Gaines in the real estate of his deceased father, yet that lien was subordinate to the right of the other heirs to have partition made: and if, upon such partition, the whole of the land had been sold, or if it had been assigned to one or more of the other heirs, the lien of the judgment upon the land would have been divested and transferred to the interest of Marshall B. Gaines in the proceeds of the sale, or in the amount which those to whom the land had been assigned were decreed to pay for equality of partition. Rabb v. Aiken, 2 McC. Eq. 118; Keckeley v. Moore, 2 Strob. Eq. 21; Burris v. Gooch, 5 Rich. 6; Garvin v. Garvin, 1 S. C. 62.

*457

So in this case, after the partition was made, locating what had been before the undivided interest of Marshall B. Gaines in tract No. 2, the lien of the appellant's judgment upon all the balance of the land was divested and transferred to that tract, because it was then ascertained that he had no interest in any other portion of the land, but his entire interest was confined to that tract, and in that tract alone could he be said to have any claim of homestead.

It is true that there may be a practical difficulty in assigning a homestead in a judgment debtor's undivided interest, but that difficulty does not present itself here, because the interest of the judgment debtor, which, at one time, was undivided and uncertain, has now been ascertained and defined, and we see no reason why a homestead may not be claimed therein as well as in a piece of real estate which had always been held in severalty. If the interest of the judgment debtor had been assigned to him in one of the outlying tracts, then it might have been necessary to consider the question whether such tract was appurtenant to the family residence of the debtor, even though not contiguous to it; but when, as in this case, his interest has been ascertained to *be in a part of the home place, adjoining the tract on which he resided, and cultivated by him in connection with the place on which he resided, no such question can arise. We are therefore unable to see any foundation for the first ground of appeal.

*458

The second ground of appeal raises an abstract question not applicable to the facts of this case, for it does not appear that the respondent, Gaines, is claiming a homestead "in separate parcels of real estate not adjoining each other."

As to the third and fourth grounds of appeal, it is sufficient to say that there is no evidence before us that the commissioners in partition assigned tract No. 2 to Marshall B. Gaines, for the purpose of enabling him to defeat the judgment of appellant by setting up this claim of homestead, and, on the contrary, in the absence of any evidence upon the subject, we are bound to assume that the commissioners, in compliance with their sworn duty, acted fairly and impartially, and made such partition as, in their judgment, was best for the interests of all parties concerned.

The fifth and sixth grounds of appeal are not well taken. The constitution does not confine the claim of homestead to the particular tract of land on which the claimant resides, but extends it to lands "appurtenant" to the dwelling, whether of the same tract or not, and respondent here, as we have seen, only claims a homestead in land adjoining and appurtenant to the family residence—in fact, a part of the same body of land on which the residence was located.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and FRASER, A. A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 458

(Case No. 976.)

GODBOLD v. VANCE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Exceptions, Bill of ⇐39.]

Where the decree in an equity cause is rendered during vacation, there is nothing in the act of 1878, regulating appeals, (16 Stat.

*459

698,) which *requires the appellant from such decree to furnish the presiding judge and serve the respondent's attorney with a copy of exceptions to the decree within ten days after notice of filing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. §§ 51, 52, 54–56, 60; Dec. Dig. ⇐39.]

2. Is Section 292 of the code of procedure repealed by the act of 1878?

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐351.]

Decree in an equity cause, which was heard upon exceptions to a referee's report, was rendered in vacation; within ten days afer notice of the filing plaintiff gave notice that he would "appeal to the Supreme Court and move it to reverse the decree," and within thirty days thereafter served his case, which contained the exceptions to the referee's report and exceptions in detail to the Circuit decree. Held, that there had been a technical compliance with the requirements of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1915–1919; Dec. Dig. ⇐351.]

[4. Appeal and Error ⇐1022.]

Findings of fact, concurred in by referee and Circuit judge, sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4015–4018; Dec. Dig. ⇐1022.]

[5. Executors and Administrators ⇐213; Limitation of Actions ⇐143.]

An executor cannot waive the statute of limitations against himself, as to claims due him which were barred at the time of his qualification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 750; Dec. Dig. ⇐213; Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 582; Dec. Dig. ⇐143.]

[6. Payment ⇐67.]

The giving of a note raises no presumption of the payment by the maker of an antecedent indebtedness not then due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 162, 189–194, 198; Dec. Dig. ⇐67.]

[7. Executors and Administrators ⇐202.]

An instrument, in form a deed, which purported to convey $2000, with enjoyment postponed until the maker's death, upheld as a debt due by the estate of the maker.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 730, 738–745, 748, 754, 763; Dec. Dig. ⇐202.]

[8. Wills ⇐764.]

The doctrine of ademption does not apply to devises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1978; Dec. Dig. ⇐764.]

[9. Wills ⇐194.]

The provisions of a deed ineffectual to accomplish the purposes intended, cannot operate as a revocation of a will duly executed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 481–489; Dec. Dig. ⇐194.]

[10. Appeal and Error ⇐564.]

[A decree in an equity suit, rendered in vacation upon exceptions to a referee's report, is governed by 16 St. at Large, p. 698, § 2, which provides that the appellant shall, within 30 days after service of notice of appeal, serve a case or exceptions, or a case with exceptions, and is not governed by section 1, which requires that, in appeals from rulings made during term time, a copy of the exceptions must be served within 10 days after the rising of the court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2502; Dec. Dig. ⇐564.]

[11. Wills ⇐475.]

[A testator, by will, gave to his wife $2,000 in lieu of dower. Afterwards, by an instrument in form a deed, he conveyed to her $2,000 to be received by her at his death, in place of the provision in the will, the conveyance providing also, that if the estate should be insolvent after his death, her claim to dower should not be barred. Held, that the instrument should be upheld as a declaration of a debt due, and that the will, the deed, and the provision therein should be treated in accordance with the obvious intention of the testat r.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 996; Dec. Dig. ⊂⊃475.]

Before Pressley, J., Abbeville, September, 1879.

This was an action commenced July 17th, 1878, by Francis M. Godbold, as executor of John Vance, deceased, against Nuella E. Vance, (widow of testator,) Nannie M., Sarah, Mary A., and Thos. W. Godbold (grand-children) and James C. Moore and others, creditors of John Vance.

In April, 1872, John Vance made his will, whereby inter alia he devised and bequeathed as follows:

2. To my wife, Nuella Vance, I devise and bequeath the tract of land whereon I now reside in Abbeville county, containing forty acres, more or less, together with the household and kitchen furniture, my buggy and harness and wagon and all stock of every kind which may be on the place at the time of my death. I also bequeath her the sum of two thousand dollars, ($2000,) which my executors are to pay as soon after my death as possible.

The said property and pecuniary legacy, I give to my said wife in lieu and in bar of dower absolutely; excepting this tract of land, which is to be hers for life only, but at her death to go *to the child, or children, if any, of our marriage. In default of such child or children living at her death, I authorize and empower my said wife by will to dispose of it as she pleases.

*460

In a codicil executed January 27th, 1874, the testator directed as follows:

1. In addition to the provisions made for my wife, Nuella E. Vance, in section two of my last will, I hereby give, devise, and bequeath to her (during her life only) ten (10) acres of wood land, lying on the road leading from Hodges Depot to Smith's Bridge, bounded by said road, by J. M. Graham and by my old homestead place. At the death of my wife I direct that said ten acres of land shall revert to my estate and shall be disposed of along with my old homestead place, of which it is now a part, as directed in the third and fourth clauses of my will.

2. The real estate bequeathed to my wife in the second clause of my will and described as the "place whereon I now live," consists of three separate parcels, each represented by a separate plat and title deed and amounting in all to forty acres.

3. If from any cause, my personal estate should be insufficient to discharge and pay the legacy bequeathed to my wife in the second clause of my will, I will and direct that my executors shall sell so much of the old homestead place as shall be necessary therefor; and from the proceeds of such sale, they shall make up and pay to her the full amount of said deficiency.

On June 21st, 1875, John Vance duly executed and delivered to his wife, Nuella E. Vance, his deed, which is as follows:

This indenture, made June 21st, 1875, between John Vance, party of the first part, and his wife, Nuella E. Vance, party of the second part, both of the county and state aforesaid, witnesseth, that whereas the said John Vance did, on the sixth day of April, A. D. 1872, make and publish a will, and also did make and attach thereto a codicil, dated the 27th of January, 1874, wherein and whereby he did devise and bequeath to his said wife, the said Nuella E. Vance, certain real and personal property, money, &c., in lieu and for dower; and whereas it is now his desire to secure this provision to her beyond any contingency:

Now, know all men by these presents, That I, the said John Vance, moved by the foregoing consideration, as well as in consideration of the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid by the said Nuella E. Vance, at and before the sealing and delivery of these presents, (the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged,) have given, granted, released, conveyed, and confirmed, and by these *presents do give, grant, bargain, release, and convey and confirm unto the said Nuella E. Vance, her heirs and assigns forever, the following property, to wit:

*461

First. The tract of land on which I now reside, &c.; second, all my household and kitchen furniture, &c.; third, the sum of two thousand dollars ($2000) in cash; together with all and singular the rights, members, hereditaments thereunto belonging or in anywise incident or appertaining: To have and to hold the above-granted and described property and money, and every part and parcel thereof, with the appurtenances, to the said Nuella E. Vance, her heirs and assigns, to her and their only proper use, benefit, and behoof forever. Provided, however, and the foregoing deed is made upon the express condition that during my life I have and retain full possession, control and management of all the above-granted property, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, as fully to all intents and purposes as if this deed and conveyance had not been made; and that at my death my said wife shall receive the above-granted and described property and money in lieu and bar of dower and of the provision made for her in the second clause of my last will above mentioned, (and said will and codicil are hereby confirmed except said second clause.) It is further provided that should my estate become insolvent in any way so that my said wife, the said Nuella E. Vance, shall fail to receive the property and money herein conveyed to her, or any part thereof, then her right and claim of dower shall not be barred, anything herein or in my will above mentioned to the contrary notwithstanding.

And it is further provided, That if I should outlive my said wife, that at her death this deed and conveyance shall become utterly null and void, anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding.

In witness whereof I, the said John Vance, have hereunto set my hand and seal the day and year first above mentioned.

John Vance. [L. S.]

Signed, sealed, and executed and delivered in presence of Geo. G. Allen, L. K. Dantzler.

This deed was duly recorded. On April 10th, 1877, testator made and delivered to his wife his sealed note for $50. April 21st, 1877, testator died, and during the same month plaintiff qualified as executor. In May, 1878, the widow, Nuella, filed her petition in the Court of Probate, calling the executor to account, and for payment of legacy, &c. Pending these pro*ceedings, this action was commenced in the Court of Common Pleas for a construction of will and codicil and deed, and an adjudication of the rights of the widow and grand-children, an injunction against creditors' suits, sale of land in aid of assets, account by executor, and also an account by the widow of moneys and other property received by her. Defendants answered.

*462

Creditors were enjoined and called in, and Edward Noble, Esq., was appointed special referee, to take proof of claims and of assets, to state the accounts of the executor, and of Mrs. Vance, &c.

The referee took testimony, stated the accounts of the executor and reported as follows:

The deed of June 21st, 1875, was made as an irrevocable disposition of property at the instance of the wife. One of the charges of the complaint is that Mrs. Vance has been paid the said $2000 in her husband's lifetime, and she is required by the order of reference to account for all money belonging to the testator at his death which came into her possession or into the possession of another with her knowledge and for her benefit. Much testimony has been taken before the referee in regard to this charge, which is attached hereto as part of this report. The evidence is not sufficient, it appears to me, to sustain the charge—indeed, there is no evidence to support it except the possession by the testator in 1870 of upward of $7000, and in 1872 of upward of $2000. The testator, in listing his property to the auditor in 1869, returns no money or credits; in 1870 he returns $7000; in 1871 he returns $3000; in 1872, $200; in 1873, $200; in 1874, nothing. In no subsequent return does the testator list money or credits. Mrs. Vance denies that she has been paid, and says she has not had any of testator's money belonging to him at his death, and no one for her has had any of testator's money. Dr. B. C. Hart and Dr. F. F. Gary, men of high character and intimate with the testator, testify that they heard testator declare in 1876 and 1877 that he had no money, and Mrs. Vance says the same thing. Mrs. Vance's claim under the deed of gift of June 21st, 1875, is therefore sustained as unpaid.

The accounts of the executor are submitted. In his hands I find the sum of $161.67 applicable to debts. * * *

*463

*Portions of Mr. Godbold's claims are barred by the statute of limitations, namely, accounts for 1869 and 1870, amounting to $1087.06, but no exception has been taken to them on that ground and they have been allowed. If these barred accounts are not allowed, there would still be due Mr. Godbold $1570.91, and after discounting the two notes he owes the estate there would be a balance in his favor of $279.41.

The plaintiff filed the following exceptions to the above report:

"1. Because the said referee had no power under the order of reference to decide the question of fact as to whether or not the sum of $2000 mentioned in the deed of gift executed by the testator to the defendant, Nuella E. Vance, was received by her in the lifetime of the said testator.

"2. Because the said referee erred in not holding the pretended gift of $2000 in the deed of gift executed by the testator to the defendant, N. E. Vance, to be a nullity.

"3. Because the referee erred in not holding that the said sum of $2000 was received by the said defendant, N. E. Vance, in the lifetime of the testator, or otherwise satisfied to her.

"4. Because the said referee erred in allowing the said N. E. Vance interest on the said sum of $2000.

"5. Because the said referee erred in not charging the said N. E. Vance with having in her possession at least $10,000 belonging to the said testator.

"6. Because the said referee erred in not charging the said N. E. Vance with certain personal property belonging to the said testator and not conveyed to her by the will, codicil or deed, to wit, one piano, some silverware and several head of cattle.

"7. Because the said referee erred in stating that the deed conveyed to the said N. E. Vance, among other things, all the property on the premises, instead of stating that it conveyed all stock of all kinds that might be on the place at the time of testator's death.

"8. Because the said referee failed to report as a part of the assets two small tracts of land in the village of Cokesbury, one containing about two acres and the other about twenty-five acres."

*464

*The defendant, Nuella E. Vance, filed the following exceptions to said report:

"1. Because the referee erred in finding that John Vance in 1875 was in possession of $2000.

"2. Because the referee erred in finding that the only lands which are assets in the hands of the executor are the two tracts mentioned in his report.

"3. Because the referee erred in finding that the deed mentioned in his report was executed at the instance of the defendant, Nuella E. Vance.

"4. Because the referee erred in finding that no objection was made to the accounts of F. M. Godbold for 1869 and 1870, on the ground that they were barred by the statute of limitations.

"5. Because the referee erred in allowing the accounts of F. M. Godbold against the estate of John Vance, deceased."

May 17th, 1880, Judge Pressley rendered the following decree:

On 6th of April, 1872, John Vance made his will, wherein he devised to his wife, Nuella, the tract of land on which he then lived, with the furniture and other articles thereon; also the sum of $2000, to be paid to her as soon after his death as possible; the whole to be in bar of her dower in his estate. To this will he added a codicil in January, 1874, whereby he made the said $2000 legacy a charge upon his old homestead, and directed a sale of so much thereof as would pay said legacy in case his personal assets were deficient. This arrangement was not satisfactory to testator's wife. She objected that it was revocable, and did not make her safe in renouncing her dower in certain lands which her husband desired to sell. To satisfy her in this respect he executed a deed, on June 21st, 1875, wherein he conveyed to her the property and the $2000 mentioned in the second clause of his will, and provided that it should not bar her right of dower, unless she should receive the whole of the said property and money. The complaint in this case, by the executor of John Vance, alleges that his wife received the said $2000 in his lifetime, and calls on her to account for other moneys, which he, John Vance, is supposed to have had at the time of his death, which came into her possession. The referee in the case *reports there is no evidence that such money was or is in her possession, or that she received the $2000, and I do not find any testimony sufficient to sustain said allegations. The codicil to testator's will and a clause in the deed both seem to me indicative that testator contemplated the probability that the said $2000 might not be paid out of his personal estate, and possibly not out of his land.

*465

In the proceeding before the referee the plaintiff in this case proved an account against his testator's estate, of which a part, for the years 1869 and 1870, are barred by statute of limitations. The referee reports that no one before him interposed the bar of the statute, and that part of his report is excepted to by the attorney of Nuella Vance. Exceptions on other grounds have been filed by both the attorneys for plaintiff and the defendant. I confirm the referee's report, and overrule all the exceptions but that which relates to the statute of limitations. The accounts of the executor for 1869 and 1870 are clearly barred, and he, as executor of the estate, could not waive the statute in his own favor.

It is adjudged and decreed that Nuella E. Vance has the right to retain the land and personal property thereon, as reported by the referee; also that she is entitled to receive from the estate, personal or real, of John Vance the sum of $2000, with interest from the probate of the will: or, failing to receive the same, that she is entitled to her dower out of the real estate, heretofore sold or to be sold by order of the court.

As election by her may be necessary, the case is recommitted to the referee to inquire and report what assets of said estate are applicable to the payment of her claim, and whether she elects to look to such assets for payment or to take her dower.

Either party to this case may apply at foot of this decree for any order necessary to carry into effect the report of the referee, except as hereby modified.

On Thursday, June 24th, 1880, the foregoing decree was filed in the office of the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas for Abbeville county, and on the same day notice of the filing was given to the parties.

*466

*On Saturday, July 3d, the plaintiff duly filed and served the following notice of appeal:

Take notice that the plaintiff will appeal to the Supreme Court from the decree of Judge B. C. Pressley in the above-stated case, rendered on the seventeenth day of May, eighteen hundred and eighty, and move it to reverse the same.

On the same day the defendant, Nuella E. Vance, duly filed and served the following notice of appeal:

Take notice that the undersigned excepts to the judgment or decree of his Honor, Judge B. C. Pressley, in the above-stated case, and appeals to the Supreme Court from the same on the following grounds:

"1. Because his Honor erred in finding that the plaintiff in the proceeding before the referee proved an account against his testator's estate.

"2. Because his Honor erred in overruling the fifth exception of Nuella E. Vance to the referee's report."

The plaintiff's exceptions to the decree of Judge Pressley were on the following grounds, as stated in the case prepared for the hearing of the appeal:

"1. Because his Honor erred in holding that the accounts of the plaintiff against his testator are barred by the statute of limitations, although it was not pleaded by any defendant, nor was the objection made by any creditor who proved his demand before the referee.

"2. Because his Honor erred in overruling plaintiff's exceptions to the report of the referee.

"3. Because his Honor erred in not holding that the giving of a note by the testator to the defendant, Nuella E. Vance, a few days before his death, affords a conclusive presumption, in the al sence of rebutting or explanatory evidence, that it was a settlement in full of all demands held by her against him.

"4. Because his Honor erred in not deciding that the deed revokes the legacy to said defendant contained in the will and codicil.

"5. Because his Honor erred in not deciding that the convey*ance by the deed of the property therein mentioned is an ademption and satisfaction of the devises and legacies contained in the will and codicil.

*467

"6. Because his Honor erred in not deciding that said defendant, having accepted the gift by deed and retained the property as her own, is concluded by it.

"7. Because his Honor erred in not deciding that certain parts of the deed are testamentary, and that therefore as to them it cannot operate either as a will or as a deed.

"8. Because his Honor erred in deciding that this it a proper case for election by the defendant, Nuella E. Vance, she having already made her election by accepting the deed and holding and retaining the property therein conveyed as her own.

"9. Because the decree of his Honor is in all respects contrary to the law of the case and the evidence adduced before the referee.

"10. Because his Honor erred in confirming the referee's findings upon questions of law, the said referee having no power under the order of the court to decide such questions."

The notice of appeal and exceptions of Nuella E. Vance were served on Judge Pressley and plaintiff's attorneys within ten days from the notice of filing the same. The case and exceptions were served on the defendants' attorneys within thirty days from the time plaintiff's notice of appeal was served, but the exceptions of the other appellant were not served within ten days after written notice of the filing of the decree.

Messrs. Burt & Graydon, for plaintiff.
Mr. E. B. Gary, for Mrs. Vance.

February 26th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action in the nature of a suit in equity, instituted by F. M. Godbold, as executor, to marshall the assets of the estate of John Vance, deceased. It was referred to Edward Noble, Esq., as referee, to state the assets and the *creditors according to their legal priorities. To his report both parties filed exceptions, which were argued before Judge Pressley, who rendered his decree after the rising of the court, May 17th, 1880. Written notice of it was served upon the parties. The attorney of Mrs. Vance served Judge Pressley and plaintiff's attorney with notice of appeal and copy of exceptions within ten days from notice of filing of the decree. The plaintiff served defendant's attorney with notice of intention to appeal within ten days, and copy of the case, with exceptions, within thirty days, but omitted to serve upon Judge Pressley and the attorney of the opposite party copies of his exceptions to the decree within ten days.

*468

This raises a preliminary question upon a motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal upon the ground that copy of his exceptions was not furnished the presiding judge and served upon the attorney of respondent within ten days after notice of decree filed. The plaintiff did file exceptions to the report of the referee, which was nearly identical with the decree, and also printed them in the "case" filed within thirty days. This is not, therefore, a case of surprise, but only a question of technical compliance or non-compliance with the law.

The right of appeal is valuable, and the law prescribing the manner in which appeals may be prosecuted should be construed liberally. This court has lately had occasion to consider the subject and to be constrained, by force of the provisions of the act of 1878, (16 Stat. 698,) to dismiss appeals in several cases, but this is the first case that has come before us upon motion to dismiss under that act, where every requirement of the act itself had been complied with, and the only objection made was that something else was omitted, supposed to be required by a previous law.

The first and second sections of the act of 1878 cover different classes of cases and contain different requirements. The first section manifestly relates only to "rulings" made during term time, and requires "copy of exceptions to be furnished the presiding judge and served upon the attorney of respondent within ten days after the rising of the court," &c. The cases provided for by this section and to which these requirements apply are *generally law cases tried by a jury, but it has been held that the words "all cases tried in the Circuit Courts" embrace as well equity cases heard in term time and decided in open court.

*469

The second section is more comprehensive. It provides for cases heard in term time, and also every order, decree or judgment or other matter from which an appeal may be taken, and only requires "that the appellant or his attorney shall, within ten days after decree filed, give notice to the opposite party or his attorney of his intention to appeal, and within thirty days after notice shall prepare a case or exceptions, or a case with exceptions, and serve them," &c.

The decree in this case was in an equity suit and rendered in vacation, and, therefore, as to an appeal, cannot fall within the first section, which applies only to "rulings" in cases heard and decided in open court, but under the second section, which, in express terms, includes "decrees." We suppose to those matters which fall under this section and not the first, only the requirements of this section apply. If so, the plaintiff complied strictly with every requirement of this second section as to notice of intention to appeal and serving "a case," and we cannot say that his appeal is waived under the act of 1878, which imposes the penalty of "waiver" only when "the appellant shall fail to perfect his appeal according to the provisions of either of the foregoing sections." We think there is nothing in the act of 1878 which requires that this appeal should be dismissed.

But it is said that the act of 1878 is not the only law upon the subject; that the second section of that act was not intended as a new law by way of substitution for the old provisions of the code as to appeals, but only as an amendment to them, leaving untouched Section 292 of the code as to the manner of taking an appeal from a judgment rendered by the court, which is in these words: "For the purpose of an appeal (in cases decided by the court) either party may except to a decision on a matter of law arising upon such trial within ten days after notice in writing of the judgment in the same manner and with the same effect as upon trial by jury." Gen. Stat. 637.

"The court" may try law cases, and this section seems to *apply exclusively to that class of cases, for it speaks only of excepting "in a matter of law."

*470

This court is not limited to a correction of errors at law, but in "cases in chancery" has appellate jurisdiction, and may review and reverse findings of fact by the court below. Besides, there is grave doubt whether this provision is not repealed by the act of 1878, which deals exhaustively with the same subject, and seems to have been intended as a system in itself. As was said in the case of Scurry v. Coleman, ante, p. 166: "The law governing appeals to the Supreme Court was changed by the act of 1878, as to the time within which an appeal shall be perfected, which then expressly repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith. It covers the whole subject of appeals to the Supreme Court. Are the provisions of the act of 1878 inconsistent with those of the code before referred to?" So, we repeat, as to the section of the code under consideration here. It has been held that the act of 1878 "does not profess to be an amendment of the code." Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560. This court, however, has never expressly decided the question as to Section 292 of the code, and we think it is not necessary to do so in this case. If that section is not superseded by the act of 1878, and embraces "cases in chancery" as well as law cases tried by "the court," still, properly construed, there is nothing in it which requires the dismissal of this appeal. The section does not, in terms, require copy of exceptions to be furnished the presiding judge, but allows either party to except "in the same manner and with the same effect as upon trial by jury." In construing these words we must have reference to the law as it then stood as to exceptions upon "trial by jury." At the adoption of the code exceptions had to be made in open court. It was not necessary that they should be in writing, but enough to have them noted on the judge's minutes and settled after, as prescribed by the rules of court. The idea of furnishing copy of exceptions to the presiding judge was suggested for the first time in the act of 1878, the first section of which requires copy of exceptions to be furnished the judge for the reason that, in cases provided for by that section, ten days to except was allowed. We do not think this section of the code can be interpreted by reference to the act *of 1878, and enlarged by incorporating into it provisions of an act passed long after, and which makes entirely new regulations upon the subject.

*471

Whether this section is superseded or not, it is not now necessary, in appealing from a decree in chancery rendered in vacation, to furnish the judge who rendered the decree with a copy of the exceptions thereto. This view of the law is fortified by reason. We are unable to understand the object in requiring copy of exceptions to be furnished the judge, whose whole decree is in writing, in a suit in which he is not expected to make a report or settle a case.

As to the service of exceptions upon the attorney of the opposite party, claimed to be necessary, the notice of appeal, taken in connection with the full exceptions to the referee's report and in "the case," may be considered as a technical compliance.

The notice was in these words: "Take notice that the plaintiff will appeal to the Supreme Court from the decree of Judge B. C. Pressley, rendered May 17th, 1880, and move it to reverse the same." Considered as an exception, this is certainly not full, but it is more than a mere notice of an intention to appeal. It is true, as stated in the case of Norton v. Livingston, ante p. 177: "That the points of law, wherein error is charged, should be specifically stated, otherwise the court has no guide as to the points contested;" but that was a law case, tried by a jury, and the only exception was to "the charge of the judge." This was an equity suit, and the whole decree in writing. The motion to dismiss the appeal is refused.

John Vance executed his will April 6th, 1872, and by it gave his wife, Nuella E., the tract of land on which he then lived, with the furniture and other articles thereon, and also the sum of $2000, to be paid to her as soon after his death as possible; the whole to be in bar of dower in his lands. In 1874 he added a codicil to his will, whereby he made the said legacy a charge upon his old homestead. The wife of testator objected that the provision was revocable and did not make her safe in renouncing dower in certain lands which her husband wished to sell. To satisfy her upon this subject, he executed a deed, June 21st, 1875, which was delivered and recorded, whereby he "gave, *granted, released, conveyed and confirmed" the property which had been given by the will, reserving to himself the possession and use of it for life: provided, that it should not bar her right of dower unless she realized the whole property and money. The testator died in April, 1877. F. M. Godbold, son-in-law of the testator, qualified as executor and instituted this proceeding, charging that the widow had received the $2000 in the lifetime of the testator, and demanding an account for other moneys alleged to have gone into her possession during the life of her husband. The executor presented accounts against the estate, running from 1869 to 1877, and the questions in the case arise out of these accounts and the claim of the widow.

*472

The referee reported as to the claim of the widow, "that there was no evidence that such money was or is in her possession, or that she had received the two thousand dollars. Her claim under the deed of gift of June, 1875, is, therefore, sustained as unpaid. * * * Although the claim is, in form, a gift, and not strictly a debt, yet it is in lieu and bar of dower, and has a valuable consideration to support it," and he accordingly placed the claim in the list of debts established. He reported as to the claim of the executor that "portions of Mr. Godbold's claims are barred by the statute of limitations, namely, the accounts for 1869 and 1870, amounting to one thousand and eighty-seven dollars and six cents, but no exception has been taken to them on that ground, and they have been allowed," &c.

Both parties excepted to the report. Judge Pressley overruled all the exceptions on both sides and confirmed the report, except as to the accounts of the executor for the years 1869 and 1870, which he held were barred by the statute of limitations. He adjudged "that Nuella E. Vance has the right to retain the land and personal property thereon, as reported by the referee; also, that she is entitled to receive from the estate of John Vance the sum of two thousand dollars, with interest from the probate of the will, or, failing to receive the same, that she is entitled to her dower out of the real estate heretofore sold or to be sold by the order of the court." He remitted the case to the referee to inquire and report what assets are liable to the payment of her *claim, and whether she elects to look to such assets for payment or take her dower.

*473

Both parties filed exceptions to the decree, and the appeal comes to this court. The exceptions are numerous and will not be considered seriatim, but according to the subject matter.

1. The claim of the executor as a creditor of the estate. On one side it is insisted that the accounts were not properly proved, and on the other that they were all established, and it was error to apply the bar of the statute to any part of them. The Circuit judge concurred with the referee that they were established. When such concurrence exists, it is the practice of this court to affirm the judgment, unless it is without any testimony to sustain it, or is manifestly against the weight of the evidence. We cannot say that there was no testimony tending to prove these accounts. Upon the subject of applying the statute to the accounts for the years 1869 and 1870, we also agree with the Circuit judge. The creditor was executor of the estate, which it was his duty to protect. It is against the policy of the law to allow an executor to waive the statute against himself as creditor. "An administrator cannot retain, for a debt of his own, which was barred by the statute of limitations at the death of his intestate." Cooper v. Peyton, Rich. Eq. Cas. 259.

2. As to the claim of Mrs. Vance. All the other exceptions relate to this subject.

1. It is contended that the $2000, conveyed by the deed, was received by Mrs. Vance in the lifetime of her husband, and the fact that shortly before his death, in April, 1877, he gave her a note for $50, affords conclusive proof that she was paid in full. The presumption claimed from giving the note could only arise as to a debt due and payable at the time. By the deed, Mrs. Vance was not to receive the $2000 until testator's death. The referee says: "The evidence is not sufficient to sustain the charge; indeed, there is no evidence to support it, except the possession, by the testator in 1870, of upwards of seven thousand dollars, and in 1871 of upwards of two thousand dollars." The judge says: "I do not find any testimony sufficient to sustain said allegations." In this state of the case this court cannot undertake to review the testimony and disturb the decree. See *Rep. Shand's note, 12 S. C. 612. We have looked carefully through the testimony and fail to find any direct evidence of payment.

*474

2. It is insisted that the paper called a deed, purporting to convey property to be delivered at donor's death, is testamentary in its character, and at least, in part, void for the want of three witnesses, or if the deed is good as to the tangible property it is certainly void as to the $2000 in money, which cannot be identified and has no existence, except as a measure of value. The paper, in form a deed, purported to convey a particular sum of money—to give a present interest, with enjoyment postponed until donor's death. It does not appear that any particular dollars were present or delivered, but the deed is under seal and was delivered. We suppose that the thing itself was not so earmarked that the donee could have taken possession at the death without resort to the executor, but was rather in the nature of a direction to the executor to pay. The purpose of the parties was to make the provision irrevocable, and that intention must be carried out if it can be done without violating any principle of law. Without going into the question whether money, like ordinary personal property, is capable of being conveyed in presenti to take effect in futuro, there is no doubt that this money would have been recoverable if John Vance had given an obligation for it in the form of a note or bond without three witnesses. That the payment was appointed to be made at the death of the obligor, is not, of itself, an objection to the papers being considered an irrevocable obligation. 3 Term 322; 5 Term 381; 8 Term 483. Must the intention fail only for the reason that the paper is in form a deed and not a bond? "An instrument intended to take effect at the donor's death, but not having the formalities of a will, will not be held testamentary, and therefore void, if it can operate in some other character, which appears to have been intended." Carter v. King, 11 Rich. 125, and authorities there cited.

3. It is further insisted that the conveyance of the same property by deed was an ademption of the devises and legacies, and that in no event can Mrs. Vance have dower either by election or to make up the full sum of $2000. The doctrine of ademp*tion does not apply to devises, and is always a question of intention. Allen v. Allen, 13 S. C. 512 [36 Am. Rep. 716]. The purpose of the will, the codicil, and the deed, was the same, and whatever Mrs. Vance receives under the deed cannot, of course, be again claimed under the will; but the deed itself provides that "should the estate become insolvent, so that my said wife shall fail to receive the property and money herein conveyed to her, or any part thereof, then her right and claim of dower shall not be barred." We do not think that the mere acceptance of the deed could be an ademption of anything except in so far as the property covered by it was actually received in the lifetime of the testator. It was the intention of the testator to secure to his wife, in any event, the whole property given. He gave it by will, fortified it by a codicil, and finally made it irrevocable by deed. This anxious intention cannot be defeated by the application of the doctrine of ademption. If the provision of the deed should fail in whole or in part, it would be in violation of the terms of the deed itself to make that which was ineffectual for the purpose intended effective only in defeating another provision for the same purpose. Dawson v. Dawson, Rice's Eq. 243; [Dawson v. Dawson] Cheeves' Eq. 148; Floyd v. Floyd, 3 Strob. 54 [49 Am. Dec. 626]; Pringle v. McPherson, 2 Brev. 290 [3 Am. Dec. 713]. Revocation is a question of intention. In the case Ex parte Earl of Ilchester, 7 Ves., Jr., 374, Lord Alvanly examines this doctrine at great length, and concludes with these very strong words: "There is, therefore, no authority in the way of this proposition, that an instrument imperfect to the point to which it is directed, shall not operate as a revocation of a will duly executed."

*475

The Circuit decree is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *476

*(Case No. 978.)

WARREN, WALLACE & CO. v. LAWTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Agriculture ⇐15.]

Crop of A was sold after his death, under warrant, to enforce an agricultural lien, which was executed by him during his lifetime. Within thirty days after sale, the administrator of A, claiming the proceeds of sale, gave notice to the sheriff of such claim, and at the same time served an affidavit that no advances were made under the lien to be used in making the crop so sold, but that the lien was only executed to secure the re-payment of money paid to a third person to settle an old debt due by A. Held, that this affidavit sufficiently raised the issue which, under the statute, must be determined by trial in the Court of Common Pleas; and, meantime, a rule against the sheriff, moved for by the liencees, was properly discharged.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Sease v. Dobson, 33 S. C. 237, 11 S. E. 728; Georgia, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ridlehuber, 38 S. C. 318, 17 S. E. 24.

For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. §§ 42–49; Dec. Dig. ⇐15.]

[2. Agriculture ⇐15.]

The creditor is entitled to the summary remedy of the act only where the money is due for advances made to enable the debtor to make the crop, and the affidavit required of the debtor to raise the issue for trial is sufficient if it denies indebtedness under the lien.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Kennedy & Son v. Dunbar, 46 S. C. 521, 24 S. E. 383.

For other cases, see Agriculture, Cent. Dig. § 47; Dec. Dig. ⟸15.]

Before Aldrich, J., Barnwell, February, 1880.

This was a rule issued February 17th, 1880, upon J. W. Lancaster, sheriff of Barnwell county, to show cause why he should not be required to pay over to the relators, Warren, Wallace & Co., money realized under a warrant to enforce an agricultural lien. The warrant was entitled Warren, Wallace & Co. v. Thomas P. Lawton, as administrator of the estate of B. W. Lawton. The lien was executed May 2d, 1879. The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. John M. Cranston and Mr. W. P. Murphy, for appellants.

Mr. J. J. Brown, contra.

February 26th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was a rule on the sheriff requiring him to show cause why he should not be directed to pay over to the *appellants the proceeds of the sale of the crop of the intestate, B. W. Lawton, made by him on January 8th, 1880, under a warrant issued by the clerk to enforce an agricultural lien given by the said Lawton to the appellants to secure advances to be made during the year 1879. The sheriff showed for cause, that on January 20th, 1880, he was served with a notice, by the respondent, not to pay over the proceeds of such sale to the appellants, for the reason that no advances were made for that year by the appellants to the intestate; and that, subsequently, he was also served with a notice by Mrs. Josephine B. Lawton not to pay over the proceeds of the sale, for the reason that she was a lien creditor of the intestate, and that no advances had been made to said B. W. Lawton for the year 1879 by the appellants; and asked the instructions of the court in the premises. At the hearing, before the Circuit judge, it appeared that the notice from the respondent, referred to in the sheriff's return, was accompanied by an affidavit, which, among other statements, contained the following: "That no advances were made by said Warren, Wallace & Co. to said B. W. Lawton during said year to be used in making the crops of the said B. W. Lawton, and that the money loaned and called advances in the lien given on the crops for 1879 was money loaned, not to B. W. Lawton, but paid to other parties in settlement of an old debt. The deponent is certain that no money passed between the said Warren, Wallace & Co. and B. W. Lawton during the year 1879, and that no advances for the purpose of assisting his agricultural interests were, in any manner, made to B. W. Lawton by said Warren, Wallace & Co. for that year." It also appeared that the notice from Mrs. Josephine B. Lawton was likewise accompanied by an affidavit, which, from the view we take of this case, it will not be necessary to set out particularly. The Circuit judge discharged the rule, and from his decision this appeal is taken.

*477

The statute (March 4th, 1878, 16 Stat. 410,) under which the appellants proceeded in this case, is a very rigorous one, and gives a creditor a very summary remedy, but it is not wholly unmindful of the rights of the debtor. To obtain the remedy provided for by it the creditor must first make an affidavit "that the person to whom such advances have been made, is about to sell *or dispose of his crop, or in any other way is about to defeat the lien hereinbefore provided for, accompanied with a statement of the amount then due." This must, of course, mean the amount due under the lien, and cannot apply to any other indebtedness. Otherwise a creditor might resort to this means of securing an antecedent unsecured debt, while it is plain that the sole purpose of the statute was to provide for the security and prompt collection of the debts contemplated by it, to wit, advances made in pursuance of the agreement provided for in the preceding section of the act. The statute then proceeds to provide a mode by which the debtor may, to a certain extent at least, be protected not only from any erroneous or excessive charge on the part of the creditor, but also from having the proceeds of the sale of his crops applied to any other debts than those for which they may be specially pledged, viz., advances made for the purpose of enabling him to raise such crops. This is effected by the proviso to the third section of the act, which declares: "That if the person to whom such advances have been made shall, within thirty days after such sale has been made, give notice in writing to the sheriff, accompanied with an affidavit to this effect, that the amount claimed is not justly due, that then it shall be the duty of the sheriff to hold the proceeds of such sale subject to the decision of the court upon an issue" made up to determine whether the amount claimed under the lien is justly due. When, therefore, the person to whom the advances are alleged to have been made, or, as in this case, his administrator, gives such notice to the sheriff, accompanied by an affidavit to the effect that the amount claimed under the lien is not justly due, the sheriff is required by the act to hold the proceeds of sale until the issue thus raised between the parties has been determined. In this case we think the affidavit accompanying the notice to the sheriff from the respondent was sufficient to raise the issue contemplated by the act.

*478

It is argued, however, that the affidavit of the respondent does not come up to the requirements of the act, because it not only does not deny that the amount claimed is justly due, but, on the contrary, impliedly admits that the claim was justly due for money paid by appellants to other parties in settlement of an *old debt due by the intestate, B. W. Lawton. We cannot concur in this view. As we have before said, the affidavit required of the creditor before he can obtain a warrant to enforce his lien, must be regarded as an affidavit, to the effect that the amount claimed is then due under the lien, and all that the debtor is required to do in order to raise the issue contemplated by the act, is to deny that allegation. If there is nothing due under the lien, then the creditor can get nothing under the summary remedy provided for by the act, no matter how much the debtor may owe him on other accounts, and for the collection of such other indebtedness he must, like all other creditors, resort to the ordinary process of law. Any other construction would be a manifest perversion of the purpose of the act, as well as a violation of the agreement of the parties. The act gives a special and very summary remedy for the collection of a debt of a particular character, which there is no warrant for extending to debts of any other character. The parties agree that to secure the prompt collection of a debt contracted for the purpose of enabling the debtor to make a crop, that the creditor shall have the promptest and most efficient means for collecting that debt; but they do not agree that the creditor shall have the same prompt and efficient means for collecting any other debt that the debtor may happen to owe. The affidavit required of the debtor will, therefore, be sufficient if it is to the effect that the amount claimed is not justly due under the lien; for otherwise an unfortunate debtor who happened to owe only a small balance under an agricultural lien, and at the same time was otherwise largely indebted to the person holding the lien, would be liable to have his whole crop seized and summarily sold, and the whole proceeds applied to debts due a single creditor, when, perhaps, there were other creditors who, being forced to employ the slower processes incident to the ordinary remedies for the collection of debts, would thereby be entirely deprived of their rights.

*479

The notice to the sheriff having been given by respondent within the time required by the statute, accompanied by an affidavit which, as we have seen, was sufficient to raise the issue contemplated by the act, it was the duty of the sheriff to hold *the proceeds of the sale until such issue should be determined, and the rule was, therefore, properly discharged.

*480

The order of the Circuit judge discharging the rule upon the sheriff, in this case, is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concur.

14 S. C. 480

(Case No. 980.)

SHERIFF v. WELBORN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Execution ⇐112.]

A, a judgment creditor, having purchased his debtor's land at sheriff's sale, brought his action and obtained judgment for the recovery of the land so purchased. The land was subsequently sold by a United States marshal to B under a judgment against the same defendant, of older lien than A's. In action by A against B for the recovery of this land, which was of less value than $1000, and all that the debtor had—Held, that B could not now require A to show that his judgment was based upon a contract of older date than the homestead law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 228; Dec. Dig. ⇐112.]

2. Particularly in this case, where there is no proof that the judgment debtor was the head of a family.

[3. Execution ⇐320.]

A purchaser of land at a marshal's sale proved the judgment and the marshal's deed, but not the execution nor the levy. Held, that he had not established his title, and that the recitals of execution issued and levy made, contained in the deed, were not proof of the facts so recited.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Parr v. Lindler, 40 S. C. 203, 18 S. E. 626.

For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 940–945; Dec. Dig. ⇐320.]

4. Cases reviewed, and Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 441, overruled.

[5. Appeal and Error ⇐671.]

This court can consider only such facts as are stated in the case.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Sawyer, Wallace & Co. v. Macaulay, 18 S. C. 546; Welch v. Gleason, 28 S. C. 250, 5 S. E. 599.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2872; Dec. Dig. ⇐671.]

[6. Homestead ⇐177.]

[Where a judgment was recovered against a debtor, and land sold under execution without claim of homestead being made, such judgment is conclusive of the right of the debtor to a homestead as against him and parties claiming under him.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 347; Dec. Dig. ⇐177.]

[This case is also cited in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 86 S. C. 497, 68 S. E. 669, without specific application.]

Before Pressley, J., Pickens, October, 1879.

Action commenced February 13th, 1879, by Exodus Sheriff against A. J. Welborn, for recovery of possession of a tract of land, formerly the property of N. H. Welborn. Judgment was rendered in the United States District Court for the District of South Carolina, on August 4th, 1874, in favor of the United States against N. H. Welborn. On February 7th, 1877, Exodus Sheriff recovered a judgment against N. H. Welborn in the Court of Common Pleas for Anderson county. A transcript *was filed in Pickens county, and, by virtue of an execution issued thereon, the land of the defendant was sold by the sheriff of Pickens county on August 6th, 1877, and purchased by Exodus Sheriff. On March 25th, 1878, Sheriff obtained a judgment against N. H. Welborn for the possession of this land. On January 6th, 1879, this same tract of land was sold by the United States marshal under the judgment of the United States court, and was purchased by A. J. Welborn, who, it seems, obtained the possession.

*481

The recitals in the marshal's deed were as follows:

To all to whom these presents may concern: I, R. M. Wallace, marshal of the United States for the District of South Carolina, in the state aforesaid, send greeting. Whereas, by virtue of a fi. fa. issued out of the United States District Court for the District of South Carolina, tested the 21st day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and returnable according to law, to me directed, and lodged in my office on the 21st day of October, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, commanding me of the goods and chattels, houses, lands and other hereditaments, and real estate of N. Harvey Welborn, to levy the sum of one thousand and forty dollars, debt and costs, which the United States, on the 25th day of August, 1874, by judgment of the said court, at Greenville, S. C., lately recovered against the said N. Harvey Welborn, I have levied upon a certain tract of land in the District of South Carolina, in the county of Pickens aforesaid, hereinafter more particularly described. And whereas, after due and legal notice, the said tract of land was, on the 6th day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, being the first Monday in the said month, between the hours of eleven in the forenoon and three o'clock in the afternoon of that day, at the court-house in Pickens county, openly, publicly and fairly, and according to the usage and customs of vendues, by me sold for and towards satisfaction of the said judgment and execution, unto A. J. Welborn, for the sum of one hundred and thirty dollars, he being at that price, the highest and last bidder for the same.

The other facts of the case are stated in the opinion. The jury found for the plaintiff and defendant appealed.

Messrs. Earle, Wells & Taylor, for appellant.

Mr. A. Blythe, contra.

*482

*March 1st, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. This was an action to recover possession of a tract of land originally belonging to one N. H. Welborn, under whom both parties claimed title. The plaintiff's title was derived from a sale made by the sheriff under an execution issued to enforce a judgment recovered by plaintiff against said N. H. Welborn, a transcript of which was docketed in the county where the land in dispute is situate, on June 5th, 1877. The plaintiff having bought the land at this sale, brought an action against the judgment debtor to recover possession and recovered a judgment therein. It appeared on this trial that "this was the only land the said N. Harvey Welborn owned, and he resided thereon as his home, and the said land was not worth more than one thousand dollars."

The plaintiff having proved his title closed, when a motion for a nonsuit was made upon the ground that the land in question being the homestead of the said N. H. Welborn, the sheriff could not make a valid sale of it under execution, and therefore the plaintiff had no title. This motion was refused upon the ground "that plaintiff's recovery of the land in his action against N. H. Welborn was conclusive of the question of his right of homestead, and it was therefore unnecessary to prove, in this case, that the judgment of Exodus Sheriff v. N. H. Welborn, was upon a cause of action existing prior to 1868;" and the defendant excepted.

This exception raises the first point presented by this appeal. In addition to the reason given by the Circuit judge for refusing the motion, which is quite conclusive, (inasmuch as the failure to interpose the claim of homestead on the trial of the former action to recover possession of this land effectually prevents not only the said N. H. Welborn, but the defendant, who claims under him, from now raising that question,) we may add that it nowhere appears that N. H. Welborn ever could have claimed a homestead in that or any other land, inasmuch as it nowhere appears that he was the head of a family. It is very clear, therefore, that the motion for a nonsuit was properly refused.

The defendant claimed title through a sale purporting to have been made by the United States marshal under a judgment re*covered in the United States court, prior in date to that under which the plaintiff claimed, and, to support his claim, offered in evidence the certified record of said judgment with the deed from the marshal, but failed to produce any execution issued to enforce the judgment or account for its non-production, and failed to prove any levy, but relied on the recitals in the marshal's deed, a copy of which is set out in the "case." The Circuit judge held "that the failure by appellant to introduce on the trial any execution from the United States court or any levy by its proper officer," was a deficiency fatal to appellant's case, and that such deficiency "could not be supplied by the recitals in the deed, which, standing alone, could not show title in the appellant;" to all of which defendant excepted. So that the question presented by this exception is, whether a sale under an execution can be proved by the mere recitals in the deed of the officer making such sale, or must the execution be produced, or in case of its loss must secondary evidence of its existence and contents be adduced?

*483

For the purposes of this case, a sale by the United States marshal under an execution issuing out of the United States court, may be regarded as standing upon the same footing and governed by the same principles as a sale made by the sheriff under an execution issuing out of the state court. There can be no doubt but that a judgment merely will not authorize the sheriff to make a valid sale of land. There must not only be an execution conferring upon him authority to make such sale, and a levy made under such execution, but there must be an execution which has not lost its active energy; for while a sheriff may sell under an execution, which, at the time of the sale, has lost its active energy, provided the levy has been made before, (Gibbes v. Mitchell, 2 Bay 120; Toomer v. Purkey, 1 Mills' Const. R. 323 [12 Am. Dec. 634]; Wheaton v. Sexton, 4 Wheat. 503 [4 L. Ed. 626]; Remington v. Linthicum, 14 Pet. 84 [10 L. Ed. 364]) yet if he undertakes to make a sale of lands under an execution, which has lost its active energy before he has made a levy,† the sale will be absolutely void. Sims v. Randall, 2 Bay 524.

*484

*It is contended, however, that conceding all this, yet it is not necessary to offer the execution in evidence and the levy made under it, but that this may be supplied by the recitals in the sheriff's deed. This, it seems to us, would be an anomaly. The validity of the sale depends upon the question whether the officer making it had authority so to do, and to receive his mere assertion, in the form of a recital in his deed as proof of his authority, would look very much like allowing a person to make evidence for himself. The execution issuing out of and under the seal of the court is the sheriff's authority to sell, and without it the sale would be a nullity. It would seem, therefore, that the highest and best evidence would be the mandate of the court bearing its seal, and to say that the mere assertion of the officer that he had acted under and by authority of such mandate, supersedes the necessity for producing such mandate, would be to place it in the power of the officer to sell the property of the citizen without any authority at all. But to sustain the position taken by the appellant, the case of Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, 2 Bay 441, is cited, and that case does sustain the proposition that it is not necessary to introduce the execution in proof of a title claimed under a sheriff's sale, but that the recitals in the sheriff's deed will be sufficient evidence of his authority to sell. That case, however, was decided as far back as 1802, by a divided court, and does not seem to have been since recognized, or even referred to by the court in any case that we have been able to find. On the contrary, the proposition established by it has been again and again ignored, and the case cannot be regarded as authority. In Barkley v. Screven, 1 N. & McC. 408, decided in 1819, the question was whether it was necessary to introduce all the intermediate executions to establish a title under a sheriff's sale, and the court held that all that was necessary was the judgment and the execution under which the sale was made, and that it was unnecessary to introduce all the intermediate executions. In Vance v. Reardon, 2 N. & McC. 299, decided in 1820, it was held that to make out a title to personal property under a sheriff's sale, the production of the execution under which the property was sold was indispensable. Johnson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, uses this language: "This question is, I think, *conclusively settled by this court in the case of Barkley v. Screven, supra, in which it was determined that although it was not necessary to produce all the executions intervening between the judgment and that under which the sale was made, the latter was indispensable, as the authority under which the sheriff acted, and that the judgment on which it was founded ought also to be introduced. It is true, that in that case lands were the subject of litigation, but I am unable to see any reason why the rule will not apply equally to personal property." In Richardson v. Broughton, 2 N. & McC. 417, decided in 1820, it was held that where a person claims land under a sheriff's sale, the judgment and execution under which the land was sold must be produced in evidence. In Smith v. Libby, (MS., decision in 1822,) 2 Rice's Dig. 328, a plaintiff in an action of trespass to try titles, as a part of his title relied upon a sale made by the sheriff. He produced the judgment and proved the sale, but could not introduce the execution, as it was not to be found either in the clerk's or sheriff's office after diligent search. The court held that the clerk's office being the proper repository of all process issuing from the court, after the purpose for which it was issued had been accomplished, proof that the execution in question was not to be found there after diligent search, was sufficient

*485

† This fact, viz., that the levy had not been made until after the execution had lost its active energy, does not appear in the case as reported in Bay, but in Toomer v. Purkey, 1 Mills' Const. R. 323 [12 Am. Dec. 634], it is stated as distinguishing the one case from the other.

proof of its loss. In Harrison v. Maxwell, 2 N. & McC. 349 [10 Am. Dec. 611], the question was as to the effect of a misrecital of the fi. fa. in the sheriff's deed, and, in speaking of the effect of recitals in the sheriff's deed, the court uses this language, (the italics being ours): "It is not the recital of a power or authority to sell and convey which gives the right, nor is it evidence of the right. * * * The levy and sale invest him with the title, so far as to enable him to convey, and it is incumbent on the party claiming under him to show these powers; the recital will not do it." In Sawyer v. Leard, 8 Rich. 271, the question was whether the sheriff should be allowed to testify that he had not levied on the land in dispute, and the court, in discussing that question, says: "It may be shown that the sheriff had no execution justifying his levy and sale, and, therefore, no authority to sell, as this contradicts only a recital in his deed, which is not even prima facie evidence of his official authority."

*486

*Now it is very clear that if the court had intended to be governed by the doctrine laid down in Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, none of the foregoing decisions could have been made.

The cases cited by the appellant in his brief to sustain the rule laid down in Hopkins v. De Graffenreid, do not, in our judgment have that effect. Henry v. Ferguson, 1 Bail. 513, was a case in which the defendant in an action of trespass to try titles, not being the judgment debtor, undertook to question the regularity of the judgment under which the plaintiff claimed, and it was held that a purchaser at sheriff's sale was not bound to examine into the regularity of the proceedings on which the judgment under which the sale is made was founded, and that third persons cannot take advantage of such irregularities. It is difficult to see how this case can be regarded as either recognizing or sustaining Hopkins v. De Graffenreid. In Ingram v. Belk, 2 Strob. 207 [47 Am. Dec. 591], the questions were as to the regularity of the judgment and execution under which the sale was made, and it was again held that third persons could not take advantage of mere irregularities; that an execution, issued more than a year and a day after the judgment was rendered, was not void but voidable merely, and a purchase made under it before it had been set aside was good. But there is nothing in the case which warrants the idea that mere recital in a sheriff's deed would supersede the necessity for proof of the execution and levy under which the sheriff sells. In Floyd v. Mintsey, 5 Rich. 365, the question was as to the sufficiency of the evidence offered to establish the judgment under which it was claimed that the land was sold, and although the Circuit judge, in his report, does say "if the existence of a judgment had been proved, I suppose evidence of fi. fa. might have been derived from the sheriff's deed," yet the Court of Appeals say nothing whatever upon this point; in fact there was nothing in the case to call for any expression of opinion as to the effect which should be given to recitals in a sheriff's deed. In Stuckey v. Crosswell, 12 Rich. 278, there are some remarks made which seem to countenance the idea that the recitals in a sheriff's deed might supersede the necessity for introducing the execution and proving the levy and sale made thereunder, but that was not the point under consider*ation in that case, and it cannot be regarded as deciding the question. In addition to this, the action in that case was against the defendant in the execution, and as the doctrine is well established that the sheriff, in making the sale, acts as the defendant's agent, it may very well be that such defendant would be estopped from denying the recitals in the deed of the sheriff, which is, in law, his own deed, and in that way such recitals might be regarded as proof of the facts so recited as against the defendant in the execution, while they would be no evidence against a third person. In Fretwell v. Neal, 11 Rich. Eq. 559, Wardlaw, Ch., in the Circuit decree, says that there was prima facie proof of the existence and loss of the execution under which the property in question was sold, and Johnston, Ch., in delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The great lapse of time which has occurred tends very much to support the defendant's case. This is true not only in supplying lost papers, but in raising the presumption that there was no wrong committed." This case, therefore, cannot be regarded as affording the slightest support to the doctrine laid down in Hopkins v. De Graffenreid.

*487

From this review of the authorities it is very manifest that the doctrine laid down in Hopkins v. De Graffenreid has never been recognized in any subsequent case, but, on the contrary, the court has made several decisions which not only ignore that doctrine but are plainly inconsistent with it. Under these circumstances, and in view of what we understand to have been the universal practice in regard to the necessity for producing the execution under which the sheriff sells, and proving a levy and sale thereunder, we feel justified in declaring that the case of Hopkins v. De Graffenreid is not authority.

It is true that it is stated in appellant's second exception that search had been made for the execution under which the marshal sold, and that it could not be found, but this fact does not appear in the "case" as submitted here, and, therefore, as we have frequently had occasion to say, it cannot be considered.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. *488

*(Case No. 981.)

MOTES v. MADDEN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Limitation of Actions ⇐102.]

Two months before attaining his majority, a ward executed and delivered to his guardian a receipt for $5475.49 "on final settlement in full of his guardianship accounts with me;" and a copy was filed in the office where guardians' returns were required by law to be filed; this receipt, in fact, represented the balance due upon settlement, and payments were afterwards, and from time to time, made by the guardian to the ward. In a suit upon the guardianship bond instituted by the ward, nine years afterwards—Held, that as to the sureties, the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Owens v. Watts, 24 S. C. 79; Roberts v. Downs, Id. 588; Waldrop v. Leaman, 30 S. C. 449, 9 S. E. 466.

For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 505; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

2. Smith v. Caldwell, 15 Rich. 365, recognized and followed.

[This case is also cited in Ariail v. Ariail, 29 S. C. 96, 7 S. E. 35, as to the defense of infancy.]

Before Kershaw, J., Laurens, September, 1880.

In this case, Hon. T. B. FRASER, judge of the Third Circuit sat in the place of Chief Justice SIMPSON, who had been of counsel in the court below. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Simpson & Holmes and Geo. Johnstone, for appellants.

Messrs. R. P. Todd and B. W. Ball, contra.

March 4th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by FRASER, A. A. J. Henry Madden, one of the defendants, was appointed by the Court of Equity for Laurens District, guardian of the plaintiff, and gave his bond as such on March 29th, 1854, in the penal sum of $3000, with William D. Watts and Samuel R. Todd as sureties.

On December 23d, 1868, about two months before plaintiff arrived at the age of twenty-one years, at the request of his said guardian, he went into the office of H. L. McGowan, then commissioner in equity for Laurens District, and executed a receipt in full to his guardian in the following words:

*489

*"December 23d, 1868.

"Received of Henry Madden, my guardian, on final settlement, five thousand four hundred and seventy-five dollars and forty-nine cents in full of his guardianship account with me.

"John H. Motes.

"Test—H. L. McGowan."

On the same day the guardian placed a copy of this receipt on file in the office of the commissioner in equity for Laurens District "as his closing return on final settlement of his guardianship of the plaintiff's estate." He carried away with him the original receipt and statement of account on which the receipt was based, and retained possession of them until the commencement of this action, February 15th, 1878.

No money was paid when this receipt was signed, but plaintiff admits that he received afterwards about $2200 in land, a wagon, a horse and buggy, &c. The guardian claims in his testimony that the whole amount due was afterwards paid by him to plaintiff.

After this receipt was given and this final return made, Henry Madden, the guardian, was sued to judgment in two cases: Samuel R. Todd v. Henry Madden, judgment $690.37, costs $21.75, interest from May 15th, 1871, and Rebecca Motes v. Henry Madden, judgment $485, costs $17.15, interest from January 1st, 1871, both of which are still unsatisfied. During this same period Henry Madden disposed of some of his property to other persons, of the value of which there is no evidence, before the court.

Regular annual returns were made by the guardian in the office of the commissioner in equity for Laurens District until this final return.

The guardian was the grandfather of plaintiff. It does not appear that there was any actual notice given to the sureties of the character or existence of this receipt or of the final return.

Henry Madden, the guardian, has died since the commencement of these proceedings, and his estate is properly represented as well as that of W. D. Watts, one of the sureties.

Plaintiff arrived at majority February 21st,

*490

1869, and this *action was commenced February 15th, 1878. The action was, therefore, commenced eight years eleven months and twenty-four days after he came of age.

The referee, James M. Baxter, sustained the plea of the statute of limitations as to the sureties, but held that the estate of the guardian is still liable, and recommended that the representatives of his estate should be allowed to show any further payments made by the guardian in addition to those shown on the reference.

The report of the referee was confirmed by the Circuit judge, and from this decree an appeal has been taken to this court.

"I. Because his Honor erred in not sustaining the exceptions of the plaintiff to the report of the referee, to wit:

"1. That the referee having found as a matter of fact that at the time the receipt was given the plaintiff herein was a minor, and that no money was paid then by Henry Madden to the plaintiff, it is submitted that the referee erred in finding, as a conclusion of law, that said receipt was not void but voidable, and that the plaintiff's right of recovery against the sureties was barred by the statute of limitations.

"2. That the referee having found the receipt represented no payment, but stands as an accounting, fixing the liability of Madden, the guardian, to the plaintiff, his ward, it is submitted that the referee erred in his conclusion that this was a material variation of the relation of principal and surety between Madden and his sureties, and in its operation upon the sureties inequitable and fraudulent.

"3. That the referee erred in not stating the accounts between plaintiff and defendant, Madden, and in leaving the reference open for further credits to be established by the representatives of Madden.

"II. Because there was no act of plaintiff which would release the sureties.

"Because if the sureties should be relieved at all it should only be to the extent of the injury shown to have resulted from the act of plaintiff."

The main question in the case is whether the sureties in the *guardianship bond of Henry Madden are protected by the plea of the statute of limitation.

*491

Here was a receipt in full, which purported to be a final execution of his trust by the guardian, and a copy thereof filed in the proper office as a final return. It is true the ward was then a minor, and no consideration was then given either in money or other property, though large payments were afterwards made in pursuance, it may be assumed, of the understanding between the guardian and his ward.

In Moore v. Porcher, Bail. Eq. 197, Chancellor Harper, in a Circuit decree which was affirmed in the Court of Appeals, "per curiam," uses the following language: "Without any authority to the purpose, I am of the opinion, from the reason and analogy of the law, that when a trustee does an act which purports to be a final execution of his trust, the statute begins to run from that time so as to bar an account." * * * "When he does an act purporting to be an execution of the trust, he shakes off the character of trustee."

In Glover v. Lott, 1 Strob. Eq. 79, a receipt was given by a minor, about seventeen years of age, for $175.12½ in full of her distributive share in an estate. She was married in June following the date of the receipt, February 15th, 1833. In December following the executor made his final return in the Ordinary's office, passing his accounts in which this payment was regularly entered. The court says "that the husband was entitled to demand and receive this legacy on his marriage. * * * It is no violent presumption to say that both complainants (husband and wife) knew, in 1833, that defendant had done an act purporting to be a discharge of his trust. If it was effectual he was discharged. If it was ineffectual the complainants were put on the assertion of their rights," and the plea of the statute was sustained.

In Coleman v. Davis, 2 Strob. Eq. 341, in which the husband, who was a minor, had given a receipt for a legacy to his wife, the Court of Appeals, in reversing the decree on Circuit, says: "The release was a void contract by reason of infancy. But the transaction out of which it arose gave currency to the statute, and *having neglected his remedy for four years after he attained majority, he is barred."

*492

In Payne v. Harris, 3 Strob. Eq. 43, is found the following dictum in the Circuit decree, which decree was affirmed in the Court of Appeals: "I take it that an act done in a public office, open for the information of parties interested, must be taken notice of by them, and that the statute obtained currency against the parties mentioned from the date of the division." Johnston Chancellor.

In Long v. Cason, 4 Rich. Eq. 60, Cason, the guardian, obtained, on his own motion and without the presence of any person authorized to represent his wards, a decree from the Ordinary, fixing the amount of his liability. The court says in reference to this: "These acts of Cason, purporting to be a full execution of his trust, place him in the character of a stranger to his former wards and their new guardians, and put them on the assertion of their rights at the hazard of losing those rights by lapse of time." The reference is to these acts in a public office, and the dictum of Chancellor Johnston, in Payne v. Harris, is quoted with approval as applicable thereto.

It seems to be the only proper conclusion that this receipt, given by the plaintiff to his guardian in full of his guardianship account, purported to be a termination of his trust, and that its being used as evidence of a final settlement by placing a copy on file in the proper office, operated as notice to all interested, including the sureties to the guardianship bond.

If this were all, there can be no doubt that all parties, guardian and sureties, would be entitled to claim that the statute commenced to run in their favor from the time the ward came of age. It is claimed, however, that no money was paid at the time, and that full payment has never been made, as was agreed between the guardian and ward when the receipt was given, and that the liability of the guardian thus continued as to himself still exists also as to the sureties. It may be conceded that the guardian is not entitled to plead the statute because of his private agreement with his ward and his subsequent admissions, but it does not appear by what authority the sureties are to be bound by the continuance of his liability beyond the period fixed by a long *line of decided cases for the currency of the statute. The guardian and ward unite in doing an act which, on its face, put the statute in operation, and by a private arrangement, to which the sureties are not parties, and of which they have no notice, so arrange as to postpone for years the time when the statute will begin to run. The sureties may well say that they are not parties to such a compact.

*493

In Smith v. Caldwell, 15 Rich. 365, it is held that when one payment is made by one joint contractor within four years after the accrual of the cause of action, it makes a new starting point as to all of them; but that a second payment within four years from this first payment, but more than four years after the first accrual of the cause of action, does not prevent the bar of the statute as to those joint contractors not concerned in making such second payment. "It does not follow that the implication which arises (says the court) from the personal act of a contractor, and which contemplates a period of four years, must, by a new implication, attach also for another period of four years to a new promise made by a co-contractor without the knowledge of the former." "The original contract looked to its fulfillment or its bar by the statute." "A distinction between the original contract and the new promise in reference to the authority of one joint contractor to bind the other does annex the statute to the contract."

The accrual of the cause of action takes place when this act is done purporting to terminate the trust, as it does upon the maturity of a note. The creditor and one joint contractor cannot extend the time by any transaction between themselves in the latter case, and it is but a fair application of the principle to hold that a guardian and ward cannot, by a private agreement between themselves, extend the liability of the sureties against the form and effect of a solemn and public act done by them, which, on its face, gives currency to the statute, to the protection of which they are entitled as a part of their original covenant of suretyship.

In this view of the case it is unimportant to consider whether the act of the plaintiff, in signing the receipt while a minor, was void or voidable only, or whether the dealing between the guardian *and ward was such as of itself to discharge the sureties in whole or in part from their obligation, except as above indicated, to give currency to the statute from the time of his attaining his majority. From this time to the commencement of the action is nearly nine years, and no acknowledgment of liability or promise to pay, made by the guardian after the statute commenced to run and within four years thereafter, can extend the liability to the time of the commencement of this action. A promise made on the very last day of the first four years, if not made until then, could not, on the principle of Smith v. Caldwell, extend the liability to the commencement of this action, nearly five years after.

*494

Under the special circumstances of this case, the referee not being satisfied to close the accounting, we see no good reason why the representative of Henry Madden may not be very properly allowed to prove, within a reasonable time, any other payments made by him towards the extinguishment of the claim admitted to have been just at the date of the receipt.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 494

(Case No. 982.)

SULLIVAN v. SULLIVAN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Pleading ⇐216.]

Demurrer to complaint upon the ground that several causes of action have been improperly united, does not raise the question whether the plaintiff, under the facts stated, is entitled to any or all of the relief which he demands.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 535-539; Dec. Dig. ⇐216.]

[2. Pleading ⇐216.]

Therefore, where two causes of action were not improperly united, the demurrer was overruled, without any inquiry as to the different kinds of relief demanded, or whether such relief was appropriate to the case made by the allegations of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 535-539; Dec. Dig. ⇐216.]

[3. Action ⇐45; Corporations ⇐357.]

There is no misjoinder of causes of action where a single action is brought upon a note and upon an account, against a debtor corporation, and also against its directors, who are made, by the act of incorporation (under *certain contingencies alleged in the complaint to have happened) jointly and severally liable for all debts of the corporation.

*495

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 437; Dec. Dig. ⇐45; Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1501; Dec. Dig. ⇐357.]

[4. Corporations ⇐325.]

The liability of the directors under this statute—the general incorporation act, General Statutes, Chapter LXIV.—arises ex contractu, not ex delicto.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hall & Co. v. Klinck, 25 S. C. 352, 60 Am. Rep. 505.

For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1442, 1457, 1458; Dec. Dig. ⇐325.]

[5. Corporations ⇐357.]

The permission given to creditors by Section 35 of this chapter, to sue the corporation and the directors, separately, does not forbid their joinder in one action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1500, 1501; Dec. Dig. ⇐357.]

[6. Corporations ⇐357.]

The action may be single, although, under the provisions of Section 33, the liability of the corporation and of the directors, may not be co-extensive; the judgments may be separate, if necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1500, 1501; Dec. Dig. ⟸357.]

[7. Corporations ⟸215.]

[Cited in Flenniken v. Marshall, 43 S. C. 83, 20 S. E. 788, 28 L. R. A. 402, to the point that the statutory liability imposed is not a penalty.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 826–828, 845–848, 852, 854; Dec. Dig. ⟸215.]

[This case is also cited in Bird & Co. v. Calvert, 22 S. C. 297, without specific application.]

Before Thomson, J., Greenville, April, 1880.

Action commenced February 17th, 1880, by Hewlet Sullivan against the Sullivan Manufacturing Company, William D. Sullivan, assignee, and G. W. Sullivan, Sr., G. W. Sullivan, Jr., D. D. Moore, and P. P. Cureton, as directors. The case is sufficiently stated in the opinion of this court.

[For subsequent opinion, see 20 S. C. 79.]

Mr. M. F. Ansel, for appellant.

The Court of Equity has no jurisdiction in this case, and this objection never comes too late. Rich. Eq. Cas. 249; 14 Rich. Eq. 154. It is of no consequence in what way this objection is taken. Chev. 5. The plaintiff cannot sue here, because he has no judgment; he has not exhausted his legal remedies. 1 S. C. 96; 14 Rich. Eq. 154; 2 McC. Ch. 416; 4 Rich. Eq. 198; 1 S. C. 192; 12 S. C. 461; 13 S. C. 449. The assignment by the corporation does not dissolve it, nor put it upon the footing of a person deceased. Burr. on Assign. 85, 401 (3d ed). Here several causes of action have been improperly joined together. Wiles v. Suydam, 64 N. Y. 173; 53 Barb. 238–245; Pomeroy's Rem., §§ 474–5; 1 N. Y. 47–76; 35 N. Y. 412.

See 14 Stat. 299, § 35, and Code, § 190.

Messrs. W. E. Earle and J. S. Cothran, same side.

Mr. W. H. Perry, contra.

*496

*March 5th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. This was an action on a note made by the defendant company to the plaintiff, and on an account for cotton sold and delivered by the plaintiff to said company. The plaintiff, in his complaint, alleged the creation of the corporation under an act entitled "An act to regulate the formation of corporations," passed December 10th, 1869, which is incorporated in the General Statutes, Chapter LXIV., p. 356; the making of the note; the sale and delivery of the cotton; that the corporation is insolvent; that the defendant, George W. Sullivan, Sr., claims that the corporation is indebted to him in a very large amount, which claim, the plaintiff alleges, is fraudulent, pretensive and without consideration; that the defendants named as such are directors of the corporation; that the officers of the corporation have executed a deed of assignment of all of the property of the corporation to the defendant, William D. Sullivan, which is alleged to be fraudulent, null and void, and made with intent to defraud the creditors of said corporation; that the defendants who are named as directors, by virtue of certain acts and omissions set out in the complaint, have become jointly and severally liable for the debts of the corporation, and that the members or stockholders of said company have likewise become jointly and severally liable for the debts of the company, by virtue of certain provisions of the act under which the company was formed, and that the provisions of the charter of said company have been violated in many other particulars not specifically set forth. The plaintiff then demands judgment: First. Against the company for the amount due on the note and account. Second. Judgment against the defendants named as directors for the said amount. Third. That the corporation be dissolved. Fourth. That the assignment to William D. Sullivan be set aside. Fifth. That the company and its officers be restrained from exercising any of its corporate rights, from collecting any debts due to or paying any debts due by said company, or in any way disposing of the effects of the company. Sixth. That a receiver may be appointed. Seventh. For such other and further relief as may be just. To this complaint separate demurrers, accompanied by separate answers, have been filed by *the corporation, by George W. Sullivan, Sr., and by George W. Sullivan, Jr.; all of the demurrers being upon the ground that several causes of action have been improperly united in the complaint. The Circuit judge overruled the demurrers, and from his judgment this appeal has been taken.

*497

It will thus be seen that the only question before us is, whether the demurrers were properly overruled, and, therefore, many of the questions discussed in the argument growing out of the merits of the case, are not properly before us and cannot now be considered.

The sole question raised by the demurrers is, whether several causes of action have been improperly joined in the complaint? and to that question we propose strictly to confine our attention. To determine this question it will be necessary to inquire, first, what are the causes of action in this case? and next, whether they are such as can be properly joined? Pomeroy, in his work on Remedies, after adverting to the difficulty of giving any precise definition of the term "cause of action," proceeds, in Section 453, p. 487, to say: "Every judicial action must, therefore, involve the following elements: A primary right possessed by the plaintiff and a corresponding primary duty devolving upon the defendant; a delict or wrong done by the defendant which consisted in a breach of such primary right and duty. * * * Of these elements the primary right and duty and the delict or wrong combined, constitute the cause of action in the legal sense of the term, as used in the codes of the several states." And again: in Section 519, p. 555, he says: "The cause of action, therefore, must always consist of two facts. First. The plaintiff's primary right and the defendant's corresponding primary duty. * * * Second. The delict or wrongful act or omission of the defendant by which the primary right and duty have been violated. * * * The primary right and duty, by themselves, are not the cause of action, because, when existing by themselves unbroken by the defendant's wrong, they do not give rise to any action. * * * Much less can the delict or wrong by itself be the cause of action, because, without the primary right and duty of the parties to act upon, it does not create any right of action or remedial right."

*498

*In Bliss on Code Pleading, § 113, it is said: "We have defined an action to be a proceeding for the prevention or redress of a wrong. The cause of action, then, is the wrong. * * * The wrong may be done by the denial or by the refusal to respond to an obligation." And, in Section 126, the same author says: "The cause of action has been described as being a legal wrong committed against, or an infringement of, some legal right of the complaining party." Both of these writers on the code warn us, in considering questions like the one now under consideration, against confounding "the cause of action" with "the object of the action." The latter is confined to the relief sought, and it is very obvious that for a single cause of action different kinds of relief may be obtained. It is especially important, in this case, to keep this distinction in mind; for, as the Circuit judge has well said: "An examination of the grounds of the demurrers will disclose that the objections are not so much to causes of action improperly united as to several but connected modes of relief sought by the plaintiff;" and certainly in the argument here, on behalf of the appellant, this distinction was ignored. The question before us is not whether the plaintiff is entitled to all or any portion of the relief demanded in his complaint, or whether he has stated a case under which he can properly demand all or any of the relief asked for, but our sole inquiry is, whether he has joined several causes of action which cannot properly be united in the same action. What, then, are the causes of action in the case under consideration? What are the primary rights of the plaintiff, which he alleges have been violated, and what are the corresponding primary duties of the defendants which are alleged not to have been performed? What are the legal wrongs which are alleged to have been committed by the defendants against the legal rights of the plaintiff? These are the questions for us to consider, and they must not be confounded with any inquiry into the different kinds of relief demanded by the plaintiff, or whether all or any portion of such relief is inappropriate to the case made by the plaintiff's allegations. Looking at these questions in the light of the principles laid down by the two standard authors upon the subject of pleading under the code, from whose works the above citations have *been made, it seems plain that the primary rights asserted by the plaintiff are to have payment of the two debts mentioned in his complaint—the note and the account—and the primary duties which, he alleges, devolve not only upon the corporation, but also upon the other defendants, are to pay those debts, which duties, he alleges, have not been performed. The causes of action are the legal wrongs alleged to have been done in violation of the plaintiff's legal rights by withholding payment of the two debts mentioned in the complaint, and these wrongs are alleged to have been done by the defendants, who are named as directors, as well as by the corporation itself. Practically, therefore, the allegations of the plaintiff amount to this: that he holds two claims against the defendant company, one in the form of a note, and the other in the form of an open account, which the other defendants, who are named as directors, by reason of certain acts and omissions on their part, are also liable to pay. It seems to us clear that there is no improper joinder of different causes of action here, any more than there would be if a creditor holding two notes against the same person, on which there were the same sureties, should bring an action on these notes against the principal debtor and the sureties jointly. Both causes of action, in this case, arise out of contract, and the breaches alleged are that all of the defendants being under obligation to perform the contracts—the corporation by reason of its promises, and the directors by reason of having done and omitted to do the acts alleged against them in the complaint, which, under the charter, makes them also liable for the debts of the company—have failed to perform those obligations.

*499

The plaintiff's cause of action arising out of the note, consists of the two elements: First. His right to receive payment of the amount mentioned therein. Second. The failure of the parties, whose duty it was to make such payment, to perform that duty; and the fact that the duty of the corporation to pay springs from its promise, while that of the directors arises from certain acts and omissions which, under the charter, devolve this duty upon them also, can make no difference. They—both corporation and directors—have violated the same right of plaintiff to have payment of his debt, and the cause of action against both is, in fact, *the same. The legal wrong done to the plaintiff is done alike by the directors as by the corporation. The same remarks will apply to the cause of action growing out of the account.

*500

It is argued, however, that the liability of the directors under the charter does not rest upon contract, but is for a tort, or is in the nature of tort, while that of the corporation confessedly grows out of contract. We cannot concur in this view.

The language of the act is, that on the contingencies named therein, the directors "shall be jointly and severally liable for all debts," &c. This language is not appropriate to the purpose of imposing a penalty, but rather conveys the idea that, on the contingencies mentioned, the directors shall be regarded as having assumed the payment of the debts of the company. It does not declare that they shall forfeit a certain sum of money, or the amount of their stock, or that they shall pay a certain penalty, but that they shall become liable for the payment of the debts—that is, they shall assume the payment of them. When these defendants accepted the position of directors of a company, organized under an act declaring that, in certain contingencies, they should become liable for the debts of the company, they must be regarded as having agreed that, if such contingencies should happen, they would pay the debts of the company. Their liability, therefore, must be regarded as arising ex contractu and not ex delicto. This view is strengthened by the language used in Section 35 of the act under which the defendant company was organized: "When any of the officers of such a company are liable to pay the debts of the company, or any part thereof, any person to whom they are so liable may have an action against any one or more of said officers, and the complaint in such action shall state the claims against the company and the grounds on which the plaintiff expects to charge the defendants personally; and such action may be brought notwithstanding the pendency of an action against the company for the recovery of the same claim or demand, and both of the actions may be prosecuted until the plaintiff obtains payment of his debt and the costs of both actions." This language clearly implies that the action against the officers is an action ex contractu and not an action ex delicto, *sounding in damages; that it is brought to recover the amount of the claim or demand, and not a penalty or forfeiture.

*501

Again, it is argued that the provisions of the section just quoted imply that the corporation and the directors cannot be sued in the same action. We think the inference is the other way. The language of the section is permissive merely, not imperative. It does not forbid uniting these parties in the same action, it only permits a separate action to be brought against the officers, while another action is pending against the corporation for the same claim or demand, and the very fact that the legislature thought it necessary to grant such permission implies that, without it, the action would have to be joint.

This section also shows clearly another thing, which meets one of the points made in the argument here, and that is that it is not necessary to establish the debt against the corporation before commencing action against the officers.

It is very true that the liability of the directors may not be co-extensive in amount with that of the corporation. For example, a failure to comply with the provisions of Section 33 does not render the directors liable to pay the whole amount of the debts of the company, but only makes them liable to the extent which such debts exceed double the amount of the capital stock paid in, but this constitutes no objection to their being joined in the same action with the corporation, inasmuch as there is no difficulty under the code in entering separate judgments against several defendants. Trimmier v. Thomson, 10 S. C. 164.

It may be that no judgment should be rendered in this case in favor of the plaintiff until all the creditors of the corporation are called in, and that no judgment can be rendered against the defendants as stockholders (although no such judgment seems to be demanded,) until all the other stockholders are made parties, but there is no demurrer for defect of parties, and these questions are not now properly before us, and need not, therefore, be considered.

The judgment of the Circuit Court overruling the demurrers is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *502

*(Case No. 983.)

FRIPP v. WILLIAMS, BIRNIE & CO.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐798.]

Motion to dismiss appeal not entertained, the proper notice not having been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3155; Dec. Dig. ⇐798.]

[2. Evidence ⇐249.]

The statements made by a partner after dissolution of the partnership, concerning a debt due by the firm, is competent evidence against the other partner, when offered after evidence aliunde has been introduced of the partnership, and of the existence of such debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 971; Dec. Dig. ⇐249.]

[3. Trial ⟸76.]

Objection to the competency of evidence not taken at the time when the evidence is offered, cannot be afterwards raised.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Bowen v. Atlantic & F. B. V. R. Co., 17 S. C. 578; Emory v. Hazard Powder Co., 22 S. C. 482, 53 Am. Rep. 730.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 183; Dec. Dig. ⟸76.]

[4. Partnership ⟸217.]

A loan was obtained by a partnership firm from a bank upon the deposit of certain railroad securities, and afterwards, upon the order of the firm written by one of the partners, such securities were surrendered to an agent of the firm in exchange for certain municipal bonds belonging to a third party, fraudulently so applied by such partner, which bonds were subsequently sold by the bank and the proceeds credited upon the indebtedness of the firm. In an action by the owner of these bonds against the firm for their recovery, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show, in order to fix a liability upon the innocent partner, that the railroad securities went back into the assets of the firm, or in some way were of benefit to the firm after they were released.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 419; Dec. Dig. ⟸217.]

[5. Trial ⟸183.]

Article IV., Section 26, of the constitution of this state, which provides that judges shall not charge juries in respect to matters of fact, considered.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hay v. Carolina, etc., Railway Co., 41 S. C. 545, 19 S. E. 976; Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 517, 25 S. E. 797.

For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. ⟸183.]

Before Pressley, J., Charleston, March, 1880.

This was an action commenced August 7th, 1879, by Florian C. Mey against George W. Williams and William Birnie, copartners, doing business under the firm name of Williams, Birnie & Co., for the recovery of thirty-four bonds of the city of Savannah, new, of the par value of $33,500. F. C. Mey having afterwards died, Harriet A. Fripp and Edward McCrady, Jr., executors of his will, were substituted upon the record as plaintiffs. Williams defended; Birnie was not served.

The defendants were partners, doing a general commission and banking business in the city of New York, from May 1st, 1877, until May 20th, 1879. On April 29th, 1879, F. C.

*503

Mey sent *to Williams, Birnie & Co., thirty-three bonds of city of Savannah, new, for $1,000 each, and one like bond for $500, with instructions to collect the past-due coupons, and to hire a box in the vault of the safe deposit company, and to put the bonds in the box, and keep the key until he went to New York in the summer. These instructions were carried out, according to the statements in letters received by Mey from Williams, Birnie & Co., one of which enclosed a receipt for $15, for one year's hire of box in the safe deposit company's vault. This receipt was dated May 2d, 1879, and was in the names of "William Birnie and Florian C. Mey." This receipt was sent to Mey, enclosed in a letter signed Williams, Birnie & Co., which stated that they had placed the key in an envelope addressed to him, and put in their safe. Mey made no complaint as to the form of the receipt.

Birnie obtained large loans from the Fourth National Bank of New York, in the name of the firm, upon the credit of collaterals deposited, Greenville and Columbia R. R. bonds and others, without the knowledge of Williams, and without any entries upon their books showing such loans. One loan of August, 1877, for $25,000, and one of March, 1879, for $15,000, were secured by these railroad bonds and others. On May 12th, 1879, a clerk of Williams, Birnie & Co. presented to the bank an order in the handwriting of Birnie, signed with the firm name, directing certain of these deposited bonds to be released, and thirty-four city of Savannah bonds, new, par value $33,500, to be substituted in their stead, which was done. These were Mey's bonds. The evidence does not further trace the surrendered bonds. Upon due notice given, these Savannah bonds were sold by the bank December 10th, 1879, for $23,422, which was credited upon the indebtedness of Williams, Birnie & Co.

In June, 1879, demand was made by Mey upon Birnie for the Savannah bonds, and also for the keys of the box in the safe deposit company's vault. A like demand was made upon Williams in July following. Mey did not recover the bonds so demanded, nor any of them, nor the keys.

At the trial, and after proof of partnership and debt, as stated *in the opinion, the testimony of John Grimball, Esq., of New York, taken by commission, was offered to prove the demand on Birnie for the bonds and keys, and what Birnie then said about the matter. Upon objection, the court ruled that demand and non-delivery might be proved, but that as this conversation was subsequent to the dissolution of the partnership, the statements and admissions of Birnie were inadmissible against Williams, and Birnie not being before the court disputing the complaint, the testimony could not be introduced at all.

*504

Verdict for defendant. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial which was refused, and they appealed, upon the following grounds:

1. That the plaintiffs were entitled, on the trial, to have read to the jury the testimony of Mr. Grimball as to the declarations and admissions of Birnie, the co-partner of Williams, having relation to a state of facts existing during the co-partnership, although made after the dissolution of the firm, and that his Honor should not have excluded it, and erred in doing so.

2. That the letter of Williams, Birnie & Co., of May 2d, 1879, was not evidence of the fact that the bonds were placed in a box of the safe deposit company, taken for Mey, as he had instructed them, and that his Honor should so have charged the jury as requested by the plaintiffs, and erred in refusing to do so.

3. That his Honor erred in charging the jury that the plaintiffs must show that the securities upon which the loan to Williams, Birnie & Co. was originally made, actually went back into the assets of the firm, and that the firm received the benefit of them, notwithstanding it was in evidence that they had been withdrawn by the order of the firm and delivered to the agent of the firm.

4. That his Honor erred in that he charged the jury in respect to matters of fact.

On November 22d, 1880, defendant Williams gave notice in writing to plaintiffs that he would move the Supreme Court on Monday, November 29th, 1880, to dismiss the appeal for irregularities in preparing and serving the case. The rule of this court required eight days' notice to be given of such motions, and that *the motion should be made on "the day fixed for the call of causes from the Circuit to which it appertains." The day fixed for this Circuit at this term was Tuesday, November 30th.

*505

Messrs. McCrady & Son, for appellants.

Messrs. Henry Buist and A. G. Magrath, contra.

March 5th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action originally brought by Florian C. Mey, and after his death continued by his executors, to recover certain bonds of the city of Savannah, or the value thereof, together with the amount collected on the coupons of said bonds, which he sent to Williams, Birnie & Co., in New York, to be deposited in a box in the vault of the safe deposit company of that city, but which, he alleged, were embezzled and fraudulently misapplied by Williams, Birnie & Co. to their own use.

The defence set up by the defendant George W. Williams (the other defendant, William Birnie, having made default,) while admitting that a partnership did exist between himself and Birnie at the time the bonds in question were sent to the firm by Mey, is, that he is not liable for the fraudulent conduct of Birnie, because the transaction in regard to the bonds in question between Mey and Birnie was entirely unknown to him at the time; that it was not a transaction within the scope of the partnership, and that he derived no benefit from it.

At the opening of the case a motion to dismiss the appeal was submitted, but as proper notice of this motion had not been given, it is unnecessary to notice the grounds upon which it was based, as they are not properly before us for consideration, and we will, therefore, proceed at once to consider the case on its merits.

It would be impracticable to give a statement of the facts of this case without extending this opinion to an unwarrantable length. We propose, therefore, to confine our attention to the several questions raised by this appeal, only referring to so much of the evidence as is necessary for a proper understanding of those *questions. The first point raised is as to the admissibility of the testimony of John Grimball. He was offered as a witness to prove that, after the partnership between Williams and Birnie had been dissolved, he, as agent of Mey, had made a demand on Birnie for the bonds in question, and for the key of the box in the vault of the safe deposit company which was alleged to have been rented for Mey. Precisely what occurred in the Circuit Court when the testimony of this witness was offered is not very clearly shown in the "case" as submitted here, and is a matter in dispute between the counsel—those on one side contending that they were not permitted to prove even the demand and noncompliance with it, while on the other side it is insisted that the whole of the testimony was not ruled out, but only so much of it as tended to prove what Birnie said as to the disposition which had been made of the bonds and the key of the safe. Taking either view, however, we think there was error in rejecting the testimony. The conversation sought to be proved by this witness took place after the partnership had been dissolved, and while the general rule is that the statements or admissions of one partner, made after the dissolution of the partnership, as to what occurred during the existence of the partnership, are not competent evidence against his co-partner, yet when such evidence is offered after there has been other evidence adduced of the fact of the partnership and of the existence of the debt or liability referred to in such statements or admissions, they then become admissible. In other words, the statement or admission of a third person that he had been in partnership with another will not be sufficient to establish the partnership as against such other person, nor would the statements or admissions of one partner, made after the dissolution, of themselves be competent evidence of the existence of a debt or liability as against his former partner; but after evidence aliunde has been adduced tending to show the existence of the partnership and of the debt or liability referred to, then any statement or admission of one of the partners, even though made after the dissolution of the partnership, relating to such debt or liability, is competent evidence against the other partners. In the first case upon this subject in our books

*506

(Simpson ads. Geddes, 2 Bay 533,) it was held that the admission *of a debt contracted during the existence of the partnership, made by one of the partners after dissolution, was, of itself, sufficient to bind the other partner; and this doctrine was expressly approved in the subsequent case of Kendrick v. Campbell, 1 Bail. 522, which case was itself recognized and followed in the case of Allen v. Owens, 2 Speers 170. But in the more recent case of Meggett v. Finney, 4 Strob. 220, this doctrine was qualified as above stated, and the rule there laid down is, that without evidence aliunde of the existence of the debt during the continuance of the partnership, the admission of a partner, made after the dissolution of the partnership, will not be sufficient to establish a debt against a former partner. This case, however, still recognizes the doctrine that where the partnership has been established and there is testimony aliunde tending to show the existence of the debt during the continuance of the partnership, then the statements or admissions of a partner, made after the dissolution, in reference to such debt are competent evidence against the other partner. Now to apply this doctrine to the case under consideration. If it had been proposed to prove the statements or admissions of Birnie, made after the dissolution of the partnership, in regard to the claim made by Mey against Williams, Birnie & Co., before any evidence aliunde had been offered tending to show the existence of such a claim during the continuance of the partnership, then the statements or admissions of Birnie would not have been competent as against Williams. But in this case, as we understand it, the testimony of Grimball was not offered until after the partnership had been established by the admission of Williams in his answer, and evidence had been adduced in the form of a letter from the firm, written while the partnership was in existence, acknowledging the receipt of the bonds in question and undertaking to dispose of them as directed by Mey, together with evidence that the bonds had not been so disposed of, as shown by the failure to comply with the demand for their delivery. There was, therefore, evidence aliunde tending to show the liability of the partnership for the bonds thus traced to their possession, and the testimony of Grimball was offered merely to show what one of the partners said had been done with the bonds, not to originate a liability on the part of *the firm, but after evidence of such liability had been adduced aliunde to show what one of the partners said in reference to such liability. We think, therefore, that the testimony of Grimball was competent and should have been received, not merely to show a demand on Birnie for the bonds and his failure to deliver them, but also to show what he said as to the disposition made of the bonds by the partnership while it was in existence.
*507
*508

The next question raised by the appeal is whether the letter of Williams, Birnie & Co., of May 2d, 1879, was any evidence of the fact that the bonds in question had been placed in a box in the vault of the safe deposit company, as directed by Mey. We do not see how any objection to the competency of this letter or any part of it could be raised, inasmuch as no objection was made at the time it was offered in evidence. To enable appellants to raise this question it should have been made to appear that the letter, or such portion of it as is deemed objectionable, was objected to at the time it was offered. As this does not appear, the objection cannot now be made. Burris v. Whitner, 3 S. C. 510.

The third question raised by this appeal is whether the Circuit judge erred in charging the jury that the plaintiff must show that the securities upon which certain loans were alleged to have been originally made by the Fourth National Bank of New York to Williams, Birnie & Co. went back into the assets of that firm, and that the firm received some benefit from them after they were released by the substitution of Mey's bonds.

For a proper understanding of this question a brief statement of facts will be necessary. It appeared that Birnie, without the knowledge of Williams, but while the partnership was in existence, had opened what may be called a demand loan account with the Fourth National Bank of New York, in favor of Williams, Birnie & Co., under which arrangement the bank advanced, from time to time, considerable sums of money, charging the same on their books to Williams, Birnie & Co., but taking no notes or other evidences of indebtedness therefor, which advances or loans were secured by the deposit of bonds as collateral securities. Two of these loans, one made August 28th, 1877, for $25,000, and the other made March 22d, 1879, for $15,000, were origi*nally secured by a deposit of sundry railroad bonds, but on May 12th, 1879, these railroad bonds were withdrawn and the bonds of the city of Savannah, belonging to Mey, were substituted in their place. This was effected by a written order signed Williams, Birnie & Co., in the handwriting of Birnie, addressed to the cashier of the bank, directing him to substitute the Savannah bonds for the said railroad bonds as collateral security for the two loans above referred to. This order was delivered at the bank by a clerk of Williams, Birnie & Co., to whom the railroad bonds were surrendered. This transaction took place eight days before the partnership of Williams, Birnie & Co. was dissolved.
*509

It thus appears that by the improper use of Mey's bonds, certain other bonds which had been previously pledged by Williams, Birnie & Co. as collateral security for a debt purporting to be due by them to the bank, were released and restored to the possession of Williams, Birnie & Co., or, at least, were delivered upon their written order to their agent or clerk. Now, if by reason of this transaction Mey lost his bonds, it certainly cannot make any difference whether Williams, Birnie & Co. realized any benefit from the bonds so restored to them. If they had been destroyed or stolen immediately after they were returned to Williams, Birnie & Co., it is difficult to see how that could relieve them from responsibility for Mey's bonds if they were improperly used by and went to pay the debt of that firm to the bank. The railroad bonds which were released by the improper use of Mey's bonds, belonged either to Birnie or to Williams, Birnie & Co., or to some third person. If they belonged to Birnie and had been pledged for a debt of the firm and never redeemed, the firm would have been liable to Birnie for their value. So, too, Birnie would have had the right, with the consent of the bank, to withdraw these bonds and substitute others in their place. But if they belonged to a third person, and had been lost to such third person by being pledged for a debt of the firm, the firm certainly would have been liable for their value, and if the firm was relieved from such liability by the improper use of Mey's bonds, that would be a benefit to the firm, even though there was no evidence as to what was done with the railroad bonds after they were withdrawn from the bank. And, cer*tainly, if these railroad bonds belonged to the firm, and were released and restored to the possession of the firm by the substitution of Mey's bonds, that would be sufficient to fix the liability of the firm, even though the railroad bonds may have afterwards been destroyed or stolen or otherwise improperly disposed of. It seems to us clear that if the debt of $40,000 to the bank was a debt for which the firm was liable, and if it has been partially paid by the improper use of Mey's bonds, the firm would be liable to Mey to the extent of such payment. In the case supposed it would be quite certain that Williams, Birnie & Co. have had their debt partially paid by the wrongful use of funds belonging to Mey, and they would be bound to make restoration to him. We cannot agree, therefore, with the Circuit judge that, in order to fix the liability of the firm, it was necessary to show that the railroad bonds released by the substitution of Mey's bonds, went back into the assets of Williams, Birnie & Co., and that the firm subsequently received some benefit from them.

*510

The last point made by the appeal is, that the Circuit judge erred in charging the jury "in respect to matters of fact." The specifications of the particulars alluded to in this ground of appeal are that the judge stated to the jury that there was no proof that the railroad bonds released by the substitution of Mey's bonds went back into the assets of Williams, Birnie & Co., and that the firm received the benefit of them; that the proof that the firm of Williams, Birnie & Co. received any benefit from the act of Birnie in releasing the railroad bonds by the substitution of Mey's bonds was deficient, and that there was no proof that they did receive any benefit from the release of said bonds.

The object of the section of the constitution referred to in support of this ground, (Section 26, Article IV.,) as we understand it, is to prevent the judge from impressing upon, or even indicating to the jury the conclusions to which the evidence adduced in any case has brought his mind. Hence, if there is any evidence whatever as to a fact in issue, it is error to charge the jury that there is no proof of such fact. Carrier v. Hague, 9 S. C. 454. But if there is no evidence tending to prove a fact in issue, then it is no violation of the constitution to so instruct the *jury. Redding v. Railroad Co., 5 S. C. 69, 70. In this case the point in issue, as submitted by the charge, was whether the railroad bonds went back into the assets of Williams, Birnie & Co., and that firm got the benefit of them. It is true that there was some evidence that the bonds went back into the assets of Williams, Birnie & Co., inasmuch as there was evidence that they were delivered to an agent or clerk of that firm upon a written order, signed in the name of the firm, and the inference would be as we have shown that the firm must have received a benefit from the release of these bonds; but there was no evidence whatever as to what became of the bonds after they were delivered to the clerk of Williams, Birnie & Co., or whether they were ever afterwards used in any way for the benefit of that firm, and that, manifestly, was the real point in the mind of the judge when he told the jury that there was no proof upon that subject. But this is not a practical question in this case, and need not be considered further, inasmuch as we have seen that it was not material or necessary to show that the railroad bonds, after they were released by the substitution of Mey's bonds, were used for the benefit of the firm.

*511

The judgment of the Circuit Court is set aside and a new trial is ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

14 S. C. 511

(Case No. 984.)

COLEMAN v. SMITH.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Guardian and Ward ⟸33.]

A and B administered upon an estate of which C was a distributee, and A became guardian of C. Held, that for moneys in A's hands as administrator, due to C, A, as guardian, was liable, but of moneys put into the hands of a stranger by act of both A and B, A, as guardian, was chargeable with one-half, and for the other half B was indebted to the ward.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Burnside v. Robertson, 28 S. C. 588, 6 S. E. 843; Chick v. Farr, 31 S. C. 473, 478, 10 S. E. 176, 390.

For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 142–161; Dec. Dig. ⟸33.]

[2. Guardian and Ward ⟸146.]

To an action by C, after attaining his majority, against A for account and settlement, B was properly made a party upon the petition of A.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. § 492; Dec. Dig. ⟸146.]

*512

*Before Pressley, J., Union, June, 1879.

This was an action by Berry Coleman and Emily, his wife, J. Monroe Smith and Sarah, his wife, and Margaret Farr, against James R. Smith and his sureties, commenced in the Court of Common Pleas, April 20th, 1876. Emily, Sarah and Margaret were sisters, daughters of Margaret Farr. Margaret Farr died intestate, and John Brown and James R. Smith administered upon her estate. They made sale of the personalty, and by agreement made the sale-notes payable to B. Johnson, Ordinary, and placed them in his hands for collection. James R. Smith being a purchaser of negro property, made his note for $1006 payable to Johnson, and upon such note afterwards made a payment of $700 to Johnson. Smith became guardian of the three distributees above named. The payment of $700 was made after Smith became guardian. John Brown being dead, his executors were made parties to this action, as stated in the opinion.

All other matters necessary to the points decided are stated in the opinion of this court.

Mr. J. B. Steedman, for appellant.

Mr. I. G. McKissick, contra.

March 8th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. The plaintiffs, respondents, on April 20th, 1876, instituted an action against James R. Smith, their guardian, and Daniel Gallman and Hugh B. Smith, his sureties on guardianship bonds, for account and settlement.

These respondents were entitled to shares in several estates, among them that of their deceased mother, Margaret Farr. Of this estate James R. Smith and one John Brown were the administrators. Before the settlement of this estate John Brown, who seems to have been the acting administrator, had died, leaving a will, upon which Sarah Brown and Calvin F. Brown qualified as executors.

After the above action had commenced,

*513

James R. Smith, in *view of the fact that the settlement of the guardianship matters would involve an accounting of the estate of Margaret Farr, deceased, filed a petition in re, asking that the executors of John Brown, his deceased co-administrator, be made parties. Accordingly, by order of Judge Northrop, the executors of John Brown were brought in. The case was then referred to Robert W. Shand, Esq., to hear and determine all the issues involved. The referee heard the case and made his report. In the estate of Margaret Farr, deceased, he found in the hands of the administrators, undistributed and unaccounted for, the sum of $801.75, of which administrator James R. Smith owed, on account of purchases at sale, balance of note, $532.15, leaving $269.60 in the hands of the two administrators or their agent. The referee recommended that the complaint be dismissed as to Sarah Brown, as executrix of John Brown, with costs to be paid by James R. Smith. James R. Smith excepted to this portion of the report. Judge Pressley sustained this exception and decreed in favor of plaintiffs, against Sarah Brown and Calvin F. Brown, as executors of John Brown, the sum of $134.80, with interest, just one-half of the $269.60, which had been reported by the referee as in the hands of the two administrators of the estate of Margaret Farr, i. e., James R. Smith and John Brown, deceased. From this decree the executors of John Brown have appealed.

The grounds of appeal, although presented in several forms, raise substantially but two questions. First. That the recommendations of the referee that the complaint be dismissed as to the executors of John Brown, because they were improperly made parties, should have been sustained. Second. Because Judge Pressley erred in decreeing against said executors the sum of $134.80, with interest, as, in any event, James R. Smith, should have been held primarily liable for this sum.

The referee gives no reason for his recommendation, nor does the presiding judge, in overruling it, discuss the question, so that we are left in the dark as to the considerations which controlled their judgments respectively.

The grounds taken by the appellant are: First. That the fund in question having been reported by the referee as in the hands *of the administrators of Margaret Farr, deceased, and James R. Smith being one of them, was, by operation of law, transferred to himself as guardian, to the release of the administrator of Margaret Farr. This principle is well understood, and applies in all cases where a party unites the two characters of debtor and creditor, inasmuch as in such cases no suit can be instituted to enforce payment—the law presumes payment. And it has been held in several cases that where an administrator becomes guardian of the distributees of his intestate's estate, his administration bond is at once discharged and liability attaches at once on his guardianship bond. He is presumed, as administrator, to have paid himself as guardian. Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Hill's Eq. 277 [29 Am. Dec, 72]; Simkins v. Cobb, 2 Bail. 60; O'Neall v. Herbert, Dud. Eq. 30; Same v. Same, McM. Eq. 495; Jacobs v. Woodside, 6 S. C. 498.

*514

If, in this case, then, James R. Smith had been the sole administrator of the estate of Margaret Farr, this principle would have applied, and, by operation of law, the funds in his hands as administrator would have been transferred to himself as guardian, to the release of his sureties on his administration bond. But in this case there were two administrators, and the question is, does this principle apply in a case of this kind?

It is established law, supported by many decisions, both with regard to executors and administrators, that they are not liable, as such, for each other's acts. As to administrators, if they give a joint bond, they may be jointly liable as sureties for each other; but the Court of Equity has always discriminated and charged each with his own proper default. The general rule was established first as to the executors, and it was held that one executor was not liable for the assets which came into the hands of his co-executor, unless, under peculiar circumstances, such as having paid them over to him, joining in a receipt, or in a misapplication of the funds. Wms. on Ex'rs 1118, et seq.

As to administrators, however, it was questioned whether one administrator had equal power with that of executors, and the attempt was made to distinguish between them as to this principle, but it was finally established that they stood on the same ground, and that there was no difference in principle as to their *powers and liabilities. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves., Sr., 267; Willand v. Fenn, there cited; and in our own state we find the cases of Gayden v. Gayden, McM. Eq. 444; O'Neall v. Herbert, Id. 498, where this doctrine is discussed and maintained.

*515

Each administrator, then, where there are two or more of the same estate, being responsible as administrator for his own acts alone, in such case, where one of them becomes the guardian of the distributees of the intestate's estate, he would unite the character of debtor and creditor only to such amounts as he himself had received, as administrator, belonging to his wards, because only to such amounts is he a debtor to the estate, and it would be only to such amounts that, by operation of law, he would be held to have paid himself as creditor. The amounts received by his co-administrator would be the debt of such administrator, for which he could be held liable only secondarily, not as administrator, but as surety on the joint administration bond.

The case of O'Neall v. Herbert, supra, was very similar to the case now before the court. In that case the above principle was announced. Herbert was the administrator of the surety of a guardian, J. W. Selby. Selby and one Murray had administered upon the estate of Mrs. McHenry, deceased, after which Selby had become the guardian of Mrs. McHenry's children, her distributees. Selby having died, Judge O'Neall was appointed guardian in his stead. The estate of Selby being regarded insolvent, Judge O'Neall instituted suit against Herbert as administrator of the only solvent surety of Selby to recover the funds of his wards. This required an accounting of the estate of Mrs. McHenry, the mother.

The commissioner reported the case in a two-fold aspect. First, he embraced the amounts which Selby had received himself as administrator; and, second, he embraced also a considerable amount which his co-administrator, Murray, had received in Florida, and no part of which was proved to have ever reached the hands of Selby.

The question was made whether the surety of the guardian, Selby, should be made liable only for that portion of the estate of Mrs. McHenry which he actually received as administrator, or whether he should also be held for the amount received by Murray, his co-administrator, on the principle that he was liable *for both as administrator, and, by operation of law, the whole amount had been transferred to him as guardian, and had attached on his guardianship bond.

*516

The court held that this principle applied only to the amount actually received by himself. That as to the amount received by his co-administrator he might be made responsible on the joint administration bond as a surety, but that this was a secondary liability, which did not attach until default of his principal, and, therefore, the sureties on his guardianship bond were not liable for this amount.

Now apply these principles to the facts of the case now before the court.

The referee reports that the balance of the estate of Mrs. Margaret Farr amounts to $801.75; that, of this, James R. Smith, administrator, owes by balance on note $532.15; the remainder, $269.60, he reports is in the hands of the two administrators or their agent, B. Johnson. The amount due by Smith, $532.15, he must be supposed to have received himself, and as to this the principle above applies, and has carried this sum into his pocket as guardian, and he has been properly charged with that as guardian. The $269.60 being reported in the hands of the two administrators or their agent, B. Johnson, it is fair to presume that each had one-half. This would make Smith, as guardian, liable for $134.80, and the executor of Brown for the same. As between themselves, at least, this would be just. If the estate of Brown was insolvent, and made default, Smith, as surety on the administration bond, would be responsible for this amount to the plaintiffs; but there is no allegation of that kind here, and we suppose the decree can be enforced against the executors of Brown. This conclusion will make it unnecessary to discuss the second question of appellant, which was that in no event should the executors of Brown be made primarily liable.

Inasmuch as one of the prominent features in this case involved an accounting with the estate of Margaret Farr and the liability of the two administrators, Brown being one, we think that his executors were properly made parties.

Judgment below affirmed and appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *517

*(Case No. 987.)

CLAWSON v. HUTCHINSON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Judgment ⇐342.]

The act of 1869 (Gen. Stat. 497, § 2,) authorized a judge at chambers to vacate an erroneous judgment, but since the adoption of the code of procedure, that authority has been taken away under the terms of Section 417.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Chavis, 34 S. C. 135, 13 S. E. 317; Donly v. Fort, 42 S. C. 200, 201, 202, 20 S. E. 51; Turner v. Foreman, 47 S. C. 33, 24 S. E. 989.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 668–671; Dec. Dig. ⇐342.]

[2. New Trial ⇐155.]

A Circuit judge has now no power at chambers to vacate a judgment as erroneous and order a trial de novo, upon the merits, as in this case, where the motion was based upon the ground that after-discovered evidence showed payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 315; Dec. Dig. ⇐155.]

Before Hudson, J., Sixth Circuit, October, 1880.

This case is sufficiently stated in the opinion. See, too, Clawson v. Hutchinson, 11 S. C. 323.

Messrs. J. H. Rion and G. W. S. Hart, for appellant.

Messrs. J. S. R. Thomson and C. E. Spencer, contra.

March 8th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. This was a motion to vacate an alleged erroneous judgment and for a trial de novo. It was made before Judge Hudson at chambers. The judge states that he was satisfied, upon the showing made, that the judgment was erroneous and should be set aside, but that he had no jurisdiction at chambers in such case, referring to Charles v. Jacobs, 5 S. C. 348. He therefore refused the motion.

The case here has been argued in part on both sides as if it involved the question whether or not, in point of fact, the judgment was erroneous. We do not understand that the appeal brings up that question. The motion below was made upon after-discovered evidence.

The Circuit judge seemed to be satisfied with the showing, and, as has already been stated, declined the motion, not upon the *ground of failure of proof, but because the motion was made at chambers.

*518

The sole question, then, in the appeal, is this: Can a Circuit judge hear and determine, at chambers, a motion of this kind? We propose to confine ourselves to this legal question.

The practice of granting new trials in cases tried before a jury is of very ancient origin, and is a very important branch of our jurisprudence. As is said by Mr. Blackstone: "In the hearing at a trial the ablest judge may mistake the law and misdirect the jury, and the jury, although composed of the most intelligent and best-intentioned men, may bring in a verdict which they themselves, upon cool deliberation, would wish to reverse." In the absence of the power to grant new trials, much inconvenience would result and much injustice be done. In all countries, therefore, where the law is properly administered, this power is lodged somewhere, and where wisely exercised serves to remedy many defects in the administration of justice. In our state, before the adoption of the constitution of 1868, this power belonged to the Appeal Court, the highest judicial tribunal in the state, and it was always exercised by that court with scrupulous justice to opposing litigants. The constitution of 1868, however, in directing the re-organization of the judicial system of the state, constructed the Supreme Court upon a somewhat different basis, and limiting its powers to some extent, when compared to the old court, confined its jurisdiction, except as to some matters original, to the correction of errors of law in cases at law, and to appeals in cases in chancery: the exercise of its powers within this limit being restricted to reversing, affirming or modifying orders, decrees and judgments below.

This court, therefore, has no power to grant new trials, except as incidental to the correction of errors. Hence, upon the adoption of the constitution of 1868, it became necessary for some new legislation upon this subject. Accordingly, an act was passed in 1868 upon the subject of new trials. That act invested the Circuit Courts of the state with the power to grant new trials. There is nothing said in the act as to the mode and manner of procedure, but the power is full and complete, and it exists in all cases where a jury trial has been had, and for reasons for which *new trials have been usually granted in the courts of law of the United States. In this act, however, the power is conferred upon the Circuit Courts. Such being the fact, it follows that a Circuit judge could derive no authority to exercise this power out of court. In 1869 a second act was passed. This act provides for vacating erroneous judgments and for granting trials de novo by the presiding judge of the Circuit when the proof furnished is satisfactory to him that this should be done. Neither is there anything said in this act as to the mode and manner of procedure, or as to the place where this power is to be exercised, but it is conferred upon the presiding judge of the Circuit. And it would seem, from the language used, that it was intended to be exercised only after judgment or decree rendered, and after the case had been disposed of and ended before some other tribunal.

*519

In these two acts a distinction is drawn between the court and the judge. In the one the power is lodged with the court, in the other in the presiding judge of the Circuit, acting separately and apart from the court.

Now, if there had been no other legislation upon this subject since these acts, there could hardly be a doubt that while a proceeding, instituted under the act of 1868, for a new trial, could only be heard in open court, yet a similar proceeding, under the act of 1869, might be heard by the presiding judge of the Circuit at any point he might designate, and either at chambers or in court, as he might see proper.

The only fact that could throw any doubt around this matter is that the term "presiding" is used in the act of 1869 in reference to the judge. This, by a strained construction, might be interpreted to mean that this power is conferred upon a judge only when presiding in open court. This construction, however, would be too limited and narrow. It is hardly to be supposed that the general assembly meant this, especially as the act of 1868 had already conferred this power upon the Circuit Courts.

But legislation on this subject did not stop with these two acts. In 1872 the revised statutes were enacted, the whole being incorporated in one general statute. In that statute the acts of 1868 and 1869 above were re-enacted and incorporated as Sections

*520

2 *and 4 of Chapter CV., Revised Statutes, 497. The code was also adopted as a part of that act. And in Sections 288, 289 and 417, certain other provisions are made in reference to new trials, which must now be considered as bearing upon the question involved here.

Sections 288 and 289 seem to have been intended to meet cases after verdict but before judgment, and where the necessity for a new trial grew out of facts and circumstances immediately in connection with the trial, such as misdirection, surprise, insufficiency of evidence, or excessive damages, and such like causes. Under the first section a motion is permitted and authorized to be made upon the minutes of the judge who tried the cause, and at the term when tried; and in Section 289 to be made upon a case or exceptions at some subsequent term as the judge might direct, both to be made in open court. Neither of these sections interfered with or disturbed in any way the powers conferred upon the presiding judge or the Circuit Courts respectively by the acts of 1868 and 1869—they provided for cases untouched by these acts. If legislation had stopped at this point there still would have been no doubt as to the question now before the court, but section 417 of the code presents a new feature. That section provides that motions may be made to a judge or justice out of court, except for a new trial upon the merits. This language, when transposed, means that a motion for a new trial upon the merits, shall not be made before a judge or justice out of court. This is prohibitory, emphatic and imperative. If it applies to the act of 1869, or to the case now under consideration, as being made upon the merits, it settles the question.

Does it limit and control the act of 1869? It follows that act in the order of position in the revised statutes. It occupies an independent place, and is general in its terms, and it would seem that all provisions in conflict with it must give way. More than this, inasmuch as, according to the construction we have given the enactments on this subject, the act of 1869 is the only act which at any time authorized a judge to hear a motion for new trial out of court, either upon the merits or otherwise, this section must have been intended expressly to repeal so much of that act as allowed motions of this kind to be heard upon the merits out *of court; otherwise this section would have been unnecessary and useless.

*521

The conclusion of the court is, that while the presiding judge of the Circuit, under the act of 1869, had the power to hear and determine a motion for a new trial, either on the merits or otherwise, at chambers or in open court, as he saw proper, before the adoption of the code with Section 417, that since that time when the motion is made upon the merits, at chambers, his power has ceased by virtue of that section. Was this motion made upon the merits? These terms are not very definite, and we have been unable to find a case in which they have been distinctly interpreted; but, without this, it is safe to say, in general terms, that they include matters of substance as contra-distinguished from mere forms and irregularities.

The application below was made on the ground of after-discovered evidence, showing, it is claimed, payment. Is payment, as a defence, mere form, or is it substance? Payment goes to the gist of the action, and certainly involves the merits. Besides, Mr. Wait, pp. 396–400, embraces motions on after-discovered evidence among the motions upon the merits.

The case of Charles v. Jacobs, 5 S. C. 348, was a motion to vacate an erroneous judgment and for a trial de novo. The court held that as the motion was substantially a motion for a new trial, the Circuit judge had no power, at chambers, to hear it. In that case the error was apparent on the record; the jury had make a mistake in the computation of the amount and interest due upon the instrument sued on. How far a Circuit judge may grant orders at chambers looking to the correction of mistakes apparent on the record, but still retaining the judgment so far as correct, is not involved here. The motion below was not of that kind.

The order is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *522

*(Case No. 988.)

TALMADGE v. OLIVER.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Sales ⇐469.]

Where there is a conditional sale of personal property, the vendor retaining title until paid, the right of property continues in the vendor, except that since the act of 1843, (11 Stat. 256, § 3; Gen. Stat., ch. XCVIII., § 6,) such a reservation, when verbal, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1357; Dec. Dig. ⇐469.]

[2. Chattel Mortgages ⇐6, 152, 153.]

Such conditional sale, reduced to writing, held in this case to be an equitable mortgage; and although not recorded, is of prior claim to a subsequent recorded mortgage, where action for recovery of the property is brought by the vendor against the second mortgagee within the time allowed by law for recording.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Herring & Co. v. Cannon, 21 S. C. 212, 214, 218, 53 Am. Rep. 661; Perkins v. Loan & Exchange Bank, 43 S. C. 44, 20 S. E. 759; Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 243, 40 S. E. 554.

For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 31, 254, 259; Dec. Dig. ⇐6, 152, 153.]

[This case is also cited in Ludden & Bates Southern Music House v. Dusenbury, 27 S. C. 464, 4 S. E. 60, and distinguished therefrom, and in Talbott & Sons v. Padgett, 30 S. C. 170, 8 S. E. 845, without specific application.]

Before Wallace, J., Spartanburg, March, 1880.

Action commenced in trial justice's court by F. P. Talmadge against J. H. Oliver, to recover a horse. The case is fully stated in the opinion of this court.

Mr. J. S. R. Thomson, for appellant.

Mr. C. P. Wofford, contra.

March 8th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. In this case an action was originally brought by the appellant in the trial justice's court to recover a horse from respondent.

Appellant had been the owner of the horse, and, on December 13th, 1879, he placed the horse in the possession of one J. C. Foster, under the following written agreement:

"Received this day of F. P. Talmadge one horse, for which I am to board said F. P. Talmadge and wife from 1st January, 1880, until 15th March, 1880. The horse to remain the property of F. P. Talmadge until this contract is satisfied."

Appellant boarded with Foster only two weeks, when Foster absconded. At the time

*523

Foster left he was indebted to the re*spondent some $265; and about the time he left he borrowed from respondent $35, his indebtedness then being $300. For this sum, on January 8th, he gave respondent a note secured by mortgage. In the preparation of the mortgage the horse was not at first embraced, but respondent insisted that the horse should be embraced, and he testified that he would not have lent the additional $35 but for the fact that the horse was to be embraced in the mortgage. He had no knowledge of the written agreement referred to.

The mortgage was recorded on the day of its execution. The condition was that upon default of payment respondent should take possession and hold to his own use or sell, refunding the overplus, if any, to Foster. Foster made default, and respondent took possession of the mortgaged property and duly advertised it for sale, including the horse in question.

This action was then brought by appellant to recover the horse.

The remainder of the mortgaged property was duly sold and bought in principally by respondent. The sale, however, failed to realize a sum sufficient to pay respondent's debt at the prices paid. Appellant claimed that respondent bought the property below its real value, and that a re-sale, at its value, would more than pay respondent his full debt.

Upon these facts the trial justice decreed for the appellant and $20 damages, that sum having been fixed by agreement of parties, with costs.

Respondent appealed to the Circuit Court. Judge Wallace presiding, heard the appeal upon written testimony, in substance, as above. Judge Wallace sustained the appeal of respondent, "holding that no conditional sale by which title is reserved to the vendor, either by verbal or written agreement, could be made which would be good against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration without notice," "and that in this case the mortgage of Foster conveyed a title to respondent superior to that of appellant under reservation of title held by him."

From the order sustaining the appeal below, the appellant plaintiff has appealed to this court, and the main question pre*sented here is as to the superiority of title of appellant and respondent.

*524

It is admitted that appellant originally owned the horse in question. Has he parted with title? And if not, has he done any act which estops him from enforcing his title as against the claim of respondent? The intent of parties must always govern in contracts when it can be legally ascertained. This is so at least between the parties themselves. This is a fundamental rule, from which there can be no departure. Guided by this rule it is perfectly clear that as between appellant and Foster the title to this horse never passed from the appellant. There is no room for doubt as to this point, because it is expressly stipulated in the agreement that the horse should remain the property of appellant until the contract of board was satisfied. This contract has never been satisfied, certainly not in whole, and scarcely in part. If this suit, then, had been between appellant and Foster the result could not have been doubtful.

Conditional sales of personal property, either with verbal or written reservation of title by the vendor, have often been recognized, both in the English and American decisions. Bishop v. Shellito, 2 Barn. & Ald. 528, n. A voluntary and absolute delivery, under contract of sale, vests the title, but if, says Chancellor Kent, "the delivery be accompanied with a declaration on the part of the seller that he should not consider the goods as sold until security be given, the sale is conditional and the property does not pass by delivery as between the parties." Citing 4 Mass. 405; 17 Mass. 606, "Where there is a condition precedent attached to a contract of sale," he adds, "the property does not vest in the vendee on delivery until he performs the condition, or the seller waives it, and the right continues in the vendor even against the creditors of the vendee." Barrett v. Pritchard, 2 Pick. 512. This principle is endorsed by Chitty, Story and Parsons. See Chitty (11th ed.) 588, and the cases there cited.

In our own state four cases, beginning with the case of Dupree v. Harrington, all decided before the act of 1843—hereafter to be considered—full to the point of the validity of a verbal reservation of title, although the property was delivered, are found. *Dupree v. Harrington, Harp. 391; Reeves v. Harris, and Bailey v. Jennings, 1 Bail. 563; Bennett v. Sims, Rice 422.

*525

It seems to have been admitted in the argument of these cases that a written reservation was beyond question. The doubt appeared to be as to verbal reservations, and Judge Earle, in Bennett v. Sims, said: "If there be no difference in principle between a condition in writing and a verbal one, and I have tortured my faculties to conceive a ground of difference, except as to the mode of proof, then the case of Dupree v. Harrington Harp. 391 is direct authority." The reservation in Dupree v. Harrington Harp. 391 was in writing.

In the case of Bennett v. Sims, Judge Earle, delivering the opinion of the court, discussed the question how far a verbal reservation would be good against subsequent creditors, and the question, both as to subsequent creditors and purchasers, was reserved. The inclination of Judge Earle's mind evidently was to hold that such verbal stipulations would be good against subsequent creditors without notice, unless the transaction was impeached by showing some badges of unfairness, such as long-continued possession by the vendee, &c., giving rise to a presumption of gift or absolute transfer. In this unsettled state of that question the act of 1843 was passed. This was an act to amend the law in relation to recording mortgages, and the third section provides "that as to subsequent creditors and purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, where the vendor of personal property who has parted with the possession, reserves to himself any interest by verbal agreement in the same, such reservation shall be void." This, as was said by Judge Wardlaw in Cochran v. Roundtree, 3 Strob. 222, was a legislative declaration of an unsettled point of law, i. e., the effect of verbal reservations as to subsequent creditors and purchasers, and this act settled that question; but the act, it will be observed, is silent as to written reservations.

This certainly could not have been accidental, nor can we believe, as was most ingeniously and forcibly argued by Mr. Wofford, respondent's counsel, that the term verbal includes both spoken and written reservations. The distinction between the two is wide, and was, no doubt, well understood, and the pur*pose of the act must have been to destroy the one and leave the other standing.

*526

The case of Cochran v. Roundtree, supra, was a case involving a verbal condition. The sale in question was made before the passage of the act of 1843, but the case was heard and decided afterwards. There was a question of fact in the case, whether or not the sale was absolute or conditional, and there was some doubt as to the finding of the jury on this question. The presiding judge, however, charged the jury that even assuming that the sale was conditional, yet if Cochran was a subsequent bona fide purchaser without notice, he was protected.

The appeal involved the correctness of this charge, and the court understood the charge to be that, per se, as matter of law such a condition before the act of 1843 was void as to subsequent purchasers without notice. And, so understanding, the court sustained the charge, saying that they were unwilling to go beyond the case of Bennett v. Sims. And, stopping where that case stopped, the court declared that although the condition was binding upon Williams it did not bind a subsequent purchaser without notice. This case, however, as has been said, involved a verbal condition, and it was decided after the legislative will in the act of 1843 as to such conditions had been declared. How far that act may have influenced the judgment of the court, we do not know. Before the passage of the act, as will be seen in the case of Bennett v. Sims, the mind of an eminent judge, Judge Earle, was altogether the other way. But neither this case nor the act of 1843 touched written reservations. Conditional sales and delivery of property with such reservations remain as before; each case to turn somewhat upon its own facts. There is a reason for this. Written stipulations are more easily proved—more specific and certain, and more carefully made—and they usually amount to a mortgage, and to hold them per se void as to subsequent creditors, as was held in Cochran v. Roundtree, and as the act of 1843 declares as to verbal reservations, would be going beyond the previous decisions.

In the case now before the court, the written agreement by which the appellant hoped to protect himself when he delivered the horse to Foster, was dated December 13th, 1879. On Jan*uary 8th, 1880, respondent, already holding claims against Foster, advanced to him an additional sum of $35, took mortgage embracing the horse of appellant, and in a few days thereafter the horse was advertised for sale under this mortgage to pay Foster's debt.

*527

On January 15th the suit was commenced before the trial justice. If the doctrine be sound that no conditional sale of personal property, whether by verbal or written agreement, by which title is reserved to the vendor could be made, which would be good against a subsequent purchaser without notice, then great injustice would be done here in this hasty proceeding.

Written reservations having been left untouched by the act of 1843, cannot be regarded as void per se, even as to subsequent creditors and purchasers. They are certainly good between the parties, and unless some equitable or legal estoppel can be interposed to vitiate the contract, they should be good as to others. In this case the respondent seems to have been without notice; but the appellant in no way contributed to his want of knowledge. Foster had not been long in possession—but a few weeks. The parties all lived in the same village. There must have been circumstances occurring calculated to put the respondent on the inquiry. But, at all events, as to this case the agreement held by the appellant may be regarded as an equitable mortgage. It had all the elements of a mortgage; it was to secure a contract; the property was designated and the title reserved to insure the performance of this contract, and it is prior in date to respondent's mortgage. True, it was not recorded, and, being without a witness, there might have been some difficulty in having it recorded; but the action was commenced within the time allowed for recording, so that respondent had actual notice within this time. This was sufficient and supplied the place of recording.

We do not think that appellant has any cause of complaint because respondent bought the mortgaged property below its value. Nor is there any room here for an accounting by respondent. The question here is as to the title to the horse. In that the appellant has the superior claim under the facts of the case, and having done nothing to forfeit this title or to estop him *from enforcing his rights, the horse should have been adjudged to him.

*528

The order below is reversed and the appeal sustained. Let the case be remanded.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

14 S. C. 528

(Case No. 989.)

BILDERBACK v. BOYCE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Powers ⇐33.]

Real property was devised to trustees to permit A to take the income for life, with remainder to such persons as A, by his last will, should appoint, and in default of appointment, to A's children. A, by his will, devised "all the rest and residue of my estate wherever and whatever," but his will did not mention the power nor the trust property, and A had real estate in his own right. Held, that there was no execution of the power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Powers, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. ⇐33.]

2. The English and American doctrine stated, and Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story 426, [Fed. Cas. No. 1,479], recognized and followed.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Dick v. Harby, 48 S. C. 532, 26 S. E. 900; Mims v. Hair, 80 S. C. 464, 61 S. E. 968; Rembert v. Vetoe, 89 S. C. 216, 71 S. E. 959; Barbot v. Thompson, 94 S. C. 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 77 S. E. 716.]

[3. Powers ⇐16.]

[Cited in Manning v. Screven, 56 S. C. 82, 34 S. E. 22, to the point that powers are to be strictly construed.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Powers, Cent. Dig. §§ 32–35; Dec. Dig. ⇐16.]

[4. Powers ⇐33.]

[Cited in Moody v. Tedder, 16 S. C. 564; Burkett v. Whittemore, 36 S. C. 438, 15 S. E. 616, to the point that it is a question of intention whether the act of the donee of a power is an exercise of the power.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Powers, Cent. Dig. §§ 110–120; Dec. Dig. ⇐33.]

[5. Wills ⇐234.]

[Cited in Ketchin v. Rion, 68 S. C. 275, 47 S. E. 376, to the point that a devise of an estate for life, with remainder to persons to be appointed by tenant for life, and in default of such appointment to persons in esse, the remainder is vested, subject to being divested by the execution of the power.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 563; Dec. Dig. ⇐234.]

[This case is also cited in Humphrey v. Campbell, 59 S. C. 43, 37 S. E. 26, and M. S. Bailey & Sons v. Wood, 71 S. C. 48, 50 S. E. 631, without specific application.]

Before Thomson, J., Charleston, July, 1880.

Action commenced by Joseph A. Bilderback, James Spann Boyce and Latimer Boyce against James P. Boyce, trustee, and Mary E. Boyce, for possession of the "Merchants' Hotel," in Charleston. It was referred to W. D. Porter, master, to hear and determine all the issues in the cause. The report of the master, after stating the facts (which it is unnecessary to repeat, as they are fully set forth in the opinion of this court,) was as follows:

There is no reference in Samuel Boyce's will to the power or the property, and the evidence shows that he died seized and possessed of other real property on which the will might operate. The first and principal question in this case is whether the will of Samuel J. Boyce is to be regarded as a good execution of the power given him by the will of his father, Ker Boyce, in rela*tion to the Merchants' Hotel. The settled rule in relation to wills is that the intention of the testator must be carried into effect. But to ascertain this intention, particularly in relation to the execution of powers, the courts in England adopted, from time to time, certain artificial rules, which they regarded as signs or demonstrations of intent; at one time an express reference to the power was required, but in Bennett v. Aburrow, 8 Ves., Jr. 616, Sir William Grant said, "that is not necessary." But it was in the application of the rules that the greatest difficulty arose. The case of Doe d. Nowell v. Roake, in 1825, 2 Bing. 510, contains a very full review of the English cases. It showed that the judges differed very much as to what should or should not be regarded as the evidence or demonstration of intent. The distinctions and refinements resorted to created great dissatisfaction, which was judicially expressed, from time to time. At last, in the case of Nannock v. Horton, Lord Eldon, speaking of the rule distinguishing power from property, said: "I am not sure it [the rule] does not oblige the court to act against what might probably have been the intention nine times out of ten." 7 Ves., Jr., 398. In Amory v. Meredith, 89 Mass. (7 Allen) 399, it is stated that after the death of Lord Eldon, his successor, as master of the rolls, reversed the decision, accompanying his judgment with the remark, "I fear that the intention of the testatrix may be defeated by my decision." A curious commentary, this, upon the application of arbitrary rules to the ascertainment of intent in a will. Sir Edward Sugden (Lord St. Leonard) has reviewed the cases in his book on Powers. He says it is impossible not to be struck with the number of instances where the intention has been defeated by the rule distinguishing power from property. Sugd. on Powers, vol. I., p. 401, § 76.

*529

It is said that Lord St. Leonard was contemplating a remedy through the courts, but by the statute 1 Victoria, c. 26, in 1837, the rule was changed, and it was declared that a general devise of real or personal estate in a will should operate as an execution of a power of testator over the same, unless a contrary intention should appear in the will. The question now is, how do our courts stand in relation to the doctrine distinguishing power from property in a will? Will, or will not, a general de*vise in a will operate as an execution of a power, when a contrary intent does not appear? It is conceded by counsel on both sides that there is no adjudged case in our state settling the question. My own examination has found none. It is a new question, res integra, and our courts are now, for the first time, to entertain and settle it. It is argued that we are bound by the old rule of construction, inasmuch as the act of 1712 makes the common law a part of the law of the state. Unless there has been a recognition of it in our courts, I do not consider that any old rule of the English Chancery Courts is binding upon our courts, unless it commends itself to our reason, and certainly not where those courts have formally abandoned it. In the case of Ring v. Huntington, 1 Mills' Const. R. 165, Judge Cheves said: "The act of assembly [1712,] as it has been practically construed, contained rather a privilege than a command to adopt the common law except in its great and leading principles, and we, in effect, have only adopted it when we thought it reasonable and just; at least we have not thought it necessary to adopt it when it was clearly unreasonable, absurd and unjust. If this be the spirit in which we are to view the rule under consideration (that a man shall not be allowed to stultify himself by alleging his mental incapacity in avoidance of his own act,) we shall not be much embarrassed with it, and we may declare that, though it may be the law of England, it is no part of our law." This is the unanimous and clear opinion of the court. To the same effect are the cases of State v. Com'rs of Roads, 1 Mills' Const. R. 55 [12 Am. Dec. 596]; State v. Allen, 1 McCord 525 [10 Am. Dec. 687]. Why, then, should our courts feel under any obligation to follow a rule which the English courts have tried and abandoned, on the ground that it tended to defeat, rather than carry out, the intention of the testator, and which the English parliament, doubtless on the recommendation of their Lord Chancellor and the judges, repealed and reversed by statute nearly fifty years ago? The rule of the English statute is certainly simpler and more conformable to reason. The rule of reason is, that when a man makes a general devise he means to include all the property he has the power to dispose of, unless there be something in the will to indicate the contrary. In Massachusetts the rule of the English statute is adopted. Amory v. *Meredith, 7 Allen 397. See, also, White v. Hicks, 33 N. Y. 380. The rule distinguishing between property and power has not become so firmly established in this state that our courts should feel under obligation to follow and adopt what the English courts have long since abrogated as unjust and unreasonable, and what the American courts are repudiating, either by judicial decision or under the stress of statutory enactment. 4 Kent (12th Ed.) 335, note.

*530

*531

In a note to Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story 458 [Fed. Cas. No. 1,479], Judge Story says: "All these refined and subtle distinctions in relation to the execution of powers are swept away by statute in England, and the doctrine has settled down in that country to what seems to be the dictate of common sense, unaffected by technical niceties." As we are not complicated with any previous decision, and are left free to adopt what shall be considered the most reasonable rule, my conclusion is, that the will of Samuel J. Boyce is a valid execution of the power of appointment vested in him by his father's will in relation to the Merchants' Hotel. My further conclusion is, that if the Merchants' Hotel passes under the will of Samuel J. Boyce, it passes charged with his debts, and that if it does not pass under his will, it goes to his children under the will of Ker Boyce. 4 Kent 340, and cases cited.

To this report the plaintiffs excepted, and the case was heard upon such exceptions. The decree of the Circuit judge was as follows:

It is well to ascertain the interest which Samuel J. Boyce took under the will of his father, Ker Boyce. The devise of the Merchants' Hotel was to certain persons, as trustees, to permit his son, Samuel J. Boyce, to take the income for his own use and maintenance during his natural life, and after his decease, to the use of such person or persons as he, by his last will, may appoint. Is this power of disposal a property, or only a naked power? The court will not imply an absolute estate when the interest of the donee is expressly limited to a life estate. Pulliam v. Byrd, 2 Strob. Eq. 142; Wilson v. Gaines, 9 Rich. Eq. 420. Where an estate is devised to one for life, with the remainder to such persons as the tenant for life, or any appointor shall direct and *appoint, and in default of such appointment to a person or a class of persons in esse, the remainder is vested, notwithstanding the interposition of the power. The estate is vested in the remaindermen, subject to be divested by the execution of the power. Williman v. Holmes, 4 Rich. Eq. 475. It appears from the authorities as the law of England, and of this state, that Samuel J. Boyce had no interest in the property but for life, with a power of appointment by his will. 2 Crabb's Law of Real Prop., § 2060. So that unless his will took effect as an appointment, the Merchants' Hotel could not pass thereby. The questions are, 1st, did he execute his power of appointment? and if so, 2d, did he execute it correctly, or was he in excess as to part? The plaintiffs allege there was no execution of the appointing power. It is stated by the master in his report that there is no reference in the will of Samuel J. Boyce to the power conferred by it, nor to the property mentioned in Ker Boyce's will; and it is further stated that Samuel J. Boyce had other real property on which this will might operate. It may be observed here that there are cases, especially where married women have a testamentary power of appointment, where wills will be intended an execution of the power though it contains no reference to the power or the instrument creating it. Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447; Heyer v. Binger, Hoff. 2. And the reason is obvious, that as formerly a married woman could not make a will, her will not expressing the power shall be referred to it. Rose v. Eives, 3 Atk. 156. What do the English cases say is a valid execution of a power by wills? Though a will does not state that it is made in execution of the power, yet if it plainly refers to it, and comprises the subject of the power, it will be deemed a good execution. Weelock v. Gill, 1 Russ. 575; Walker v. Mackie, 4 Russ. 76. A testator having a power of appointment over certain freehold and copyhold estates, and being seised of other freehold estates, devises all his freehold and copyhold estates without reference to the power; held an execution of the power as to the copyhold estates, but not as to the freehold estates, which were subject to the power. Lewis v. Lewellyn, 4 Russ. 81. The principle involved in this case was fully considered in the case of Sarah Trymmer's will. The syllabus of the case, as stated in the de*cision of the Court of Common Pleas, is: "A devisor being seized of a moiety of certain lands in Surrey, having, by her own creation, a power of appointment over the other moiety, which she had purchased of her nephew, who succeeded her sister in the possession of it, and having no other real estate, devised all her freehold estate in Surrey to J. R., on condition that out of the rents and profits he should keep the whole in tenantable repair, and under limitations framed, to keep the property as long in her family as possible. Held, that this devise was, under the circumstances, a good execution of the power." Doe d. Nowell v. Roake, 9 E. C. L. 476. The case was carried, by writ of error, to the Court of King's Bench and the judgment reversed. 11 E. C. L. 653. And from the King's Bench the case was carried to the house of lords, and the judgment of the King's Bench was affirmed. 19 E. C. L. 139.

*532

*533

In the house of lords, Alexander, C. B., said: "My lords, there is no difference of opinion among the judges in this cause." I may venture to say, that in no instance has a power or authority been considered as executed unless by some reference to the power or authority, or to the property which was the subject of it, or unless the provision made by the person entrusted with the power would have been ineffectual. It would be extremely dangerous to depart from these rules in favor of loose speculation respecting intention in the particular case. It is, therefore, that the wisest judges have thought proper to adhere to the rules I have mentioned, in opposition to what they evidently thought the probable intention in the particular case before them. If authorities can settle a principle, these would seem to be sufficient.

So conclusive did they appear to Sir Edward Sugden, that in his work on the Law of Property, he says: "A general devise would not, under the old law, operate as an execution of even an unlimited power of appointment, unless the power or the estate were referred to, or the testator had no other real estate to satisfy the devise." Sugden's Law of Prop. 493. But is the present a proper case for the adoption of the principle that a general devise will carry property held only under a power of appointment? The intention of the donor must govern. The will of the devisor, *Ker Boyce, negatives the idea of absolute property vesting in Samuel J. Boyce by the express gift for life, for the use only of the income, the power of appointment to some person or persons precluding the idea of Samuel J. Boyce's appointing to himself, and the gift of the property to others, if no appointment be made. The different uses of the property, and the different modes of enjoyment, are evidence that the testator did not contemplate the entire interest would vest in his son. The appointee takes by authority of the instrument which creates the power, not of the instrument by which it is executed; that is, he takes in the same manner as if his name had been inserted in the power, or as if the power and the instrument executing the power had been incorporated in one instrument, and, consequently, he takes as if all that was in the instrument executing had been expressed in that giving the power. 2 Crabb, §§ 2028, 2029. Would it consist with the supposed intention of Ker Boyce to devise property for the payment of his son's creditors, whom he could not know, and by the execution of a power granted by him, divert the property from his grandchildren, whom he did? Would not such a result probably be as much against the intention of the donor of the power as was supposed to be by Sir William Grant in the case of Jones v. Tucker, 2 Mer. 533, where a woman had a power to appoint £100 by her will, and a few articles of furniture; she made her will, bequeathing £100 to plaintiff, which was held an execution of the power. Sir William Grant said that in his private opinion the intention was to give £100, which the testatrix had the power to dispose of, though he could not have judicially declared it executed. 6 Bing. 478. But if the will of Samuel J. Boyce be a good execution of the power, shall his appointment be extended so as to include his debts? The power of appointment is to the use of such person or persons as he may, by his last will, appoint. This power is not general: it is limited with respect to persons and its mode of execution. The persons are to be designated by the appointor, not generally for such uses and purposes as the ap-pointor shall declare; but it is to such persons as the appointor may name. Property over which dominion was exercised by virtue of a general power, is considered absolute property as far as to be liable for debts; but if it be a particular *power to appoint for third persons named in the power, and not for the benefit of the donor of the power, the conclusion is different. 4 Kent 340. In strictness, how can the creditors of Samuel J. Boyce, not named, come in under a general clause, "I direct that all my just debts be first paid?" How are the debts to be paid; by money? So far from a sale of the "Merchants' Hotel," the will of Ker Boyce intends and declares only the use of the income of the property to his son Samuel for life, and after the use of Samuel, to his appointees, and on failure thereof, then in the same form to his children or their issue. No change of the property is declared. Powers in this state have been construed strictly, and appointments not within their meaning held invalid. Thus, a power in a will to sell such property as may be useless, will not authorize an executor to sell any property as he may choose. McCants v. Bee, 1 McC. Eq. 393 [16 Am. Dec. 610]. So a power to appoint by will is not executed by a mortgage to creditors with foreclosure and sale. Bentham v. Smith, Cheves' Eq. 33 [34 Am. Dec. 599]. In the case of Withers v. Yeadon, a power was given by the will of John Wagner to his son, George Wagner, to give property by his last will and testament to a child or children, or any of them. George Wagner, by his will, attempted to execute this power by giving all the property to his wife, and also delegated his power of appointment to his wife, and son, John Wagner. The court held that no appointment was made, because the children being designated, no appointment could be made to the wife, and that although the property was given to him in terms which would imply ownership, yet there being a power of appointment, and children answering the description of appointees, the appointment should have been made. The result was the court held George Wagner made no appointment, and that all the children of John Wagner were entitled to the slaves given, and realty devised to George Wagner. 1 Rich. Eq. 324.

*534

*535

The court finds as facts, 1st. That Ker Boyce, now deceased, made his will as stated in the pleadings. 2d. Samuel J. Boyce, now deceased, made his will as stated in the pleadings. 3d. That Mary Lane Bilderback, now deceased, made her will as stated in the pleadings. And conclusions of law, 1st. That the will of Samuel J. Boyce is not a valid execution of the power under *the will of Ker Boyce. 2d. That if the will of Samuel J. Boyce be a valid execution of the power as to the devisees, it cannot appoint for payment of Samuel J. Boyce's debts, and that no such appointment is made. 3d. That the children of Samuel J. Boyce are the tenants in fee of the Merchants' Hotel, under the will of Ker Boyce.

*536

It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that the exceptions of the plaintiffs be sustained. The conclusions of law of the master are overruled, wherein they differ from the conclusions of the court, as above declared.

James P. Boyce, trustee, appealed.

Mr. George S. Holmes, for appellant.
Messrs. Lord & Inglesby, contra.

March 8th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. The late Ker Boyce departed this life in 1872, leaving a will whereby he devised the hotel in the city of Charleston, known as the "Merchants' Hotel," to James P. Boyce, J. B. O'Neall, A. G. Rose and J. A. Whitesides, executors, in trust, to permit his son, Samuel J. Boyce, to take the income for his own use and maintenance during his natural life, and after his decease to the use of such person or persons as he, by his last will, might appoint, and in failure of such appointment, to his children or their issue then living, &c. James P. Boyce, alone, accepted the trust, and, soon after the death of the testator, took possession of the premises, collected the rents and paid over the same to the said Samuel J. Boyce.

Samuel J. Boyce died in 1877, leaving surviving him his two sons, James Spann Boyce and Latimer Boyce, and a daughter, Mary Lane, wife of Joseph A. Bilderback, who died after the death of her father, Samuel J., leaving a will, by which she devised her interest in the said hotel to her husband, J. A. Bilderback.

Samuel J. Boyce left a will, by which he provided as follows: 1. "I direct that all my just debts be first paid." 2. "I give *and bequeath one moiety of all the rest and residue of my estate whatever and wherever to my beloved wife, Mary E. Boyce, to and for her absolute use and behoof forever." 3. "I give, bequeath and devise the other moiety of all the rest and residue of my estate, whatever and wherever, to my brother, James P. Boyce, to hold in trust for my children, Mary Lane Bilderback, wife of Rev. J. A. Bilderback, Latimer Boyce and James Spann Boyce," upon the terms and conditions therein expressed.

*537

This was a proceeding for possession of the said hotel, instituted by the children of Samuel J. Boyce against James P. Boyce, as trustee, and Mary E. Boyce, widow of Samuel J. Boyce, alleging that the power of appointment given to their father, Samuel J., was never executed, and that his interest for life having ended, they are entitled to the said premises as remaindermen under the will of their grandfather, Ker Boyce. The defendants resist the claim, alleging that the will of Samuel J. Boyce, although in general terms, without any reference to the power, was a good execution of the power, and that the hotel, in common with his own property, passed under it for the purposes therein declared, and, among others, for the payment of his debts.

It was referred to Master Porter to hear and determine the issue, and he held "that the will of Samuel J. Boyce is a valid execution of the power of appointment vested in him by his father's will in relation to the Merchants' Hotel. That if the Merchants' Hotel passes under the will of Samuel J. Boyce, it passes charged with his debts, and that if it does not pass under his will it goes to his children under the will of Ker Boyce." The plaintiffs filed exceptions, which were argued before Judge Thomson, who sustained the exceptions, and decided that the will of Samuel J. Boyce was not a valid execution of the power under the will of Ker Boyce, and that the children of Samuel J. Boyce are tenants in fee of the Merchants' Hotel under the will of Ker Boyce. To this decree the defendants filed exceptions, and the appeal comes to this court.

The question made has often been before the courts in England and in most of the states of the Union, but it is said that it is now presented for the first time in this state. The precise point is whether a mere power to declare by will uses in a lot of land *is duly executed by a will in general terms disposing of the whole estate of the donee of the power without any reference in terms to the power or the property and where the donee's own property satisfies the terms of the will.

*538

All the authorities agree that this is a question of intention. Samuel J. Boyce had the power to appoint by will. He made a will disposing of his whole estate. Did he intend thereby to execute the power as to the hotel? Intention is a matter of fact and must be reached through the will itself. In order to facilitate the inquiry as to the intention in such cases, the Court of Chancery in England, after much division and many efforts, at length settled certain rules to be followed. Without going into the learning involved or attempting to review the numerous cases upon the subject, we content ourselves with a reference to those rules as stated in the case cited in the decree, of Doe d. Nowell v. Roake, 9 E. C. L. 497, which was carried by writ of error to the King's Bench, (11 E. C. L. 653; 5 B. & C. 720); and from the King's Bench to the House of Lords, where the judgment of the King's Bench was affirmed. 19 E. C. L. 139. In that case it was solemnly decided that the court would infer an intent to execute a power only in three cases. First, where there was some reference in the will or other instrument to the power. Second, or reference to the property which is the subject on which it is to be executed. Third, or where the provision in the will would have no operation except as an execution of the power. According to this canon of interpretation, the power in this case was clearly not executed. The Merchants' Hotel is not mentioned in the will of Samuel J. Boyce, nor is the power referred to, and the terms are satisfied by the property which he left, without including that as to which the power existed.

But it is strongly urged upon the court that as the point involved is now for the first time to be decided in South Carolina, we are not complicated by previous decisions, and are at liberty to make a rule of our own —that the old rule of the English chancery should not be followed by us, for the reason that in its operation there it was not entirely satisfactory, resulting often in defeating instead of carrying out the intention. It is true that some eminent English judges have expressed themselves to that *effect, and for this or some other reason laws have been passed in England which declare "that a general devise of real or personal estate in wills should operate as an execution of a power of appointment of the testator over the same, unless a contrary intent should appear in the will." 7 Wm. IV.; 1 Vict., c. 26, § 27. These statutes are certainly not of force as law in this state, but the principles and practice of the old English chancery, announced and followed by the great masters of equity, Somers Hardwicke, Eldon and others, have been generally regarded with the greatest respect and as the highest authority, if not absolutely binding upon us. The Court of Chancery was originally established in South Carolina while a province of Great Britain, in 1721, and was "empowered to have and exercise the same jurisdiction in hearing, adjudging and determining all causes and suits in equity in as full and ample a manner as any Chancellor, Court or Courts of Chancery in America can, may or ought to do." While the rigid enforcement of the rule of construction before referred to may have, in some instances, run counter to the actual intention, which sometimes happens in the application of other rules for the construction of wills, we do not appreciate the objection to the full extent urged. Upon such a subject it is necessary to have rules, otherwise we should be absolutely at sea. The execution of a power is not an ordinary matter, but is out of the usual course of things. It is incumbent upon the donee of the power to do the act; if not done, certain consequences of importance follow: and it would seem to be in accordance with the analogies of the law, that those who claim under the appointment should be held to show satisfactorily that it was made. In a large majority of cases testators dispose only of their own estate. These wills, which embrace also the execution of powers, are exceptions to the rule. When, therefore, a testator having property leaves a will, disposing of it in the usual manner, without any reference to a power, the inference, in the absence of other proof, is that the will is not one of the exceptions, but, as it purports, disposes only of the estate proper of the testator. If the will were intended to refer to and accomplish a matter so remarkable as the execution of a power, the part intended to make the appointment would naturally be separate *and distinct from the other parts. "Every instrument executing a power should mention the estate or interest disposed of; and it is best to declare it to be made in exercise of the power, and the formalities required in the execution of the power must appear on the face of the instrument." 4 Kent 329.

*539

*540

In most of the states of the Union which have no legislative enactments on the subject, there has been, as we understand it, a general acceptance, with some modifications, of the rule followed in the English chancery. These modifications, for the most part, are upon the point of allowing proof of the circumstances under which the will was executed, so as to allow it to be read in the light of those circumstances. The cases are not in accord, and we will not encumber this opinion by referring to them. If there can be said to be a distinct American doctrine upon the subject, we do not know that it is anywhere better stated than by Judge Story in Blagge v. Miles, 1 Story 426 [Fed. Cas. No. 1,479], cited in a note to 2 Eq. Jur., § 1062. In that case the rule of construction before referred to was stated, and the judge, in commenting, says: "The authorities on this subject may not all be easily reconcilable with each other, but the principle furnished by them, however occasionally misapplied, is never departed from, that if the donee of the power intends to execute the power, that intention, however manifested, whether directly or indirectly, positively or by just implication, will make the execution valid and operative. I agree that the intention to execute the power must be apparent and clear, so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation. If it is doubtful under all the circumstances, then that doubt will prevent it from being deemed an execution of the power."

We are content to take this as the result of all the American authorities, which declare that the intention to execute must be apparent and clear, so that the transaction is not fairly susceptible of any other interpretation. Taking this as our guide, did Samuel J. Boyce intend, by his will, to execute the power in reference to the Merchants' Hotel? His will makes no reference to the power or the property—it contains no expressions such as are usually employed in executing powers, but only the words of ordinary disposition, providing first for the payment of debts, *&c. The testator had property of his own which fully satisfied the terms of the will, which, from anything that appears on its face, might have been prepared by one who had no knowledge of the power or the existence of the hotel. Before deciding the question whether the property as to which the power existed, passed under the will of Samuel J. Boyce as part of his own estate, it is proper to inquire what the power of appointment was—whether it was part of his "estate" in such sense as under that description alone it would pass under the will. Samuel J. Boyce never had any estate in the Merchants' Hotel. It belonged to his father, who gave it to trustees "to permit his son, Samuel J., to take the income for his own use during his natural life, with power of appointment, and in failure of such appointment, to his children." The remaindermen in esse under the will of Ker Boyce took a vested interest, subject to be divested by the execution of the power. Williman v. Holmes, 4 Rich. Eq. 476. The power could be executed only by will, which took effect at the death of Samuel J., when his interest even in the income ended; so that at the time the will took effect the testator had no property interest whatever in the hotel. We do not agree that the distinction taken between property and power is a distinction entirely without a difference. This case affords a good example of a naked power as distinguished from property. "The distinction, although nice, is completely established between a gift to one indefinitely, with a general power of appointment superadded, and a gift to one for life with like power of appointment. In the former case the estate passes absolutely to the donee, and in the latter case an estate only for life to the donee with the power of appointing the inheritance or succession, which must be exercised to be effectual." Scott v. Burt, 9 Rich. Eq. 360; Aaron v. Beck, Id. 412; Wilson v. Gaines, Id. 421; Pulliam v. Byrd, 2 Strob. Eq. 141; Bradly v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 445.

*541

In the case before us, not only was the gift to trustees definite, being for life, but the power of appointment was limited to will. The donee could not appoint to his own use.

The words in the residuary clause are very comprehensive, "whatever and wherever," but they do not reach to the hotel, for *the reason that they refer, in terms to the testator's "estate." The expression "all the rest and residue of my estate, of every nature and kind," in Blagge v. Miles, was said to be incapable of passing property over which testator had only a power. "These words mean that the testator does not intend to die intestate as to any part of his estate, and they generally mean nothing more." Lupton v. Lupton, 2 Johns. Ch. 623.

*542

Looking at the terms of the will and all the surrounding circumstances, it does not appear that the intention of Samuel J. Boyce to execute the power under his father's will is "apparent and clear," and we think the transaction is fairly susceptible of the interpretation that he meant to dispose of his own estate and not to execute the power as to the Merchants' Hotel.

As this court takes the view that the power under the will of Ker Boyce, was not executed by the will of Samuel J. Boyce so as to dispose of the hotel, it will not be necessary to consider what would have been the result as to the payment of the debts of Samuel J. Boyce under the first clause of his will if the power had been well executed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. 542

(Case No. 992.)

THOMPSON v. BRANNON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐248.]

Appellant having submitted to a ruling, which admitted testimony against his objections, could not, of right, renew the objections here; but this court declined, of its own motion, to enforce the rule.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Bowen v. Atlantic & F. B. V. R. Co., 17 S. C. 578; Johns v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co., 39 S. C. 169, 17 S. E. 698, 20 L. R. A. 520, 39 Am. St. Rep. 709.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1467; Dec. Dig. ⇐248.]

[2. Trespass ⇐45.]

In a case involving title to a piece of land of which neither party has had actual possession, private plats in defendant's possession, made for former claimants through whom the defendant claims, are admissible in evidence as part of his muniments of title, to show the extent of his claim.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Frost v. Frost, 21 S. C. 508.

For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. ⇐45.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐970.]

The Circuit judge having, upon inspection and without proof, admitted in evidence a paper purporting to be a grant of over a hundred years ago, *found in the possession of a present owner of part of the land covered by the grant, this court, without further information upon the subject, cannot disturb his ruling.

*543

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3849–3851; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 970.]

[4. Evidence ⇐372.]

Deeds and other writings over thirty years old may be offered without formal proof of their execution, if the witnesses be dead, when there is no doubt as to their genuineness, and when they come from the proper custody.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Polson v. Ingram, 22 S. C. 548.

For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1614; Dec. Dig. ⇐372.]

[5. Evidence ⇐372.]

A deed of 1784, without any probate endorsed, and which was not registered, was properly admitted in evidence, the heir of the grantee having made plat covering the land, paid taxes, and cut some wood on it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1613–1627; Dec. Dig. ⇐372.]

[6. Evidence ⇐372.]

A deed of 1772, bearing the signature of only one witness, A, but probated by another, B, before a justice of the peace, as duly executed by A, B and C, and the signature of the justice being proven, was properly admitted in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1613–1627; Dec. Dig. ⇐372.]

[7. Adverse Possession ⇐104.]

From possession of land, under color of title for twenty-five years, a grant is presumed.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 179, 18 S. E. 257, 891, 42 Am. St. Rep. 854.

For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 595–602; Dec. Dig. ⇐104.]

[8. Trespass ⇐20.]

In a contest between two parties, neither of whom had ever been in actual possession of the land in dispute, but both claiming under color of title, the presiding judge properly charged the jury that if there was a joint occupation, the title must prevail.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 34; Dec. Dig. ⇐20.]

[9. Boundaries, ⇐3.]

In locating land in dispute, marks and trees should govern in preference to courses and distances.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Connor v. Johnson, 53 S. C. 91, 30 S. E. 833.

For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3–41; Dec. Dig. ⇐3.]

[10. Appeal and Error ⇐1050.]

Improper testimony was admitted, but as it was not material and could not have affected the result, this court would not disturb the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Johns v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co., 39 S. C. 169, 17 S. E. 698, 20 L. R. A. 520, 39 Am. St. Rep. 709.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4153; Dec. Dig. ⇐1050.]

[This case is also cited in Anderson v. Lynch, 37 S. C. 578, 16 S. E. 773, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Wallace, J., Chester, October, 1879.

These two cases involved the title to about twenty-one acres of land in Chester county. The plaintiff, Richard C. Thompson, claimed as sole heir of his father, who purchased from the estate of Richard E. Kennedy, who obtained the same as part of a tract of land covered by a grant from the state, dated September 26th, 1845. The land was never cleared or occupied. The plaintiff got logs there in 1867; and stocks a few years later, when the defendant objected. He got sills from the land afterwards, and James Brannon, the defendant here, indicted Thompson; but the solicitor dismissed the prosecution, as the land was in dispute. Dr. Thompson, plaintiff's father, got timber from the land more than twice, and a good many rails; William Black, through whom defendant derived title, once saw Dr. T. getting timber on this land.

The defendant offered in evidence a paper purporting to be a *grant from King George II., dated in 1755, of four hundred and fifty acres of land in Anson county, North Carolina, granted to Matthew Floyd, described as lying on the north side of Broad river, and one of the boundaries being John Elliott's line.† The paper came from the possession of J. D. Smarr, now the owner of part of this four hundred and fifty acres. [Objected to, because there was no evidence of its ever having been a grant. Objection overruled upon inspection of the paper.]

*544

Defendant offered deed from Matthew Floyd to William Hillhouse, dated December 27th, 1755, for four hundred and fifty acres —one boundary being John Elliott's line, and calls for a line running north 81, east 75, to a white-oak. This deed was regularly proved and recorded in the clerk's office of Anson county, North Carolina, April 27th, 1756.

On the back of this deed appears the following endorsement:

"I do sign over my right and title of the within deed to Archibald Robinson, for value received.

"Witness my hand. William Hillhouse."

There also appears upon the back of this deed another certificate of registration by Robert Harris, public register of Anson county, which is to the right of and lower down on the back of the deed than the assignment of William Hillhouse.

Defendant next offered deed from Archibald Robinson and Sarah, his wife, to John Wilson, for one hundred acres of land in Tryon county, North Carolina, dated March 11th, 1772, which is described in the deed as a part of a tract of four hundred and fifty acres, granted to Matthew Floyd; by him conveyed to William Hillhouse, and by Hillhouse to said Archibald Robinson; it calls for John Elliott's line and the white-oak corner.

This deed bears now the signature of only one witness, John Waterson; was proved before Joseph Brown, a justice of the peace of Craven county, South Carolina, on August 4th, 1772, *by the oath of Samuel Robinson, who swears that John Waterson and Joseph Scott, with deponent, witnessed its execution and subscribed their names as witnesses thereto, together with this deponent. It was proved that Brown, before whom the execution of the deed was proved in 1772, had died in 1822, and that the signature to this probate seemed to be the same writing as that which was acknowledged to be his handwriting.

*545

[The plaintiff objected to the introduction of this paper purporting to be a deed, because it was executed in the presence of only one witness, and there was no proper probate showing its execution or registration. Objection overruled by the court.]

The defendant next offered in evidence a paper purporting to be a deed from John Wilson and wife, Elizabeth, of Camden District, South Carolina, to Robert Black, dated March 25th, 1784, for one hundred acres, which, the deed says, is a part of a tract of four hundred and fifty acres, granted to Matthew Floyd; by him conveyed to William Hillhouse; by him conveyed to Archibald Robinson; and by him conveyed to the said John Wilson. The deed calls for John Elliott's line and the white-oak corner. It was witnessed by John Clark, Aaron Lockhart and Stewart Brown. There was no probate of any kind endorsed on this deed. The description of the tract of land conveyed in this last-named deed, after giving the courses and distances, was as follows: "A plantation or tract of land, containing one hundred acres, situated on the north side of Broad river, being part of a tract of four hundred and fifty acres granted to Matthew Floyd by the governor of North Carolina, and transferred from him by deed of conveyance to William Hillhouse, and from him to Archibald Robinson; and from Archibald Robinson to the said John Wilson." [The plaintiff objected to the introduction of this deed, on the ground that there was no proof whatever of its execution. Objection overruled by the court.] Mrs. Brannon was sworn at this point and testified that she had seen this deed and the other papers shown her, and which were offered in evidence in this case, except the Floyd grant and deed to Hillhouse, in the possession of Mr. William Black, more than thirty years ago.

*546

*Defendant offered in evidence a plat of one hundred and forty acres of land, embracing the land in dispute, which had the following remarks:

"Pursuant to the request of Mr. William Black, I have resurveyed a tract of land having such shapes and boundaries as the above plat represents. J. Robinson.

"April 19th, 1844."

[Objected to by plaintiff as merely a private plat, not referred to in any of the deeds. Objection overruled by the court.]

† A large portion of the upper part of South Carolina was, at that time, supposed to belong to North Carolina. In tracing back titles to land lying north of Pacolet river, in Union county, South Carolina, I have found the original grants to be from the State of North Carolina.—REPORTER.

Defendant offered in evidence a receipt dated October 11th, 1758, acknowledging the payment by William Hillhouse of £2 14s. to Robert McClenachall for three years of quit rent of four hundred and fifty acres of land in Anson county, due to his Majesty.

The papers are all old in appearance. The grant to Floyd, and the deed from him to Hillhouse, with the transfer endorsed to Robinson, came from the possession of J. D. Smarr, who owns the largest part of the Floyd grant. The other deeds and papers offered in evidence, the defendant got from Mary C. Hagerty, when he bought the land.

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon, witness for defendant, testified: Became acquainted with William Black in 1844; knew him before, but was not acquainted with him; witness was born in 1820; lived on Turkey creek, in Chester county, in 1844; had seen Black some time in 1830; he was then living at this same place, near the land in dispute; his house was in a few hundred yards of the land in dispute; he was moved off the place during the war, down to Jerry Hagerty's place; he died in June, 1864; William Black paid taxes on the land in dispute, and got what wood he wanted to burn off it; he did this from 1844 on till he moved to Hagerty's; he used it as he did all his other land; witness paid taxes for William Black; part of it had been cultivated—part of it had been fenced; there is on it now the old fence row; part of it has been fenced all the way; it has grown up in pines since that; part of it has gullies; some in woods—some old fields; witness was a cousin of Richard Kennedy's wife; *when he sent Hagerty after the titles he told Hagerty that he would give him $10 if he would go and get back that night; Black always claimed the land; in 1842, Kennedy said that old Mrs. Black had died, and all the others were old and would not claim the land and he would get it all; Robert Black lived there before Wiliam Black; he was William Black's father, and William Black inherited this land from his father; William Black died in June, 1864, and Jerry Hagerty in August, 1864; Mary C. Hagerty is still alive—she was the wife of Jerry Hagerty; Jerry had no other relatives but his wife.

*547

Cross-examined.—Is the stepmother of James Brannon, the defendant; never saw Robert Black; Kennedy got Black's papers to run the land; told Black that Robinson claimed some land; afterward he gave Black back his papers; Hagerty carried the chain in 1844; witness stayed with Kennedy's wife; old Mr. Robert Black's children said he cultivated that land.

Re-cross-examined.—Heard William Black and his sister both say that Robert Black, their father, worked the land.

[The plaintiff objected to the declarations of William Black and his sister being admitted. Objection overruled by the court.]

The defendant then introduced the will of William Black, dated July, 1862, in which he gives his whole land to Jerry Hagerty and his wife, Mary C. Hagerty.

The defendant offered office copy of deed from Mary C. Hagerty to James T. Brannon, the defendant, dated February 27th, 1875, calling for two hundred and twenty acres, and covering the land on which the trespass is alleged to have been committed.

Also plat made by Richard Thompson, Sr., plaintiff's grandfather, dated December 29th, 1834, being a survey of the land of Thomas McDaniel, lying along and bounding the land in dispute, in which the surveyor refers to the lands in dispute as the "lands of Black." [Objected to by plaintiff. Objection overruled by the court.]

It was in proof that William Black, in 1857, and Mrs. Hagerty, after the war, got timber from this land.

Plaintiff proved that Jerry Hagerty carried the chain at the survey made by Kennedy's direction.

*548

*One of the surveyors appointed by the order of the court, reported that the defendant's papers called for a white-oak, which he believed to be at figure 3 (on the plat), and which, to reach, would extend the distance 13.25 chains.

The jury found a verdict for the defendant in both cases.

The plaintiff appealed to this court upon the following grounds:

1. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury that if they found William Black to have been in possession under color of title for twenty years, that they must presume a grant, which permitted the jury to presume a grant senior to the grant from which the plaintiff derived title.

2. That his Honor erred when requested by the plaintiff to charge the jury that if they found the plaintiff's grant, or Richard Kennedy was in possession of a part of the land in dispute under a perfect title, that the possession of part was the possession of the whole, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover. His Honor did charge the jury that if the possession of part was joint, then the title must prevail, when there was no evidence whatever of any joint possession of fourteen acres.

3. That his Honor erred when requested to charge the jury that if the plaintiff was in possession of a part of the premises under his title, his possession of a part was possession of the whole; and if adverse to Mrs. Hagerty's title for ten years, plaintiff must recover; his Honor did charge the jury that if there was a joint occupation of a part of the land the title must prevail, when there was no evidence whatever of a joint occupation of fourteen acres.

4. Because, under the circumstances of this case, it was error in his Honor to charge the jury that, in fixing the location of the land in dispute, they must be governed by the marks and trees, in preference to the courses and distances. Overruled.

Mr. S. P. Hamilton, for appellant.
Mr. J. J. Hemphill, contra.

March 11th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. The appeal in this case embraces two cases, between the same parties, which were tried together below: one *for claim and delivery of certain pieces of board timber, and the other in the nature of an action of trespass quare clausum fregit —the main question below being a question of title to a certain tract of land described in the complaint.

*549

The verdict in both cases was for the defendant below—respondent here. The plaintiff has appealed, and his appeal is founded upon objections, made during the progress of the trial, to the admission of certain testimony hereafter to be noticed, and on exceptions to the refusal of the judge to grant a new trial upon grounds which will be found below.

The brief fails to show that any exception was taken to the rulings of the Circuit judge on the questions raised during the trial as to the admissibility of evidence. Objection was made, but the appellant seems to have submitted to the rulings of the presiding judge without excepting. According to strict rule the failure thus to except would preclude the raising of these objections here; but the respondent has not claimed the enforcement of the rule, and the court is not disposed, on its own motion, to do so.

Neither of the parties appears to have been in the actual possession of the precise piece of land upon which it is alleged the trespass complained of was committed. Each endeavors to show, however, that it is within the boundary of his claim, and for that purpose respondent introduced two plats, one known as the Enloe plat and the other as the William Black plat, as covering this land. The Enloe plat was made in 1868 for the immediate grantor of respondent, and the Black plat was made in 1844 for William Black, under whom respondent's grantor claimed. These were both private plats.

In Simmons v. Parsons, 2 Hill 492, note, the court said: "That color of title is anything which shows the extent of the occupant's claim." In Slice v. Derrick, 2 Rich. 629, Judge O'Neall said: "That marking of trees on line or making a survey may constitute color of title, although it is true that these in themselves would not constitute such a possession as would bar the owner of legal title." In Turnipseed v. Hawkins, 1 McC. 278, an old survey, made for the party in possession, was admitted. In Gray v. Bates, 3 Strob. 498, it was said that the deed, con*tract or plat under which possession was acquired, constitutes color of title and defines or shows the extent of the occupant's claim.

*550

The purpose of the plats introduced in the case now before the court was to show the extent of the respondent's claim, and while they cannot confer title in themselves, under the above authorities, they were admissible as evidence. One of them, at least, had come into the possession of the respondent through his grantor, Mary Hagerty, and the other from those under whom she claimed. They were a part of his muniments of title, and we think they were properly admitted for what they were worth.

The respondent introduced a paper purporting to be a grant from King George II., dated in 1755, known as the Floyd grant. The admission of this paper was objected to by appellant "because there was no evidence of its being a grant." Upon inspection the judge overruled the objection and admitted the paper. We see no reason to sustain the assignment of error here. Nothing is furnished in the argument upon which the court can found a judgment; and Judge Wallace having been satisfied, upon inspection of the paper, we cannot, in the absence of all information on the subject, disturb his conclusions.

The next objection refers to two deeds offered by respondent and admitted by the court: one deed known as the Robinson deed and the other as the Wilson Black deed, the first dated in March, 1772, and the other in March, 1784. As to the first deed, it is stated in the brief that it bears now the signature of only one witness—John Waterson. But it was proven before a justice of the peace for Craven county, South Carolina, August 4th, 1772, by the oath of Samuel Robinson, who swears that John Waterson and Joseph Scott, with deponent, witnessed the execution and subscribed their names thereto together with this deponent. The signature of the justice of the peace, who died in 1822, was proven to be genuine.

The Wilson Black deed, on its face, showed that it was executed in the presence of three witnesses; but this deed had not been probated, or, at least, there was no probate endorsed, nor had it been registered, and its introduction was objected to on that account.

*551

*The appellant's counsel has stated the true rule as to the admission of such papers. "Deeds and other writings over thirty years old may be offered without formal proof of their execution, if the witnesses be dead, where there is no doubt as to their genuineness, and when they come from the proper custody." And Mr. Greenleaf says: "Whether, if the deed be a conveyance of real estate, the party is bound first to show acts of possession under it, is a point not perfectly clear upon the authorities, but the weight of opinion seems in the negative." Greenl., vol. I., § 144, and note, where possession is held not necessary.

In Swygart v. Taylor, where an old deed was admitted without formal proof of its execution, Judge Butler, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The deed purports to have been executed seventy-two years ago, and upon inspection it had all the appearance of an ancient paper. Any incontestable fact going to show that a deed was in existence more than thirty years before it is offered in evidence, will authorize its introduction as an ancient muniment of right. Possession is that which seems to be most generally resorted to for this purpose, because it is the most usual mode of asserting a right under legal title. This, however, is not indispensably necessary." 2 Nott & McC. 404.

In Duncan v. Beard, Colcock, J., said: "I take it to be a well-established doctrine that a deed of thirty years may be given in evidence without proof of its execution, if accompanied by possession, and a mere entry for the purpose of survey has been considered as sufficient possession." See, also, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 82; Swygart v. Taylor, 1 Rich. 54; Eubanks v. Harris, 1 Speers 183.

The deed from Wilson to Robert Black was dated in 1784, and William Black, under whom Mary Hagerty claimed, inherited from Robert Black, his father. William Black had plat made in 1844 covering the land, paid taxes, and, in the language of one of the witnesses, got what wood he wanted to burn off of it. We think this deed was properly admitted. The Robinson deed was executed long before the act of 1795, and we think there was no error in the presiding judge permitting it to go to the jury. As to its effect a question might have been raised. Craig v. Pinson, Cheves, 272.

*552

*Appellant, we think, must fail to take any benefit from his exceptions to the charge of the judge—both as to the charge itself and as to his refusal to charge the propositions requested by appellant.

The judge instructed the jury that if they found that William Black had been in possession under color of title for twenty-five years, they must presume a grant. The judge did not discuss the facts as to whether Black had been in possession long enough to presume a grant; on the contrary, he distinctly left this to the jury. The facts may or not have been sufficient to warrant the jury in finding the necessary possession; this was entirely for them, and the judge in substance so said. Was he in error in this charge? Appellant's counsel extracts from McClure v. Hill, 2 M. Const. R. 420; and Smith v. Asbell, 2 Strob. 141, this rule: "The facts necessary to authorize the presumption of a grant of land are, that the possession was adverse and that it was continuous for twenty years." The charge of the presiding judge was in accordance with this rule, and, therefore, must be sustained.

The appellant requested the judge to charge "that if the jury found that plaintiff was in possession of part of the premises under his title, his possession of a part was possession of the whole; and if adverse to Mrs. Hagerty's title for ten years, plaintiff must recover." This, in substance, was the request found in exceptions of both two and three. The judge, in response, charged that if there was a joint occupation of part of the land, the title must prevail.

Here was a contest between two parties, neither of whom had ever been in actual possession of the precise locus upon which the trespass was committed, but both claiming by virtue of being in possession of part and color of title reaching over the place in dispute. Under such circumstances the charge of the judge, if founded in law, was the exact charge which the case required as fair to both parties. The proposition requested by the appellant might have been, and no doubt was, a correct legal proposition—as an independent statement; but if the judge had simply charged that proposition and stopped, it might have misled the jury to the prejudice of the respondent.

We think, therefore, that there was no error on the part of the *judge in the response which he made to appellant's request, if it be that the principle which he laid down was correct. Was it correct? "Where there are interfering claims to land without any actual possession of the disputed parcel, the rule of law is that the possession shall be adjudged to him who has the right." Sims v. Meacham, 2 Bail. 101. "Where there are two possessions in the same body of land—one under a senior and another under a junior grant—the senior title will prevail." Alston v. Collins, 2 Speers 459. Other authorities might be added, but these are sufficient. They fully sustain the charge as to this point.

*553

The charge given to the jury—that, in fixing the location of the land in dispute, marks and trees should control courses and distance—is also made a ground of exception.

In locating lands the following rules are resorted to, and generally in the order stated: 1. Natural boundaries. 2. Artificial marks. 3. Adjacent boundaries; and, 4. Courses and distance. Fulwood v. Graham, 1 Rich. 491. See, also, the cases of Bradford v. Pitts, 2 Mills' Const. R. 115; Starke v. Johnson, 2 Mills' Const. 9. These cases vindicate this last ruling of the presiding judge.

Several other questions were discussed in the argument, but these were not found in the exceptions, and we have not felt called upon to review them; and, besides, some of them were questions of fact; with these we have nothing to do. In a case like this, the province of this court is to correct errors of law; therefore we have confined ourselves to the legal questions raised. We think the declarations of William Black and of his sister, as detailed by the witness Mary Brown, were inadmissible, as hearsay, and, according to strict rule, they might have been excluded, but they do not seem to have been very material, and their exclusion could not have changed the result.

The appeal is dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. *554

*(Case No. 993.)

WINSMITH v. DEWBERRY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Costs ⇐221.]

Appeal was dismissed and order afterwards obtained in the Circuit Court for leave to enter up judgment for costs of appeal; meantime the fee-bill was amended. Held, that the costs were properly taxed under the fee-bill in force at the time the appeal was dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 834; Dec. Dig. ⇐221.]

[2. Witnesses ⇐32.]

Proof of service and mileage by a witness, certified by a notary public, but not signed by the witness, is sufficient proof for clerk to act upon, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Atherton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 82 S. C. 478, 64 S. E. 411.

For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. ⇐32.]

[3. Witnesses ⇐25.]

In action against a sheriff to recover cotton seized as the property of a third person, under an agricultural lien, the lienee is entitled to his costs as a witness against the plaintiff, who failed in his action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 50; Dec. Dig. ⇐25.]

Before Wallace, J., Spartanburg, March, 1880.

John Winsmith against John Dewberry, sheriff. The opinion states the case.

Mr. John Winsmith, for appellant.

Mr. S. J. Simpson, contra.

March 11th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. Appellant, in 1879, brought action in the Court of Common Pleas for Spartanburg county against the respondent, for the recovery of personal property—two bags of cotton—which respondent, as sheriff, had levied upon under an agricultural lien as the property of other parties. Appellant claimed the cotton as his. The jury rendered a verdict for defendant. Upon this verdict judgment was entered for costs—the costs, in the aggregate, amounting to $57.80. Appellant made a motion for a new trial, which was refused. Appellant appealed to this court. This appeal was heard at November Term, 1879, and was dismissed. The remittitur from this court was filed in the clerk's office for Spartanburg, January 10th,

*555

*1880. At the March Term thereafter the judgment of this court, on motion, was made the judgment of the court below, and an order made granting leave to respondent to enter up judgment for costs and disbursements of appeal. Accordingly, judgment for said costs was entered April 8th, 1880, the aggregate being $44.65. From this taxation of costs, and, also, from the taxation of the previous judgment, appellant excepted and brought the matter before the presiding judge of the July Term, 1880. Judge Mackey, by order, July, 1880, dismissed the appeal and affirmed the taxation by the clerk. From this order appellant has appealed to this court on three grounds:

1. That the costs should have been taxed under act of February 20th, 1880, instead of act of 1878.

2. The subpœnas were taxed without being proven according to law.

3. That the sum of $15 had been taxed for witness J. C. Wallace, who was the principal party.

As to the first ground, it will be seen from the dates hereinabove, that the whole case had been ended except the order for the entry of the last judgment before the passage of the act of February 20th, 1880. The case had been heard on appeal, and the remittitur sent down by January 10th, 1880, more than a month before the act of February. The entire costs had accrued under the previous act, and the order of April, 1880, simply granted leave that the costs which had thus accrued should be reduced to judgment. The appellant has certainly no ground to stand on here.

The objection to the subpœnas is, that the witnesses had not signed their names to the probate. It seems that the notary public before whom they were proven, simply endorsed the ordinary certificate that the witnesses had proven so many days' attendance and mileage before him, signing his name as notary public.

We are not advised of any law which requires more than this. This certificate was satisfactory to the clerk. It was by no means unusual, and, unless impeached by evidence to the contrary, we think the clerk was warranted in founding his taxation upon that mode of probate.

*556

*In the third exception appellant objects to the costs taxed for the witness, J. C. Wallace. The witness was the party in whose behalf the agricultural warrant had been issued, under which the respondent, sheriff, had seized the cotton. The action, however, was not against him, but was against the sheriff. He was a necessary witness to the defense of the sheriff; had been regularly subpœnaed; attended and testified; and we are not aware of any legal principle which precludes him from claiming the pay which the fee-bill allowed to witness.

The appeal is dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 556

(Case No. 994.)

OLIVER v. GRIMBALL.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Husband and Wife ⟸182.]

In construing acts done by married women prior to 1868, affecting their separate property, the court may look to the constitution of that year to see what is now the policy of the state as to the control of married women over their separate property.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Wallace v. Craig, 27 S. C. 520, 4 S. E. 74.

For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 714, 715, 719; Dec. Dig. ⟸182.]

[2. Husband and Wife ⟸48.]

A marriage settlement executed in 1860, gave to the intended wife the right to demand and receive her estate from the trustee, and gave power to the trustee, upon the written request of the wife, to give, transfer, sell or otherwise dispose of the property to any person whomsoever, for such price or consideration as should seem proper to the wife, and when sold for a money consideration, the proceeds to be re-invested, &c. In 1867, in accordance with the written request of the wife, the trustee, for the alleged consideration of $1, conveyed the property to the husband. Held, that the deed was a valid transfer under the terms of the settlement, and conveyed a good title. Cases considered.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Booker v. Wingo, 29 S. C. 122, 7 S. E. 49.

For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 242; Dec. Dig. ⟸48.]

Before Thomson, J., Charleston, June, 1880.

Controversy without action, between Robert C. Oliver and Berkley Grimball. The marriage settlement, omitting the parts immaterial to the opinion in this case, was as follows:

To have and to hold all and singular the said stocks, inter*ests and estates, unto the said L. H. Mouzon and his successors, and his and their heirs, executors and assigns forever. In trust, nevertheless, for the uses, intents and purposes following, to wit: To the use of the said F. M. Thompson, her heirs, executors and assigns, until the said marriage; and from and after that event, then in trust the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of the said F. M. Thompson, notwithstanding her coverture, free from the debts, and not subject to the control or interference of the said R. C. Oliver, for and during the joint lives of the said F. M. Thompson and the said R. C. Oliver, subject, however, to the right of the said F. M. Thompson at any time during the said coverture, to demand and receive from the said L. H. Mouzon and his successors, any part or all of the said interests, estate and property on her sole request, order or receipt in writing, and the same to dispose of according to her own will and pleasure; her sole receipt, request or order being hereby declared a sufficient discharge to the trustees from all liability further to account for the portion of the said estate so paid or delivered to her, the said F. M. Thompson. And in case the said F. M. Thompson shall survive the said R. C. Oliver, then the said L. H. Mouzon and his successors shall deliver up and transfer the said interests, estate and property of every kind to the said F. M. Thompson, to her, her heirs, executors and assigns forever, freed and discharged from all trusts whatsoever. But should the said Frances depart this life during the lifetime of the said Robert, then in trust to hold the said interests, estate and property for such uses, purposes, trusts and limitations as the said F. M. Thompson shall, by her last will and testament, notwithstanding her coverture, duly declare and appoint, concerning the same. But should she depart this life without having executed such will and testament, then, should there be living children of the said marriage, in that case the said interests, property and estate shall be held in trust, to divide the same equally amongst the children of the said marriage, share and share alike, if more than one; and if but one, then to that one absolutely, to him, her, them and his, her and their heirs, executors and assigns forever; the children, if any, of such as may die in the lifetime of the said F. M. Thompson, to represent and take their parents' share. But if there be no issue of the said marriage living at the death of the said F. M. Thompson, then the said estate, interests and property shall be distributed according to the statute of distributions, to her heirs and legal representatives, freed and discharged from all trusts whatsoever. Provided, however, that the said L. H. Mouzon and his successors, shall have power at all times hereafter, upon the written request of the said F. M. Thompson, to *give, transfer, sell or otherwise dispose of any or all of the said estate, interest or property to any person whomsoever, for such consideration or such price as may seem proper to the said F. M. Thompson; and when the same shall be sold for a money consideration, the proceeds shall be re-invested as she, the said Frances M., may direct, subject, however, to the said trusts and limitations as are hereinbefore declared concerning the original property and estate hereby settled.

*557

*558

The deed from L. H. Mouzon to R. C. Oliver, recited the marriage settlement, and the property covered by it and the written request of Frances M. Oliver, formerly Thompson, that this deed should be executed. The deed purported to be "in consideration whereof and for the sum of one dollar, to me paid by the said Robert C. Oliver;" and then continued, "do hereby grant, bargain and sell unto the said Robert C. Oliver all of my right, title and interest of, in and to all the said property, both real and personal, derived through the deed aforesaid: to have and to hold all and singular the said property, real and personal, unto the said Robert C. Oliver, his heirs and assigns forever."

To this was appended this written request:

To L. H. Mouzon.—I do hereby order or request you to execute the annexed deed of conveyance to Robert C. Oliver—all the property secured to me in the marriage settlement of my husband (the said Robert C. Oliver) and referred to by the said annexed deed, without limitation or any reservation whatever: and I do hereby declare that I do this under the power reserved to me in the marriage settlement or deed aforesaid.

Given under my hand and seal this 19th day of January, A. D. 1867.

Frances M. Oliver. [L. S.]

Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of—

Wm. H. Austin.

W. Bowman.

The controversy involved the title of Oliver to a lot of land in Charleston city, held by him under this deed.

All other matters are stated in the opinion of the court.

The Circuit decree is as follows:

The marriage settlement between Frances M. Thompson and R. C. Oliver and L. H. Mouzon, as trustee, bears date January 4th, 1860. The date of the deed from the trustee to R. C. Oli*ver, under order of Frances M. Oliver, is February 12th, 1867. Thus the questions submitted in this case are to be determined without regard to the change made by the constitution of 1868, in relation to the powers of married women over property which they held at the time of marriage or afterwards acquired. Reeder & Davis v. Flinn, 6 S. C. 239; Dunn v. Dunn, 1 S. C. 350.

*559

In framing settlements in pursuance of articles, they must be made not only in conformity with the intention of the parties, so far as the intention is lawful, but they must also be made so as to give effect to that intention. Atherly on Marriage Settlements 57; Porcher v. Daniel, 12 Rich. Eq. 357. And in determining the extent of a power, the intention of the parties in its creation must constitute the guide. Fronty v. Fronty, Bail. Eq. 517. This intention must be gathered from the terms of the instrument and ascertained from the trusts or uses declared under the marriage settlement between these parties.

The first use is for F. M. Thompson, her heirs, executors and assigns, from the time of executing the settlement until her marriage. The second use is for the sole and separate use of F. M. Thompson in the fullest sense from the marriage, during the joint lives of husband and wife. The third use is that in the event the wife survives the husband, the trustee is to deliver up and transfer the property to F. M. Oliver, discharged from all trusts. The fourth use is that in the event the husband survives the wife, she may make her will, notwithstanding coverture. The fifth use is that should the wife die before her husband, leaving no will, her child or children to take with right of representation. The sixth use is that should the wife die before her husband, leaving no will nor child or children, the property to be divided under the statute of distributions.

Could a settlement be made which more studiously excludes the husband from all right to, or benefit in, the property? For only in the last alternative as an heir-at-law, can he have any interest. Some of the powers of the settlement, it is alleged, have been executed, and the questions are, have these powers been executed according to the intention of the parties as expressed in the settlement? It is objected that the spirit and intent of the settlement have been violated, because the powers *have been exercised in behalf of the husband, who was expressly excluded, and whom the court never appoints as trustee for the wife. In the case Ex parte Hunter, the court forcibly expresses the character of the relations between husband and wife where there is a marriage settlement. "It is certainly extraordinary that a tribunal, one of whose peculiar functions consists in securing the interests of the wife against the husband, should be asked to become the instrument for delivering the separate property, which it is bound to protect, into the hands of the latter, against whose power and control it is its duty to guard it." Rice's Eq. 295.

*560

Chancellor Harper says: "In general, the appointment of a trustee is for the protection of the rights of the married woman against the husband. By constituting him a trustee he is invested with the legal title, and might convey any property to a purchaser without notice; over money his control would be absolute even if he should give the most satisfactory security to answer for the capital." Robinson v. Dart, Dud. Eq. 131 [31 Am. Dec. 569]. Chancellor Dunkin says: "Almost universally the leading purpose of creating a trust is to exclude the husband, and this object is seriously jeopardized, if not practically frustrated, by appointing him a trustee, and thus vesting in him the legal title." Dean v. Lanford, 9 Rich. Eq. 427.

The whole property, worth thousands of dollars, is conveyed by the trustee to the husband, for the nominal consideration of $1. The proceeds of the sale of property are to be re-invested. This disposition, in the event of a sale, must be complied with, being directed by the settlement. Could there be a more farcical act? The purchaser from the husband might well pause and ask if this result was in the minds of the parties when the settlement was executed. Surely no deed provides the elements of its own destruction; nor could it have been intended that this deed, professedly made to protect property from marital control, should complete its duty by a total surrender to the husband of the whole estate without even the limited protection afforded by the common law. Here the interests of the children also are destroyed. Though taking as volunteers, these interests are not to be disregarded. In settlements of the wife's property made *by the court, the interests of the children, as well as those of the wife, are always contemplated. McQueen on Husband and Wife, 82, 83.

*561

But has the wife exercised the powers according to the terms of the marriage settlement—that is, the trustee, by her direction? The Supreme Court says: "It is settled law in this state, that without the aid of a Court of Equity, a married woman cannot dispose of or charge her separate estate except in the execution of powers conferred by the instrument creating such estate. Ewing v. Smith, 3 Desaus. Eq. 457 [5 Am. Dec. 557]; Reid v. Lamar, 1 Strob. Eq. 27," and other cases.

"In the present case the power of the wife must stand on the terms of the order settling the trusts, for the court will not sanction the loan of the wife's separate estate to her husband without security." Dunn v. Dunn, 1 S. C. 354.

Under the use to the wife during the joint lives of her husband and herself, a power is given to her to demand and receive from the said L. H. Mouzon * * * any part or all of the said interest, estate and property on her sole request, order or receipt in writing, and the same to dispose of according to her own will and pleasure; her sole receipt, request or order being declared a sufficient discharge to the trustee * * * for the portion of the said estate so paid or delivered to her.

The plain intent of this power is to enable the wife to resume her right to the property, and the possession thereof, to receive some or all of it and dispose of it as she pleases. That this resumption of right and possession is peculiar to herself, is manifest from the power to dispose according to her will and pleasure. Had the transfer been made according to any power to another, her right in the property would cease when the transfer was made. The power to transfer or dispose of the property, after her receipt of it, negatives the idea of a transfer to another upon her order. The exercise of this power of appointment to herself is equivalent to a resumption of the ownership in fee. This power speaks of the estate so paid or delivered to her. The words of this power are too plain to admit of any construction that would authorize a transfer to another upon her order. The transfer can be only to herself.

*562

*Besides a recital of the above power, the deed from the trustee to the husband refers to another power for authority. The deed recites that "said L. H. Mouzon shall at all times hereafter, upon written request of cestui que trust, have power to give, transfer, sell or otherwise dispose of any or all the said estate, interest or property to any person whomsoever." Here the recital in the deed ends. But to make the sentence and the sense complete, there must be added, according to the marriage settlement, the following words: "For such consideration or such price as may seem proper to the said F. M. Thompson, and when the same shall be sold for a money consideration, the proceeds shall be re-invested as she, the said Frances M., may direct, subject, however, to the said trusts and limitations as are hereinbefore declared concerning the original property and the estate hereby settled."

This power does not authorize a gift of the property. The disposition made is to be for some consideration or price. The price was left to the good sense and discretion of the wife. She, under this power, could not sell to the husband for a nominal sum. Would she have directed a sale for such a sum to a stranger? And the husband stood in the relation of a stranger to her. Such was the case of Dunn v. Dunn, where money of the wife was lent to the husband by the trustee, with the alleged consent of the wife. The court, besides the objection that the money was lent to the husband, held that surety should have been required from the husband, as it should be from any other person. So the sale should have been made as if to a stranger. But were it urged that some regard should be had to the relations of the parties as husband and wife, then the very influence intervenes which the marriage settlement was intended to exclude. The property, however, may not be sold for a money consideration, still the language is, "when the same shall be sold."

The reasonable intendment is that the trust property may be exchanged for other property, to which the terms of the trust would attach upon exchange. The power contemplates no gift to a third party.

The case of Converse v. Converse, 9 Rich.

*563

Eq. 535, was cited *as conclusive of the right of the wife having a general power of appointment to transfer her separate estate to her husband.

An examination of the case discloses that a power was reserved to Mrs. Converse "to revoke the uses declared in the deed creating the trust—to declare new uses, and to convey the property, or any part thereof, to any person or persons as she saw fit, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole." These powers far exceed any that are reserved in the marriage settlement under consideration.

Nor is it to be overlooked when the wife exercises the powers reserved, the court said that "this is not an unreasonable provision for the husband, nor an unjust concession on the part of the wife; similar, and in some respects, better terms being conceded to the husband in the daily practice of the Court of Equity." P. 564.

Both in the character of the powers and in their execution the cases are dissimilar.

The conclusion of the court is that "The act of the trustee in transferring to R. C. Oliver, the husband of his cestui que trust, Frances M. Oliver, at her written request and direction, the whole of her separate estate, for the consideration of one dollar, was not valid and authorized."

And were such conveyance valid and authorized, the said R. C. Oliver, having purchased with full knowledge of the trusts, becomes a trustee for the wife, under the marriage settlement: and that a purchaser from R. C. Oliver, with a knowledge of the trusts, becomes a like trustee, as to the property purchased by him."

From this decree plaintiff appealed, upon the ground that the Circuit judge erred in holding that under the powers contained in the marriage settlement, the deed of Mouzon to Oliver, at the written order and request of F. M. Oliver, was not a valid and authorized act, and did not transfer the fee in the property to the said R. C. Oliver absolutely.

Messrs. Lord & Inglesby, for appellant.

Mr. A. T. Smythe, contra.

*564

*March 11th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This action was heard upon a case agreed in a controversy submitted. The facts all appear in the "case," and need not be repeated here, except so far as may be necessary to make the judgment intelligible. The plaintiff, R. C. Oliver, claims that the defendant, Berkley Grimball, shall specifically perform his contract for the purchase of a lot, described in the case as 440 King street, and the said Berkley Grimball resists the claim.

Frances M. Thompson, being of full age and possessed of a considerable estate, in contemplation of marriage with the plaintiff, Robert C. Oliver, January 4th, 1860, executed a marriage settlement to L. H. Mouzon, trustee, by which she conveyed her entire property to the uses and trust therein expressed. This deed was recorded and the marriage therein contemplated solemnized. On January 19th, 1867, the said Frances M., by writing, under her hand and seal, directed to her said trustee, ordered and required him to execute to Robert C. Oliver the deed of conveyance, thereto annexed, of all the property covered by the marriage settlement, without limitation or any restrictions whatever, and declared her said order or request to be under the power reserved to her in the said deed of settlement. Pursuant to the order and the terms and provisions of the settlement, the trustee, in consideration thereof, and of the sum of $1, on February 11th, 1867, conveyed the said property, real and personal, to Robert C. Oliver, his heirs and assigns forever. On March 15th, 1880, Berkley Grimball agreed to purchase from R. C. Oliver the lot aforesaid, parcel of the said trust property, for the price of $3500. A title deed from R. C. Oliver to Berkley Grimball, of the aforesaid lot, with renunciation of dower by Mrs. F. M. Oliver, is admitted to have been tendered and refused on the ground that the said Oliver had not good title and the right to convey the same. Robert C. Oliver and Mrs. Frances M. Oliver, his wife, are both still alive and have issue of the marriage living. The questions submitted to the court are as follows:

"First. Under the marriage settlement aforesaid was the act *of the trustee in transferring to R. C. Oliver, the husband of the cestui que trust, Frances M. Oliver, at her written request and direction, the whole of her separate estate for the consideration of one dollar, valid and authorized?

*565

"Second. If this question is answered in the affirmative, did the said deed of L. H. Mouzon, trustee, dated February 12th, 1867, convey in fee simple the lot in question to the said R. C. Oliver?

"Third. If these questions be answered in the affirmative, then the said Berkley Grimball is to be decreed to accept the title deed now tendered, pay the purchase money so agreed on, to wit, 'the sum of thirty-five hundred dollars, and twenty-five dollars for papers and the costs of this suit.'

"Fourth. If these questions, or either of them, are answered in the negative, then the defendant, Berkley Grimball, is to be decreed not to accept the title as tendered, and the plaintiff is to pay the costs of suit."

The case was heard by Judge Thomson, who adjudged that Berkley Grimball is not bound to accept the title tendered by the plaintiff Oliver. From this decree the appeal comes to this court.

Before the adoption of the constitution of 1868, the powers connected with the separate estate of a married woman were moulded and limited by the deed which created the estate.

The duties to be performed were generally continuous during the coverture, and it might be interesting to inquire what effect the constitution would have upon acts done after its adoption under a trust created before that event. But in this case not only the marriage settlement, but the alleged execution of the power, were prior to the constitution, which cannot, therefore, in terms, apply to them. But this settlement gives powers as large as the constitution attaches to all separate estates, and surely we may look to the constitution to see what is now the policy of the state as to the control of married women over their separate property. As was said in the case of Witsell v. Charleston, 7 S. C. 101: "Now that the constitution has reversed the rule of the common law and substituted general competence for the former rule of incompetence, as it regards the holding and acquisition of a sepa*rate estate, it is not for the courts, in nice readings of its texts, to return to a state of things from which the Courts of Equity have long striven to be released."

*566

We will consider the cases according to the law as it was settled at the time the transactions took place. This is well stated by Chancellor Harper in Reid v. Lamar, 1 Strob. Eq. 27: "It is the settled law of this state that when property is given or settled for the separate use of a married woman she has no power to charge, encumber or dispose of it unless in so far as the power to do so has been conferred on her by the instrument creating the estate, which power must be strictly construed in contradiction to many English cases."

What powers are conferred upon the married woman by the marriage settlement in this case? They are very large. It would be difficult to conceive larger. The deed contains, among others, these two provisions:

1. "Subject, however, to the right of the said F. M. Thompson, at any time during the said coverture, to demand and receive from the said L. H. Mouzon and his successor any part or all of the said interests, estate and property on her sole request, order or receipt, in writing, and the same to dispose of according to her own will and pleasure. Her sole receipt, request or order being hereby declared a sufficient discharge to the trustee."

2. "Provided, however, that the said L. H. Mouzon and his successor shall have power at all times hereafter, upon the written request of the said F. M. Thompson, to give, transfer, sell or otherwise dispose of any or all of the said estate, interest or property to any person whomsoever, for such consideration or such price as may seem proper to the said F. M. Thompson; and when the same shall be sold for a money consideration, the proceeds shall be re-invested as the said Frances M. may direct, subject, however, to the same trusts and limitations as hereinbefore declared concerning the original property and estate hereby settled."

Frances M. made the written request to the trustee, L. H. Mouzon, to convey to her husband, Robert C. Oliver, all the property covered by the marriage settlement, and the said trustee accordingly executed deed of the same to Robert C. Oliver, *stating the consideration to be the request, in writing, of the cestui que trust, and of $1 paid by the said Robert C. Oliver. Was this a good execution of the powers in the deed?

*567

So far as form is concerned, the transaction is scrupulously in accordance with the terms of the settlement. We regard the conveyance as a gift, the consideration of $1 being merely nominal. The deed expressly authorized a gift. The words are "give," "transfer," "sell," or "otherwise dispose of." The consideration might be good as well as valuable, and in that case there was to be no re-investment, as shown by the expression "when the same shall be sold for a money consideration the proceeds shall be re-invested as the said Frances M. may direct." The meaning of this is, undoubtedly, that the property might be transferred for other than "a money consideration," thus answering to the words "give" and "transfer." But it is urged that while the literal terms of the deed authorized the transaction, which was in exact conformity with the words, it was still not a compliance with the true intent and meaning of the deed. That the whole deed must be taken together and the powers determined by the intention of the parties at the time it was executed; that such intention must necessarily coincide with the relation of the parties and all the provisions of the instrument, which, being a marriage settlement, declaring trusts in favor of the issue of the marriage, &c., could not reasonably or possibly have been intended to bestow the power to "give" and "transfer" the property without any consideration, and, therefore, these words should be regarded as stricken out. That the manifest object of the deed, in contemplation of a marriage, was to protect the property from marital control, and to allow the husband to get that control through means of the deed itself, would be to allow it to provide the elements of its own destruction.

The words of a written instrument are certainly the usual means of expressing the intention of the parties, and when they are clear and unambiguous, and in harmony with the context, it would require very strong inferred general intent to expunge them. This is not a case in which a third person declared trusts for the married woman and the issue of the marriage, &c.; but even if it were so, the well-established rule is that an indefinite *gift, with a general power of appointment, properly executed according to the deed, gives absolute right to the property. But Frances M. was the absolute owner of the property before marriage; she had the right to make the settlement or not, as she saw fit, and having determined to make it, she had the right to shape and mould its provisions precisely as she chose, even to the extent of providing the elements of its own destruction. She chose to declare certain uses in particular events, but at the same time she also chose to declare what rights she retained. One of the most marked features of the whole instrument—that which stands out from every part of it—is the unaltered and absolute control which, in any and all circumstances, she reserves for herself over the property. It was protected amply against marital control, but not against her own. She never parted with the right to do at any moment that which would, in effect, destroy the uses declared. She expressly retained the right at any time during coverture "to demand and secure any part or all of the said property on her sole receipt." It was also provided "that upon her written request the trustee should have power to "give, transfer, sell or otherwise dispose of the said property," &c. We think the conveyance of the property by Mouzon, the trustee, to Robert C. Oliver, the husband, at the request of the wife, was in conformity not only with the terms construed strictly, as required by the decision in Lamar v. Reid, but also the true intent and meaning of the marriage settlement.

*568

Was that conveyance, in execution of the powers, good and valid? It is insisted that the power which permits the wife to give her separate estate to her husband, is against the spirit and principles of the old equity decrees and should not be enforced. There is no doubt, as stated in the Circuit decree, that the leading object in creating this trust was to exclude the marital rights of the husband, and for that reason the Court of Equity was disinclined to appoint the husband trustee for his wife. The rule was as stated by Chancellor Dunkin in Dean v. Lanford, 9 Rich. Eq. 427: "Almost universally the leading purpose of creating a trust is to exclude the husband, and this object is seriously jeopardized, if not practically frustrated, by appointing him a trustee, and thus creating in him the legal estate." The object *of this rule was to prevent the control of the husband against the will of the wife. But we know of no principle of equity which excluded the married woman from giving her separate estate to her husband, only provided the deed creating the separate estate contained the power to make such disposition, and there was no proof of fraud, duress or undue influence.

*569

Mr. Perry, in his work on Trusts, Chapter XXII., Section 679, says: "When a married woman holds property to her separate use under a settlement or under these statutes, she may give it to her husband or sell it to him for a valuable consideration." And again, at Chapter XXII., Section 667: "The trustee will be compelled to give legal effect to any such alienation by transferring the property, even if it is a gift, and transfer to the husband or for his benefit, for a direct gift to the husband will be sustained, if not made under the improper or undue influence of the husband."

It is urged that a married woman could not give her inheritance to her husband directly, and that which she could not do directly she ought not to be permitted to do indirectly, and more especially through the operation of a deed, the very object of which was to prevent the control of the husband. But in the case of Garvin v. Ingram, 10 Rich. Eq. 130, it was held that a wife may, under the act of 1795, indirectly convey her inheritance to her husband. That is to say, she may join her husband in conveying to a third person, who, by previous understanding, may immediately re-convey to her husband. Chancellor Wardlaw, in delivering the judgment of the court, says: "The act makes no change of the common law in prohibiting one from conveying to himself, (Fryerson v. Fryerson, 3 Strob. 461,) but it authorizes, or at least does not inhibit, the power of a wife to bestow her estate upon her husband indirectly. In many cases it is politic and dutiful that such power should be exercised. I trust it may never be considered improper for a wife to contribute, by all lawful means, to the success of her husband's enterprises. * * * I loath the notion of imposing upon a wife any restrictions in her desire to aid and cherish her husband which common law and statute have not imposed. It is clear that she may mortgage her estate for his convenience, and on *like reasoning she may surrender her ultimate interest in an estate to which she has a present title in freehold."

*570

In the case of Converse v. Converse, 9 Rich. Eq. 535, which was an action by the wife to set aside a deed to her husband, under powers which, we think, were not more ample than those in the deed of settlement in this case, the power to resume control of the property or to direct the trustee to give it away, are, at least, as large as those given in the Converse deed, which were to revoke the uses declared in the deed, "to declare new uses and to convey the property, or any part thereof, to any person or persons as she saw fit, in the same manner as if she was a feme sole." In that case the law was announced by the Court of Errors in these clear and unequivocal terms: "That a married woman having a separate estate, with a general power to dispose of the same as if she were a feme sole, may bestow it upon her husband, is so well established at this day as not to admit of debate or doubt. Whether we refer to English authorities or to the decisions of the courts of the different states of this Union, including those of South Carolina, the result is the same, the principle is clearly settled, and nothing can be considered as settled by judicial decisions if the principle can be brought into question or be shaken."

The first two questions submitted to the court are decided in the affirmative.

1. The act of the trustee in transferring to Robert C. Oliver, husband of his cestui que trust, Frances M. Oliver, at her written request and direction, the whole of her separate estate for the consideration of $1, was valid and authorized.

2. The deed of L. H. Mouzon, trustee, bearing date February 12th, 1867, did convey in fee simple the lot in question to the said R. C. Oliver, and the said Berkley Grimball is bound to accept the said title deed, pay the purchase money and for papers and costs, as stipulated in the case.

The decree of the Circuit judge is reversed, and the case remanded for such orders as may be necessary to carry the judgment into effect.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *571

*(Case No. 998.)

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHARLESTON v. GARY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐425.]

Verdict for defendant, and within ten days after the rising of the court, plaintiff gave verbal notice of his intention to appeal; and within ten days after the entry of judgment gave written notice of appeal, based upon exceptions taken at the trial and purporting to be in accordance with the verbal notice of appeal previously given. Motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to serve notice of intention within time, refused.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Molair v. R. Co., 31 S. C. 517, 10 S. E. 243.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2157; Dec. Dig. ⇐425.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇐123.]

No appeal lies to this court from the verdict of a jury.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Whitesides v. Barber, 22 S. C. 50; Molair v. Railway Co., 31 S. C. 516, 10 S. E. 243.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 875–881; Dec. Dig. ⇐123.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐417.]

The notice of intention to appeal is not required to be in writing.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Molair v. Port Royal & A. Ry. Co., 31 S. C. 515, 10 S. E. 243; Mitchell v. Bates, 57 S. C. 51, 53, 35 S. E. 420.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2141; Dec. Dig. ⇐417.]

[This case is also cited in Archer v. Long, 46 S. C. 295, 24 S. E. 83, as to when a judgment becomes effective.]

Motion by M. W. Gary, the defendant and respondent, to dismiss the appeal. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. Ernest Gary, for motion.

Messrs. C. L. Woodward and Buist & Buist, contra.

March 15th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal, upon the ground that notice of intention to appeal was not given within the time required by law. The facts upon which the decision of this question depends are agreed upon, and, in substance, are as follows:

The action, which was brought against the defendant as endorser of a promissory note, was tried on October 12th, 1880, and a verdict for defendant rendered. At the trial various exceptions were taken and noted. The court adjourned on October 23d, 1880; but no judgment or order for judgment on the verdict was taken or entered during the term, and not until November 24th, 1880, was the judgment entered on the verdict, after the defendant had been served with a notice requiring him to enter such judgment in order that the plaintiff might take an appeal therefrom. Within ten days after the rising of the court *the plaintiff's attorney gave verbal notice to the defendant's attorney of his intention to appeal. On November 30th, 1880, within less than ten days after the entry of the judgment, the plaintiff's attorney gave a written notice of appeal, with the grounds therefor, which was stated to be in accordance with the verbal notice previously given, which grounds were based upon the exceptions taken at the trial.

*572

Under this state of facts we do not see how the appellant can be regarded as being in any default. Until the judgment was entered there was nothing to appeal from. There was no order or judgment—nothing but a verdict, and no appeal lies to this court from the verdict of a jury. It was not like the case where, during term time, an order has been made involving the merits of an action, or an order affecting a substantial right, which, in effect, determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken, as, for example, an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, because it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; for here it is admitted that there was not even an order for judgment, but simply a verdict of the jury.

There is another view which would be fatal to this motion. The act of 1878, (16 Stat. 698), the rigid requirements of which are invoked to sustain this motion, does not require that the notice of intention to appeal shall be in writing. It simply requires that "the appellant or his attorney shall * * * give notice to the opposite party or his attorney * * * of his intention to appeal," and it is admitted that such notice was given, verbally, within ten days after the rising of the Circuit Court at which the case was tried. Now, while it it is far better that such notice should be in writing, so as to avoid any possible controversy as to the fact, yet when it is admitted, as in this case, that the notice has been given verbally, we would not be disposed to say that the appellant has incurred the forfeiture of so valuable a right as that of appeal, because he has failed to give written notice of his intention to appeal, when the act does not, in terms, require the notice to be in writing.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is refused.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *573

*(Case No. 999.)

DIAL v. GARY.

DIAL v. TAPPAN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Executors and Administrators ⟸519.]

A citizen of Massachusetts died at his home, having in possession a bond and mortgage for money owing to him by a citizen and resident of South Carolina. The administrator cum testamento annexo of the deceased, for value assigned this bond and mortgage to another citizen of South Carolina, who brought in the proper court of this state an action against the mortgagor for foreclosure. Held, on demurrer, that such assignee had not the right or legal capacity here to bring the action.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Dial v. Gary & Tappan, 24 S. C. 579; Stevenson v. Dunlap, 33 S. C. 352, 11 S. E. 1017; Martin v. Fowler, 51 S. C. 174, 28 S. E. 312; Heyward v. Williams, 57 S. C. 241, 242, 35 S. E. 503; In re Mayo's Estate, 60 S. C. 415, 38 S. E. 634, 54 L. R. A. 660.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2310–2322; Dec. Dig. ⟸519.]

[2. Executors and Administrators ⟸171.]

A grant of administration vests in the administrator only such movable property as may be found within the territorial limits of the government which grants it; but choses in action are bona notabilia of the state where the debtor resides, and are the subject of administration there.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Patterson v. Pagan, 18 S. C. 589; Cochran v. Fillans, 20 S. C. 245; Graveley v. Graveley, 25 S. C. 19, 60 Am. Rep. 478; Stevenson v. Dunlap, 33 S. C. 353, 11 S. E. 1017; Jones v. Jones, 39 S. C. 256, 17 S. E. 287, 802; Pollock v. B. & L. Ass'n, 48 S. C. 74, 25 S. E. 977, 59 Am. St. Rep. 695; State v. Hughes, 56 S. C. 548, 35 S. E. 214; Stoddard v. Aiken, 57 S. C. 137, 35 S. E. 501; H. J. Baker & Bro. v. Doe, 88 S. C. 76, 70 S. E. 431, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510.

For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 650; Dec. Dig. ⟸171.]

[3. Executors and Administrators ⟸519.]

[Cited in Jones v. Jones, 39 S. C. 257, 17 S. E. 287, 802, to the point that where no administration has been taken out in the state of the debtor, and no creditor is there, a payment by the debtor to a foreign administrator is good as against the domiciliary executor.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2310–2322; Dec. Dig. ⟸519.]

[This case is also cited in Dial v. Gary & Tappan, 27 S. C. 142, 3 S. E. 84, as to the facts.]

Before HUDSON, J., Richland, August, 1880.

These were five actions heard together, George L. Dial being plaintiff in all of them. One was against Edward F. Gary, Henry L. Tappan, Sarah B. King and others; two were against E. F. Gary and H. L. Tappan; and two were against H. L. Tappan. All of these cases involved the same question. The Circuit decree is as follows:

The foregoing actions were all heard together on demurrer to the complaints. The pleadings in the first aforesaid action were alone read—counsel on both sides uniting and stating that the same issues were raised by the pleadings in all the actions, and that, therefore, the decision of one would conclude all. As the argument was made upon the pleadings in the first of these cases, we will address ourselves specially to that one.

The complaint alleges that on December 1st, 1874, the defendants executed and delivered to Asa Burke, a resident of the county of Suffolk, in the State of Massachusetts, their bond, bearing date of that day, in the penal sum of $8000, conditioned to *pay the sum of $4000 on December 1st, 1876, with interest at the rate of ten per cent. from date, payable annually. Second. That on the same day, to secure the payment of the said bond, the defendants executed and delivered to the said Asa Burke their deed, and thereby conveyed, by way of mortgage, a certain piece or parcel of real estate, situate in the county of Richland, in the State of South Carolina, therein fully described. Third. That on December 3d, 1874, this mortgage deed was duly recorded in the proper office. Fourth. That in the year 1879 the said Asa Burke died, leaving of force a last will and testament, in which, no executor being nominated, one Philip Sowden was, by the Probate Court of Suffolk, Massachusetts, duly appointed administrator of the estate of Asa Burke, with the will annexed, and qualified as such. Sixth. That on February 27th, A. D. 1880, the said administrator, for value, assigned to the plaintiff, Dial, resident in South Carolina, the said bond and mortgage, due by defendants, residents of South Carolina, constituting a lien on real estate here situated. Seventh. That the condition of the bond is broken, the mortgage forfeited, &c., and judgment of foreclosure and sale is demanded and execution for balance of debt after the application of proceeds of sale.

*574

To this complaint the defendants demur upon the grounds—

First. That the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.

1. Because it does not appear that the administrator was vested with the right to transfer the legal title of said bond and mortgage to the plaintiff.

2. Because it does not appear that the said administrator had license to sell and assign said bond and mortgage.

3. Because it does not appear that letters of administration on the estate of Asa Burke, in South Carolina, have been granted, without which plaintiff, as assignee of the foreign administrator, cannot sue in the courts of South Carolina for the recovery of this debt.

Second. That there is a defect of parties, because the heirs-at-law and legatees of Asa Burke should be joined in the action.

Third. That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Upon the issues raised by this demurrer the arguments of *counsel were very full and characterized by much research and ability on both sides. We do not propose to follow the learned counsel through their exhaustive arguments, as we are wanting in time to do so, nor do we deem it necessary to encumber this decree with numerous citations of authorities or lengthy extracts from decided cases. In our opinion the fundamental inquiry is, whether the administrator of the domicile can transfer and assign bonds of the decedent, secured by mortgage of the realty in a foreign jurisdiction or other choses in action, against debtors abroad, so as to enable such assignee to enforce said claim in the courts of such foreign jurisdiction without suing out letters of administration there upon the estate of the deceased.

*575

We have no hesitation in saying that the estate of the decedent, situate in a foreign jurisdiction, cannot be administered in this way; and whether the plaintiff, Dial, be a real purchaser of these choses in action, or a purchaser only nominally, and for the purpose of collecting and accounting for these assets, does not alter the case. In either case it is clear that it is an attempt by the administrator of the domicile to administer the estate of Burke, in South Carolina, without the grant of letters of administration from the courts; it is an effort to accomplish indirectly what he could not do directly, to wit, to authorize and empower an assignee to bring suit on choses in action in this state, when, in his own name, he could not do so by his letters in Massachusetts. It is well established that the authority of an administrator is confined to the limits of the state in which he is appointed, and extends only to the personal estate therein situated. No title vests in him to that part of the personal estate which lies in another state. If it consists of debts due by residents of that other state, the evidences of which happen to fall into the hands of the administrator of the domicile, he cannot himself go into the foreign jurisdiction and sue for them without a new grant of administration, because, without such new grant of administration, he has no title to nor authority over the assets; it is very clear that he cannot, therefore, confer upon an assignee a right which he does not himself possess. If this could be done, an ancillary administration would rarely ever become necessary, and the estates of deceased testators or intestates, in a large *majority of cases, would be fully administered by the domiciliary administrator, whilst the bulk of said estates might be in a foreign jurisdiction, and the majority of creditors likewise there. Great inconvenience and great detriment to creditors would often result from such a rule. In each state must be administered that portion of a decedent's estate within its borders, and must be administered according to the lex rei sitæ and not the lex domicilii. Whatever there be of the estate of Asa Burke situated in South Carolina, can only be collected through our courts by an administrator appointed here, and must be administered under and by our laws, without reference to the laws of Massachusetts, until all debts here are fully paid, when the surplus will be transmitted to the administrator in Massachusetts and administered there according to her laws. This course cannot be defeated by an attempted sale of these choses in action by the administrator in that state. The assignee thereby acquires no right to bring suit upon them in our courts. It has been held that negotiable paper, to bearer, is not subject to this rule, and that an administrator, coming in possession of such, acquires such a title as will enable him to sue thereon, in his own name, without styling himself administrator, wherefore he can transfer the same to a stranger, who can likewise sue in another jurisdiction in his own name; but the weight of evidence, we think, is against this doctrine, which seems to us to be untenable on both reason and authority. Certainly if the facts were to appear on the face of the complaint on such a note, I think it would be obnoxious to the demurrer in this case.

*576

None of the authorities have gone so far as to hold that the assignee of a bond and mortgage holding by the title set up by the plaintiff in this action, can maintain this suit. Before he can acquire a status in the courts of this state, either at law or in equity, it is necessary that he sue out letters of administration upon the estate of Asa Burke, here situate. That being done, the entire form of these actions would be radically changed, so much so that the change could not be effected by amendments. A new action in each case would be necessary.

The authority upon which I chiefly rely for these views, above expressed, is to be found in Story on Conflict of Laws, Sections

*577

*512 to 524, inclusive, et seq. Numerous other and more recent authorities were cited by counsel for the defendants, in argument, but all in harmony with the doctrine of Judge Story, and to cite them here is unnecessary.

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that in each of the above cases the demurrers be sustained, and that the defendants have leave to enter up judgment thereon against the plaintiff for the dismissal of the complaints, and for costs.

To this decree the plaintiff filed eighteen exceptions, which, in substance, were, that the administrator of the domicile had authority to sell, and, having sold, assigned and transferred the choses in action, the subject of this suit, to Dial; that Dial was authorized and alone authorized, as the real party in interest, to bring these actions in his own name; and that the demurrer should have been overruled. Upon these exceptions plaintiff appealed to this court.

[For subsequent opinions, see Ex parte Dial, 14 S. C. 584; Dial v. Tappan, 20 S. C. 167.]

Messrs. Bauskett & Lynch, for appellant, cited 3 Mass. 518; 9 Id. 337; 16 Id. 18; 115 Id. 510; 10 Pick. 468; 14 Id. 399; Rev. Stat. (Mass.), ch. XCVIII., §§ 1–5; 6 S. C. 184; 27 How. Pr. 474; 32 N. Y. 1; 2 Pet. 239; 26 Mass. 577; 6 Jones' L. 94; 3 Ind. 309; 4 Mason 16; 9 Whart. 856; 3 S. C. 70; 20 N. Y. 112; 25 Id. 584; Story's Confl. of L., §§ 359, 383, 384, 465–468, 516–518; 2 Brev. 307; 1 McC. Ch. 506; 2 Id. 168; 3 McC. 371; 1 McC. Ch. 191, 318; 1 Rich. 116; 10 S. C. 182; 13 S. C. 409; 7 Johns. Ch. 45; 10 Paige 549; 56 Ala. 312; 12 Metc. 422; 4 Id. 252; 2 Sandf. Ch. 173; 1 Barb. Ch. 189; 9 Serg. & R. 258; 4 Id. 392; 7 Paige 239; 11 Wend. 363; Com. Dig., "Chancery," 3 G 1, and "Administration," B 11, 12; 1 Ves. 49; 1 Atk. 463; 3 Atk. 237; Co. Lit. 223, a; Wms. on Ex'rs 796; 17 E. L. & Eq. 582.

Messrs. Melton & Clark, contra, cited 1 Rich. 116; 3 Mass. 514; 10 Cush. 172; 16 Mass. 314; 9 Cr. 151; 5 Rawle 264; Pot. Dwar. 97; 110 Mass. 373; 8 Bligh 44; 4 M. & W. 171; Story's Confl. of L., §§ 512–515; 8 Cl. & F. 306; 10 Rich. L. 109; 2 Vt. 333; 6 Hill (N. Y.) 554; 1 Am. Law Rev.

*578

359; 2 *Metc. 114; 4 Id. 255; 1 Pick. 81; 1 Mills' Const. R. 292; 10 Rich. Eq. 12; 7 S. C. 60; 5 Greenl. 261.

March 15th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. These cases were heard together below on demurrer to the complaints. The facts were the same in each. It appears that respondents, in December, 1874, executed to Asa Burke, a resident of the State of Massachusetts, their bond in the penal sum of $8000, conditioned to pay $4000 on December 1st, 1876. This bond was secured by mortgage of real estate situate in Richland county of this state. Asa Burke died in 1879, in Massachusetts, and one Philip Snowden, of that state, was appointed his administrator there by the Probate Court of Suffolk county, Massachusetts. Whereupon this administrator, for value, assigned to the appellant, Dial, a resident of this state, the said bond and mortgage due by respondents, also residents of this state.

Upon this bond and mortgage these actions were instituted by Dial. Respondents demurred to the complaint, and upon the hearing below the actions were dismissed.

The leading questions raised in the appeal, in fact we might say the single question, because, although there are numerous exceptions, they all hinge upon this, is: Whether the plaintiff (appellant,) being the holder of a bond, purchased by him from a domiciliary administrator abroad, has the right and legal capacity to sue said bond in this state, where the debtor resides, and where he, the appellant, resides.

"The owner of personal property, while alive, has always the possession or the right of possession to such property in whatever part of the civilized world it may be situated." Says Judge Butler in Carmichael v. Ray, 1 Rich. 116: "His possession follows his title, and, while alive, he may transfer and assign it to whomsoever he may see proper. And he needs no special authority for this purpose from the laws of the place where the property is situated. He can act in reference to it as any citizen of the place can act as to his property. But it is a mistake to suppose that, upon his death, his legal representatives, appointed under the laws of his domicile, are invested with like title and *power as to all such property: while the owner, when alive is, clothed with this authority, yet his death is an event which changes the character of the title, and invests new parties with power over his estate."

*579

It is the duty of every government to protect its own citizens, and especially the rights of creditors, as the material and commercial prosperity of a country depends greatly on this protection and security. If a government fails in this, it fails in one of its most important functions and duties. To this end, therefore, it is well understood that the different governments in which the movable property of a deceased may be left, upon his death, are authorized to intervene and take control. Hence, in every state, we find laws declaring in whom such property, within its limits, shall vest, and in what manner it shall be administered. True, if the decedent has left a will or testament, upon such testament being established under the lex domicilii, it will usually be confirmed under the jurisdiction where the property is found. And the title of the executor, as well as the disposition of the property therein appointed and directed will be recognized there. But this confirmation must take place and be had in accordance with the laws of the rei sitæ before even an executor under such testament can intermeddle with the property. But in cases of intestacy there must be a grant of administration in such jurisdiction where property is found; it being well settled that the grant of no state, not even the grant of the state of the domicile, can extend beyond the territory of the government which grants it. Nor can it invest the administrator with title to any movable property, except to such as may be found within its limits.

These are the general principles applicable to executors and administrators in cases like this. Wms. on Ex'rs. vol. I., p. 320, and cases there cited, notes 321, 322; Story's Confl. of L., §§ 512, 524.

It has been held in several cases in this state that a foreign administrator has no legal capacity to sue here. He cannot sue, because his appointment stops at the boundary of the state which appointed him, and because the title of the decedent's property, found here, under our laws, can only vest in an administrator *appointed here. Carmichael v. Ray, supra; Tillman v. Walkup, 7 S. C. 60; Richardson v. Gower, 10 Rich. 109.

*580

Now if the administrator of Asa Burke, appointed in Massachusetts, his domicile, had brought these actions, can there be a doubt that a demurrer would have been fatal? Or, if the property in question was movable, tangible property, such as horses, cattle, wares and merchandise, located in this state at the time of the death of Burke in Massachusetts, could his administrator, appointed there, institute suit for the recovery of such property? The right to sue for the recovery of property springs from title. Without title no right of action can exist under the authorities referred to above. No title to such property could vest in a foreign administrator. Neither would a foreign administrator have the power to sell or transfer such property, and for the same reason—the want of title.

It may be said, however, that while the principles announced above may be admitted, yet, on the other hand, it will also be admitted that if such property had been found in Massachusetts, the place of Asa Burke's death, that his administrator there would have the power to sell, and that the title of his vendee in such sale would be recognized, not only in Massachusetts but in every state, and wherever it might become necessary for him to enforce it. And it is contended that the bond and mortgage in this case being in the possession of Burke at his death, in Massachusetts, constituted a part of his effects and personal property in that state, to which administration there attached, giving the right to his administrator, Philip Snowden, to sell and transfer, and, therefore, that his assignment to appellant was valid.

This brings up the real question in the case. The bond sued on is, technically, a chose in action. Is a chose in action property, or merely the representative of property? Is it the substance or shadow? And where the obligor and obligee reside in different states, is the property involved in the bond to be regarded as situated in the domicile of the debtor or that of the creditor? If the bond followed the person of the debtor, and is to be considered as bona notabilia in the state where he resides, then the demurrer was properly sustained. If, however, it followed the person of the creditor, and is to be considered property *in Massachusetts, then, if the laws of that state have been complied with, the appellant's title would be good. The term chose signifies thing or property. In law it is applied to personal property, as choses in possession are such personal things of which one has possession. Choses in action are such as the owner has not possession, but merely a right of action for their possession. 2 Bl. Com. 389, 397; 1 Chit. Pr. 99.

*581

A chose in action, then, embraces two ideas; first, a visible, tangible thing, and, second, the right to sue for and recover that thing. These are separate and distinct elements, and the one may be situated in one locality and the other in another.

In the case now before the court the chose or thing is situated in South Carolina, and the evidence of the right to sue, at the death of Burke, was in Massachusetts, but that right could not be exercised in that state even by Burke himself, at least so long as the debtor continued in this state. In this view both the thing and the right to sue for it belonged to South Carolina, and, according to strict law, ought to be subject to administration here. Otherwise the great object of each state or government, retaining control over the property of an absent decedent, would be defeated entirely. If a foreign administrator, by virtue of finding choses in action in the possession of his intestate at the time of his death abroad on persons in other states, is so far invested with title as to enable him to assign such choses in action to a third party, the rights of domestic creditors might be wholly destroyed, and all of the laws providing local administration under local authorities for the protection of such creditors eluded and overthrown. It would seem then, upon principle, that the appellant took nothing by the assignment to him of the bond and mortgage in question.

It is true, however, that the decisions in the different American states and in England are not uniform upon this subject, and they leave the question presented here in considerable doubt.

In Leake v. Gilchrist, 2 Dev. 75, it was broadly and distinctly held that debts due by specialty follow the person of the obligee and are assets of the domicile. In that case an assignment by the administrator of the domicile in South Carolina of a bond *on a citizen in North Carolina was recognized as valid, and suit brought by the assignee in North Carolina was sustained.

*582

In the case of Harper v. Butler, 2 Pet. 239 [7 L. Ed. 410], the Supreme Court of the United States sustained an assignment of a promissory note due the estate from a citizen of Mississippi by an executor in Kentucky, without probate of the will in the former state, but in that case the debt was contracted in Kentucky, where the testator lived and died, and the assignment was made by an executor.

In Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns. Ch. 46, an administrator of a creditor, who died in Vermont, having in his possession a bond and mortgage of real estate from a citizen of New York, sold said real estate in payment of the bond, but in that case the mortgage contained a power to the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, to sell and convey, and the Chancellor, in pronouncing judgment, based the right to sell on this power, saying that the whole proceeding was extrajudicial and founded on private agreement. He did not recognize the administrator as such, or that he had any power by virtue of his foreign appointment, but he recognized the agreement of the parties. * * *

In this case it was said that a payment by a debtor to a foreign administrator would acquit the debtor. This, no doubt, is good law where no administration has been taken out in the state of the debtor, and especially where the intestate has no creditor there.

In Peterson v. Chemical Bank, 32 N. Y. 22, the right of assignee to sue was sustained, but there was full evidence offered that the intestate owed no debts in New York, and, therefore, the rights of creditors were not in the way.

On the other side, in the case of Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 267, Judge Jackson said: "If a foreigner or a citizen of any other of the United States dies, leaving debts and effects in this state, these can never be collected by an administrator appointed in the place of the domicile."

In that case an absent debtor, who lived in Connecticut, had come within the jurisdiction of the courts of the State of Massachusetts, and the administrator of the creditor brought suit on *notes which he had possession of by virtue of his administration in that state.

*583

The court held that the circumstance of the defendant having come into that state, so as to expose himself to action, could not affect the general principle, and that the debtor could not be compelled to pay to any one but to an administrator duly authorized in Connecticut, where the debtor lived.

This must have been upon the ground that the administration in Massachusetts does not give title, even in that state, to notes or other choses in action of deceased parties dying there, on persons in other states. Under this case, if the debtors here had gone into Massachusetts, the administrator of Burke could not have maintained action against them in the courts there. This seems decisive of the question, especially as to the bond sued on in this case. For, if the administrator, by the laws of Massachusetts, has never been invested with sufficient title to sue this bond, even in that state, and is without capacity to sue here, how could he transfer the bond to the appellant so as to invest him with power to sue?

See the case of Cutter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. 81.

In Stearns v. Barnham, 5 Greenl. 261, it was held that "an executor appointed under the laws of another state cannot endorse a promissory note payable to his testator by a citizen of this state [Maine], so as to give the endorsee a right of action here in his own name."

In Pond v. Makepeace, 2 Metc. 114, it was held that an administrator in the State of Massachusetts of one who lived and died in Rhode Island, may sue for and recover a debt due by his intestate from a citizen of Massachusetts, although the administrator of such intestate, appointed in Rhode Island, had already recovered judgment in Massachusetts upon the same claim, it being undefended.

We have found no case in our own reports directly in point. But we think, upon principle and the weight of decisions elsewhere, that the order of the Circuit judge holding that the assignee had no legal capacity to sue in this case should be sustained.

The order below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

*584

*[In the cases last above reported, No. 999, Dial v. Gary et al., the plaintiff, Dial, after the opinion was rendered and the remittitur sent to the court below, filed a petition for a re-hearing; which case should properly be inserted here, as follows:]

14 S. C. 584

(Case No. 1035.)

Ex parte DIAL.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐1219.]

After the remittitur has been sent to the court below, this court has no jurisdiction of a petition for a re-hearing of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ex parte Dunovant, 16 S. C. 300; Empire Mining Co. v. Propeller Towboat Co. of Savannah, 59 S. C. 552, 38 S. E. 156; Carpenter v. Lewis, 65 S. C. 403, 43 S. E. 881; Jones v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 65 S. C. 418, 43 S. E. 884; State v. Adams, 83 S. C. 152, 65 S. E. 220.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4720; Dec. Dig. ⇐1219.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇐1190.]

The reasoning of this court constitutes no part of the judgment itself, which, in every case, is simply an order of affirmance, modification or reversal; and, therefore, when the judgment appealed from is affirmed, a remittitur, which states that the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed, is a correct transcript of the judgment of this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4645; Dec. Dig. ⇐1190.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐832.]

A judgment rendered by this court after full argument, should not be disturbed under petition for re-hearing, except for the strongest reasons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3215–3228; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 832.]

4. Dial v. Gary, ante p. 573 [37 Am. Rep. 737], affirmed.

Petition for a re-hearing of appeal.

This was a petition Ex parte George L. Dial for a hearing of the five cases (ante p. 573 [37 Am. Rep. 737]), in which he was plaintiff and the unsuccessful appellant. The motion was not upon notice to the defendants. It was heard April 25th, 1881.

[For subsequent opinion, see Dial v. Tappan, 20 S. C. 167.]

Mr. R. A. Lynch, for petitioner. Mr. L. F. Youmans, attorney-general, of counsel.

April 30th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. At the November Term, 1880, of this court, the appeal in the cases in which this petition has been filed in re, was heard. On March 15th, 1881, the opinion of the court was filed, and, after the lapse of ten days thereafter, to wit, on March 26th, a transcript of the judgment of the court, a copy of which *will be found appended,† was sent by the clerk of this court to the court below, as the remittitur provided for in the code and the rule of the court.

*585

George L. Dial, the appellant in these cases, has now filed this petition, based upon the position that the transcript referred to is not such a remittitur as the law requires in such cases; and that such being the fact, no remittitur has, in fact, been sent down, and he now seeks by his petition to stay the remittitur, as provided in Rule XX. of this court, until the third day of the ensuing term, so as to enable him to move the court for a re-hearing of the appeal in the original cases.

It is well understood, and this was admitted in the argument of counsel, that after the remittitur has been transmitted to the court below in any case, this court thereby loses jurisdiction of the cause, and can afterwards entertain no motion whatever in reference thereto. It has passed from the docket of the court and has gone beyond its reach. Such being the fact, with the view that parties litigant shall not be prejudiced by a too hasty transmission of the remittitur to the Circuit Court, thus cutting off all opportunity for re-examination and review of the judgment of the court when necessary, this court has provided, by rule, that the remittitur shall, in no case, be sent to the court below until after the expiration of ten days from the final determination by this court; and that in the meantime, on application showing sufficient cause, either of the justices, at chambers, may, by order, require the remittitur to be further delayed for such time as he may deem proper, not beyond the ensuing term, subject to the order of the court. Rule XX.

The question, then, in this petition is simply this: Is the transcript sent down in these cases a remittitur in, the legal sense of that term?

Following the provisions of the constitution, the code, Section 12, title "Supreme Court," provides that the Supreme Court may reverse, affirm or modify the judgment, decree or order appealed *from, in whole or in part, and as to all of the parties; and its judgment shall be remitted to the court below to be enforced according to law.

*586

The remittitur, then, is the judgment of this court sent to the court below, and this court having no power to render any other judgment than one of reversal, affirmance or modification, the final determination of the court or order declaring the judgment below reversed, affirmed or modified, must constitute the judgment of this court.

† The remittitur simply states the case, gives the date of the filing of the opinion and by whom written, and adds: "Judgment affirmed and appeal dismissed." This is certified to by the clerk, signed by him, and the official seal of the court is affixed.—REPORTER.

The constitution, Section 8, Article IV., requires that every point made and distinctly stated in the cause and fairly arising upon the record, shall be considered and decided, and the reason therefore shall be concisely and briefly stated, in writing, and preserved among the records of the case.

In pursuance of this provision of the constitution, this court, in pronouncing judgment, either of reversal, affirmance or modification, has uniformly filed an opinion setting forth the reasons for the judgment, to be preserved among the records of the case, as required by this section. It is true that the final determination or judgment has been usually incorporated as a part or conclusion of the opinion, but it has never been understood that this reasoning, upon which the judgment is founded, constitutes any part of the judgment itself. While the practice has been to embrace the two in the same paper, the one as the logical result of the other, yet they might be separate, and contained in distinct papers.

The remittitur sent down in these cases, embracing, as it does, the final determination of the court, i. e., a judgment of affirmance of the order below, in the opinion of the court was a full compliance with the law upon this subject.

The court, therefore, has no jurisdiction of the question raised.

We announce this result with less reluctance, for the reason that we do not think the matters suggested in the petition are sufficient, according to the principles and practice which should govern in such cases, to authorize this court to order the case reheard.

It concerns the welfare of the country that there should be an *end of litigation. A judgment rendered after full argument should not be disturbed, except for the strongest reasons.

*587

We may be permitted to say that while the question is not properly before us for adjudication, yet we have looked into the petition and we are unable to discover any sufficient reasons for a change of the opinion already pronounced; that administration in this state is necessary to enable the party to foreclose the mortgage set forth in the complaint, and that we see no insuperable difficulty in the way of foreclosing the same, after the will of Asa Burke, deceased, shall have been admitted to probate, and letters of administration, with the will annexed, shall have been properly granted in this state.

The petition is dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s concurred.

14 S. C. 587

(Case No. 1000.)

CONGDON v. MORGAN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Evidence ⇐178.]

Defendant, claiming the land in dispute by adverse possession under color of title, traced a deed under which he held to the custody of a master of the court, and proved the death of the master and an unsuccessful search for it in the office of the master's successor; and then to show, by such deed, the extent of his claim, defendant offered secondary evidence of its contents, which was admitted by the trial judge. Held, that it was within the judge's discretion so to do.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Woody v. Dean, 24 S. C. 502.

For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 584; Dec. Dig. ⇐178.]

[2. Lost Instruments ⇐23.]

When it is not known who were the subscribing witnesses to an alleged lost deed, other evidence may be received to prove that the lost instrument was a deed of conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Merck v. Merck, 89 S. C. 351, 71 S. E. 969, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 937.

For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 51–57; Dec. Dig. ⇐23.]

[3. Adverse Possession ⇐16.]

Purchasers made entry upon the land under their deed, marked out their claim by survey and stakes, and upon the portion here in litigation built a wharf on which to land lightwood, &c., and erected a boat-shed, and used both wharf and shed. Held, to be such acts of possession under color of title as would ripen into title by possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 83; Dec. Dig. ⇐16.]

[4. Adverse Possession ⇐44.]

Such purchasers were joint tenants and one died, and under order of court the property was sold and purchased by the survivor, who paid his bid in full, but took no deed. Held, that the survivor did not hold under a different legal title or by a disconnected right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 226–231; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 44.]

*588

[5. Bankruptcy ⇐259.]

*Quere. May not an assignee in bankruptcy, without any order of the court, sell the bankrupt's interest in lands held adversely by another?

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. §§ 356–358; Dec. Dig. ⇐259.]

[6. Adverse Possession ⇐50; Bankruptcy ⇐ 263.]

A party in possession of lands which were sold as the estate of a bankrupt by the assignee in bankruptcy, gave no notice of an adverse claim and bid for the property; neither he, nor those claiming under him, can afterwards object that the sale was unauthorized, because that he was an adverse claimant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 256; Dec. Dig. ⇐50; Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 366; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 263.]

[7. Adverse Possession ⇐43.]

Action was brought against A for the possession of land held adversely by him for less than ten years, but before trial he died. The plaintiffs in such action, having matured title by possession (as the verdict here shows), made their entry upon the land, and, subsequently, were ousted by the heirs-at-law of A. Held, that such heirs could not claim that their possession thus acquired was a continuation of A's possession cast upon them by descent.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Duren v. Kee, 26 S. C. 227, 2 S. E. 4; Johnson v. Cobb, 29 S. C. 380, 7 S. E. 601; Garrett v. Weinberg, 48 S. C. 45, 26 S. E. 3.

For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 213-224; Dec. Dig. ⟸43.]

[8. Adverse Possession ⟸43.]

[Where one of two joint tenants, after the death of the other, purchased the land at partition sale under order of court, and paid the amount of his bid, but took no deed, held, that the time of his possession thereafter might be added to the time of the joint possession of him and his co-tenant, to make up an adverse possession of the necessary length to bar an action.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 222; Dec. Dig. ⟸43.]

[This case is also cited in Busby v. Florida &c. R. R. Co., 45 S. C. 316, 23 S. E. 50, as to the operation of the statute of limitations, and in Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 496, 25 S. E. 797, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Hudson, J., Georgetown, November, 1879.

This was an action for the recovery of land and for damages, commenced January 16th, 1879, by George R. Congdon and Benjamin J. Hazard, plaintiffs, against Louisa Morgan, Joseph L. Morgan, Kate L. Garber and her husband, James R. Garber. The defendants, except James R. Garber, were the heirs of Arthur Morgan, deceased. Verdict was for plaintiffs for the land in dispute.

This land was on a peninsula, just opposite the town of Georgetown, included in a grant to Robert Screven in 1711. The plaintiffs claimed by adverse possession under color of title. They purchased from R. E. Fraser, assignee in bankruptcy of W. W. Shackelford, on November 26th, 1874; Fraser sold without any order from the United States District Court. The land was included in Shackelford's schedule in bankruptcy. Shackelford purchased in September, 1856, at a sale made by order of the Court of Equity for partition between said Shackelford and Arthur Magee, deceased, and paid his bid in full, but took no deed from the master. Shackelford and Magee purchased from R. F. W. Allston in 1853.

The Allston deed was not produced. Shackelford testified that it went into the possession of James Tupper, master in equity, in 1856, as a part of the evidence in the partition proceedings then pending between himself and the estate of Arthur Magee. Magrath & Magrath were the attorneys through whose *hands it passed; that he had called on such attorneys and had searched the master's office but could not find it, and that Mr. Tupper was now dead. Defendant objected to secondary evidence of the contents of this deed, without better proof of its loss; but the Circuit judge admitted the evidence. Shackelford then testified that he knew the deed was signed, sealed and delivered by R. F. W. Allston in the presence of two witnesses, but he could not now remember who the witnesses were. The partition proceedings were also introduced, which stated the deed and the boundaries of the land by it conveyed. Shackelford testified that soon after the purchase from Allston they had the land surveyed, put stakes at the four corners, and upon one corner (the part here in dispute) built a wharf for landing lightwood, &c.; and in 1856 the present plaintiffs, by permission of Shackelford, erected a boat-shed at the same corner. Wharf and shed were used off and on from the time they were built.

*589

Defendants proved that Arthur Morgan contracted with one Myers, March 26th, 1866, to purchase this lot of land, and immediately entered upon it, erected turpentine works and continued to use it until the works were burned in January, 1877. He received deed November 2d, 1874. Action was brought by these plaintiffs against Morgan, October 6th, 1875, for the possession of this land. Morgan died in August, 1878. These plaintiffs then took possession and erected a building, but were afterwards ejected by the agent of the defendants, who tore down the building and carried it off. This action was then instituted.

Arthur Morgan gave no notice to R. E. Fraser, the assignee of Shackelford's bankrupt estate, that he (Morgan) made claim to this land or any part of it; but, on the contrary, authorized Fraser to bid $100 for him. Congdon and Hazard purchased for $115.

At the close of plaintiffs' testimony defendants moved for a non-suit, which was refused.

The judge was requested by the defendants, in writing, to charge as follows:

1. If you believe, from the testimony, that at the time of the assignment of Shackelford in bankruptcy to R. E. Fraser, Arthur Morgan was in possession of the land in question, using it *as his own, and claiming to be the owner thereof, then the sale by the said R. E. Fraser, as assignee in bankruptcy, was without authority and conferred no title upon the plaintiffs, unless he had previously demanded the possession and held it in his hands at the time of such sale.

*590

2. If you believe, from the testimony, that Arthur Morgan was in possession of this land at the time of the sale by the assignee, Fraser, to plaintiffs, claiming the land, the said assignee had no authority, without an order of the court, to sell the land, and such sale is a nullity, conferring no title on the plaintiffs to the same.

The judge refused so to charge, but qualified the requests as follows. As to the first: "Held, that possession alone was not notice to assignee of an encumbrance, and the assignee had a right to sell, unless he had other knowledge of an encumbrance." As to the second request: "If the adverse claim were made known to the assignee, he had no authority to sell without an order of court." The judge also charged the jury, inter alia: That the entry by Shackelford and Magee, under the deed from Allston in 1853, the marking out of their claim under said deed by the survey then made, the putting of a stake at each corner of their claim, the building of the wharf on one corner of the same, and that corner being on the part of the land in dispute in this action, the erection of a shed on said wharf in 1856, and the use of said wharf and shed or house (as described by the witnesses) by Shackelford and Magee and their tenants—were such acts of possession, under color of title, as would ripen into a title by possession to the land in dispute, and to all the land embraced within the four stakes before the entry of Morgan in 1866. That Morgan, the ancestor, therefore, entered after the grantor of the plaintiffs had acquired title, and plaintiffs brought their action before his possession had ripened into a title by possession, viz., on October 6th, 1875.

That the sale of the land for partition under the equity proceedings and the purchase thereof by Shackelford, but who got no title deed therefor from the master, did not affect his previous right, as he was already in by his previous title as a co-tenant with Magee—not to any particular part of it, but to a moiety of *each and every part. His Honor further charged and instructed the jury that the possession of A. Morgan of the disputed land from March, 1866, to the time of his death, in August, 1878, would not constitute title under the statute of limitations, because the plaintiffs had asserted their claim to the land by their action against Arthur Morgan, commenced October 6th, 1875, before the bar was complete; and when this action abated by his death in August 1878, they, within a reasonable time, commenced the present action for the same land against his devisees—that the statute stopped running on October 6th, 1875, in favor of A. Morgan.

*591

To these charges and refusals to charge, defendants excepted; and from the judgment rendered appealed to this court upon the several exceptions taken in the court below.

The appeal was heard in this court January 16th, 1880, and, being ordered for reargument was again heard December 10th, 1880.

Mr. R. Dozier, for appellants.
Mr. Joseph T. Walsh, contra.

March 15th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action to recover possession of a tract of land to which neither party could show a paper title—both claiming by possession. The land was originally granted to Robert Screven on August 11th, 1711. The plaintiffs relied, as color of title, upon a deed from Allston to Shackelford & Magee, alleged to have been executed in 1853, but which was lost. After introducing some evidence of the existence and loss of the deed, the plaintiffs proposed to introduce evidence of its contents, which was objected to, but the objection was overruled and an exception was duly taken by the defendants. Under this deed Shackelford & Magee had a survey of the land in dispute made; placed stakes at each corner of their claim; built a wharf upon it; permitted tenants to erect a shed on the wharf, and made such use of it as is described in the testimony set out in *the "case." In 1856 the land in question was sold by the master in equity under an order of the court passed upon the hearing of a petition, which is likewise set out in the "case" filed by the administrator of Magee, who had died in the meantime, with the concurrence and assent of Shackelford. At this sale, which was made on September 11th, 1856, Shackelford bid off the land and paid the purchase money, but took no titles from the master, and continued to use the land as before. Things remained in this condition until March 26th, 1866, when Arthur Morgan, under whom the defendants claim as heirs-at-law and devisees, took possession of the land, claiming to have bought and paid for it at that time, though the deed made by the attorney in fact of his vendor was not executed until November 2d, 1874, and he remained in possession up to the time of his death in August, 1878. On February 28th, 1874, Shackelford, having been adjudicated a bankrupt, made an assignment of his estate, including the land in dispute, which was afterwards sold by the assignee, without an order from the Bankrupt Court, and bought by the plaintiffs. It appears that Arthur Morgan was aware of this sale, and not only interposed no objection to it but authorized an agent to bid for him nearly the amount at which it was knocked down to the plaintiffs. Arthur Morgan continuing in possession, the plaintiffs commenced an action against him on October 6th, 1875, to recover the possession of the land, which was pending at the time of his death, when it abated. After his death the plaintiffs took possession of the land and erected a building on it, when they were ousted by the act of the agent of the defendants, and this action was commenced against them on January 16th, 1879. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiffs, and judgment being entered thereon, the defendants have appealed; and we propose now to consider the several questions raised by the appeal.

*592

The first question is whether the Circuit judge erred in admitting secondary evidence of the contents of the alleged lost deed from Allston to Shackelford & Magee. Appellants contend: 1st. That there was not sufficient evidence of the loss of the deed. 2d. That there was no competent evidence of the existence of the deed as a genuine instrument.

*593

*In Floyd v. Mintsey, 5 Rich. 372, 373, it is said: "No uniform rule can define the requisite evidence to establish the loss. This must depend on the circumstances of each case." And in Berry v. Jourdan, 11 Rich. 75, Whitner, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, upon a question similar to the one now under consideration, uses this language: "There are certain general propositions bearing on the question sufficiently familiar to the profession, and to be found collected by most of the text writers on evidence. Their proper application will so much depend on the peculiar circumstances of each case, that but little instruction would be derived from any attempt to embody them in an opinion." Neither shall we undertake, on this occasion, to lay down any absolute rule upon the subject, for, as is said in 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 558, "it should be recollected that the object of the proof is merely to establish a reasonable presumption as to the loss of the instrument, and that this is a preliminary inquiry addressed to the discretion of the judge." Hence, where the case, as presented to us, does not show that the judge has violated any of the established rules of evidence in the conduct and determination of this preliminary inquiry, we cannot say that there was any error on his part in admitting the secondary evidence. In this case we are unable to perceive any such violation of the rules of evidence. The deed was traced to the possession of the master in equity, which is the last heard of it, by whom it is mentioned as being before him at the time he made his report on the petition filed for the sale of the land said to be conveyed by it, the record of that petition and the proceedings under it having been received in evidence without objection from appellants; and then there was evidence of an unsuccessful search in the office of the master, who was dead at the time of the trial below. We do not see that there was any error on the part of the Circuit judge in holding that the proof of loss was sufficient to let in the secondary evidence, especially when it is remembered that this deed was relied upon not as a link in a chain of title, but merely to give color of title to support the plaintiff's claim by possession, for there was no effort to connect Allston, the grantor, in the alleged lost deed, with the original grant. The preliminary evidence offered here was certainly *much stronger than that which was held to be sufficient in Edwards v. Edwards, 11 Rich. 537.

*594

The second objection is that there was no legal evidence of the genuineness of the alleged lost deed. This objection rests, as we understand it, upon the proposition that in order to prove a deed it is necessary to introduce one of the subscribing witnesses, or, if they be dead, to prove their handwriting, and that this applies as well to a lost deed as to one produced in court. As a general proposition this is undoubtedly true, but in 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 572, among the exceptions to this rule is the following: "If the instrument is lost and the name of the subscribing witness is unknown," citing Keeling v. Ball, Peake on Ev., Appendix, p. 78, which, on examination, will be found fully to sustain the text. To same effect see Jackson v. Vail, 7 Wend. 125, and our own case of Barton v. Keith, 2 Hill 537. When, therefore, it is made to appear, as in this case, that the subscribing witnesses to a lost deed are unknown, other evidence may be resorted to for the purpose of establishing the existence of the lost instrument as a deed.

The next question raised by the appeal is as to the correctness of the charge of the Circuit judge as to the character of Shackelford's possession. There can be no doubt but that the cases of White ads. Reid, 2 N. & McC. 534; McBeth v. Donnelly, Dud. 177, and Slice v. Derrick, 2 Rich. 627, cited by the counsel for appellant, do establish the doctrine that mere fugitive, disconnected trespasses, such as cutting trees, stripping bark, &c., however long continued, will not constitute such a possession as will ripen into a title under the statute of limitations; but that was not the character of the possession which the jury, in this case, were instructed would be sufficient. The charge was: "That the entry by Shackelford & Magee, under the deed from Allston, in 1853, the marking out of their claim under said deed by a survey then made, the putting of a stake at each corner of their claim, the building of the wharf on one corner of the same, and that corner being on the part of the land in dispute in this action, the erection of a shed on said wharf in 1856, and the use of said wharf and shed or house [as described by the witness,] by Shackelford & Magee and their tenants were such acts of possession, *under color of title, as would ripen into a title by possession." In this instruction there was clearly no error. Turpin v. Brannon, 3 McC. 261; Allen v. Johnson, 2 McM. 495.

*595

It is argued, however, that after the sale by the master, Shackelford's possession was in a different right and cannot be connected with that of Shackelford & Magee prior to the sale. But Shackelford took no deed from the master, and so far as his legal title was concerned it was the same after as before the sale, and, therefore, there was no change in the character of his possession, which would have enured to the benefit of his cotenant as well as of himself, though such co-tenant would be estopped from claiming any such benefit by the equitable right of Shackelford arising from his having bid off the land and paid the purchase money, and the whole benefit would, in fact, enure to Shackelford.

Appellants next contend that the sale by the assignee in bankruptcy was a nullity, inasmuch as Morgan was then in possession, claiming adversely to the bankrupt, and that when such is the case the bankrupt act confers upon the assignee no power to sell without an order of the Bankrupt Court. According to the view which we take of this case, it will not be necessary to consider what is the proper construction of the bankrupt act in this respect. But we may remark, in passing, that while we can very well understand why a sale by an assignee in bankruptcy of property in the possession of, and claimed by, another should not have any effect in concluding the rights of such claimant unless he is brought before the court and afforded an opportunity to litigate his rights, we do not see any reason why the assignee may not sell the interest of the bankrupt, whatever it may be, leaving the purchaser to litigate with the adverse claimant. As we have said, however, we do not propose to discuss this question, not regarding it as necessary to the decision of this case, because there is no evidence that there was any adverse claimant of the land in question, known to the assignee, at the time the sale was made. On the contrary the evidence is that Morgan, who was then in possession, not only gave no notice to the assignee of any adverse claim, but stood by making no objection to the sale, and actually authorized the assignee to bid for him very nearly the amount for which it was sold to the plaintiffs. We do not think, therefore, that either Morgan or those who claim under him are in a position to make the question as to the validity of the sale raised in the grounds of appeal.

*596

The next question is whether the defendants have made out their claim by possession. The possession of Arthur Morgan, under whom the defendants claim, had not ripened into right at the time of his death, inasmuch as an action had been brought against him by the plaintiffs within the ten years, which was pending at the time of his death, when it abated. After his death the plaintiffs, having previously acquired title by possession, as we must assume after the verdict of the jury, took possession, as they had a right to do; for the possession of Arthur Morgan could not, as it would at common law, by descent, be cast on his heirs, so as to bar the plaintiff's right of entry and put them to the necessity of bringing an action. Code, § 110. When, therefore, the defendants, by their agent, McQuaid, subsequently took possession and ousted the plaintiffs, that was a new trespass, for which they became liable to suit, and their possession must be regarded as originating in such trespass, and not as a continuation of the possession of Arthur Morgan cast upon them by descent, because such possession had not only been interrupted but put an end to by the possession rightfully taken by the plaintiffs, after the death of Arthur Morgan, by an entry on the land, from which they were subsequently ousted by the illegal act of the agent of the defendants. It is clear, therefore, that the defendants have failed to make out their title by possession.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

14 S. C. *597

*(Case No. 1002.)

WITHERS v. JENKINS.

(November Term, 1880.)

Deed in 1867 to A., in trust for B., the wife of grantor, during her natural life, and then to M., the daughter of grantor, for her sole and separate use, benefit and behoof, and the lawful heirs of her body, share and share alike, not liable for the debts or contracts, and free of the control of any husband with whom she may intermarry, and should M. die before B., leaving children, then in trust for such children, and in case M. remains unmarried, or being childless, then to such person as she may appoint as her heir by her last will. B. died in August, 1868. M. married in January, 1869, and died in November following, leaving issue a son, who died soon afterwards. M. lived with her father until a short time before her marriage, when she removed to another house upon the same premises, occupied by her half-brother, and remained there until her death, but received from the premises no rents or profits. The trustee refused to accept. M. and her husband brought action in 1869 against the grantor for the land embraced in his deed, and alleged that he had been in possession, and in receipt of rents and profits. The grantor then answered, denying the execution of the deed. Held,

[1. Deeds ⇐126.]

That B. took a life estate with an equitable estate in fee conditional in remainder to M., with a power to M. to dispose by will of the whole estate if she never married, or died childless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 356½, 357, 445, 449; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 126.]

[2. Curtesy ⇐9.]

That a husband is entitled to hold, as tenant by the curtesy, lands in which his deceased wife was seized of a fee conditional.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gaffney v. Peeler, 21 S. C. 69; Odom v. Beverly, 32 S. C. 112, 10 S. E. 835.

For other cases, see Curtesy, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. ⇐9.]

[3. Curtesy ⇐7, 9.]

That when curtesy would attach to a legal estate, it should also attach to an equitable one of the same quantity and character, but in both four things are requisite—marriage, actual seizin of the wife, birth of issue and death of the wife; and curtesy may be defeated by the terms of the deed, or by any circumstance which would have determined the wife's estate, if she were living.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Curtesy, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 20–30; Dec. Dig. ⟸7, 9.]

[4. Curtesy ⟸11.]

That the husband of M. was not entitled to an estate by curtesy in this case, because M. had no seizin of the land here granted, as she was never in actual possession, nor ever received any rents and profits.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Withers v. Jenkins, 21 S. C. 368.

For other cases, see Curtesy, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. ⟸11.]

[5. Curtesy ⟸11.]

And further, his curtesy was excluded by a necessary implication arising from the terms of the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Curtesy, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. ⟸11.]

[6. Constitutional Law ⟸93.]

The constitution of 1868 does not affect the questions here arising under this deed, which was executed in 1867.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 183; Dec. Dig. ⟸93.]

7. Wright v. Herron, 6 Rich. Eq. 407, approved.

Before Pressley, J., Richland, November, 1878.

*598

*On November 6th, 1867, Samuel Jenkins conveyed to Francis Lopez, his executors and administrators, a half-acre lot in the city of Columbia, upon the following trusts:

In trust, nevertheless, to and for the following uses and purposes, that is to say, for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of my said wife, Mary Jenkins, for and during the term of her natural life, provided she remain a widow in the event of the death of me, the said Samuel Jenkins; and after the death or marriage of my said wife, Mary, then, in trust, for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of my daughter, Mary Jenkins, and the lawful heirs of her body, share and share alike, not liable for the debts or contracts, and free of the control of any husband with whom she may intermarry. And should my said daughter, Mary, die before my said wife, Mary, leaving a child or children, then in trust for such child or children, share and share alike; and in case of my daughter remaining unmarried or being childless, then in trust to such person as she may appoint as her heir by her will and testament duly executed, notwithstanding any future coverture.

Samuel, with his wife and daughter, resided upon this land until the wife's death on August 16th, 1868. Mary, the daughter, remained with her father for some time afterwards, when, to make room for boarders, she moved into a house on the same land occupied by her half brother, Mott. There she married Thomas Withers in January, 1869, and lived there with her husband until her death in November, 1869. Samuel has continued to live in the dwelling-house on the land. Mary left issue a son, who died in March, 1870. Lopez refused to accept the trust or to act as trustee. Neither Lopez, Mary Withers or Thomas Withers ever received any rents or profits from the land, upon which were several houses.

In April, 1869, Withers and wife filed their bill of complaint against Samuel Jenkins and Francis Lopez, claiming that Mary Withers, upon the death of her mother, "became entitled to the use and enjoyment" of the said lot of land; and that the said Samuel Jenkins, since that time, had been in the possession of the principal part of the said lot, and in the receipt of the rents and profits of the same; and praying, in substance, that her rights and interests in and to the said lot of land might be protected and enforced.

*599

*The answer of Samuel Jenkins to the said bill of complaint denied the legal execution of the said deed, and contested all the rights and interests under it claimed by the said Mary Withers. Lopez was never served with process. Mary Withers having died, Thomas Withers filed a supplemental complaint against Samuel Jenkins, setting out the facts here stated, and claiming to be tenant of this land for life by the curtesy of England; that Samuel Jenkins had had possession since the death of Mary Withers, and demanding possession and rents and profits. The defendant answered; his defences are stated in the referee's report.

All issues of law and fact were referred to F. W. Fickling, Esq., who made the following report:

The issues of law and fact in this action have been referred to me.

The issues of fact are—

1. Whether the alleged deed referred to in the pleadings herein, dated November 6th, 1867, and purporting to have been made by the defendant, Samuel Jenkins, to one Francis Lopez, upon certain trusts therein mentioned, was duly executed and delivered by the said Samuel Jenkins.

2. Whether Mary Jenkins, the daughter of the said Samuel Jenkins, at the date of her marriage with the plaintiff, Thomas Withers, was above the age of twelve and under the age of sixteen years.

3. Whether the said plaintiff, Thomas Withers, did contract matrimony with Mary Jenkins, the daughter of the defendant, Samuel Jenkins, against the will of the said Samuel Jenkins.

I find—

1. That the said deed was executed and delivered by the said Samuel Jenkins.

2. That the said Mary Jenkins was, at the date of her marriage with the plaintiff, Thomas Withers, above the age of twelve and under the age of sixteen years.

3. That the said plaintiff, Thomas Withers, did not contract matrimony with Mary Jenkins against the will of her father, Samuel Jenkins.

*600

*The evidence upon which these findings are based is herewith submitted and made part of this report.

The only issues of law involved in the action are: First. What estate Mary Jenkins took in the property under the deed; and, Second. What estate her husband took upon her death. And I determine these issues of law as follows:

First. That Mary Jenkins took under the deed in question an estate in fee simple conditional. Second. That having had issue born, who could have inherited the estate according to the form of the deed, and having died, leaving surviving her her husband, Thomas Withers, that the said Thomas Withers takes an estate for life, in the premises described in the deed, as tenant by the curtesy of England, of his deceased wife, Mary.

It was proved to my satisfaction that the annual value of the premises was $200 per annum. I therefore order and adjudge that the possession of the said premises be delivered to the plaintiff Thomas Withers, and if the same be refused, that the plaintiff have a writ of habere facias possessionem, which the sheriff of Richland county is hereby required to execute. Second. That the plaintiff, Thomas Withers, do recover from the defendant, Samuel Jenkins, the sum of $1841.66, for mesne profits from August 16th, 1868. Third. That the costs and disbursements of the proceedings be, as agreed by the parties, made a charge and lien upon the property involved in the action.

And I direct that the plaintiff have judgment accordingly.

The case came to trial at the Circuit Court upon exceptions by defendant to the referee's report. The Circuit decree is as follows:

On November 6th, 1867, defendant conveyed his lot in Columbia to Francis Lopez, in trust for defendant's wife, Mary, and after her death in trust for the sole and separate use of his daughter Mary and the lawful heirs of her body, with other provisions hereafter stated.

The daughter surviving her mother married the plaintiff and bore a child, which, surviving her, died before this action was commenced. Plaintiff claims curtesy in said lot, alleging seizin thereof by his wife in her lifetime. Of such seizin the only *proof is that she remained there after her mother's death in the house with her father, and afterwards in an out-house with her half brother. The trustee did not take or demand possession of the premises, and no rent for the same was ever paid to her. As the referee has not reported any finding of the fact of her seizin, it would be necessary to recommit the case to him, if, under the deed, it be held that such seizin would entitle the plaintiff to curtesy.

*601

Defendant claims that his daughter was not sixteen years old at the time of her marriage, and alleges that he did not consent to the same. If this were so, then, under the statute of Philip and Mary, the husband, by such marriage, could acquire no interest in his wife's estate. But the referee finds that the marriage was not without the consent of the defendant, and I sustain that finding.

The remaining question is one of law, not yet decided in this state. Before the case of Wright v. Herron, many of us agreed with Chancellor Kent that our act of 1791 abolished curtesy in this state. On that point the Court of Errors, in the case of Wright v. Herron, was equally divided, a majority of the law judges holding that curtesy was so abolished. But the case being in equity, was decided by a majority of the Chancellors in favor of the curtesy, and so the old rule was then reversed, and "the law must follow equity." That decision is binding to the extent of allowing curtesy to the husband where the wife held a legal estate, but Chancellor Dargan, in his decree, indicates that it would be otherwise in the case of a trust estate, and the Appeal Court does not dissent from his decree on this or any other point.

As the case now before me relates to a trust estate, nothing in any of our decisions compels me to follow the irrational precedent of the English chancery, which allows curtesy but refuses dower in such case. That precedent was the creature of a stern necessity. In England, frequent forfeitures of estates for treason during her civil wars, had compelled a very general resort to settlements in trust, which were not subject to forfeiture. Thereby it became very important that the English courts, in perfecting such settlements, should attach to them every possible incident of legal estates. They, therefore, allowed curtesy in trust estates, *and would also have allowed dower therein, but could not do it, because thereby too many estates would have been unsettled.

*602

But, we, in this state, were entirely free in that respect: without danger or injury to any vested interest, we might have allowed dower in trust estates, and yet we decided not to do so. Why, then, should we now adopt a different rule in the matter of curtesy, and thus voluntarily expose ourselves to inconsistency, to which the English chancery unwillingly submitted under pressure of necessity? We have not heretofore hesitated to depart from its rulings whenever the genius of our institutions required it, and now, under our new constitution, it would be a shameful step backward to adopt, for the first time, that rule of the English courts which, in a trust estate, allows to the husband what it refuses to the wife.

Further: even if we adopt the English precedent, yet, in my opinion, the special provisions of the deed in this case very clearly express the grantor's intention to exclude the husband from all interest therein and thus bars his curtesy. The settlement is to the sole and separate use of the wife—not liable for the debts or contracts and free from the control of any husband; if she die before her mother, her children take the whole estate, excluding the husband; if she die childless, leaving a husband, she could not appoint her heirs, and the estate must, in that case, revert to the grantor: but if she remain unmarried, she is authorized in that case to appoint her heir by will, and thus to defeat the reverter. The invalidity of these limitations is not now in question. Whether valid or not, they clearly express the intent of the grantor to exclude the husband from all interest in the said estate, and the cases are conclusive that under such deed the husband has no right of curtesy. In Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 606, Lord Hardwicke then admitting that the husband might have curtesy in land settled to the sole and separate use of the wife, yet refused it under the settlement, because other terms therein excluded it.

In Herle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 715, he went still further, and held that even without other words of exclusion, that settlement to the sole and separate use of the wife did not allow curtesy to the husband. Sir John Leach, in the case of Morgan v. Mor*gan, 5 & 6 Mad. 248, expresses dissent from Herle v. Greenbank. Such dissent was not necessary to the case before him. That was a settlement to the sole and separate use of the wife for life, with unlimited power to appoint by deed or will, and for want of appointment the estate to become hers and her heirs forever. In such case the Vice-Chancellor very rightly held that by the words "sole and separate use," the husband was excluded only during the life of the wife, and that not being wholly excluded he was entitled to curtesy in the said estate. That decision is, therefore, not authority to limit the force of the words "sole and separate use," when they are not confined, as in that case, to the life estate; much less can it be authority to render useless and unmeaning other provisions of a deed which clearly show its intent to exclude the husband. Whatever be the rule in England, I hold—

*603

1. That in this state the case of Wright v. Herron is not to be extended so as to allow curtesy in a trust estate.

2. That even if such allowance be permitted in some trust estates, a settlement for the sole and separate use of the wife would exclude that allowance.

3. If the words "sole and separate use" do not, of themselves, exclude the curtesy, it is, nevertheless, excluded by the deed in this case, which, in its other provisions, clearly manifests that intent.

It is therefore adjudged and decreed that defendant, as grantor of the said lot in fee conditional, is now entitled to hold the same as his estate in reversion.

It is further adjudged and decreed that plaintiff is entitled to such rent of the premises as accrued after the death of defendant's wife in August, 1868, until the time of the death of plaintiff's son.

It is further ordered that the case be recommitted to the referee to take testimony and report the time of the death of plaintiff's son, and the amount of the rent then due to him; that upon the filing said report, plaintiff have leave to move at chambers to confirm the same, with further leave to enter judgment and issue execution against the defendant for the amount of the said rent, with costs.

*604

*Plaintiff appealed to this court, and the appeal was argued May 20th, 1880.

Mr. J. D. Pope, for appellant.

Proposition I.—That the question of seizin is not a question of fact, but a conclusion of law, which is derived from the facts found. A feoffment has its foundation in the facts of the ceremony of livery, but the seizin is the legal result of the ceremony. The same is the result of conveyances deriving their effect under the statute of uses; for there, without actual entry or livery of seizin, the bargainer has a complete seizin in deed. Com. Dig., "Uses," B. 1; 1 Cruise's Dig. 12; Shep. Touch. 223; 2 Bl. Com. 209; Co. Lit. 11 b. Hence we have the several modes of seizin. First. Seizin in deed. Second. Seizin in law. Third. Constructive seizin in deed. The latter, for all legal purposes, equivalent to an actual seizin. See 1 Rich. L. 165; 8 Cranch 244–249; 1 Bay 107; 4 McC. 253. Is not, then, the referee right when he uses the words, "Mary, having had issue born who could have inherited the estate according to the form of the deed," &c.? That is to say, there was seizin in Mary by deed.

1. Was not Lopez seized in fee as trustee under the deed? The deed conveys to the trustee by the words "grant," &c., to his "executors and administrators." The trustee takes the legal estate (notwithstanding the want of the technical words) as governed by the object and scope of the trust. Vide Lewin on Trusts, 249–250; Hill on Trustees. But, says the Circuit decree, "the trustee did not take or demand possession of the premises and no rent for the same was ever paid to her." We reply, a trust never fails for the want of a trustee. Withers v. Jenkins, 6 S. C. 125.

2. Was not Mary seized of the equitable estate? That no rent was ever paid to Mary, can, in no way, affect the question of her seizin. 4 Hare 413; Lewin on Trusts 622, 623; 8 Cranch 246. Mary was a minor and lived upon the land, as is admitted by the decree. The confusion of the decree arises from applying good doctrine in the wrong way. Had Mary, the mother and life tenant, been in possession, there could have been no seizin in Mary, the daughter. But the possession of Samuel, *the father, could have no such effect. With the death of the life tenant no estate interposed to prevent seizin in law and in fact meeting in Mary, the daughter.

*605

Proposition II.—The next proposition we advance is, that Mary, the daughter, took under the deed in question an estate in fee simple conditional. This is the legal conclusion of the referee. The Circuit decree does not express any dissent from this proposition, but seems to take it for granted. It will be well, however, to fortify it. Vide 4 Kent 221, et seq. For the collected authorities, see foot-note of Chancellor Wardlaw in 5 Rich. Eq. 441; 2 Jarm. on Wills, 277, 280, 284, 286, 291.

Proposition III.—Our third proposition is, that curtesy is allowed in estates in fee conditional at the common law. The pre-requisites are: First. Seizin. Second. Marriage. Third. Death of wife. Fourth. Birth of issue capable of taking the inheritance. The conditions are here all present. Bacon's Ab., tit. "Curtesy;" Chancellor Johnstone in 3 Rich. Eq. 564, 568. In that case it was held there was no "curtesy," because there was no fee conditional. 5 Rich. Eq. 441, 446; 6 Rich. Eq. 406. The Circuit decree does not quite undertake to overrule Wright v. Herron. But in Wright v. Herron the law did not follow equity, but equity still followed the law. While sitting in the Court of Errors the judges of that court were, in fact, all law judges. "Curtesy" was the recognized law of the state as a part of its jurisprudence from the earliest times. It was attempted in Wright v. Herron to establish that the old recognized law was abolished by the act of 1791. The Court of Errors refused so to declare. The law of "curtesy" still stood and equity followed it. Since that decision curtesy has been considered in South Carolina a rule of property. The Circuit decree seems reluctantly to so admit, but refuses to permit equity to follow the law.

Proposition IV.—Our fourth proposition is, that curtesy to the husband is allowed in trust estates, and is not confined to legal seizin only.

Chancellor Dargan, in Wright v. Herron, does say, by a slip of the pen, (for it could be nothing else,) and not a part of the case, that dower and curtesy "attach upon legal, not upon trust *estates." Chancellor Dargan must be deemed to have intended to say that curtesy did not attach to the ancient use. It is elementary (4 Kent 30, 31, 32,) that dower did not attach to a trust estate, and that curtesy did so attach. Vide Lewin on Trusts 621. This was the recognized distinction; and in England, instead of bringing curtesy down to the status of dower in the legal estates, dower was lifted up to the status of curtesy in trust estates. 3 and 4 Wm. IV., ch. CV.

*606

See 3 Atk. 715; 1 Atk. 666; Lewin on Trusts 621; 5 Mad. 408; 2 Vern. 536; 4 Hare 400; 1 P. Wms. 108; 3 Atk. 469; 7 Viner, tit. "Curtesy;" 14 Sim. 125; 4 Kent 28–34; 8 Paige 643; 4 Day 298.

In Virginia, by statute, husband has curtesy in trust estate. 1 Sumn. 128; 17 Mo. 228; 7 Md. 26; 23 Penna. St. 231; 1 Cald. 641; Wright v. Herron, supra. In the light of the cases, read the words of the deed in connection with the language of the Circuit decree, that "the provisions of the deed in this case very clearly express the grantor's intention to exclude the husband from all interest therein, and thus bar his curtesy." See Lewin on Trusts 623; 2 P. Wms. 316; 3 Eq. Cas. Ab. 730, cited by Kent in 8 Paige 643, and note to this last case. So far, from the words of the deed excluding curtesy, it is just the other way.

In Conclusion.—If there ever was a reason why curtesy should have been deemed not to exist in South Carolina, that reason has ceased. First. The wife now holds absolutely her own estate, and may strip the husband to the last penny of her estate. Second. Curtesy becomes but a precarious compensation to the husband out of the wife's estate for her absolute right of dower in his.

Mr. D. B. De Saussure, contra.

Mr. J. P. Carroll, in reply.

A re-argument was ordered by this court, and the attention of counsel was asked to this point:

What effect has the late constitutional provision (as to the con*trol given to a married woman over her own property,) upon the rights of her husband as tenant by the curtesy?

*607

The case was re-argued in full by the same counsel, January 12th, 1881.

March 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. On November 6th, 1867, the defendant made a deed of trust. [See provisions in the "case."] Mary Jenkins, the wife of defendant, died in lifetime of defendant, and before Mary, the daughter, and disappears entirely from the case. Mary, the daughter, married the plaintiff in January, 1869. Mary, the daughter, died in November, 1869. She left a male child at her death. This child died in March, 1870, leaving the plaintiff, his father, surviving, who now claims an estate of curtesy under the deed.

Is the plaintiff (appellant) entitled to an estate, by the curtesy, in the real property mentioned in the pleadings? is the main question in this case.

An estate by the curtesy, or as it is more commonly called, by curtesy, is defined by Mr. Washburne as succinctly and as clearly, perhaps, as by any other writer upon this intricate subject. He says that "it is the estate to which a husband is entitled, upon the death of his wife, in lands and tenements of which she was seized in fee simple or in fee tail during coverture, provided they have lawful issue, born alive, which might have been capable of inheriting the estate. It is a freehold estate for the term of his natural life." Book I., ch. VI., p. 148. He says, further, that "equity, following the law, holds that where the wife is cestui que trust in fee simple or fee tail, the husband is entitled to curtesy in the trust estate in the same manner as in the legal estate." Watts v. Ball, 1 P. Wms. 109; Co. Lit. 29 a, n. 165.

This estate is of very ancient origin, and it has prevailed from an early period, with well-defined qualities and incidents, not only in England but in other countries. It came to us with the common law, and before the act of 1791, it no doubt would have been enforced here as to all estates to which it was an incident, as a part of the common law.

The act of 1791, however, in abolishing primogeniture and *providing for the distribution of intestate estates, enacted certain provisions in conflict with this right as to fee simple estates. It declares in the sixth section "that on the death of any married woman, the husband shall be entitled to the same share of her real estate as is herein given to the widow out of the estate of the husband." Upon the construction of this act it has been held that the husband is not entitled to his curtesy in the fee simple estates of his wife, or, at least, that he is put to his election. Gray v. Givens, 2 Hill's Eq. 511. This is upon the ground that the interest which the husband takes under the act is more important than the curtesy, and, besides, the two could not be enjoyed together. They are in conflict, and the curtesy has practically given way since the passage of this act. If, then, the wife of the appellant here had taken under the deed an absolute fee simple, either at law or in equity, we would have but little difficulty in deciding this question. In fact, we suppose the question would not have been made.

*608

The estate of the wife, however, is not a fee simple. As we construe the deed it is a fee conditional at common law—that estate out of which, in England, the statute de donis constructed fee tails; but the statute de donis has never been adopted in this state, therefore the common law estate of fee conditional stands untouched with us, and it has been often recognized by our courts.

Chancellor Wardlaw, in Wright v. Herron, said: "Whatever diversity there may be among judges of this state concerning the implication of a fee conditional, and as to some of the incidents of the estate, the existence of the estate itself, with most of its attributes, according to the common law, has been recognized by many decisions in our own courts." He refers to numerous cases in a note. 5 Rich. Eq. 449.

There is no doubt, either, as to the fact that this estate may exist in equity as a trust or use as well as in law, and, when thus existing in equity, is subject to all the rules of descent and otherwise, and is accompanied with most of the incidents and attributes applicable to such estates at law.

We think that in this case the wife of Samuel Jenkins took a life estate under the deed, with an equitable fee conditional in *remainder to his daughter Mary (afterwards the wife of the appellant,) with a power in her to dispose by will of the whole estate in the event that she never married or died childless. This is the plain language of the deed, and it needs the application of no abstruse rules of interpretation or construction to reach that conclusion.

*609

The deed in the first instance declares the estate to the wife of the grantor for and during the term of her natural life. This gave her a life estate. After her death or marriage, then to his daughter Mary and the lawful heirs of her body. This is strictly a fee conditional at common law. But should she die, remaining unmarried or childless, then to such persons as she might appoint by will as her heirs. This conveys a power of appointment.

The full text of the deed will be seen in the "case," but enough is referred to here to determine the quantity of the estate given to the different parties mentioned. And we do not suppose that, had this deed conveyed legal estates simply, without the intervention of a trustee, that there could have been any difference of opinion as to the estates granted, i. e., a life estate to the wife and a fee conditional in remainder to the daughter, with the power, under certain contingencies, to the daughter to appoint by will such person or persons, as she might see proper, to take after her death.

The power of appointment given to Mary did not enlarge the fee conditional to an absolute fee simple in her. This power was not an absolute power, but one which was to be exercised only upon the happening of certain contingencies. These contingencies never happened, and, therefore, the fee conditional was never defeated by the exercise of the power. Nor was it enlarged in Mary by the grant of this power, because such enlargement never takes place where the first estate is distinctly marked out and defined, such as a life estate or other estate less than a fee simple; and where the exercise of the power is limited and restricted to the happening of contingencies, to have the effect of enlarging the first estate, it must be indefinite and the power must be absolute and unconditional. Pulliam v. Byrd, 2 Strob. Eq. 134.

The conclusion of the court is, that Mary took a fee condi*tional in equity. It is elementary that the term "heirs of the body" are precisely the terms required to be used to describe and measure this estate, while the word "heirs," without qualification, creates a fee simple.

*610

The curtesy of the husband, as a general rule, will attach to a fee conditional in the wife, whether his estate be an estate in law or a trust in equity. This is the general rule in England and many of the states of the Union.

In our state, in the case of Wright v. Herron, 6 Rich. Eq. 407, it was held to attach to a fee conditional at law. True, the Court of Errors failed to agree in that case; but when it was returned to the Court of Chancery three of the learned Chancellors—Wardlaw, Johnstone and Dargan—to one, sustained this estate. This was upon the ground that the act of 1791, as to distributions, did not touch fee conditionals. That act applied to fee simple estates, and fee conditionals were left as they existed at common law—certainly as to their descendible quality. And it followed as a necessary consequence, that the other incidents to such estates had not been disturbed by that act. We think that the case of Wright v. Herron is authority, not only as a decision, but upon principle.

We have already seen that there is no difference between legal and equitable estates as to their general incidents and qualities, and, consequently, it would seem, that where the curtesy would attach to a legal estate, it should also attach to an equitable one of the same quantity and character. And it has been so held frequently, as will be seen from cases hereinafter cited.

These are the general rules applicable to this subject; but before the curtesy can attach in any case, either legal or equitable, fee simple or fee conditional, all the authorities agree that four things are requisite, viz., marriage, actual seizin of the wife, issue and death of the wife. A failure in any one of these will prevent the curtesy from attaching, but when they all occur, the law vests the estate in the husband immediately on the death of the wife, without entry. This estate is said to be initiate on issue had, and consummate on the death of the wife.

Seizin of the wife is one of the essential requisites. Seizin was formerly understood to be a corporeal investiture by actual *livery of seizin. How this was effected it is not now necessary to explain, as it passed away after written muniments of title came to be used. The delivery of a deed, where there is no adverse possession or claimant, has been generally regarded as a sufficient seizin, on the ground that the possession follows the title. Green v. Liter, 8 Cranch 229 [3 L. Ed. 545]. This has been considered sufficient as to legal estates to authorize the attaching of the husband's curtesy. And as to equitable estates, the receipt of the rents and profits by the cestui que trust has been held to constitute an equitable seizin for the same purpose.

*611

There is another important qualification affecting the right of the husband to his curtesy, especially as to the equitable estates of his wife, and that is: This right may be excluded by the grantor, and this will take place where the terms of the deed clearly show that such was the intention of the grantor, either by express declaration of such intent or by necessary implication from the language employed.

It has been held, also, as another important incident or qualification of estates of curtesy, that any circumstance which would have defeated or determined the estate of the wife, if living, will, of course, put an end to the curtesy, as this right will fall and be defeated with the estate out of which it was to be derived. And this applies to both legal and equitable estates of the wife. The derivative estate will fall with the estate which gives it its birth.

The principles laid down above will be found in 4 Kent, ch. LXXX., p. 28, et seq.; 1 Greenl. Cruise, ch. II., p. 136, et seq.; 1 Washburn *130, et seq., and numerous cases referred to in the notes.

The difficulty in all the cases like this is not so much in establishing the general principles, as these are found fully discussed and plainly set forth by the learned authors mentioned, and others, as well as in the decisions of able judges in the different states; but it consists in the application of these principles to the special facts and circumstances which may surround and attend a case under consideration.

This is the difficulty here. We have seen that the estate of the wife of the appellant was a fee conditional trust estate. There *was coverture, and birth of issue capable of inheriting this estate. This issue has since died while an infant, thus ending the fee conditional which was created by the deed of Samuel Jenkins, and, under the law, reverting the whole estate to him. Wright v. Herron, 5 Rich. Eq. 443.

*612

Now, was the wife of the appellant ever seized? If so, does the deed or not clearly indicate an intent and purpose on the part of the grantor that the curtesy of the husband should be excluded? And, lastly, if the curtesy did attach, what effect has the subsequent death of the issue had upon it? Is that such a termination of the primal estate as to have destroyed the derivative? These are the questions which must now be considered.

The wife, according to the old English law, must be seized in fact and in deed, and not merely a seizin in law, of an estate of inheritance, to entitle the husband to his curtesy, says Chancellor Kent, 4 Com. 30, citing Co. Lit. 29 a; Mercer v. Selden, 1 How. (U. S.) 37 [11 L. Ed. 38]. He adds: "This is still the general rule at law, though in equity the letter of it has been relaxed by a free and liberal construction."

The circumstances of this curtesy have justly required some qualification of the strict letter of the rule relative to a seizin in fact by the wife. And if she be the owner of waste, uncultivated lands, not held adversely, she is deemed seized in fact, so as to entitle her husband to his right of curtesy.

At common law the husband could not be the tenant by the curtesy of a use: but it is now settled otherwise in equity, and the husband may be tenant by curtesy, if the wife has an equitable estate of inheritance, notwithstanding the rents and profits are to be paid to her separate use during coverture. 1 Atk. 607; 4 Kent 30.

The receipts of the rents and profits, it is stated, is a sufficient seizin of the wife. Morgan v. Morgan, 5 Madd. 408. Mr. Washburn, vol. I., *130, says: "In respect to the seizin of the wife, it must, in general terms, be of an estate of inheritance; but this must be either a legal or equitable one. In giving effect to the estates under the statute of uses, Courts of Equity intended to follow the law, and in most respects have followed it in regard to the nature and incidents of such estates. Among these was *the right of curtesy, and husbands of cestuis que trust were allowed to take their estates by curtesy if they were estates of inheritance of which the wife had what answered in equity to a seizin at law of legal estates in possession. And the receipt of rents and profits by the wife as such cestui que trust, during coverture, is ordinarily sufficient seizin in equity to give the husband curtesy." Morgan v. Morgan, 5 Madd., supra. But, he adds, "it does not seem to be sufficient seizin of a trust estate to give her husband curtesy thereof." That the wife had the rents and profits by the terms of the trust deed to her own and separate use, her seizin, in such case, not enuring to the benefit of the husband, he cites Hearle v. Greenback, 3 Atk.; Sweetapple v. Bedon, 2 Vern. 537, n. It seems, then, that nothing less than the receipt of the rents and profits by the wife, during coverture, will constitute an equitable seizin in a trust estate.

*613

Did the appellant's wife ever receive any portion of the rents and profits of this property? It appears from the record that the original proceeding in this case was instituted to recover the lot and the rents and profits, it being charged in the complaint that Jenkins was in possession of the lot and had received all the rents and profits.

Jenkins is an adverse claimant, denying the validity of the deed, and contesting all the claims of appellant. If the wife's estate was a legal estate, these facts, under the decisions, would negative seizin, because where there is an adverse claimant, and especially where he is in possession, the possession does not follow the title to such extent as to constitute a seizin in the wife, and under such circumstances the curtesy of the husband could not attach even to a legal estate, much less could it attach in a trust estate like this, where the adverse claimant is in possession, denying the trust and refusing to accord his rents and profits. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare *414; De Gray v. Richardson, 3 Atk. 469. It seems that the cestui que trust has never received any portion of the rents and profits. She may have been entitled to them, but her failure to receive them prevents seizin, and a failure of seizin prevents curtesy.

Did the grantor intend to exclude the curtesy? We have seen from the authorities that a grantor has the right to do this, and *that when the question is raised it is a question of intention. In one case, where he expressly excluded the husband from the right of curtesy, this exclusion was enforced. Bennet v. Davis, 2 P. Wms. 310, and Clark v. Clark, 24 Barb. 582. It has been held in several English cases that simply declaring that the trust is for the sole and separate use and benefit of the wife does not necessarily raise the implication that it was the intention of the grantor to cut off the curtesy, and in such cases the equitable seizin of the wife, by the receipt of the rents and profits, would enure to the benefit of the husband and save his curtesy.

*614

Lord Hardwick, in the case of Roberts v. Dexwell, 1 Atk. 607, held that the husband might lose his curtesy in an estate devised to the wife for her separate use. His opinion in Hearle v. Greenback, 1 Ves. 303, is somewhat in conflict with this, and the two can scarcely be reconciled; but the doctrine seems to be well settled in accordance with the decision of Roberts v. Dexwell, and if there was nothing more in this deed than that the estate was settled to the sole and separate use of the wife of respondent, that would not be an insuperable barrier in his way—in fact, it would present no objection to his claim; but the deed goes further, and in very emphatic terms declares that the estate given to his daughter Mary shall not be liable for the debts or contracts of any husband with whom she may intermarry and shall be free from his control. Now, can this express inhibition be limited only to the estate existing during the life of the wife? In endeavoring to reach the intention of the grantor, is that a fair interpretation of the terms he used in his deed? He had not only the welfare of his daughter in his mind, as it appears, but he went beyond her and was looking to the issue of her body—his grandchildren—his own descendants—and his deed was as much for their benefit as for hers, and he expressly excluded any husband which she might have from all control of the property conveyed. We think this was about as strong as the case of Bennet v. Davis, supra, where the curtesy in terms was denied.

Mary died in November, 1869, leaving one son living, who died in March thereafter, while an infant. The fee conditional terminated with the death of this son, and, under the law, the whole estate has reverted to the respondent—the grantor—who *now is invested with the legal title in fee simple, and is in possession.

*615

As a general rule, where the primal estate determines the derivative estate, whether it be dower or curtesy, also ceases, upon the maxim cessante statu primitivo cessat derivativus. This has been held to apply generally to determinable deeds and not to limitations over. In this last class of cases it is said the limitation merely shifts the estate from one person to another, and leaves the prior seizin undisturbed. The limitation over takes effect and the estate next in expectancy vests without entry, and the entry is preserved. 4 Kent *34. But the cases of estate tail, determining by failure of issue, and of a fee determining by executory devise or shifting use, are exceptions to the general rule denying curtesy or dower after the determination of the principal estate.

These distinctions are quite abstruse and subtle, and it seems anomalous that in this case, after the primitive estate, out of which, but for the other facts already discussed, the appellant might claim by curtesy, has, by the death of his son, ceased and is gone forever, and the fee has returned to grantor, who is now and has ever been in possession, yet that he should be still entitled to hold the property during his life as tenant by curtesy; but such appears to be the law, and if there was nothing else in the way but this, the appellant would be entitled to have the decree below reversed and his tenancy by curtesy enforced.

But we think there was no seizin of the wife in this case: and we further think that there is a necessary implication arising from the terms of the deed, that it was the intention of the grantor to exclude the curtesy of any husband that might intermarry with his daughter; and upon these grounds we sustain the result of the decree of the Circuit judge.

The deed in this case was executed before the adoption of the constitution of 1868, and before the passage of any act on the subject of the rights of married women. The rights of the parties, if any, had vested, and we do not see how the constitution of 1868 or the acts referred to could affect this question. If the estate of Mary became executed in her, because after the adoption of the constitution a trustee was no longer necessary, and *the trust estate became a legal one, yet Samuel Jenkins has been at all times in possession; and even in this case there would be no legal seizin in the wife, and the intent to exclude the curtesy would still exist in the deed.

*616

While we cannot agree to the reasoning by which the Circuit judge reaches his conclusion, we think his conclusion is right. The decree is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

14 S. C. 616

(Case No. 1003.)

DETHERIDGE v. GILREATH.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Appeal and Error ⇨764.]

The service of three manuscript copies of the brief upon respondent's attorney, was a sufficient compliance with the rule of court, which, at the time of appeal taken, only required that three copies should be served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3099; Dec. Dig. ⇨764.]

Motion to restore to the docket of this court a case which had been dismissed by the clerk. At the time of appeal taken, Rule VII. of the Supreme Court required the appellant to serve "three copies of the case, or brief as prepared for argument," on the attorney of the adverse party within twenty days after the return of the Circuit Court had been filed in this court. If he failed to do so the respondent might, by notice in writing, require the service of such copies within ten days after the service of such notice, &c.

Mr. E. F. Stokes, for motion.

Mr. M. F. Ansel, contra.

March 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. In this case the appeal was dismissed by the clerk of the court, on affidavits submitted by attorney of re*spondents, that Rule VII. of this court had not been complied with, in that appellants failing to have served copies of the brief or case within twenty days after the return from the Circuit Court, had still failed, upon notice and demand by respondents, to have said copies served within the time prescribed by the rule.

*617

It appears from the affidavits, both of respondents and appellants, that while it is true that printed copies of the case were not served, yet that manuscript copies were tendered by the appellants within proper time.

Was the tender of manuscript copies a sufficient compliance with the rule? The rule at that time simply required that three copies should be served. It was silent as to whether they should be in writing or printed.

It would be much better that all papers connected with appeals should be printed, and, by recent amendment of Rule VII., this is required as to the papers therein referred to. In the absence, however, of such requirement at the time this appeal was taken, we think appellants substantially complied with the then existing rule, and that this appeal should not have been dismissed.

It is therefore ordered that the appeal in this case be restored to the docket.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

263

NOTES OF CAUSES

Decided during the Period Comprised in this Volume, and not Reported in full.

14 S. C. *619

*At the last session of the general assembly of South Carolina, an act was passed entitled "An act to amend Section eleven, Chapter CIV., Title I., Part III., of the general statutes, so as to provide for the publication of all the decisions of the Supreme Court in the state reports," approved December 24th, 1880, (17 Stat. 397), whereby it was enacted that "from and after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the state reporter, in addition to the report of the cases which he may be instructed to publish under the order of the Supreme Court, to append the title of all the cases decided by the Supreme Court, during the period covered by each volume published by him, stating, in a short note, the principle or principles decided in each case; and also adding what cases previously decided have been overruled, modified or confirmed during said period."

Under the requirements of this act, the following "Notes of causes not reported in full," is published. Cases "overruled, modified or confirmed," will be found in the index, under the head of Cases Criticised.—Reporter.

No. 943. STATE v. DODSON. November Term, 1880.

Motion to dismiss appeal, because that the brief did not contain any report of the Circuit judge, nor any agreed statement of counsel. This court approved the practice prescribed in State v. Pitts, 12 S. C. 180 [32 Am. Rep. 508], and held the brief insufficient for a hearing; but as human life was involved, the rule of practice would not be rigidly enforced; and for the purpose of permitting the appellants to amend their brief, the cause was ordered to stand over until a future day named. Opinion per curiam, November 26th,

*620

*1880. Solicitor Cothran, for motion. E. F. Stokes and J. T. Nix, contra.

No. 945. TARRANT v. GILLETSON. November Term, 1880.

[Appeal and Error ⇨819.]

Hearing of appeal suspended until the next term, to enable defendant, appellant, to make application to the Circuit Court, (notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal,) for a re-hearing of the case, upon the ground of after-discovered evidence.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Turner, 39 S. C. 425, 17 S. E. 885.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3200; Dec. Dig. ⇨819.]

Opinion per curiam, November 29th, 1880.

[For subsequent opinion, see Tarrant v. Gittelson, 16 S. C. 233.]

No. 953. BIGGS & CO. v. HUBERT & CO. November Term, 1880.

Defendants, A and B, entered into articles of co-partnership to do a general commission business, with an express stipulation against speculations. After a time A entered into cotton speculations in the firm name, and, on account of such speculations, a large sum of money became due to plaintiffs in Liverpool, for which they brought this action. Plaintiffs knew nothing of the terms of the partnership agreement. A testified that B knew of these speculations, and drew her share of the profits, knowing whence they came; B denied all knowledge, and testified that she had always opposed all suggestions of speculating. Verdict was for defendants. Hudson, J., Charleston.

Plaintiffs appealed to this court upon exceptions to the judge's charge. The following principles were decided:

[1. Partnership ⇨160.]

Defendant B did not render herself liable because of failure to give notice "to the plaintiffs of any limitations or conditions imposed on either of the partners defendants." The rule as laid down in 1 Coll. on Part. 645, approved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 190–300; Dec. Dig. ⇨160.]

[2. Partnership ⇨218.]

Whether these transactions were inconsistent with the general scope of the business of the partnership of defendants, was a question of fact properly submitted to the jury. Galloway v. Hughes, 1 Bail. 553.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 49, 426–428; Dec. Dig. ⇨218.]

[3. Partnership ⇨157.]

The judge properly charged the jury that B did not bind herself to plaintiffs by a receipt of profits arising from these speculations, unless she knew how the moneys so received were derived. 1 Coll. on Part. 646.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 282–291; Dec. Dig. ⟸157.]

[4. Partnership ⟸128.]

An act by one member of a firm inconsistent with the practice and usage of the business of the co-partnership, would be outside the scope of the co-partnership as matter of fact, and, according to the principles of law governing and controlling *partnerships, well understood and long since settled, would not bind the firm: and a party thus acting with the firm in an outside transaction could not plead ignorance.

*621

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 193; Dec. Dig. ⟸128.]

Judgment below affirmed. Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., December 14th, 1880. A. G. Magrath, Jr., for appellants. S. Lord, contra.

No. 966. WILLIAMS, BLACK & CO. v. CONNOR. November Term, 1880.

[1. Costs ⟸119.]

When a Circuit judge orders security for costs to be given by an absent plaintiff on or before the first day of the next ensuing term, but imposes no penalty for non-compliance, it is within the discretion of the next succeeding judge to permit the security to be filed after the expiration of the time fixed in the first order. Code, § 197; McMillan v. McCall, 2 S. C. 393.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 542; Dec. Dig. ⟸119.]

[2. Partnership ⟸32, 218.]

Where two parties associate themselves together for the purchase of one hundred bales of cotton futures (a single transaction), they constitute a partnership as to that matter; and, the facts being undisputed, the trial judge had a clear right to instruct the jury that it was a partnership. 1 Parsons on Cont. 207; Terrill v. Richards, 1 N. & McC. 20.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Edwards v. Johnson, 90 S. C. 95, 72 S. E. 638.

For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 34, 49, 426–428; Dec. Dig. ⟸32, 218.]

[3. Trial ⟸204.]

The presiding judge may instruct the jury that there is no proof of an alleged fact, when there is none.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 517, 25 S. E. 797.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 495, 497; Dec. Dig. ⟸204.]

[4. Partnership ⟸296.]

Defendants' attorney requested the presiding judge to charge the jury that "notice of a dissolution of the partnership may be inferred from the nature and purposes of the transaction at the time the partnership was entered into." This the presiding judge refused to do without the addition of the words, "if the transaction be ended and closed." Held, no error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 662, 663, 666–678; Dec. Dig. ⟸296.]

[5. Partnership ⟸146.]

If a partnership exists, it is bound by a note given by one of the partners in settlement of a partnership transaction, without proof of any authority given such parties to bind the firm by note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 242–251, 253–255; Dec. Dig. ⟸146.]

[6. Gaming ⟸12.]

This court cannot assume that a purchase of cotton futures is a gaming contract, when there is no evidence in the case which shows it to have been so.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gist v. Telegraph Co., 45 S. C. 369, 23 S. E. 143, 55 Am. St. Rep. 763.

For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. ⟸12.]

[This case is also cited in Brown v. Easterling, 59 S. C. 472, 38 S. E. 1187, and distinguished therefrom.]

Appeal dismissed. Opinion by McIVER, A. J., January 10th, 1881. E. G. Graydon, for appellant. J. C. Haskell, contra.

No. 967. SULLIVAN v. BLYTHE. November Term, 1880.

[1. Trial ⟸194.]

When the Circuit judge, in his charge to the jury, makes general re*marks which have no special application to the case then before the court, he cannot be said to have commented on the facts of the case in violation of Article IV., Section 26, of the constitution of this state.

*622

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 519, 25 S. E. 797.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 441; Dec. Dig. ⟸194.]

[2. Pleading ⟸142.]

Action by assignee of a sealed note against the maker. Defendant set up debt due him by assignor before notice of assignment, and called it a counter-claim, but demanded no relief against plaintiff. Evidence offered at the trial to prove this equitable defence was objected to, because pleaded only as a counter-claim. Objection overruled and evidence admitted. Held, no error. Bliss' Code Pl., § 389; Pom. on Rem., § 92; Code, § 135.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 290, 291, 297, 300; Dec. Dig. ⟸142.]

[3. Attorney and Client ⟸105.]

Defendant failed to serve itemized statement of his account within ten days after demand, but plaintiff did not return it, nor object until trial. The items were set out in the answer, except amounts. Held, that there was no error in permitting this account to be proved at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 365–367; Dec. Dig. ⇦ 165.]

[4. Pleading ⇦330.]

It would seem that an allegation in the answer that defendant "was attorney of the said assignor, and so continued up to the commencement of this action," would support a charge of "fee as general attorney for three years, at $100 a year."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 996–1002; Dec. Dig. ⇦330.]

Appeal dismissed. Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., January 10th, 1881. G. G. Wells, for appellant. J. C. C. Featherston, contra.

No. 968. EDMONDSTON v. COUNTY OF AIKEN. November Term, 1880.

[Counties ⇦113.]

Action to recover $750 for work done in the clerk's office of Aiken county, under the recommendation of the grand jury and the order of the Circuit judge. The value of the services was fixed by special referees appointed for that purpose, and confirmed by the court; but the county was no party to these proceedings. Case submitted, and the Circuit judge (Aldrich) gave judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. This court following the case of Ostendorff v. County Commissioners, ante, p. 403, held that only the county commissioners could make a contract binding on the county; and reversed the judgment of the court below.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Wheeler v. County of Newberry, 18 S. C. 135.

For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 178; Dec. Dig. ⇦113.]

Opinion by McGOWAN, A. J., January 10th, 1881. O. C. Jordan and G. W. Croft, for appellant. Henderson Bros., contra.

No. 970. STEEDMAN v. WEEKS. November Term, 1880.

[Vendor and Purchaser ⇦153.]

S. purchased a tract of land from W. and received a deed of bar*gain and sale, with general warranty. S. then agreed to sell this land to J., giving "such title as received from W., and from no one else." Question was submitted to the court, whether S. was bound to include in his deed to J., under this agreement, a general warranty against the claims of all persons whomsoever. The Circuit judge (Aldrich) held that such was the meaning of the instrument; and this court affirmed the judgment of the court below.

*623

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 306, 307; Dec. Dig. ⇦153.]

Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., January 10th, 1881. G. W. Croft and James Aldrich, Jr., for appellant. Henderson Bros., contra.

No. 972. MORROW v. ODOM. November Term, 1880.

[Trusts ⇦158.]

Deed conveying land in this state to W., in trust for E., a daughter of grantor, for life, with limitations over. W. died, and upon the ex parte petition of E. and her husband, who had removed to Arkansas, M. was appointed by the Court of Chancery in Arkansas, trustee in the place of W., deceased; but no certificate of appointment and substitution was endorsed upon the deed, nor recorded. Action brought by M. in this state to recover the possession of this land and for rents and damages. The Circuit judge (Kershaw) granted a non-suit on defendant's motion. An appeal from this judgment was dismissed, this court holding that the plaintiff could not be invested with title to lands in this state by the action had in the courts of Arkansas; and, moreover, that the requirements of the act of 1796, (5 Stat. 277; Gen. Stat., ch. XCIII., § 10,) had not been complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 205; Dec. Dig. ⇦158.]

Opinion by ALDRICH, A. A. J., January 13th, 1881. B. W. Edwards, for appellant. R. W. Boyd, contra.

No. 973. McELWEE v. McELWEE. November Term, 1880.

[Appeal and Error ⇦425, 627.]

Motion to dismiss appeal. Decree being filed in vacation, defendant procured from plaintiff's attorneys their admission in writing on the back of the original decree, of "notice of filing of the within decree." No notice of appeal was given by plaintiff within ten days after such admission, nor case served within thirty days thereafter. Motion to dismiss granted. Rogers v. Nash, 12 S. C. 560, followed, and Lake v. Moore, 12 S. C. 563, distinguished.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Bowers v. Watts, 40 S. C. 548, 18 S. E. 888.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2155, 2744; Dec. Dig. ⇦425, 627.]

Opinion per curiam, January 21st, 1881.

No. 974. STATE, ex rel. McLENDON, v.

*624

MORRIS. November *Term, 1880.

This was simply an order granting a writ of mandamus in the matter of a municipal election. No opinion was filed, and the reporter has no papers in the case.

No. 975. FEATHERSTON v. NORRIS. November Term, 1880.

This is the same case reported in 7 S. C. 472. Upon its return to the Circuit Court the case was submitted upon the same evidence, and Judge Mackey dismissed the complaint—holding that the bank-book of A. O. Norris, commissioner in equity, was a proper voucher, and that it discharged him from liability for the funds of the Featherston estate. On appeal this judgment was affirmed by this court.

[Cited in State ex rel. Van Wyck v. Norris, 15 S. C. 255.]

Opinion by FRASER, A. A. J., January 26th, 1881. W. E. Earle and J. S. Murray, for appellants. B. F. Whitner, contra.

No. 977. GOLDSMITH v. JACOBS. November Term, 1880.

Edward O. Jacobs and Richard H. Jacobs were joint tenants of a tract of land, and upon Edward's interest rested the lien of a judgment in favor of William Jacobs. In 1860 Richard purchased Edward's interest. William died, leaving Edward his executor; then Edward died. In December, 1860, Richard became administrator de bonis non with will annexed of William, and, as such, assigned this judgment to W. B. Charles, trustee. In March, 1872, Richard became administrator de bonis non of Edward. In August, 1872, Charles brought his action against Richard, administrator of Edward, to renew the judgment in favor of William Jacobs—Richard resisted; the history of this litigation will be found in 5 S. C. 348; 6 S. C. 69, and 9 S. C. 295. After this judgment was renewed, and, in 1879, the interest of Edward was sold thereunder to Goldsmith, the plaintiff here, who brought this action to recover possession. Defendant pleaded the bar of the statute of limitations and adverse possession. His plea was sustained on Circuit by Judge Pressley, under whose instruction the jury found for defendant. An appeal by plaintiff to this court was dismissed. McRaa v. Smith, 2 Bay 339; Lamar v. Raysor, 7 Rich. 509; Pegues v. Warley, ante p. 180; Faysoux v. Prayther, 1 N. & McC. 296 [9 Am. Dec. 691].

Opinion by McGOWAN, A. J., February 26th, 1881. J. C. C. Featherston and W. E. Earle, for appellants. G. G. Wells, contra.

*625

*No. 979. VERMILLION v. MATTISON. November Term, 1880.

[Homestead ⇐200.]

Homestead being assigned to a judgment debtor under execution, he excepted to the return of the appraisers (which was sworn to) upon the ground that the homestead was laid off to him in his wife's lands and not in his own. Judge Thomson, on Circuit, confirmed the return of the appraisers, and the debtor appealed. This court dismissed the appeal, refusing to accept the unsworn assertion of defendant as evidence; and, moreover, not assured that the defendant had no interest in the lands assigned, even if his wife's, as it did not appear that the coverture commenced and the wife's title was acquired after the adoption of our present constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 376; Dec. Dig. ⇐200.]

Opinion by McIVER, A. J., February 26th, 1881. J. S. Murray, for appellant. B. F. Whitner, contra.

No. 985. ROE v. HARRISON. November Term, 1880.

See this case in 9 S. C. 279. Action by Roe, a judgment creditor of Thomas Harrison, to set aside a confession of judgment of prior date, given by Thomas to his son, William Harrison. Both Thomas and William were dead, and the action is against the administrators, respectively. Verdict for plaintiff. Defendants appealed to this court upon exceptions to the judge's charge. In this court, Mary Harrison, administratrix of William, raised in argument the point that, having been discharged as administratrix before action brought, that the action could not be maintained. Held—

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐757.]

That in the absence of all information in the brief as to the nature of the judgment, if any, against Mary, this court would not disturb such judgment, or dismiss the action generally, although, possibly, she was free from suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3092; Dec. Dig. ⇐757.]

[2. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐115.]

That the Circuit judge properly refused to charge that a debtor had a legal right to prefer one creditor to another, and that if Thomas was indebted to William, and gave William a confession of judgment for the purpose of securing him in advance of Roe, he had a right to do so, and it is valid, unless the jury find, by a preponderance of testimony, that the note of Thomas to William was without consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 370, 375–377; Dec. Dig. ⇐115.]

[3. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐309.]

The jury were correctly charged: If you find that T. E. Harrison owed W. H. Harrison the note on which the judgment is confessed, you will then go one step further and inquire *whether the confession of judgment, made by Thomas to William, was made to secure William or to defeat, hinder and delay Roe. If it was given to defeat, hinder and delay Roe, your verdict should be for the plaintiff.

*626

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 941, 944–958; Dec. Dig. ⟸309.]

[4. Executors and Administrators ⟸438.]

The administrator of Thomas, being a party defendant, the court could not be called upon, by order, to make the heirs-at-law of Thomas parties defendant; certainly it was not proper to instruct the jury that they were proper parties, even if plaintiff had agreed to relinquish to the estate the interest on the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1765–1785, 1790; Dec. Dig. ⟸438.]

Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., March 8th, 1881.

No. 986. GIBBES v. GREENVILLE AND COLUMBIA RAILROAD COMPANY. November Term, 1880.

Consent order dismissing the appeal of Clark, trustee, in this case. Per curiam, March 8th, 1881.

No. 990. KAIRSON v. PUCKHABER. November Term, 1880.

This was an action tried before Thomson, J., to recover possession of a lot of land which, it was admitted, originally belonged to the city council of Charleston. The plaintiffs claimed as purchasers from one Ford, who, it was alleged, bought the land at sheriff's sale on June 3d, 1872, under an execution issued to enforce a judgment recovered by one Whiting against the city council of Charleston. Upon this execution is the following endorsement by the sheriff: "Received 2d January, 1872," with the word "January" erased and the word "April" substituted. The defendant claimed under a deed made by the commissioners of the sinking fund of the city of Charleston, together with the city council of Charleston, bearing date November 20th, 1879, alleging that the lot of land in dispute, along with several others, had been specially appropriated by the city council of Charleston to the payment of certain stocks of the city, issued in 1818, 1824, 1838 and 1839, by virtue of a certain declaration of trust, executed by the city council of Charleston on August 22d, 1842, and duly recorded.

When the plaintiffs closed their case a motion for a non-suit was made upon three grounds: First, Because there was no legal proof of a levy and sale. Second, That if a levy had been made, it was not made until after the execution had lost its active energy, and was, therefore, void. Third, Because the evidence *was not sufficient to authorize a verdict. The counsel for the plaintiffs then asked and obtained leave to introduce further evidence to show that there was a levy. To this counsel for defendant objected, contending that after a motion for a non-suit had been made, the Circuit judge had no right to open the case and permit the introduction of further evidence.

*627

There were also exceptions by defendant to the judge's charge and refusals to charge. Verdict was for plaintiff. Defendant appealed. This court held—

[1. Trial ⟸69.]

That it was within the discretion of the Circuit judge to admit the additional testimony. Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 179; Poole v. Mitchell, 1 Hill 404; Mathews v. Heyward, 2 S. C. 247.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Clyburn, 16 S. C. 378; Cantey v. Whitaker, 17 S. C. 529; Woody v. Dean, 24 S. C. 502; Hornsby v. South Carolina Ry. Co., 26 S. C. 190, 1 S. E. 594; Rembert v. Same, 31 S. C. 313, 9 S. E. 968; Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. C. 532, 13 S. E. 679; State v. Symmes, 40 S. C. 388, 19 S. E. 16.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 164, 165; Dec. Dig. ⟸69.]

[2. Pleading ⟸374.]

Judgment, execution, levy and sale were alleged in the complaint, and the levy and sale were admitted in the answer; it was necessary for plaintiff to prove the judgment and execution, but not the levy and sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217–1223; Dec. Dig. ⟸374.]

[3. Execution ⟸101.]

The Circuit judge was correct in holding, as a matter of fact, that the proper date of the sheriff's entry was April 2d, there being no evidence of misconduct by the sheriff in making the erasure of the earlier date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 205; Dec. Dig. ⟸101.]

4. There was sufficient evidence of title to submit the question to the jury.

[5. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸232.]

The deed to Ford was not recorded, Ford's deed to plaintiffs was; the Circuit judge did not err in charging the jury that express notice, or such facts as should put a party upon inquiry which would lead to notice, would answer the same purpose as recording, and that possession was notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 540–545, 548–562; Dec. Dig. ⟸232.]

[6. Trial ⟸31.]

Misstatements or misconstructions of the testimony by the judge, should properly be brought to his attention at the time, or submitted to him on motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Rumph v. Hiott, 35 S. C. 459, 15 S. E. 235.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 84; Dec. Dig. ⇐31.]

7. The Circuit judge erred in charging the jury that stock substituted in place of the original stock would not be covered by the declaration of trust. Whether there had been such substitution should have been submitted to the jury: the judge would not have been justified in charging that the outstanding stocks were in substitution of the original issue.

8. Such declaration of trust was not an ordinary mortgage, but rather in the nature of a mortgage with power of sale, "which, when properly executed, confers good title even against intervening liens."

New trial granted. Opinion by McIVER,

*628

*A. J., March 9th, 1881. Hayne & Ficken, for appellants. Campbell & Whaley, contra.

No. 991. STATE v. DODSON. November Term, 1880.

Defendants in this case were convicted of arson before Thomson, J., Greenville, and sentenced to be hung. Dodson, Adams, Burton and Bates appealed, Maddox having pleaded guilty. The appeal is based upon exceptions to the rulings and charges of the presiding judge. Held by this court—

[1. Criminal Law ⇐622.]

A severance upon trial on the application of defendants, is not a matter of right, but it is within the discretion of the Circuit judge to grant or refuse it. Therefore, his refusal in this case is no ground for new trial. State v. Wise and Johnson, 7 Rich. 412.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1380–1383, 1385, 1386, 1388–1390; Dec. Dig. ⇐622.]

[2. Criminal Law ⇐519.]

Confessions made to persons in authority, although admitted under more stringent rules than when made to private persons, were properly received in this case, it appearing that these confessions were free and voluntary.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Henderson, 74 S. C. 478, 55 S. E. 117.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1152, 1163–1174; Dec. Dig. ⇐519.]

[3. Criminal Law ⇐528.]

Maddox having been convicted of grand larceny, and Dodson twice of petit larceny, their confessions, even if a conspiracy had been established, were incompetent as against any of the parties, except that each confession was admissible against the party making it.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Green, 40 S. C. 330, 18 S. E. 933, 42 Am. St. Rep. 872.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002–1010; Dec. Dig. ⇐528.]

4. Criminal Law ⇐424, 528.]

The common enterprise being ended, confessions made by one of the parties to the conspiracy are not admissible in evidence against the others. 1 Greenl. Ev., § 283.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002–1010; Dec. Dig. ⇐424, 528.]

[5. Witnesses ⇐48.]

One who has been convicted of receiving stolen goods, is an incompetent witness.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. James, 15 S. C. 233, 235.

For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 109–115; Dec. Dig. ⇐48.]

[6. Criminal Law ⇐874.]

The matter of polling the jury is within the discretion of the presiding judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2085–2088; Dec. Dig. ⇐874.]

New trial granted appellants. Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., March 11th, 1881. E. F. Stokes and J. T. Nix, for appellants. Solicitor Cothran, contra.

[For subsequent opinion, see 16 S. C. 453.]

No. 995. DOUGHERTY v. CRAWFORD. November Term, 1880.

Action to recover possession of a tract of land, the title to which was shown to have been, at one time, in B. K. Henegan. The land was devised by will of B. K. Henegan to Robert Y. Henegan. The testator, in a later clause, directed that the crops made on his lands should be used to pay his debts, with power to executors, if necessary, or if "they think best," to sell a part or *any portion of his lands given to Robert. R. Y. Henegan became administrator with will annexed of B. K. Henegan, and in payment of debts contracted in planting operations, partly as administrator and partly for himself, conveyed this land, in March, 1868, as administrator of the will, to E. H. Williams, "in trust to and for such uses and trusts, and for such person or persons, as said Williams shall appoint by deed duly executed in his lifetime in the presence of two witnesses; and in default thereof, then in trust for Baggett & Co." Williams, by instrument under his hand and seal, executed in presence of two witnesses, reciting the deed to him, and in pursuance of the power there given, did "limit and appoint" this land "to the use of John Dougherty (plaintiff here,) to the use of him, the said J. D., his heirs and assigns forever." Defendants claimed under tax title, the land having been sold as delinquent on September 16th, 1874 (the time of sale being extended by order of the comptroller-general,) for taxes assessed against it as the property of Baggett, for fiscal year 1873–74. Verdict for plaintiff. Appeal by defendant, upon exceptions to the judge's (Hudson) charge, and refusals to charge. Held—

*629

[1. Trusts ⇐21.]

That the deed from R. Y. Henegan to Williams was a valid conveyance of this land, and transferred the title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30; Dec. Dig. ⇐21.]

[2. Trusts ⇐191.]

That under the instrument executed by Williams, the title vested in plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. ⇐191.]

[3. Taxation ⇐356.]

That the tax sale was made on a day other than that fixed by the statute of 1874, then of force (15 Stat. 731,) and was, therefore, invalid. Roddy v. Purdy, 10 S. C. 137.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. C. 560, 571, 10 S. E. 330, 5 L. R. A. 821.

For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 596; Dec. Dig. ⇐356.]

Appeal dismissed. Opinion by McIVER, A. J., March 15th, 1881. C. P. Townsend, for appellant. Johnson & Johnson, contra.

No. 996. STOKES v. GREENVILLE. November Term, 1880.

[Appeal and Error ⇐807.]

Motion by appellant, under Rule XIX., to restore to docket appeal dismissed by the clerk of this court, under Rule VII., for failure, after notice, to serve three copies of his case or brief, upon respondent. Appellant duly served notice of this motion, but did not serve a copy of any affidavits to sustain the motion. This court held that there was, therefore, nothing before them to show that the clerk had erred; and, moreover, that appellant now admitted that he had never served respondent with a copy *of the brief.

*630

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3181; Dec. Dig. ⇐807.]

Motion refused. Opinion by SIMPSON, C. J., March 15th, 1881.

No. 997. MORGAN v. SCRUGGS. November Term, 1880.

[Appeal and Error ⇐842.]

Action at common law; complaint dismissed by the Circuit judge, because it appeared, to his satisfaction, "that the plaintiff herein is not the real owner of the notes sued on." The case was not tried by a jury, but by consent was referred to the master to hear and determine. The master set forth the facts as to the ownership, and as a conclusion of law found that plaintiff was the real owner. On appeal—Held, that the judgment of the Circuit Court was a finding of fact which could not be reviewed here; and that under the terms of the order, this court could not conjecture that it was based upon a proposition of law, and enter upon an inquiry as to the correctness of such legal proposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3319; Dec. Dig. ⇐842.]

Appeal dismissed. Opinion by McIVER, A. J., March 15th, 1881. A. Blythe, for appellant. Geo. Westmoreland, contra.

No. 1001. GARVIN v. GARVIN. November Term, 1880.

Motion before the presiding judge of the Circuit, to vacate and set aside a judgment and execution held by John Garvin against Robert Garvin. Judge Pressley, before whom the motion was made, refused to grant it, and Robert Garvin appealed. Held by this court—

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐842.]

That proceedings under the act of 1869 (Gen. Stat. 497, § 2,) are purely legal, and this court, therefore, can correct only errors of law committed by the Circuit judge in such proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3316–3330; Dec. Dig. ⇐842.]

[2. Judgment ⇐337.]

The real purpose of this act considered and the conclusion reached that it probably was intended to affect only the method of procedure, and to provide a uniform proceeding for cases both at law and in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 665; Dec. Dig. ⇐337.]

[3. Judgment ⇐336.]

That from the wording of the motion, and after the decision in Garvin v. Garvin, 13 S. C. 160, the relator cannot now deny that his motion is under the act of 1869.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 664, 724, 746; Dec. Dig. ⇐336.]

[4. Judgment ⇐354.]

That the Circuit judge correctly held that under this statute he had no power to set aside the judgment except for errors of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 691, 703, 704; Dec. Dig. ⇐354.]

[5. Judgment ⇐335.]

That no error of law was committed by the Circuit judge in holding that the facts which would justify a re-opening of *the case, must be such as were shown to his satisfaction to have been overlooked or newly discovered.

*631

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 647–663; Dec. Dig. ⇐335.]

[6. Appeal and Error ⇐113.]

It is very questionable whether any appeal is allowed under this statute; but, without reference to its phraseology, the conclusions of the Circuit judge as to what is "satisfactory proof," cannot be reviewed here.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 758–785; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 113.]

[7. Appeal and Error ⇐1024.]

This court cannot decide whether proof was "satisfactory to the presiding judge."

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Truett v. Rains, 17 S. C. 454.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 820, 3816–3823, 3836, 3837, 4020–4022, 4025–4028; Dec. Dig. ⇐1024.]

Appeal dismissed. Opinion by McGOWAN, A. J., March 18th, 1881. P. A. Emanuel and M. W. Gary, for appellant. D. S. Henderson and G. W. Croft, contra.

[For subsequent opinions, see 21 S. C. 86; 31 S. C. 581, 10 S. E. 507, 17 Am. St. Rep. 48; 40 S. C. 435, 19 S. E. 79.]

No. 1004. DUNCAN, MALONY & CO. v BROWN. November Term, 1880.

This was an order restoring to the docket an appeal dismissed by the clerk under Rule VII. No opinion filed. Order bears date March 18th, 1881.

REPORTS OF CASES

HEARD AND DETERMINED BY

THE SUPREME COURT

OF

SOUTH CAROLINA

VOLUME XV

CONTAINING CASES OF NOVEMBER TERM, 1880, AND APRIL TERM, 1881

BY ROBERT W. SHAND

STATE REPORTER

JERSEY CITY, N. J.
FREDERICK D. LINN & CO., LAW PUBLISHERS AND BOOKSELLERS
1882

ANNOTATED EDITION

ST. PAUL
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1916

JUDGES AND OTHER LAW OFFICERS

DURING THE PERIOD COMPRISED IN THIS VOLUME

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT.

CHIEF JUSTICE.

HON. WILLIAM D. SIMPSON.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES.

HON. HENRY McIVER. HON. SAMUEL McGOWAN.

CIRCUIT JUDGES.

FIRST CIRCUIT,	HON.	B. C. PRESSLEY.
SECOND "	"	A. P. ALDRICH.
THIRD "	"	T. B. FRASER.
FOURTH "	"	J. H. HUDSON.
FIFTH "	"	J. B. KERSHAW.
SIXTH "	"	T. J. MACKEY.
SEVENTH "	"	W. H. WALLACE.
EIGHTH "	"	THOMAS THOMSON.†

ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

HON. LEROY F. YOUMANS.

SOLICITORS.

1*st Circuit*—W. ST. J. JERVEY.	5*th Circuit*—R. G. BONHAM.
2*d Circuit*—F. H. GANTT.	6*th Circuit*—T. C. GASTON.
3*d Circuit*—J. J. DARGAN.	7*th Circuit*—D. R. DUNCAN.
4*th Circuit*—G. W. DARGAN.	8*th Circuit*—J. S. COTHRAN.

CLERK OF THE SUPREME COURT.

A. M. BOOZER.

† Died May 5th, 1881, and the Hon. James S. Cothran, of Abbeville, and Solicitor of the Eighth Circuit, was appointed by the governor to fill the vacancy.

LIST OF ATTORNEYS

ENROLLED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF SOUTH CAROLINA DURING THE YEAR 1881

BEWLEY, W. D.....Anderson.
BOWEN, WILLIAM J.....Charleston.
BRADLEY, W. O.....Abbeville.
BRICE, ASHBEL G.....Chester.
BROOKS, U. R.....Columbia.
BROWNING, W. C.....Spartanburg.
CALVERT, A. B.....Spartanburg.
CARLISLE, MILTON A.....Newberry.
CLARK, T. H.....Camden.
CLOY, JOHN R.....Graniteville.
CROMER, GEORGE B.....Newberry.
DARGAN, C. P.....Darlington.
DARGAN, JOHN J.....Sumter.
DOUGLASS, CHARLES A.....Winnsboro'.
DUNLAP, J. ZED.....Chester.
ELLIS, R. A.....Allendale.
GADSDEN, E. M.....Charleston.
GAGE, GEO. WILLIAMS.....Chester.
GLAZE, W. L.....Orangeburg.
GLENN, J. LYLES.....Chester.
HAGOOD, P. B.....Barnwell.
HART, OLIVER J., JR.....Columbia.
HARVIN, J. REMBERT.....Sumter.
HAZARD, WALTER.....Georgetown.
HOWE, J. B.....Charleston.
HUTSON, EDWARD P.....Barnwell.
JENKINS, HAWKINS K.....Charleston.
JERVEY, THEO. D., JR.....Charleston.
JONES, IRA B.....Lancaster.
JONES, LAMBERT W.....Newberry.
KEITT, JOSEPH L.....Newberry.
KLEIN, W. E.....Charleston.
KLUGH, JAMES C.....Abbeville.
LADSON, C. TATTNALL.....Columbia.
LEE, A. MARKLEY, JR.....Charleston.
LIGON, THOMAS C.....Anderson.
LUDEKENS, EMIL.....Aiken.
MARTIN, W. H.....Laurens.
McBEE, E. A.....Greenville.
McGOWAN, F. P.....Laurens.
McLURE, T. E.....Chester.
McMASTER, JAMES M.....Columbia.
McQUEEN, J. M.....Cheraw.
MEHRTENS, JOHN C.....Charleston.
MILLER, W. C.....Charleston.
MILLER, W. L.....Due West.
MOBLEY, JOHN G.....Columbia.
MOORE, PAUL.....Lancaster.
MOORE, W. J.....Abbeville.
NICHOLLS, GEO. W.....Spartanburg.
O'BANNON, J. BRATTON.....Barnwell.
O'BRIEN, M. E.....Greenville.
O'CONNOR, CHARLES E.....Charleston.
PERRY, J. L.....Charleston.
PITTMAN, THOS. M.....Charlotte, N. C.
PRINCE, G. E.....Greenville.
PURDY, ROBERT O.....Sumter.
RAGSDALE, E. B.....Fairfield.
RAWLS, C. T.....Union.
ROBERTSON, T. R.....Charlotte, N. C.
SALE, GEORGE G.....Newberry.
SANDERS, C. P.....Gaffney.
SAWYER, A. B.....Orangeburg.
SIMKINS, LEWIS W.....Newberry.
SIMKINS, S. McG.....Newberry.
SIMPSON, HENRY Y.....Laurens.
SMITH, L. WARDLAW.....Abbeville.
SULLIVAN, C. P.....Laurens.
THOMASON, W. S.....Spartanburg.
TRANTHAM, WILLIAM D.....Camden.
TRENHOLM, GEORGE M.....Charleston.
WALKER, P. H.....Chester.
WATERS, J. J.....Rock Hill.
WHITE, JAMES E.....Charleston.
WILDER, JAMES T.....Sumter.
WILLARD, A. J.....Columbia.
WILSON, H. FRANK.....Sumter.
WINGARD, JACOB BROOKS.....Newberry.
WOFFORD, CHARLES P.....Spartanburg.
WORKMAN, W. H.....Camden.
WYLIE, R. EVANS.....Lancaster.
YOUMANS, PRINGLE T.....Columbia.

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

	Page
Adams v. Agnew	36
Adickes v. Lowry	128
Ancrum v. Wehmann	118
Ashley v. Holman	97
Beard v. Stanton	164
Bennett v. Sandifer	418
Blakeley v. Frazier	615
Bratton v. Guy	609
Bratton v. Massey	277
Brown, Ex parte	518
Brown v. Buttz	488
Buttz v. Campbell	614
Caldwell v. Little	236
Car Hire Case	613
Chapman v. Lipscomb	470
Charleston, City of, v. Blohme	124
Childs v. Frazee	612
Clinkscales v. Hall	602
Cooke v. Pennington	185
Duckett, Ex parte	210
Duncan v. Brown	414
Eason v. Miller	194
Elder v. C., C. & A. R. Co	610
Evans v. McLucas	67
Fifty-Four First Mortgage Bonds, In re	304
Fisher, Ex parte	613
Flenniken v. Scruggs	88
Fraser v. Davie	496
Gantt v. Gantt	610
Geiger v. Kaigler	262
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co	224
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co	304
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co	518
Gibbes v. Greenville & C. R. Co	613
Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co	443
Hammond v. Port Royal & A. Ry. Co	10
Hellams v. Abercrombie	110
Hogg v. Pinckney	616
Huff v. Watkins	82
Hyatt v. McBurney	393
Johnson v. Clarke	72
Jones v. Massey	615
Keitt v. Counts	493
Kennedy v. Reames	548
Kerchner v. Singletary	535
Lost Bonds Case	224
McCaughrin v. Williams	505
Mackey, Ex parte	322
Mauldin v. Gossett	565
Maxwell v. Thompson	612
Mechanics' & Farmers' Building & Loan Ass'n v. Dorsey	462
Moore v. Sanders	440
Ostendorff v. Brown	616
Pelzer v. Campbell	581
Phinney v. Johnson	158
Reeder v. Dargan	175
Sams v. Port Royal & A. Ry. Co	484
Scaife v. Thomson	337
Shuler v. Bull	421
Smith v. Grant	136
State v. Clark	403
State v. Collins	373
State v. Gathers	370
State v. Hopkins	153
State v. James	233
State v. Scott	434
State v. Smalls	370
State v. Toney	409
State v. White	381
State v. Workman	540
State ex rel. Attorney General v. Greenville & C. R. Co	224
State ex rel. Attorney General v. Greenville & C. Co	304
State ex rel. Attorney General v. Greenville & C. R. Co	518
State ex rel. Attorney General v. Greenville & C. R. Co	613
State ex rel. Van Wyck v. Norris	241
Talbott v. Parker	617
Thomson v. Sexton	93
Union Bank of South Carolina v. Heyward	296
Verdier v. Port Royal R. Co	476
Verner v. Johns	613
Voight v. Britton	614
Wallace v. Foster	214
Weinges v. Cash	44
Wiesenfeld v. Stevens	554
Williams v. Irby	458
Williams v. Paysinger	171
Winsmith v. Winsmith	611
York County v. Watson	1

REPORTS OF CASES

ARGUED AND DETERMINED IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF SOUTH CAROLINA

JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT DURING THE PERIOD COMPRISED IN THIS VOLUME.

Hon. W. D. SIMPSON, Chief Justice.
Hon. HENRY McIVER, Associate Justice.
Hon. SAMUEL McGOWAN, " "

15 S. C. *1

*(Case No. 1005.)

YORK COUNTY v. WATSON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Counties ⟸98; Officers ⟸129.]

There being in this state no statute which imposes upon a county treasurer a higher obligation than that imposed by common law, such officer is not liable for the loss of county funds, occasioned by the failure of a savings bank, which was in good standing at the time the moneys were placed there on deposit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. ⟸98; Officers, Cent. Dig. § 233; Dec. Dig. ⟸129.]

[2. Evidence ⟸333.]

The auditor's duplicate may be used as one of the means by which to ascertain the indebtedness of a county treasurer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1247–1257, 1259–1265; Dec. Dig. ⟸333.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⟸1022.]

Findings of fact, concurred in by referee and Circuit judge, sustained, there being no clear preponderance of testimony to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4015; Dec. Dig. ⟸1022.]

Before Wallace, J., York, November, 1879.

*2

*Action commenced January 26th, 1878, by York county against a former treasurer of that county, John L. Watson, for an accounting of county funds which had passed through his hands. The issues as presented to this court, by the appeal, involved the defendant's liability for a loss occasioned by the failure of a bank, and also the matter of an alleged overcharge against the treasurer.

The case was first argued in this court May 28th, 1880, and being ordered for reargument, was again heard January 18th, 1881.

Defendant became county treasurer of York county, in March, 1871. Between that date and November, 1873, he made deposits of public moneys in the Yorkville branch of the Citizens' Savings Bank, the parent bank being in Columbia. These deposits were interest-bearing deposits. In November, 1873, defendant had to his credit in the branch bank $4683.33. He went to the parent bank on some day in November and presented his check for about $4000 (the brief nowhere gives the exact amount), which the bank did not pay, alleging as a reason want of knowledge as to his bank account in Yorkville. The next day Watson commenced proceedings against the bank in the state courts, and the bank then filed its petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court. Watson received in all forty-seven and a half per cent. dividend on his deposits, for which he properly accounted. Interest upon his deposits was, at intervals, credited to him upon his bank account, but he at no time drew upon these interest credits, as such, nor drew any checks for amounts corresponding, although several checks were payable to and drawn by "self." Under the contract of interest deposits, the bank was entitled to notice of from fourteen to thirty days, according to amount of draft, which might be waived. It does not appear whether notice was exacted from Watson.

The issues of law and fact were referred to James Hemphill, Esq., to determine and report. He reported to the court the testimony taken before him and stated the accounts. His conclusions of fact were as follows:

"On the other question, as to the alleged corrupt and improper conduct of the defendant having caused the bankruptcy of the *bank, and thereby occasioned the loss of the county money, I do not see sufficient ground to sustain the charge. There were some circumstances detailed by the witnesses on the part of the plaintiff which were apparently suspicious, but which were denied or explained by the defendant and his witnesses. I hold that there is not sufficient proof to make the defendant responsil le for the loss sustained by the failure of the savings bank.

*3

"Second. I have given the defendant credit for * * * the sum of $971.80, which was allowed to the treasurer as an overcharge by the auditor and county commissioners, and which appears in the report of the county commissioners of November 1st, 1874; * * *. ——— allowed on the commissioners' report of 1874, upon the evidence of Col. W. B. Allison, formerly county commissioner and clerk of the board, and of the defendant.

"These two witnesses both swear positively that the accounts were carefully and thoroughly examined by the former county auditor, Mr. Enloe, who is now dead, and by Col. Allison, and that upon this investigation they ascertained that the defendant was justly entitled to this credit. * * * On the question of fact, I find—

"Third. That he was overcharged $971.80.

"On the item of commissions, I allowed the defendant four per cent. on all his collections."

The case came up before Judge Wallace on exceptions to the referee's report. The Circuit judge sustained the findings of the referee as to "the item of $971.80, as an overcharge, the court being satisfied that this amount should be deducted from the aggregate of charges against the defendant, as they shall be compiled according to the directions in this order." He also held that defendant was "not liable for any loss of the funds of plaintiff (principal or interest) incurred by reason of the deposit of said funds in the Citizens' Savings Bank, the court being satisfied with the findings of the referee upon this point, both as matter of law and fact." The Circuit decree also contained the following findings:

"5. It is further ordered and adjudged, that the defendant *should also be charged with the assessments for county purposes proper, as shown by the auditor's tax duplicate for the years 1872, 1873, 1874 and 1875, after giving proper credits for the pro rata of abatements for those years belonging to the county proper, the court being satisfied that the auditor's books are the proper sources from which to make such charges.

*4

"6. It is further ordered that it be referred to Winthrop Williams, Esq., as special referee, to take testimony and report the amount of principal and interest of the county funds proper which were in the bank at the time of the suspension, and, after charging defendant with the interest, to give him credit for fifty-two and a half per cent. of the original principal and interest as the uncollected portion thereof."

To this decree plaintiff excepted as follows, and appealed to this court:

1. For error in allowing defendant credit for the sum of $971.80, as an overcharge.

2. For error in holding "both as matter of law and fact," "that defendant is not liable for any loss of the funds of plaintiff (principal or interest) incurred by reason of the deposit of said funds in the Citizens' Savings Bank," and for ordering that the referee "after charging defendant with the interest," give him credit for fifty-two and a half per cent. of the original principal and interest as the uncollected portion thereof.

3. For error in holding, as matter of law, "that the auditor's books are the proper sources from which to" charge the defendant for the county taxes, "as shown by the auditor's tax duplicates for the years 1872, 1873, 1874 and 1875," thereby limiting plaintiff to those sources for making up such charges.

Mr. James F. Hart, for appellant.

The respondent being a receiver of public moneys, under bond for the faithful discharge of his duty as required by law, is absolutely liable for the loss of the funds in his custody, by whatsoever manner this loss occurs. This proposition rests on statute law and public policy. This principle has never been adjudicated in this state, but it has been acted upon. 15 Stat. 287, 465, 805, 819. It has been determined by tribunals of other states. *3 How. 588; 11 How. 154; 4 Wall. 182; 13 Wall. 17; 1 Denio 233; 3 Penna. St. 372; 33 N. J. 339; 6 Ohio St. 607; 1 Woodb. & M. 45; 30 Ill. 99; 22 Ind. 125; 12 Cush. 112; 39 Iowa 9; 32 Mich. 132. United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337, does not, in its decision, conflict with these cases, although there are dicta which would seem to impair the force of the older cases. See Gen. Stat., pp. 83, 148, 213.

*5

2. If the respondent deposited in bank the trust funds of the county in his custody in such a manner that he did not have immediate control over them, so as to be able to withdraw them on the first apprehension of danger, he is liable for their consequent loss. 2 Russ. & Myl. 215; Perry on Trusts 443; Hill on Trust. 540.

3. Having deposited the public funds in a savings bank, with a view of making interest thereon, he stands in the position of a bailee or trustee who has loaned the fund for profit, and is absolutely liable. 1 Beav. 525; 6 Beav. 239; 29 Beav. 213; Hill on Trust. 540; Perry on Trusts, §§ 429, 446. It was a lending of the funds without authority, and, therefore, at his own risk, and the consequent loss must fall on him. 32 Mich. 132; 2 Wall. 256; 5 Denio 555; 36 Ind. 346; 9 Metc. 499; 12 Cush. 112; 4 Vroom 339; 26 N. Y. 514.

Mr. G. W. S. Hart, on same side.
Messrs. Witherspoon & Spencer, contra.

March 21st, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. This is an appeal in a case "in chancery," and it involves questions both of law and of fact.

The respondent was county treasurer for York county, from March, 1871, to March, 1877. It is alleged in the complaint that during the period he held this office he collected large sums of money for the appellant, a considerable portion of which he failed and neglected to account for and pay over to appellant.

This allegation seems to be true, but it appears that this default of respondent resulted from the fact that respondent had deposited this money in the Citizens' Savings Bank; that this *bank has failed, and the loss which has occurred was on account of this failure of the bank.

*6

The appellant contends that, even admitting this to be true, yet, as matter of law, respondent should be regarded as an insurer, liable for the whole amount collected, and that the facts set up by him constituted no legal defence.

The Circuit judge declined to enforce this stringent principle, and, holding that respondent's liability was dependent upon negligence and the proper performance of his duties, he decreed, upon the facts, that the respondent was not liable for the loss incurred by reason of his deposit in the Citizens' Savings Bank.

The ground of appeal in this case, involving this point, brings up for the first time in this state squarely the question as to the absolute and unconditional liability of a public officer for public funds collected by him.

This is an interesting and very important question, both to the state and to all those connected with the fiscal department of the government, and it has been maturely considered by this court.

It is a well-settled principle of the common law that agents, trustees, receivers, and all those sustaining fiduciary relations to private individuals, and thereby having the custody and management of their property, such as administrators, executors, guardians and other trustees, are liable only for the exercise of good faith and proper legal diligence and care. True, the court will watch very narrowly the conduct of such trustees, and will never suffer them to escape responsibility out of mere tenderness to their misfortunes. But when it is made to appear that they have kept themselves within the rules prescribed for the discharge of their special duty, and yet a loss has occurred without any fault or negligence on their part, the court will protect them.

This principle is founded upon the highest justice and the soundest morality. It has its roots in the doctrine of ex æquo et bono, and it meets the approval of all just men. Where a party attends to his own business and a loss occurs, he cannot throw this loss on some one else, but he must meet and shoulder it himself. Where, then, he is under the necessity of procuring the assistance of another to attend to his affairs, because he is unable to do so himself, all that he can justly require from his agent is *good faith, competency and such diligence and care as to the matter in hand as he himself would have given it. This being bestowed, if a loss occurs it should be his loss and not that of the employé. Any other doctrine would cut up, root and branch, one of the most important departments of the business and social economy of the country—the department of bailments. This term, in its broadest sense, covers all classes of agencies. These ramify into and touch every interest of society, and unless properly regulated, society would go to pieces.

*7

It is a matter of the gravest importance, therefore, that whilst the rights of bailors should be most carefully guarded and protected, yet that bailees should not be hastily sacrificed.

The principles referred to above are those which prevail between private parties, and, in reference to private affairs, as found in the common law. They have been applied in many cases in this state. It is only necessary here to refer to the recent case of Twitty v. Houser, 7 S. C. 164, where an administrator, depositing in this same bank, was protected.

Does this common law principle embrace public bonded officers as well as private individuals acting in a quasi official capacity as trustees, &c.? It would be difficult to find a clear distinction between the two—a distinction founded upon principle, such as would justify the exclusion of the one and the inclusion of the other. If it would be wrong in principle to hold a private trustee responsible for a loss which no care of his could have prevented, would it not be equally wrong to hold a public officer responsible under like circumstances? The liability of a bonded officer may be considered, as was said in the case of United States v. Thomas, in a two-fold or double aspect. First. The obligation arising from official duty, and, second, that arising from the condition of his bond. The first is a duty which the law imposes, and the second is a duty which he expressly contracts to perform. The first is governed by the principles of the common law, the other by the terms and conditions of the bond; and if a party binds himself by an express contract to perform a certain act unconditionally, at all events, he must be held by the stipulations of that contract, because such is the agreement he has made.

*8

*Now, independent of the special stipulations and conditions found in the bond of a public officer, it has been held at common law that the principles referred to above, as applicable to private individuals, apply also to public officers, so far as their obligations arising simply from official duty are concerned.

It was said in the case of United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 344 [21 L. Ed. 89]: "The basis of the common law rule is founded on the doctrine of bailment. A public officer having property in his custody, in his official capacity, is a bailee, and the rules which grow out of that relation are held to govern the case." And in Boyden v. United States, where the officer was held responsible, this doctrine was not denied. On the contrary, it is said in that case: "The contract of bailment implies no more, except in the case of common carriers, than ordinary care; and the duty of a receiver, virtute officii, is to bring to the discharge of his trust that prudence, caution and attention which careful men usually bring to the conduct of their own affairs. He may, however, make himself an insurer by express contract, and this he does when he binds himself in a penal bond to perform the duties without exception. There is an established difference between a duty created merely by law and one to which is added the obligation of an express undertaking." The defendant in that case was held liable under the terms of his bond.

Mr. Justice Bradley, in the case of United States v. Thomas, said: "The general rule of official obligation, as imposed by law, is that the officer shall perform the duties of his office honestly, faithfully and to the best of his ability. This is the substance of all official oaths. In ordinary cases, to expect more than this would deter upright and responsible men from taking office. This is substantially the rule by which the common law measures the responsibility of those whose official duties require them to have the custody of property, public or private. If in any case a more stringent obligation is desirable, it must be prescribed by statute or exacted by express stipulations." Accordingly, the congress of the United States and several of the states have made statutory regulations upon this subject, laying the foundation in the official bonds required for a more stringent responsibility than is *ordinarily imposed by the common law, especially as to collectors and receivers of public moneys.

*9

It will be found that the cases relied on by the appellant, viz., United States v. Prescott, 3 How. 578 [11 L. Ed. 734]; Same v. Dashiel, 4 Wall. 185 [18 L. Ed. 319]; Same v. Keehler, 9 Wall. 83 [19 L. Ed. 574]; Boyden v. United States, 13 Wall. 17 [20 L. Ed. 527]; Bevans v. United States, 13 Wall. 56 [20 L. Ed. 531], decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the case of Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Denio 233, in New York, all turned upon the stipulations and conditions of the bonds; it being held in those cases, in accordance with established principles and many decided cases, that where a party contracts without qualification or condition to do a thing, he must perform it or make compensation in damages for non-performance, because it is nominated in the bond. But even this stringent rule was much relaxed in the Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of United States v. Thomas, 15 Wall. 337 [21 L. Ed. 89], where a collector was excused even from his bond on account of overruling necessity, where it appeared he was without neglect or fault. And this rule was relaxed, although under the acts of congress collectors are allowed all necessary additional expenses for clerks, fire-proof chests and vaults for the safe-keeping, transferring and disposing of the public moneys collected by them.

Now we have no act in this state which imposes a higher or more stringent obligation upon collectors and receivers of public money than that imposed by the common law. The form of the bond, it is true, is prescribed by statute, but the only condition is "that the duties shall be well and truly performed." This condition is the condition of the common law, arising from official duty, and is met at common law by an honest, faithful, prudent and zealous discharge of duty. Should it be thought that public policy required a more stringent rule, the general assembly, in its wisdom, could easily provide the necessary enactments to that end, but it has not done so as yet, and in the absence of such statutory regulations, the courts must follow the common law applicable to such cases. We think, in this case, the Circuit judge followed that law in declining to hold the respondent as an insurer.

We do not understand that the Circuit judge ruled as a matter *of law, that the auditor's duplicates were the only source from which to obtain the assessments by which to charge the respondents, but that he referred to these as one of the means by which this could be done, and we see no error in this.

*10

The referee and the Circuit judge have both found, as a matter of fact, that the item of $971.80 was an overcharge, and should have been deducted from the aggregate against the respondent. They have also found, as matter of fact, that the evidence did not sustain the charges of corrupt and improper conduct alleged against the respondent as to the insolvency of the bank in which he had deposited the funds in question.

Where the referee and judge concur in conclusions of fact, it must be shown that the clear preponderance of the testimony is the other way to authorize this court to overthrow their findings. Austin v. Kinsman, 1 S. C. 111; Blackwell v. Searles, Id. 117. We do not find such clear preponderance in this case as to the facts involved in this appeal.

The decree below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

15 S. C. 10

(Case No. 1006.)

HAMMOND v. PORT ROYAL AND AUGUSTA RAILWAY COMPANY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Pleading ⇐193.]

Every cause of action in a complaint should be completely stated, and contain, within itself, all necessary averments, or it will be held bad on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hellams v. Switzer, 24 S. C. 42; Latimer v. Sullivan, 30 S. C. 114, 8 S. E. 639; Iseman v. McMillan, 36 S. C. 36, 15 S. E. 336; State v. Johnson, 45 S. C. 488, 23 S. E. 619; Harman v. Harman, 54 S. C. 105, 31 S. E. 881; Hickson v. Early, 62 S. C. 51, 39 S. E. 782; Lewis v. Hinson, 64 S. C. 578, 43 S. E. 15; Scott v. Seaboard Air Line Ry., 67 S. C. 146, 45 S. E. 129; Wright v. Willoughby, 79 S. C. 440, 60 S. E. 971.

For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 425, 428–435, 437–443; Dec. Dig. ⇐193.]

[2. Pleading ⇐193.]

Where the facts are sufficiently presented as a cause of action, without regard to statements made in other counts, a demurrer will not be sustained, although the allegations are not as formal and distinct as they should be.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Welborn v. Dixon, 70 S. C. 113, 49 S. E. 232.

For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 425, 428–435, 437–443; Dec. Dig. ⇐193.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇐436.]

A demurrer to one of the causes of action set forth in the complaint being overruled, and defendant having at once given notice of appeal therefrom, and declined to answer, further proceedings under that cause of action should have been suspended until the appeal was disposed of.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in McCown v. McSween, 29 S. C. 134, 7 S. E. 45; National Exchange Bank of Augusta v. Stelling, 32 S. C. 106, 10 S. E. 766; Kaminisky v. Trantham, 45 S. C. 10, 22 S. E. 746; Rhodes v. Southern Ry., 68 S. C. 502, 47 S. E. 689.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2191, 2192; Dec. Dig. ⇐436.]

[4. Railroads ⇐129.]

A railroad having been sold by order of *11 court to pay the debts of the cor*poration, the purchasers, the defendant corporation, are not responsible for injuries done by the railroad to adjoining lands before the sale, and, therefore, in action against the new company for damages done by the railroad to such lands caused by a failure to maintain proper drainage, the Circuit judge erred in charging the jury that "you will take into consideration all you have heard as to the value of the land then and now," in estimating the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 402; Dec. Dig. ⇐129.]

[5. Railroads ⇐114.]

But whether the damages should be measured by the rent of the land, the value of crops or the deterioration in value of the land, one or all, was a matter for the jury to determine from the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 365–371; Dec. Dig. ⇐114.]

[6. Deeds ⇐110.]

The intention of the parties to a deed, as to whether an estate upon condition has been created, must be determined by the court from the words of the deed itself, and should not be submitted to a jury.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in De Camps v. Carpin, 19 S. C. 124; Arnold v. Bailey, 24 S. C. 497; Boozer v. Teague, 27 S. C. 360, 3 S. E. 551; Sullivan v. Latimer, 38 S. C. 420, 17 S. E. 221; Cartin v. South Bound R. Co., 43 S. C. 223, 20 S. E. 979, 49 Am. St. Rep. 829.

For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 255, 293; Dec. Dig. ⇐110.]

[7. Deeds ⇐165.]

A deed conveyed a strip of land to a railroad company, to them, their successors and assigns forever, "provided always, and this deed is upon the express condition" that a certain system of drainage was to be kept up by the railroad company. Held, that this created a condition subsequent in deed, and voidable by the grantor upon condition broken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 521; Dec. Dig. ⇐165.]

[8. Deeds ⇐168.]

But no action for the recovery of the land could be brought by the grantor until he had made entry upon the land after condition broken, or made claim, if entry was impossible.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in White v. Britton, 75 S. C. 432, 56 S. E. 232.

For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 526–533; Dec. Dig. ⇐168.]

[9. Deeds ⇐166.]

Whether the grantor had waived his right to enforce a forfeiture, is a question of intention depending upon the facts, and was properly submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 522–525; Dec. Dig. ⇐166.]

[10. Railroads ⇐72.]

Public policy does not forbid a railroad corporation from accepting land for its roadbed upon such conditions—conditions reasonable and possible to be performed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 168–178; Dec. Dig. ⇐72.]

[This case is also cited in Cartin v. South Bound R. Co., 43 S. C. 224, 20 S. E. 979, 49 Am. St. Rep. 829, without specific application, and in Elliott v. Pollitzer, 24 S. C. 85; Gentry v. Richmond, &c. R. Co., 38 S. C. 284, 16 S. E. 893, and distinguished therefrom, and in Kibler v. Luther, 18 S. C. 606; Chavis v. Chavis, 57 S. C. 177, 178, 35 S. E. 507; Lavender v. Daniel & Harmon, 58 S. C. 135, 36 S. E. 546; First Presbyterian Church of Beaufort v. Elliott, 65 S. C. 256, 258, 43 S. E. 674, as to the effect of subsequent conditions in deeds.]

Before Aldrich, J., Aiken, April, 1880.

This was an action instituted June 26th, 1879, by Paul F. Hammond against the Port Royal and Augusta Railway Company, upon two causes of action, which are sufficiently stated in the opinion of this court.

On May 22d, 1872, Hammond executed and delivered to the Port Royal Railroad Company a deed of bargain and sale, whereby he conveyed to the railroad company a strip of land through his Cathwood plantation, in South Carolina, upon the conditions set forth in the opinion of this court. Hammond had, before that time, at great expense, reclaimed this land and the lands adjoining, so that they had become very highly productive and valuable. Hammond, believing that the corporation had failed to *perform these conditions, filed a bill for specific performance in the Superior Court of Richmond county, in the State of Georgia, through which county this railroad passed. The jury to whom the cause was submitted, May 4th, 1875, found a verdict for $3000 damages, and that the railroad company be required to comply with their agreement, as set forth in the deed, within ninety days, under a penalty of $5000. This verdict was set aside by the Supreme Court of Georgia, on appeal, upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to compel a Georgia corporation to go into an adjoining state to perform a contract. 58 Ga. 583.

*12

December 15th, 1874, a bill was filed in the United States Circuit Court for the District of South Carolina, by mortgage creditors of the Port Royal Railroad Company for a foreclosure of their mortgage. On March 28th, 1878, Hammond filed his petition in this cause, setting forth the deed, the failure of the corporation to comply with its conditions, and his damages, and praying to be made a party defendant, and that he be heard upon all questions relating to the sale and the application of the proceeds, and for his damages and a removal of the obstructions. On May 9th, 1878, this petition was referred to James Simons, Esq., as special master, for investigation and report. On April 25th, 1879, Mr. Simons filed his report, wherein he ascertained the damages at $8940, but that such damages were not an encumbrance superior in law to the mortgage.

Meantime, on June 6th, 1878, the railroad was sold by order of the United States Court and purchased by a new company, who organized under the name of the Port Royal and Augusta Railway Company, and took possession in May, 1879. The sale was confirmed during this same month, "without prejudice to the claim of Paul F. Hammond," who obtained leave the same day to withdraw his petition upon payment of costs.

On June 12th, 1879, Hammond, by his attorney, demanded, by letter, from the defendants, the possession of the land described in the deed—but possession was not surrendered.

Action was then brought as above stated. Defendants answering the first cause of action denied title in the plaintiff, and demurred to the second cause of action. The de-murrer was *overruled, and defendants excepted and gave notice of appeal, and asked for a continuance pending the appeal. Leave was granted to put in an answer, which was declined. The case was required to go on. After the evidence for plaintiff closed, defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was refused.

*13

The defendants asked for several instructions to the jury, which are repeated in their grounds of appeal. The charge of the presiding judge was as follows:

The requests to charge have been read, and you will be able to arrive at your conclusions after I have delivered to you my charge. I will note on them for the purposes of this case those that I refuse and those that I charge, so that the whole matter can be discussed in the Supreme Court. As this is a very important case, I desire that every word may be clearly understood.

Next to life and liberty, the law guards with jealous care the freehold of the citizen. The questions of law in this case have been very fully and ably discussed by counsel. They are very interesting and important. These I have decided. If I am wrong I will be corrected by the Supreme Court; if I am right, much time and labor will be saved to the parties to this cause, and much expense to the county. With these questions of law you have nothing to do; you will understand them from what I am about to say; for them the court alone is responsible. The evidence has been given you from the stand.

There are three questions of fact to decide, which is your peculiar province, and I do not propose to influence your minds, as the law has allotted to you that exclusive duty.

The first is, did the plaintiff, Hammond, sign and execute this paper, intending to convey to the Port Royal and Augusta Railroad Company, the defendant, an estate on condition that his system of drainage was to be preserved as it then was, or was it a covenant, which, if violated, gave him an action for damages against the company, to be assessed by the jury.

If you find it was an estate on condition, and that the condition has been broken, then the verdict will be for the land conveyed in the deed—on the breaking of the condition the title reverted—and such damages as you may find the plaintiff has sustained by the non-performance of the condition. Now this *question of condition is one of evidence. Did the plaintiff, Hammond, convey the strip of land to the railroad company on condition? The charter of the company empowered the corporation to enter upon the freehold of the plaintiff, appropriate his land against his consent, at such a valuation as a jury of freeholders might assess. This was giving the corporation the right of eminent domain, which none but the sovereign state can exercise. The surrender of this sovereign right is a concession to those great corporations which add so much to the wealth, convenience and happiness of the people. They convey the mail and passengers with the speed of the wind—annihilate time and space and develop the resources of the country, convey its produce with celerity at reduced rates, enhancing the value of lands through which they pass or which are adjacent, build up towns, villages, and sometimes cities on their lines, increasing the wealth of the state, and adding to the convenience and comfort of the people—a benefit hardly to be appreciated.

*14

For these reasons the state has permitted these corporations to share her right of eminent domain. But, while the state has been thus generous to the projectors of these enterprises which add to her wealth, and to the convenience and comfort of her people, she has not been unmindful of the rights of the proprietors, her own citizens and children. So when she granted this charter empowering the company to enter upon and appropriate the right of way, she also imposed upon them the duty of getting the consent of the proprietor, or, if he refused, to have the damages assessed. In this particular case the company elected to negotiate with the proprietor, and the deed before you is the result. From this deed and the evidence you have heard, the question for you is, what was intended by it? Was it a conveyance of the strip of land on which the railroad is erected, a title to the land on condition that the system of drainage should remain as it then was, or the land revert, or was it not? What did the plaintiff intend when he executed the title, and what did the defendant understand when it received it?

If both parties intended that unless this system of drainage as it then was, should be preserved, the land should revert to the plaintiff, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and your verdict *must be for him for the land, and such damages as you think, from the evidence, he has sustained.

*15

The next question is, has the plaintiff waived his right under the deed, supposing you to consider it to be a title on condition? In all those negotiations between the plaintiff to avoid this litigation and settle this dispute on amicable terms, is it a waiver? You will decide these questions by the evidence. If it was a waiver the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Has the plaintiff, in his interviews and by correspondence with Mr. Wilson, the president, or Mr. Fleming, the superintendent, waived his rights? Has he, by his litigation in the court of Georgia or of the United States, waived his rights? This is a question of fact, of which you are the judges and the only judges.

Having passed on these questions, your next inquiry, if you find for the plaintiff, is, what are his damages? In deciding this you will take into consideration all you have heard as to the value of the land then and now. Has the railroad company injured the plaintiff, Hammond? If so, how much? Now, gentlemen, in deciding this case you must not decide it because the plaintiff is your neighbor, your fellow-citizen, and the defendant is a corporation of New York or Georgia capitalists, but as your consciences will dictate, and as truth and justice demand. If this company has exercised the high power conferred by the state with arrogant assumption of authority and a willful disregard of the rights of the citizen, then your verdict will teach them that the landed proprietors along the route have some rights which you will protect, and you will inquire what is the extent of the damage to the plaintiff, and you will also inquire if the plaintiff has been guilty of neglect in not putting his land in order for cultivation before the work at the water-way of the railroad was done by the company. That is all the ciphering you have to do. If, however, you conclude that the land has been deteriorating in fertility and value, and the plaintiff, Hammond, well knowing of this has brought his suit as a speculation to extort money from the company, then he should not recover a single cent. Take the case.

If you find for the plaintiff generally on all questions, your verdict will be "we find for the plaintiff the land in dispute, and *so many dollars damages." If for the defendant, your verdict will be, "we find for the defendant."

*16

The presiding judge did not, before the jury retired, note on the defendant's requests those that he "refused and those that he allowed," nor has this been done since the trial.

The jury found for the plaintiff the land in dispute, and $6346.31.

Defendants appealed upon the following grounds:

I. First. That his Honor erred in overruling the demurrer to the second cause of action.

Second. That his Honor erred in ordering for trial the said cause of action against the objection of defendant's counsel after said demurrer had been overruled, and notice of appeal from said ruling given.

II. The defendant will renew his motion for a non-suit, on the following grounds:

First. Because the deed of Paul F. Hammond to the Port Royal Railroad Company did not create an estate upon condition.

Second. Because if the said deed did create an estate upon condition, the omission to perform the condition did not, ipso facto, determine the estate, but only rendered it liable to be defeated at the election of the grantor by an actual entry, or a claim where entry is impossible, and there was no evidence that the plaintiff had ever made a formal entry upon the land for the purpose of enforcing the forfeiture, or had ever done any act equivalent to an entry at common law, or to a continuous claim.

Third. Because the forfeiture of a breach of condition may be waived by the grantor, and the testimony of the plaintiff, Paul F. Hammond, showed that he knew of the alleged breach of condition at the time of said breach or within six days thereafter, and without notice of his intention to enforce the forfeitures, permitted the company to make large expenditures in the construction of its track upon the land in question, and as late as February, 1879, gave directions to the defendant company as to the changes which he desired to have made in the digging of the ditches and the construction of the waterways, and after the *work had been done accepted it, and declared the same satisfactory, and by each of these acts waived the forfeiture and treated the title of the company as still subsisting.

*17

Fourth. Because whatever the terms of a condition attached to an estate of freehold, the estate will continue notwithstanding a forfeiture, unless the forfeiture be enforced by an actual entry or a claim when entry is impossible, and an action for the recovery of real estate cannot serve as a substitute for an actual entry or its equivalent at common law.

III. The defendant will also move for a new trial on the following grounds:

First. Because his Honor refused to charge that the following language of the deed, "that the system of drainage shall remain the same as now, except that such ditches as have been filled up by the party of the second part, shall be re-opened by them, and ditches to remain of such a depth as to allow as heretofore the drainage of the land to the depth of five feet," does not create an estate upon condition, and the jury must find for defendant upon the first cause of action.

Second. Because his Honor refused to charge that even if the said words do create such a condition, the omission to perform the condition does not, ipso facto, determine the estate, but only renders it liable to be defeated at the election of the grantor, and the verdict of the jury on the first cause of action must be for the defendant, unless they find from the testimony that the plaintiff made a formal entry upon the land for the purpose of enforcing the forfeiture, or if he was deterred from entering upon the land by menaces or bodily fear that he made claim as near to the land as he could, for the same purpose, and with like forms and solemnities.

Third. Because his Honor refused to charge that forfeiture for breach of condition may be waived; that if the jury found from the evidence that the plaintiff knew of the improper construction of the waterways and trestles, by means of which the ditches were obstructed and his drainage interfered with, at the time this was done, or soon afterwards, and did not enter on the land, or do any act equivalent to an entry at common law, but *permitted the company, without notice of his intention to enforce the forfeiture, to make large expenditures upon the land, and if they further found that the plaintiff, after breach of condition, instituted proceedings in the courts of Georgia to compel the company to dig the ditches to a proper depth, and to construct its waterways and culverts in a proper manner, and if they further found that the plaintiff, after the forfeiture, gave directions to the defendant company as to the changes which he desired to have made in the ditches and water-ways, he, by any or all of these acts, waived the forfeiture, and the verdict must be for the defendant upon the first cause of action.

*18

That whether the acts above named are a waiver, does not depend upon the intention of the plaintiff to waive the forfeiture, but such waiver was the legal effect of doing the acts with a knowledge that the alleged condition had been broken. The question is one of fact and not of intention.

Fourth. Because his Honor refused to charge that, under the second cause of action, the jury could not find damages for anything done prior to the possession of the land by the present defendants; and, in assessing the damages, they must make allowance for whatever part thereof had been caused by the negligence of the plaintiff in not digging the ditches below the railroad tract.

Fifth. Because his Honor refused to charge that the measure of damages against the defendant (if the jury find they have been negligent) is the interest on the value of the land since October, 1878, at the rate of seven per cent., that is to say, according to the testimony, seven per cent. on $8000 for eighteen months, less the value of the crops raised on the lands during that time, which according to the same testimony, was, during the two years, between $800 and $900.

Sixth. Because his Honor refused to charge upon the construction of the deed, and left it to the jury as a question of fact to decide whether the said deed was intended to convey to the Port Royal Railroad Company an estate on condition that the grantor's system of drainage was to be preserved as it then was, or to create a covenant which, if violated, gave him an action against the company, to be assessed by the jury.

Seventh. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury that if *they found "that the deed created an estate on condition, and that the condition had been broken, that the verdict should be for the land conveyed in the deed (for, on the breaking of the condition the title reverted,) and such damages as they might find that the plaintiff had sustained by the non-performance of the condition. Now, this question of condition is one of evidence. Did the plaintiff, Hammond, convey the strip of land to the railroad company on condition? * * * From this deed and the evidence you have heard, the question for you is, what was intended by it?" * * *

*19

Eighth. Because his Honor erred in instructing the jury that "if both parties intended that unless the system of drainage, as it then was, should be preserved, or the land should revert to the plaintiff, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and your verdict must be for him for the land and such damages as you think, from the evidence, he has sustained."

Whereas, it is submitted that the plaintiff could not treat the clause in the deed, upon which he relied, as creating a "condition," the breach of which might be enforced by a forfeiture of the estate granted to the railroad company, and, at the same time, as a "covenant," the breach of which would entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action for damages.

Ninth. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury as follows: "In all these negotiations between the plaintiff to avoid this litigation and settle this dispute on amicable terms, is it a waiver? You will decide these questions by the evidence. If it was a waiver the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. Has the plaintiff, in his interviews and by correspondence with Mr. Wilson, the president, or Mr. Fleming, the superintendent, waived his rights? Has he, by his litigation in the courts of Georgia or of the United States, waived his rights? This is a question of fact, of which you are the judges, and the only judges."

Whereas, it is submitted that he should have charged that the plaintiff having, with full knowledge of the improper construction of the water-ways and trestles, by means of which his ditches were obstructed and his system of drainage interfered with, permitted the company, without notice of his intention to enforce the forfeiture, to make large expenditures upon the land, and *having subsequently instituted proceedings in the courts of Georgia to compel the Port Royal Railroad Company to specifically perform the "covenants of the deed," by digging its ditches to a proper depth, and constructing its culverts and water-ways in a proper manner, and to recover damages for the "breach of the covenants" of the said deed, and having filed his petition in the United States Court, praying the payment of the damages he had sustained by the breach of the "covenants" of the said deed up to the date of the decree, and for the removal of the obstructions to the plaintiff's drainage, and having, after the sale of the premises to the present company, given directions to its officers as to the changes he desired to have made, and having afterwards approved and accepted the work so done at his suggestion, and having addressed to the superintendent the letter dated March 5th, 1879, had waived the forfeiture and could not recover the land. These facts were all established by the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiff and other witnesses, by his letter of March 5th, 1879, and by the records of the courts of Georgia and the United States, and their effect should have been ruled as a question of law.

*20

Tenth. Because his Honor erred in charging the jury as follows: "Your next inquiry, if you find for the plaintiff, is, what are his damages? In deciding this, you will take into consideration all you have heard as to the value of the land, then and now. Has the railroad company injured the plaintiff, and if so, how much?"

Whereas, it is submitted that the present company, the defendant, could not be held liable for damages done to the plaintiff by the Port Royal Railroad Company, and the jury should have been told that they could only take into consideration such depreciation in the value of the land and other damages as had been caused by the unlawful or negligent acts of the defendant since October, 1878, when the property was conveyed to it. The failure to distinguish between the damage caused by the old and defunct company, and that caused by the defendant company, could not fail to confuse the jury, and was error on the part of the judge.

[For subsequent opinion, see 16 S. C. 567.]

*21

*Mr. S. Lord, Jr., for appellant.

I. Every fact which the plaintiff must prove to maintain his suit, and which the defendant has a right to controvert in his answer, must be distinctly averred. Code, § 165; Circuit Court Rules VIII.; Pom. on Rem., § 552, note, 575; Bliss' Code Pl., §§ 121, 282, 283; 12 S. C. 1, 8; Steph. on Pl. 304; 1 Chit. Pl. 366; 1 Add. on Torts 247.

II. The seventh ground of appeal is alone decisive.

In refusing the motion for a non-suit, the court said: "This question of intent is one that may fairly be submitted to the jury, and while I am obliged to consider it in deciding this motion, I will take care that the jury shall be untrammeled when it is submitted to them."

Accordingly the court charged the jury: "From this deed and the evidence you have heard, the question for you is, what was intended by it?"

Mowry v. Stogner, 3 S. C. 251, expressly rules that this is error, and upon this ground a new trial must be granted.

As, however, the inquiry as to the proper construction of the deed of 1872, and the effect of the plaintiff's acts in waiving the alleged breach of condition, will be conclusive of the case, it is desirable that the court should enter upon it now. This was the course pursued in 11 S. C. 75, and if adopted it will save the delay and expense of another appeal.

The ruling question is, whether the deed of Hammond to the Port Royal Railroad Company created an estate upon condition. The presiding judge, on the motion for a nonsuit, ruled that it did.

The clause relied on is susceptible of three constructions:

1. That it annexed a condition subsequent to the estate granted.

2. That it reserved to the grantor an easement.

3. That it created a covenant running with the land.

The rules which should govern the court in the determination of this question are well settled. 4 Kent 132; 15 Penna. 295.

As proper to frame a condition, certain words are recognized which, of their own nature and efficacy, without the addition of other words, are sufficient. Among these, three are said to be *most appropriate to make an estate conditional, namely, "proviso," "ita quod," and "sub conditione." Now, in that clause of the deed particularly under review, we have the apt words, "upon the express conditions," and hence it will be argued that by the legal import necessarily attributable to them, the estate granted is a conditional interest. But this argument overlooks the well settled principle, "that these conditional words sometimes serve to work a qualification or limitation, and sometimes to make a covenant only, according to the intention of the parties." 2 Greenl. Cruise 730, § 4; 2 Pars. on Cont. 526.

*22

There is, therefore, no "rigid and unbending rule ascertained by settled authority" which requires the court to construe this clause as a condition. If the parties did not intend that there should be a condition, there is none. Now, to construe this clause as a condition, would entirely defeat this purpose. The benefit of a condition can only be reserved to the grantor or his heirs. It cannot be reserved to or assigned to a stranger, and the assignee of the reversion cannot enter for a condition broken. 4 Kent *122. If the grantor assigns the adjoining land and then enters, he holds the estate discharged of the condition and the owner of the land assigned derives no benefit from it. Co. Lit. 214 a, 214 b, 215 b; Com. Dig., "Condition," A 6.

The only way, then, to effect the intent of the grantor, is to construe the clause under consideration as the reservation of an easement, or as a covenant running with the land conveyed to the railroad company.

We next inquire as to the presumed intention of the grantee. It is difficult to suppose that it could have been the intention of the company to accept a conveyance which would give the plaintiff the right, if his ditches did not remain at the depth of five feet or "the cattle guards or the stop gaps" on the line of the road were not kept in constant or uninterrupted repair, to take possession of the premises and render its entire road from Port Royal to Augusta useless.

Such a condition would be clearly void as against public policy. 101 U. S. 71.

And the deed itself points to the conclusion, that by this *clause a covenant and not a condition, was intended, for the clause immediately preceding states the contingency on which the land was to revert to the grantor.

*23

It is well settled "that where the words of an instrument are ambiguous, the court will call in aid acts done under it as a clue to the intention of the parties." Broom's Max. *300; 8 Bing. 178; 2 Greenl. Cruise, ch. XXV., § 9; 9 Paige 427.

In the statement of facts the evidence is referred to, which shows that from the execution of the deed down to the bringing of this action, the plaintiff has invariably elected to treat the clause in question as a covenant. He is now concluded from averring that it is a condition.

III. But conceding that the estate granted was upon condition, and that it has been broken, the next inquiry is, has the breach been waived?

By the conveyance from Hammond the railroad company took a fee in the premises. Such is the legal effect of the language of the deed. The habendum is to the company and their successors and assigns forever. This fee, if plaintiff's construction be correct, was qualified by a condition subsequent. It is laid down by all the authorities that where a freehold estate is granted upon condition subsequent, the estate vests in the grantee, subject to be defeated by the omission to perform the condition. But the breach of condition does not (as his Honor charged), ipso facto determine the estate. The grantor or his heirs may not choose to take advantage of the breach, and until they do so by entry or its equivalent, there is no forfeiture. 4 Kent 126; 2 Bla. Com. 155, and authorities passim; 4 Kent 128.

As the condition is reserved for the benefit of the grantor, it is competent for him to waive the breach and treat the estate as still subsisting, "and as the rigorous execution of them is a species of summum jus, and, in many cases, hardly reconcilable with conscience." 4 Kent 128, 129. The inclination of courts is strongly in favor of giving every act or declaration of the grantor which evinces an intention to overlook the breach and treat the estate as still subsisting, the effect of a waiver, especially if attended by a lapse of time or any other circumstance which would *render it inequitable to enforce forfeiture. Note to Dumpor's case, 1 Smith's L. Cas. 97; 4 Burr. 2052; Cowp. 803; 12 Barb. 440; 5 Ohio 388; 35 N. Y. 208.

*24

Applying these principles to this case, it is impossible to resist the conclusion that the petitioner has waived his right to insist upon a forfeiture of the estate granted to the railroad company.

The question of waiver was submitted to the jury as one exclusively of fact to be determined by them, and without the slightest explanation of the legal doctrines they were to apply. That this was error, is ruled in 2 S. C. 524.

IV. The next question in the case is, whether the plaintiff was bound to make an actual entry before he could maintain his action?

It is of consequence to bear in mind the distinction between conditions subsequent annexed to an estate in fee, and the like conditions annexed to an estate for years. In the former, the only mode in which advantage can be taken of a breach is by entry, or, if that should be impossible, by claim. 1 Greenl. Cruise 504, § 9, and especially note 1; 2 Washb. on Real Prop. *452, § 16; 4 Kent 127.

The reason of the rule is stated with great clearness in 1 Conn. 87.

In those states in which the fictions of the English practice are dispensed with, an action of ejectment cannot be brought as a substitute for an actual entry. 5 Serg. & R. 375; 35 Maine 342; 18 Conn. 535; 57 Ind. 564; 11 N. Y. 315; 12 N. Y. 121.

The entry and claim referred to in these authorities is described by Blackstone.

In many states statutes have been passed dispensing with the necessity of actual entry. No act of this character can be found upon the statute books of this state. The plaintiff's title must, therefore, "be judged by the rules of the common law," and so judged, it is clear that until an actual entry, both the legal title and the right of possession were in the defendant when this suit was brought.

*25

*Messrs. D. S. Henderson, M. C. Hammond and the Attorney General, contra.

Mr. William Elliott, in reply.

March 21st, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. In this case two causes of action were joined. In the first the plaintiff sued to recover a certain strip of land situate in the county of Aiken, in this state, the same being two hundred feet wide and one mile and one-half long, extending through the plantation of plaintiff, known as "Cathwood." This strip of land the plaintiff had previously sold to the Port Royal Railroad Company as a right of way, upon which to construct a portion of their railroad. The deed conveying this strip of land to said company will be hereafter considered. It may be stated here, however, that this deed was claimed by the plaintiff to be a deed upon conditions; that these conditions had been broken, and, therefore, that the title had been forfeited. This action was brought to recover the land.

For the second cause of action the statement is as follows: "That said defendants having wrongfully taken possession of said tract of land aforesaid, had continued the construction and running a railroad through the same, and because of the negligent construction of said road-bed, the culverts, trestles and mudsills, so continued negligently and unlawfully, said defendants have damaged and almost completely destroyed the system of drainage which existed on the plantation of Cathwood aforesaid, by closing up and obstructing the ditches and canals which supported said system, thus causing to plaintiff the loss of his crop and great deterioration in the value of his lands, to the damage of plaintiff eight thousand dollars."

To the first cause of action the defendants answered, denying title in the plaintiff and claiming title themselves.

To the second defendants demurred, "on the ground that complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The case was heard before Judge Aldrich. The first issue tried was the issue of law raised by the demurrer. Judge Aldrich overruled the demurrer. The defendants at once appealed, and *moved the court to proceed no further with the trial of the second cause of action.

*26

There is some difference of recollection between counsel as to what occurred at this point; but the trial proceeded as to both causes of action. The defendants did not ask leave to file an answer when the demurrer was overruled, but distinctly refused. Upon the close of plaintiff's testimony defendants moved for a non-suit on the first cause of action, on grounds which will be found in the grounds of appeal. This motion was refused. The jury found for the plaintiff the land in dispute and $6046.11. The defendants appealed on the various grounds which will be referred to as far as may be necessary in the discussion which follows.

Should the demurrer have been sustained? is the first question for our consideration.

The complaint embraces two distinct causes of action; one for the recovery of a tract or strip of land and damages for its detention, and the other in the nature of an action on the case for damages done to real estate (other than this strip) by stopping up ditches, interfering with drainage, &c., &c., by defendants.

Under the old practice these two causes of action could hardly have been joined in one suit, but under the code this is allowable, and hence no objection was interposed on that account. But the demurrer was based on the ground that while two or more actions may be joined in one suit or complaint, yet that these different causes of action must each stand on its own statements, and must be considered as if no other was embraced, and upon demurrer each must be tested by what it contains, without help from any other count in the complaint. If this position can be sustained, then it will become necessary to test the second count by this rule. This question must turn upon the construction which must be given to the provisions of the code upon the subject of complaints.

The code, although it has been in use in this state since 1870, is still somewhat new to us. In our own decisions we have not as yet sounded its depths or reached its heights. Many questions have arisen elsewhere under it, which have not been presented to our courts. We have a right, it is true, to construe it *for ourselves, and this we propose to do as necessity may arise: but at the same time it will be our pleasure and duty to get all the aid we can from the decisions of able judges in other states, and especially from the labors of distinguished writers and annotators who have made the entire system the subject of earnest and profound study. Among these writers, Pomeroy and Bliss are, perhaps, the most prominent and most frequently quoted.

*27

Mr. Pomeroy, in section 275 of his Remedies and Remedial Rights, says: "Where a complaint contains several counts, it is a settled rule that each separate division or count must be complete by itself, and must contain all the averments necessary to a perfect cause of action. Defects and omissions in one cannot be supplied by allegations found in another, nor can the pleader, by merely referring to material facts properly set forth in a former count, incorporate them into and make them part of a subsequent one. In other words, all issuable or material facts constituting the ground for a recovery must be stated in each cause of action, even though some repetition might thereby become necessary."

Mr. Bliss (section 121) says: "The presumption is that every statement embodies a cause of action altogether new, hence the rule that it must be complete in itself. It must contain all the facts which constitute the cause of action embraced in it, and its defects cannot be supplied from other statements. Although this reason is denied in Indiana, yet the requirement that each count shall contain the facts necessary to the cause of action, is rigidly enforced in that state, and a second count, which counted upon a mortgage, and referred to the land as described in the first, was held to be bad, on general demurrer, upon the ground that the court would not look outside the count for a description of the land. So imperative is the requirement that each statement should be complete, that when a statute requires that copies of the instrument upon which the action is based should be filed with the pleadings, it is held that where the same paper is made the foundation of a second count, it should be referred to as filed with that count also."

The same has been held in Wisconsin and New York. Bliss, 121: "Whenever a cause of action is attacked by a demurrer, *either against it alone or against the entire pleading, it must stand or fall by its own averments; it cannot be helped out by any facts, however sufficient in themselves, in another paragraph." Pom., § 575; Alendorff v. Bondley, 2 Wis. 222.

*28

So far as this matter has been discussed in other states, this rule seems to have been adopted and enforced with great strictness. At first it would seem to be harsh, rigid and extremely technical, and in conflict with the liberal tendencies of the code; but, upon consideration, it will be found based on correct principles and consonant with the true theory of pleadings. The code makes a considerable stride when it permits two or more different causes of action to be joined in the same complaint, and unless these different causes are kept separate and distinct, much confusion and complication must be the result. To prevent this, an orderly system of pleadings should be adopted, and to this end each action should be stated in a single and independent division, so that defendant might meet it without confusion with others, and each should contain all the averments necessary to raise the issues upon which the case is to be tried. This was always necessary under the old practice when actions could not be joined.

The facts constituting the cause of action were required to be stated in the declaration, not as a matter of mere form but as an essential element in the action, and without which it could not proceed: and there can be no reason why this should be dispensed with now because joinder is permitted.

In Childers v. Verner & Stribling, 12 S. C. 8, Mr. Justice McIver said: "The rule is that while a plaintiff may combine in one complaint several distinct causes of action, yet these different causes of action must be stated separately, in order that the defendant may plead to them separately, if necessary or desirable."

It would seem to follow as a necessary supplement to this that the causes thus stated separately should each contain, in itself, the necessary averments to support it. While the code has made great improvement in pleading in the adoption of a single form of action, and in cutting off much of its useless and unnecessary verbiage, yet, for the proper administration of the laws, some *symmetry and order should be preserved; and, in the absence of statutory regulations to that end, the court should mould the pleadings into proper shape. And upon this matter, and for this purpose, we are disposed to adopt the principles laid down by Pomeroy and Bliss, and the decisions in the other states, and hold that each count or statement of a cause of action in a complaint should contain, in itself, all the averments necessary to develop the issues involved.

*29

Now apply this test to the statement of the cause of action attacked by the demurrer in this case. The wrong which the plaintiff seeks to have redressed by this action is an alleged injury to his Cathwood plantation, in Aiken county, caused by a serious interference on the part of the defendants with the ditches, canals and system of drainage, which, at great labor and expense, he had established thereon.

The only facts necessary to be stated in an action to redress this wrong are, first, that the plaintiff is the owner, and is in possession of the plantation injured; second, that the defendants have committed the injury complained of; third, that the premises are within the jurisdiction of the court. It is true that these facts are not as formally stated in the count as good pleading would require; but is there not enough to present these facts, and to show that they are relied upon as a cause of action, even without the help of any other count in the complaint?

It is certainly stated that the plantation injured is the Cathwood place. The system of drainage, which is alleged to have been destroyed, is referred to as being on that place. It is further alleged that the plaintiff's land and crops were injured, and no other land or place but the Cathwood place is mentioned. Is this not substantially an allegation that the plaintiff is the owner of the Cathwood place, and that it is the injury upon that place of which he complains?

The defendants are sufficiently charged with committing this injury, and the venue is laid in Aiken county. As we have already said, it is true that these allegations are not as distinctly and as formally set forth as they should have been; and this style of pleading should not be encouraged. But, on the other hand, as the plaintiff has alleged enough, by close inspection, to *bring his case before the court, and it is apparent that the defendants have not been taken by surprise, we think the Circuit judge should be sustained in his order overruling the demurrer.

*30

By reasonable intendment the facts may be made out. Mr. Whitaker, quoting from Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 330, says: "It is sufficient that the requisite allegation can be fairly gathered from all the averments in the complaint, though the statement of them be argumentative and the complaint deficient in technical language."

On this branch of the case the defendants appeal, because the judge refused to charge that, under the second cause of action, "the jury could not find damages for anything done prior to the possession of the defendants."

It seems that the Port Royal company, the predecessor of defendants, went into possession in 1873, and continued in possession until some time in 1878. The obstruction to the ditches began soon after the company went into possession, and continued during the whole period of its possession. The plaintiff commenced action against the company in Georgia in 1879, and recovered verdict for the damages up to that date, which the jury at that time assessed at $3,000. The verdict was set aside by the Supreme Court of Georgia for the want of jurisdiction. The plaintiff then commenced proceedings in the United States Court at Charleston. The motion was referred to a referee, who assessed the plaintiff's damages at $5640. That was May, 1878. The defendants went into possession in October, 1878, and the present action was instituted on the 20th of June thereafter.

The greater part of the damages to plaintiff, then, had accrued before defendant's purchase, and by the acts of others. The defendants were certainly not liable for injuries caused by the acts of other parties. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff has been greatly injured. This fact has been found by two juries, and also by a very competent referee. But there is no principle of law which can make one responsible for injuries which he had no agency in committing.

The judge charged the jury: "If you find for the plaintiff, your next inquiry is, what are his damages? In deciding this you will take into consideration all you have heard as to the *value of the land then and now. Has the railroad company injured the plaintiff—and, if so, how much?" This was calculated to mislead the jury, and, from their finding, they must have gone back behind the possession of defendants. We think the charge should have been more specific, and that the jury should have been confined, in accordance with the request of defendants to the damage resulting from defendants' acts.

*31

As to the measure of damages, we see no error in the charge. Whether it should be measured by the rent of the land, the probable value of the crops that might have been grown, or the permanent deterioration of the land, one or all, was a matter for the jury, dependent upon the evidence. But in no event should the defendants have been made responsible for any injury except that occasioned by their own acts of commission or omission.

This brings us to the consideration of the grounds of appeal connected with the first cause of action. The prominent issue in that branch of the case is the title to the strip of land in dispute, and this must depend upon the construction which shall be given to the deed under which defendants claim. This deed is the deed of the plaintiff to the Port Royal company, through which the defendants claim. It is contended by plaintiff that this deed is a deed upon conditions, which conditions have been broken and violated, and, therefore, the title thereunder forfeited, and, on this account, the defendants cannot set it up. It would encumber this opinion too much to copy the deed in full. I shall, therefore, briefly state its conclusion. The habendum is: "To have and to hold the said strip * * * unto the said party of the second part, their successors and assigns forever: provided always, and this deed is upon the express conditions:

"1. That the right of way is granted under the restrictions of the act of the general assembly of South Carolina, of September 22d, 1865, and, if abandoned, reverts back to the party of the first part.

"2. That the system of drainage shall remain the same as now, except that such ditches as have been filled up by the party of the second part are to be re-opened by them, and ditches to remain of such a depth as to allow, as heretofore, the drainage of the land to the depth of five feet.

*32

*"3. That whenever the road crosses the line of any fence or other enclosure of the party of the first part, the party of the second part shall construct and keep in repair proper and sufficient cattle guards or stock gaps. And provided further, that the said railroad may occupy a wider space." * * *

Estates upon condition are of feudal origin, and have come down to us from that remote day. They are treated of not only in Blackstone but are recognized in Kent and Washburn, and all the writers on real property, and also in the decisions of many of the states of the Union. They are not favored, but when created by the parties interested they have been sustained. The condition which is to affect the estate may be express or implied, and may be precedent or subsequent. Upon a precedent condition the estate may be commenced or enlarged, while a subsequent condition defeats an estate already vested.

In this case the conditions, if any, are subsequent, and we will confine our attention to that class. The intention of the parties must always govern as to the question whether an estate upon condition has been created; but that intention must be reached by interpretation or construction of the instrument in which it is alleged to exist. Testimony dehors the instrument cannot be allowed. Hence, it is always a matter for the court and not a matter of fact for the jury. The judge seems to have submitted this question to the jury. This was erroneous and must be reversed. Mowry v. Stogner, 3 S. C. 251.

The material question, however, in this deed is not met by this ruling. Does it create an estate upon condition subsequent? This court might avoid this question under the grounds of appeal, but inasmuch as the case is to go back to the court below it is important that we should pass upon it now.

Prominent among the forms of expression which create a condition in a grant or deed, as is found in all writers on this subject, are the following: "Provided always, on condition." 4 Kent 122, 140; 2 Washb. on Real Prop. 3. These expressions, both, are found in this deed, and they have been held sufficient to create an estate upon condition, unless there is something in the deed to negative this idea. And inasmuch as estates upon condition working forfeiture are odious, the courts have generally laid hold of any plausible feature to sustain the deed.

*33

*But what is there in this deed to negative the idea that these expressions were used according to their usual, and, we might say, judicial interpretation, when found in a deed? It is said they imply a covenant running with the land. Covenants running with the land are covenants which bind the grantor. This is not a deed of indenture, but is a deed-poll, signed by the grantor alone, and how can the stipulations in this deed be made the covenants of the grantee? If Hammond had intended to rely for his protection upon a covenant by the grantee, would he not have taken a separate instrument, properly prepared and executed?

The fact that he did not do this affords a strong presumption that he preferred the right to enforce forfeiture as the most effectual means of protection. His system of drainage had been constructed at great expense, and it was natural that he should desire to throw around it the most effectual safeguard, and the danger of forfeiture, on the part of the company, was certainly the highest incentive that could influence the company to do its duty in the premises. When, then, Hammond has used the very terms which the books lay down as the special terms to be used to create such an estate, and when this was his interest, and nothing is found in the deed to negative the idea that it was also his purpose, why resort to implication? Why not take him at what he says? It seems to the court that it would be in violation of all rules of construction to hold otherwise than that this deed created an estate upon condition.

What is the effect of a subsequent condition? There is a broad and wide distinction between a condition and a limitation. A limitation upon a condition, or, in other words, a conditional limitation, is where the property is limited over to a third party in case the condition be not fulfilled, denominated by Littleton a condition in law. 1 Inst. 234. In such case the estate determines, ipso facto, that the contingency happens. But when the estate is upon a condition in deed, as in this case, the law permits it to endure beyond the happening of the contingency. It is voidable, but not void ipso facto. 2 Bl. Com. 155; 4 Kent 127.

Such conditions are not favored and must be construed strictly, and will, under no circumstances, be enforced further than may *be absolutely required, and so strong is this principle engrafted in the law that courts of equity will seldom lend their aid to divest an estate for the breach of a condition. If parties, however, will make contracts involving such conditions, they must not expect to get relief by any interposition on the part of the courts. In Hill v. Barclay, 18 Ves. 56, Lord Eldon said: "Relief might be granted against a breach of a condition to pay money, but not where the breach of the condition consisted of acts of commission, directly in the face of it, and the law had ascertained the contract and the rights of the parties. A court of equity could not interfere."

*34

Estates upon condition are created for the benefit of the grantor and his heirs and no one else can take advantage of the condition, and the estate is not divested until the grantor acts. The law, from the beginning, has prescribed the mode of action on his part. In some of the American states this mode has been altered by statute; not so, however, in South Carolina.

Both the estate and the mode of enforcing forfeiture originated together in feudal times, and though the reasons for their origin as to both have long since passed away, yet they were adopted together, and must stand or fall together, except so far as any state may have amended by statute.

Actual entry, or, if that be impossible, by claim, was the original mode of enforcing forfeiture. This was a part of the very law authorizing the estates upon condition subsequent. 2 Washb. R. P., § 16, 450; 4 Kent 127; 2 Greenl. Cruise, ch. II., §§ 42, 45, note 1. Mr. Washburn says that nothing short of an actual entry will serve to defeat an estate upon condition broken. Finder v. Says, 46 Barb. 123. He adds: "It cannot be done by action, for, when the grantor conveyed, he parted with the seizin, which he can only regain by an entry made." Shep. Touch. 496; Co. Lit. 218; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79. We have no authority which authorizes this court to modify this principle.

In an action to recover real estate, the plaintiff must have title when he begins his action. In this case plaintiff parted with his title by the deed to the Port Royal company. Has this title returned to him? Ordinarily a reconveyance would be necessary, but in deeds upon condition an entry upon breach of con*dition will operate as a reconveyance; or if entry cannot be made, claim will be sufficient; either will do, but in the absence of both the title cannot return. The Circuit judge should have charged the jury that entry, or, if that was impossible, claim was necessary on the part of the plaintiff to divest the defendants of title.

*35

We think there was no error on the part of the judge in submitting it to the jury as a question of fact, whether the plaintiff had waived his right to enforce forfeiture. All the authorities agree in the opinion that this is a right which may be waived. Whether it has been waived in a given case, is entirely a matter of intention on the part of the grantor, to be reached in each case by the special facts. In some cases it has been decided that long acquiescence after condition broken, standing by and permitting improvements, unexplained, and acts of that kind, might be relied on as evidence of waiver; but we know of no rule of law more certain or more explicit than to say that where the evidence shows an intention to waive this right, then this intention must govern, and when once the right is waived it is gone forever. Washb. and Kent, supra.

We do not think that considerations of public policy can enter into this case. The Port Royal company had the right, under the act of the general assembly, to condemn this strip of land, and take possession by virtue of the mode therein prescribed. If it saw proper to resort to a private agreement and purchase, we do not see that they can interpose the public interests as a shield against their positive and distinct contracts, especially as the conditions imposed were reasonable and proper, and do not appear to have been surrounded with any great difficulty in being met and discharged.

We think that the notice of appeal from the order overruling the demurrer should have stayed proceedings as to the second cause of action until the appeal was heard. Code, § 369.

The judgment below is reversed and the appeal sustained, and it being admitted that there was no evidence whatever showing entry or claim before action brought, the defendant's motion for non-suit as to the first cause of action should have been granted, *and the judge's order refusing this motion is reversed and the non-suit ordered. The case is remanded for a new trial on the second cause of action.

*36

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s concurred.

15 S. C. 36

(Case No. 1007.)

ADAMS v. AGNEW.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Homestead ⟸107.]

A being indebted to B for balance on bond of long standing, given for the purchase money of land, B, in May, 1868, accepted a new bond from A and sued it to judgment, but obtained no endorsement of a certificate that the judgment was based upon an obligation for the purchase of the land. Held, that the judgment was founded upon the new bond, and that, under the constitution of April, 1868, A was entitled to his homestead exemption in such land as against this judgment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Oliver v. White, 18 S. C. 242.

For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 172; Dec. Dig. ⟸107.]

[2. Judgment ⟸122.]

A judgment taken by default before the clerk of the court since the act of November 25th, 1873, amending the code, is absolutely void; nor will it be made valid by the refusal of ex parte motions afterwards made (1) by the plaintiff to docket and take judgment in open court, and (2) by junior judgment creditors to vacate; or even, it seems, by a decree declaring the judgment valid in an action brought by other judgment creditors to set it aside, to which action the judgment defendant was a party and did not appeal.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Agnew v. Adams, 17 S. C. 369; Id., 26 S. C. 106, 1 S. E. 414.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 222; Dec. Dig. ⟸122.]

[3. Homestead ⟸51.]

An assignment of homestead, together with an accompanying plat referred to for a description by metes and bounds, was returned in due time to the proper officer, who recorded the assignment but not the plat, which was put into a drawer in his office. The judgment creditors knew of the assignment and that defendant was living on the land, claiming it as his homestead. Held, that the defendant was entitled to his homestead so laid off and assigned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homestead, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. ⟸51.]

[This case is also cited in M. S. Bailey & Sons v. Wood, 71 S. C. 48, 50 S. E. 631, without specific application.]

Before Thomson, J., Richland, March, 1879.

This was an action commenced September 30th, 1878, by Thomas Agnew to recover two hundred acres of land from Robert Adams. Agnew claimed as purchaser at sheriff's sale under executions against Adams. The defendant claimed that the tract *described in the complaint was his homestead, duly assigned and laid off to him before the sheriff's sale. The land levied upon and sold by the sheriff seems to have contained nine hundred and two acres, and to have been bid in at $225. It was levied on in 1874; the assignment of homestead was dated January, 1875, but no sale was made under the levy until March, 1878. This action was to recover the two hundred acres. It does not appear that the possession of the lands in excess of the homestead was withheld by the defendant. At the sale notice was given by Adams' attorney of the assignment of the homestead.

*37

After the close of testimony for the plaintiff, defendant moved for a non-suit, which was refused. There were several instructions to the jury, requested by defendant, and exceptions to evidence and to the rulings and charge of the Circuit judge, but they were not considered by this court and need not be stated. Every fact necessary to a full understanding of the case, and also the points decided, are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

[For subsequent opinions, see Agnew v. Adams, 17 S. C. 364; Id., 26 S. C. 101, 1 S. E. 414.]

Mr. J. E. Bacon, for appellant.

Mr. Youmans, attorney-general, contra.

March 22d, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action for the possession of a tract of land known as the "Bluff Plantation." The defendant resisted the plaintiff's right to recover two hundred acres of the tract, mainly on the ground that it "had been assigned to him as a homestead, according to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the state."

Prior to 1875, several judgments and executions had been lodged against the defendant, Robert Adams, and in October of that year these executions were levied upon the Bluff plantation, then described as containing nine hundred and two acres, in the possession of the defendant. He made application for homestead, and the sheriff issued his warrant, naming in it all the cases in his office against the defendant (except that of Amie A. Weston, assignee, to which particular reference will be made hereafter,) appointing appraisers to lay off homestead for the de*fendant. The appraisers made an assignment, which, together with a plat of the land assigned, was returned in proper time "for record in court." The clerk recorded the assignment. It seems, however, that he did not copy the plat upon the record, but placed it in a desk in his office. At that time none of the creditors objected to homestead, but, after the decision in Cochran v. Darcy, 5 S. C. 126, was published, it was mooted that two of the judgments against Robert Adams had been rendered upon contracts older than the constitution, and, as against them, the assignment of his homestead could not stand. These judgments were as follows:

*38

1. That of Amie A. Weston, assignee, v. Robert Adams and James P. Adams, upon a bond dated April 24th, 1866, for $727.23. This judgment was rendered by default before the clerk of the court, out of term time, February 3d, 1874. A motion to docket the case and take judgment in court had been refused, and also an application to set aside the judgment had been denied by the same judge, on the ground that at the time the judgment was rendered before the clerk there was no valid law forbidding it.

2. The judgment of James P. Adams v. Robert Adams, for $3800, upon a bond bearing date May 25th, 1868, but alleged to be the renewal of an indebtedness older than the constitution, part of which was the balance of a bond given for the half interest of James P. Adams in lands (seventeen hundred and sixty acres,) which James P. and Robert had inherited from their father, and of which the "Bluff Plantation" was part. Robert had sold off nearly half of it, leaving in his possession little more than his own half, nine hundred and two acres.

The judgment creditors, James P. Adams and Amie A. Weston, one a cousin and the other a brother of Robert Adams, never disturbed his possession of the homestead, but some time prior to 1878 they assigned their judgments to John Agnew, Jr., who, as assignee, directed the sheriff to levy and sell the land which had been assigned to the defendant as homestead. The defendant gave notice of his claim of homestead, but, March, 1878, the sheriff sold, as he testified, "simply according to his advertisement, and as sheriffs always sell." Thomas Agnew became the *purchaser at a price less than half the rental value for one year, took sheriff's titles, reciting that the land was sold under the execution of Amie A. Weston, assignee, and brought this action to recover it from the defendant. Upon the facts, of which the above is only a meagre outline, the case was tried, and, under the direction of the judge, the jury found for the plaintiff "two hundred acres of land, fully described in a plat made by S. G. Henry, Esq., January 16th, 1875, and marked 'Homestead of Robert Adams.'" The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was refused, and the appeal comes to this court.

*39

The grounds urged for non-suit and a new trial, and the exceptions for errors of commission and omission on the part of the judge, are very numerous, but the real questions are involved in the following rulings:

"That the judgments of James P. Adams and Amie A. Weston, assignee, were founded on bonds executed before the adoption of the constitution; the bond of James P. Adams, although dated May 26th, 1868, being, according to the evidence, the renewal of an old bond given in 1859 for the purchase money of the land in dispute, and cited the case of De La Howe v. Harper.

"That the return of the appraisers setting off the homestead had not been recorded, as required by the provisions of the homestead act, inasmuch as the plat, which is a part thereof, had never been recorded, and there is no description by metes and bounds or otherwise, of the homestead premises, and therefore the jury, provided they found the other facts for the plaintiff, must return a verdict for the plaintiff for the land in dispute, and such damages, if any, as they might think the testimony warranted."

The question is, whether there was error in these rulings. It is conceded that the defendant is not entitled to retain the homestead which was laid off to him in 1875, if either the judgment of Amie A. Weston or James P. Adams was a valid judgment, and rendered upon a contract made before the constitution of 1868. If that is shown, the assignment of homestead made must be considered as void, quoad such judgment, which conferred authority upon the sheriff to sell, and the purchaser can recover it from the defendant, notwithstanding his claim of homestead. *Bull v. Rowe, 13 S. C. 355. But if it appears that neither of these judgments makes such a case, then, no constitutional difficulty being in the way, the defendant, like any other citizen, is entitled to the much-valued right of homestead and to retain that already laid off to him. Upon this question the onus is on the plaintiff, who claims that these cases fall within the exceptional class, which excludes the right of homestead.

*40

1. As to the judgment of James P. Adams. It was recovered on a bond bearing date May 25th, 1868, after the adoption of the constitution, which was ratified by the people at an election on April 14th, 15th and 16th, 1868. This bond was certainly prima facie evidence of the contract of the parties as of that date. The plaintiff and defendant were brothers. Robert swears that "on May 23d, 1868, James P. and witness had a settlement of old matters between them. James P. said: 'Let's wipe out old scores and begin over.' We did so, and I gave him a bond (the one now in judgment) for $3,800. Everything I owed James P. was put in this new bond. This bond was payable at a different time from the old bond, and at twelve per cent., I think, instead of seven per cent. on the old one." It is said that declarations of Robert were proved, in some particulars, in conflict with this statement. In any point of view this testimony raised a question of fact, whether the new bond was a novation or merely a substitution for the old indebtedness, and it was error on the part of the Circuit judge to withdraw that question from the jury. But we do not think that any such issue was properly involved. From the nature of the question the inquiry was simply as to the time the contract was made. The constitution of the United States declares "that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts," without any reference to the time when the consideration arose, whether it was old or recent, a bond of older date or property sold that day. That which the constitution seeks to protect is the obligation of the contract, and the bond affords at once evidence of the contract and the means of enforcing it. The case of De La Howe v. Harper, 5 S. C. 470, cited by the Circuit judge, has no analogy to this. That was the case of an administration bond, which was executed before the adoption of the constitution and a devastavit established against *the administrator afterwards. The question was, whether the judgment for that devastavit should, in regard to a claim for homestead, be considered as of the date of its recovery, or have reference back to the date of the administration bond, upon which it was established. The court say: "The obligation on which the judgment was founded was in existence at the adoption of the constitution of 1868, and was a proper subject for the protection afforded by the clause in the constitution of the United States," &c.

*41

Besides, the plaintiff, James P. Adams, accepted the bond given May 25th, 1868, and sued on it and recovered judgment, which is the record in the case, but has upon it no such endorsement as a certificate of the court "that the same was issued to enforce the payment of an obligation contracted for the purchase of said homestead," as the law in such case requires, (15 Stat. 231), and neither the plaintiff nor his assignee, who holds under him, can now deny that the bond is the contract of the parties at its date, or go back of it into the consideration thereof. "A party cannot occupy inconsistent positions, and where one has an election between several inconsistent causes of action, he will be confined to that which he first adopts. Any decisive act of that party, done with knowledge of his rights and of the fact, determines his election and makes an estoppel." Bigelow on Estoppel 578; Rodurmond v. Clark, 46 N. Y. 354; Hyde v. Baldwin, 17 Pick. 303; Dewey v. Bell, 5 Allen (Mass.) 165; Hooper v. Hubbard, 7 Mass. 177. The sheriff, or his adviser, took this view, for it will be remembered that he placed this judgment among those in which proceedings issued to assign homestead in 1875. We think the Circuit judge erred when he charged the jury "that the judgment of J. P. Adams was founded upon a bond executed before the adoption of the constitution."

2. As to the judgment of Amie A. Weston, assignee. This was undoubtedly founded on a bond executed before the adoption of the Constitution, viz., on April 24th, 1866; but it is alleged that it is not a valid judgment, having been rendered before the clerk of the court February 3d, 1874, not in "term time and in open court." On November 25th, 1873, the legislature passed an amendment to the code as to the rendition of judgments by de*fault. The act was ratified February 26th, 1873, the last day of that session, and was not returned approved by the governor until the next regular constitutional session, November, 1873. In the meantime there had been an extra session of the legislature, and the judge of the Fifth Circuit held that the said act had not become a law, for the reason that it should have been "returned" to the extra session under Section 22, Article III., of the constitution, which declares that "unless the general assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not have such power and effect unless returned within two days after their next meeting." But it has been decided that said amendment was properly returned, approved, to the next regular session, November, 1873. Arnold v. McKellar, 9 S. C. 338. That amendment is in these words: "That after the passage of this act no judgment shall be obtained in the Court of Common Pleas except during term time and in open court, and it shall be the duty of the clerk to place all cases filed in his office, in which there is no defence, upon a docket to be prepared by him for that purpose. * * * And no execution shall be signed on judgments obtained by default in any other manner than is herein provided." 15 Stat. 502.

*42

After this amendment became law, the alleged judgment of Amie A. Weston was rendered by the clerk of the court, not "during term time and in open court," in direct violation of its terms, which not only affords no authority for such a proceeding, but positively forbids it. This was not a mere irregularity susceptible of amendment, but a substantial defect, rendering it absolutely void, as much so as if it had been rendered by the mayor of the city of Columbia. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the alleged judgment of Amie A. Weston, assignee, and the execution issued thereon, are absolutely void. "A judgment pronounced by a tribunal having no authority to determine the matter in issue, is necessarily and incurably void, and may be shown to be so in any collateral or other proceeding in which it is drawn in question." Freem. on Judg., § 120; Hill v. Robertson, 1 Strob. 1; Thompson v. Tolmie, 2 Pet. 169 [7 L. Ed. 381].

But it is said that a motion was twice made and refused to place the case on the proper calendar and take judgment in open *court, and also that a complaint was filed by D. Crawford & Sons and other creditors, to set aside the judgment for the defect stated, in which it was held that the judgment was good; that to this last proceeding Robert Adams was made a party defendant, and did not appeal from the decree holding that the judgment was regular, and, therefore, so far as he is concerned, the matter is res adjudicata, and he cannot now claim that it is no judgment. Neither of these orders, nor all of them together amounted to the rendition of a new judgment. They were simply rulings upon the question whether a judgment had been previously rendered. As to the first two, it does not appear that Robert Adams was notified. They were orders proposed and refused, and in such case the doctrine of res adjudicata does not apply. It is denied that the proceeding of D. Crawford & Sons was in evidence, but assume that it was; mere omission to appeal could not breath vitality into that which never had existence. "A void judgment is, in legal effect, no judgment. By it no rights are divested. From it no rights can be obtained. Being worthless in itself, all proceedings founded upon it are equally worthless. It neither binds nor bars any one." Freem. on Judg., § 117. "Consent will not confer it, and it is so wanting in the color of judicial authority that it will not be reversed on appeal." Id. 91; Ex parte De Hay, 3 S. C. 567.

*43

3. As to the assignment of homestead. The judge charged that the return of the appraisers setting off the homestead had not been recorded, as required by the provisions of the homestead act, inasmuch as the plat, which is a part thereof, had never been recorded, and there is no description by metes and bounds, or otherwise, of the homestead premises. The commissioners made return as follows: "We have appraised and set off by metes and bounds to the said debtor, as his family homestead, all that piece and parcel of land designated on the plat hereunto annexed, and marked 'family homestead,' containing two hundred acres, and have appraised the same at the sum of one thousand dollars, as will more fully appear by the plat hereto annexed," &c. They returned the assignment and plat to the clerk of the court, who recorded the assignment and placed the plat in his desk, where it could be easily referred to. The law does not, in express terms, *require that the plat shall be recorded. The appraisers are required to make return "for record in court," giving the metes and bounds, &c., "for which purpose they shall be allowed to call in the aid of a surveyor, if they or a majority of them, think it necessary." 15 Stat. 370. The metes and bounds appeared in the plat, which was referred to by the assignment, and was in easy reach. It was properly returned by the proper parties, in proper time and to the proper officer. Should the defendant lose his homestead, not for any neglect of his own or of the appraisers, but of the clerk? The right to homestead is a continuing right, and if the effort to assign it was a failure, it may still be perfected. There is no surprise. All the judgment creditors knew that homestead had been assigned and that the defendant was living upon it. There can be no practical difficulty in locating the homestead, as the plat is still in the clerk's office.

*44

The judgment below is set aside and the case remanded for a new trial.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 44

(Case No. 1008.)

WEINGES v. CASH.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐856.]

The decree of a Circuit Court, based upon untenable conclusions, will not be disturbed if it can be sustained upon any other grounds. The practice indicated by which such grounds should be brought to the attention of this court.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Archer v. Ellison, 28 S. C. 246, 5 S. E. 713; Callaham v. Robinson, 30 S. C. 255, 9 S. E. 120, 3 L. R. A. 497; Ex parte Winkler, 31 S. C. 180, 9 S. E. 792; Burns v. Gower, 34 S. C. 164, 13 S. E. 331; Ex parte Ware Furniture Co., 49 S. C. 26, 27 S. E. 9.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3406; Dec. Dig. ⇐856.]

[2. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐123.]

Pending suit by W. against E., E. at the home of his sister in an adjoining county, while on a visit to her, and upon the solicitation of C.'s husband, confessed judgment to C. for an amount less than his indebtedness, which covered a period of thirty years, E. receiving no benefit from the arrangement. Within a month a transcript of the judgment was lodged in the county where E. resided and owned real estate. Afterwards E. sold a valuable horse, but it did not appear that C. knew of such sale. Held, in action by W., who had obtained judgment in his suit, that C. was chargeable with no fraud in the transaction, and could enforce her judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 400; Dec. Dig. ⇐123.]

*45

[3. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐155.]

* Even if the judgment had been confessed by E. to defeat a recovery by W., this notice would not affect C. unless she had participated in such fraudulent intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 493; Dec. Dig. ⇐155.]

[4. Judgment ⇐63.]

A confession of judgment entered without action in the clerk's office during vacation, is valid; the twenty-first section of the act of November, 1873, amending the code, does not affect judgments by confession, but relates to Section 269, subdivision 1, of the code.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. ⇐63.]

[5. Judgment ⇐64.]

There is now no law which requires a confession of judgment to be obtained or read in open court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 102, 103; Dec. Dig. ⇐64.]

[6. Judgment ⇐50.]

A confession of judgment for an amount less than what is actually due, contains a sufficient statement in the words following: "The said judgment arises from the fact that I am indebted to her on account of the purchase and rentals by me of lands to which she was entitled to an interest, as one of the heirs of her father's estate, and also to the interest of her mother therein, which she has transferred to the plaintiff and directed me to pay to her, the same not exceeding the amount aforesaid, and the said amount is now justly due to the plaintiff."

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Ex parte Carroll, 17 S. C. 448, 450; Woods v. Bryan, 41 S. C. 78, 19 S. E. 218, 44 Am. St. Rep. 688; Ex parte Graham, In re Plyler v. Robertson, 54 S. C. 166, 32 S. E. 67.

For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. ⟸50.]

[7. Judgment ⟸292.]

Slight discrepancies and minor deficiencies and irregularities of form in the transcript of a judgment may be amended, and do not render the transcript invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 572; Dec. Dig. ⟸292.]

[8. Appeal and Error ⟸421.]

[Where some of the grounds on which plaintiff claimed his right were decided against him before the decree was rendered in his favor, it will be presumed, on his appealing, that he only wished to discuss the points decided against him, though his notice of appeal did not so specifically state.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2148; Dec. Dig. ⟸421.]

[This case is also cited in McPherson v. McPherson, 21 S. C. 270, without specific application, and in Kohn v. Meyer, 19 S. C. 198, as to the sufficiency of statements in confessions of judgments.]

Before Kershaw, J., Kershaw, February, 1880.

This case is fully stated in the Circuit decree, which is as follows:

This action was tried before me as an equitable action, without a jury, upon the pleadings, evidence and arguments of counsel.

On December 9th, 1878, the plaintiff commenced an action for damages against Robert G. Ellerbe, the defendant, for an assault and battery, in the Court of Common Pleas for Kershaw county; and at September Term of said court, in the year 1879, obtained a verdict therein for the sum of $2000, for which sum, together with $63.05, the costs and disbursements of said plaintiff in said action, judgment was duly entered and execution was duly signed and lodged in the office of John Doby, sheriff of said county, in October, 1879. A notice of appeal was served in said action September 10th, 1879, but afterward was abandoned. During the pendency of said action—in January, 1879—Robert G. Ellerbe, the defendant, who resides in Kershaw county, visited his sister, Allan E. Cash, the defendant, and his mother, Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe, who was then residing with E. B. C. Cash, the husband of Allan E. Cash, who, with her husband, resided in Chesterfield *terfield county. While there the said Robert G. Ellerbe was pressed by the said E. B. C. Cash to secure certain indebtedness, which, it was alleged by him, existed from said Robert G. Ellerbe to his sister, Mrs. Allan E. Cash, and his mother, Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe, arising from the use and possession of certain lands in Kershaw and part of Sumter counties, which, it was alleged, belonged to the heirs-at-law of William Ellerbe, deceased, the husband of Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe, and the father of Robert G. Ellerbe and Mrs. Allan E. Cash, and also of one William C. S. Ellerbe and one Napoleon Ellerbe, the latter named of which left home twenty years ago and has not been heard from since. Upon this land Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe resided with her family until about 1848 or 1849, when Mrs. Cash and William C. S. Ellerbe married and left the family homestead, Robert G. Ellerbe then being about eighteen years of age. He continued to reside there with his mother until some five or six years ago, when his mother left. It appears that Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe has been physically too infirm, for twenty years past, to attend to her own affairs. Robert G. Ellerbe testified that in the year 1868 he purchased his mother's interest in the land for $2000, which was less than its value, but never paid her anything for it. There was no deed of conveyance put in evidence conveying said interest to him, though a paper having the appearance of a deed was attempted to be proven by defendant's counsel without calling the subscribing witnesses, one of whom was said to be in Charleston, but, upon the objection of plaintiff's counsel, the paper was withdrawn. Robert G. Ellerbe also testified that he had bargained at one time for Mrs. Allan E. Cash's interest in the land, but it was never carried into effect. It appears also that from 1848 Robert G. Ellerbe managed and controlled the plantation, conducting said lands without interference from his mother, though she continued to live there as before, kept a carriage of her own for part of the time, and always got what she wanted. The cotton continued to be branded in the old brand previously used on the place, but of late years another brand (R. C. E.) has been used in connection with it to distinguish classes of cotton. No demand for rent appears to have ever been made by any of the parties, and none ever paid until 1878, when a payment was *made on account of Mrs. Cash, and another in 1879, which collectively amounted to $500. Six years ago Robert G. Ellerbe told Samuel Young that he owed the other heirs of his father more than he was worth (in effect); but since his controversy with Weinges arose he has boasted that he owed no one anything, always paid his debts, and had over $1000 on hand that he had no use for. When Col. E. B. C. Cash pressed R. G. Ellerbe to secure his mother and Mrs. Cash, he assigned as his reason for doing so the probability of a recovery by the plaintiff of a heavy judgment in the case then pending. Robert G. Ellerbe did not deny his liability, but was reluctant to comply with the demand, because he did not believe Weinges would recover against him, or, perhaps, would not press his suit to judgment. He finally yielded, or, as he says, was "forced to do so by Col. Cash." A calculation was then made, computing the rent supposed to be due to Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe and Mrs. Cash, with interest. This was rather an estimate (as Col. Cash testified) that an exact calculation, and it amounted to over $20,000. They estimated that this sum was unnecessarily large, and that a less sum would suffice to cover all the property of Robert G. Ellerbe. They therefore settled the amount to be secured at $15,000. In these transactions Col. Cash does not appear to have consulted with Mrs. Ellerbe, or Mrs. Cash, but as he said he deemed it his duty so to act for them. Having fixed upon the amount, Col. Cash and Robert G. Ellerbe proceeded to Cheraw and consulted W. L. T. Prince, Esq., an attorney-at-law, on the subject under their consideration, the result of which was that a statement was drawn up and signed by Robert G. Ellerbe for the purpose of creating the entry of a confession of judgment without action, in the manner provided in the Code Procedure, Chapter III. of Title 12. This statement was in words following:

*46

*47

"The State of South Carolina, county of Chesterfield, Court of Common Pleas. Allan E. Cash v. Robert G. Ellerbe. I hereby confess myself to be indebted to Allan E. Cash, the plaintiff, in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, and consent to and authorize the entry of judgment therefor. The said judgment *arises from the fact that I am indebted to her on account of the purchase and rental by me of lands to which she was entitled to an interest as an heir of her father's estate, and also to the interest of her mother therein, which she has transferred to the plaintiff and directed me to pay to her, the same not exceeding the amount aforesaid, and the said amount is now justly due to the plaintiff.

*48

(Signed) "R. G. Ellerbe."

At the foot of this statement R. G. Ellerbe made an affidavit thereto appended in writing, sworn before a notary public, wherein he swore "that the above statement is true; that he justly owes the plaintiff the amount stated above, on account of the facts stated." To this is appended the date, "27th January, 1879." The paper containing the statement and affiadvit is endorsed: "Allan E. Cash v. Robert G. Ellerbe. Prince, plaintiff's attorney. Confession. South Carolina, Chesterfield county. Roll 844. On filing the within statement and confession, it is adjudged by the court that the plaintiff do recover against the defendant the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, with five dollars costs and fifteen dollars disbursements, making the sum of fifteen thousand and twenty-five dollars. 28th January, 1879. (Signed) Thomas F. Malloy, clerk. Filed 28th Jan'y, 1879. Thomas F. Malloy, clerk. Judgment signed and entered 28th January, 1879. (Signed) Thomas F. Malloy, clerk." The same day the papers were signed in Cheraw, but after their execution by R. G. Ellerbe, and after he and Col. Cash had returned to the home of the latter, in pursuance of the advice of Mr. Prince, Col. Cash drew up and Mrs. Ellerbe signed a paper in the following words: "Cash's Depot, S. C., Jan'y 27th, 1879. I hereby assign and transfer to my daughter, Allan E. Cash, all my claims against my son, Robert G. Ellerbe." Below this writing there is a blank, occupying nearly one-half of the page, at the bottom of which is written "E. M. Ellerbe," in the handwriting of Mrs. Ellerbe, but in different ink from that used in the writing and signature above. There is no explanation of this last or lower signature of Mrs. Ellerbe. On February 14th, 1879, a transcript of judgment (as it was entitled) was filed in the office of *the clerk of the court of Kershaw county, purported to be founded on the above confession. It is written on the usual printed blank, and contains a mere abstract, as follows: "By confession. Names of parties against whom judgment has been obtained—Robert G. Ellerbe. Names of parties in whose favor judgment has been drawn—Allan E. Cash. Amount debt—$15,000. Costs and disbursements—$20.25. Filed 28th January, 1879. Attorney's name—W. L. T. Prince." Below appears the certificate of Thomas F. Malloy, and under seal of his office, in the following words: "State of South Carolina, county of Chesterfield, Court of Common Pleas, clerk's office, 6th January, 1879. I certify the foregoing is a correct transcript of the final judgment on file in my office." On August 30th, 1879, a similar transcript, certified in like manner, was filed in the office of the clerk of court for Sumter county, with some slight differences, which will be noted. The words "by confession," are omitted from the latter—the amount of costs and disbursements is not filled upon the face of the latter, but is stated on the back, "costs and disbursements, $25." The certificate of the clerk to the latter transcript bears date August 28th, 1879. Executions were signed by the respective clerks of Sumter and Kershaw counties, based upon the aforesaid transcripts; and after the recovery of judgment by the plaintiff against Robert G. Ellerbe, as hereinbefore stated, John Doby, the sheriff of Kershaw county, with whom an execution had been lodged for that purpose, proceeded to levy upon all the property of said Robert G. Ellerbe in the county of Kershaw, and advertised the same for sale in satisfaction of the judgment of the said Allan E. Cash.

*49

Whereupon the plaintiff commenced this action to prevent said sale by a restraining order, alleging that the said confession of judgment is fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff. That no bona fide indebtedness existed from R. G. Ellerbe to Mrs. Cash or his mother. That its purpose was to defeat the recovery of the plaintiff and to hinder the enforcement of his judgment. That the said confession is irregular, insufficient in form, without authority of law, and, therefore, void; and that the said transcripts are irregular and not sufficient to authorize the issue of executions thereupon. All these contentions are denied by the *defendants, Allan E. Cash and Robert G. Ellerbe. The affirmation of all these issues is upon the plaintiff, and I am to determine whether he has made good his allegations and charges.

*50

The first point I shall consider is that which involves the question whether the proofs warrant me in concluding that Robert G. Ellerbe was not indebted at all to his mother and Mrs. Cash.

It has not been denied that the property, whose use was the basis of the alleged indebtedness, was in 1848 owned in common by the heirs-at-law of Dr. William C. Ellerbe, who were his widow and children above specially named.

Robert G. Ellerbe, one of the tenants in common, appears to have controlled the profits of the estate from 1848 or 1849. It is familiar law, that in all such cases "when one party receives all the profits he is bound to account to the other parties in interest for their respective shares, deducting the proper charges and expenses, whether he acts expressly by their authority as bailiff, or only by implication as manager, without direct jure domini over the property." 1 Story's Eq. 466. Our cases confine the liability to the rent of such lands as were capable of producing rents at the time the occupying tenant went into possession. Hancock v. Day, McM. Eq. 69 [36 Am. Dec. 293]; Thompson v. Bostick, McM. Eq. 75.

The proof is that there were thirteen hundred acres of land, of which about one hundred acres were woodland, some of the rest in old fields and briars, but the most of it arable; and that up to 1865 there was a body of slaves on the place. That the place was cultivated by Mrs. Ellerbe before 1848, and there is no proof that any of the land was brought into cultivation for the first time by R. G. Ellerbe.

I cannot, therefore, conclude that there was no foundation for the indebtedness claimed upon the proofs made. A liability results from the facts, and there is no affirmatory evidence to the contrary. It is urged, however, that the amount claimed is excessive. The proof is that arable lands are generally worth $3 per acre rent per annum, and there is no evidence to the contrary. Upon the data provided me in the case, I cannot assume that the amount is excessive. True, in a hostile proceeding Mrs. *Cash would not have been allowed interest after the lapse of so great a period of time; but if R. G. Ellerbe acted in good faith and chose to allow it, he had a right to do so. Moreover, as the parties made up the account with interest, it amounted to over $20,000, and they reduced it to $15,000. It is further contended that the statute of limitations should be applied to this claim, and therefore that the account should be stopped within the statutory period, i. e., six years. No one is bound to plead the statute of limitations, and if the debtor failed to do so, no one else can complain. To hold otherwise would enable any creditor affected by the failure of his debtor to plead the statute in a suit by any other creditor to intervene and compel such pleas, or to set aside a judgment obtained on a demand to which the statute might have been pleaded. There is no such case. It is a plea personal to the debtor, and the only instance in which third parties are allowed to avail themselves of the plea, when the debtor has failed to do so, is that of a legatee or devisee, or heir-at-law, sought to be charged with a debt of the ancestor or devisor barred by the statute, or in other cases of trust, or in cases of fraud and collusion. I do not, therefore, consider this a valid objection. If R. G. Ellerbe was ever liable for the claim, he was not bound to shelter himself behind the statute of limitations.

*51

It is urged, also, that the judgment confessed by R. G. Ellerbe to Mrs. Allan E. Cash is for an excessive amount, in so far as it includes the claim of Mrs. E. M. Ellerbe. Upon this point I conclude that the assignment to Mrs. Cash, made by Mrs. Ellerbe the same day, together with the other circumstances in proof, authorize the conclusion that she affirmed the transaction, and even confirmed the statement of R. G. Ellerbe in the writing that she had directed him to pay her share of the claim to Mrs. Cash. The judgment was not entered until the day after the assignment, and Col. Cash said in his testimony that it was all one transaction. The judgment, therefore, was unobjectionable on that ground.

I come now to consider whether the confession of judgment, impressed with the characteristics derived from the foregoing conclusions, is nevertheless fraudulent and void in law as against *this plaintiff. If it was given for a bona fide debt, it could only be fraudulent in consequence of some covinous agreement or secret trust between the parties to it, whereby Robert G. Ellerbe was to obtain some personal advantage to himself out of the arrangement at the expense of the rights of the plaintiff herein as a creditor. A debtor has a right to prefer any one of his creditors to all the rest, either by sale, mortgage or judgment; such a preference may have been a fraud under the bankrupt law, if made within the period of inhibition imposed by that law, but that cannot avail anything here. The case of Cureton v. Doby, 10 Rich. Eq. 411 [73 Am. Dec. 96], I think will be found fully to answer the objections urged here against the judgment of Mrs. Cash on the ground of fraud. Doby, the defendant therein, hearing of his debtor Price's pecuniary embarrassments, and influenced as much by his solicitude for the welfare of the family of Price, who was nearly related to him by marriage, as to secure the payment of his debt, instructed his attorney to procure a confession of judgment from Price, and if his property was brought to sale to bid in the property and settle it upon his (Price's) wife and child. Price knew of these instructions, and says he therefore the more cheerfully confessed the judgment. The judgment was assailed by a creditor for fraud, but was sustained by the entire court, consisting of Judges Dunkin, Johnston and Wardlaw. I transcribe here, as applicable to the case, a portion of the judgment of the court: "Certainly a judgment may be fraudulent, though the amount for which it is confessed be bona fide due. This principle is recognized in Bird v. Aitken, Rice's Eq. 73, as where one renders assistance to a debtor to enable him to defraud his other creditors, that is a fraud upon the part of him who assists. The bona fides of his own debt will not sanctify the transaction; and Pickett v. Pickett, 2 Hill's Ch. 470, is cited as a striking illustration in which a bona fide purchaser assisted an absconding debtor in eloigning his property. But in the same case of Bird v. Aitken it was authoritatively adjudged that the mere fact of securing a preference of his own debt by a confession of judgment, does not constitute an unlawful or fraudulent hindrance as to the unpreferred creditors. It cannot be doubted, says Chancellor Harper, that the mere preference of one creditor *to another cannot impeach the transaction; and if there were nothing else in this case than that, Aitken had given a voluntary preference by confessing the judgment, that could not be impeached, though he might have foreseen that the effect would be to defeat other creditors. That would not be a fraudulent but a lawful purpose. There is no fraud either in the debtor or in the preferred creditor." The Court of Appeals affirmed the doctrine, and furthermore held that there was nothing in the case to invalidate the transaction. While the law thus allows a debtor to give a preference among his creditors, it will not allow him to secure an advantage to himself at the expense of creditors as the price of such preference. That in every case the inquiry should be as to the rights of the creditors, and in pressing those rights care should be taken that an act of spontaneous kindness and indulgence on the part of the creditor be not confounded with fraud in the debtor. The best of feelings should not be chilled and stifled by an overweening tendency to detect collusion. "My own experience," said the late wise and venerable president of this court, in Maples v. Maples, Rice's Eq. 300, "my own experience is that a great deal of fraud is committed in carrying out the rules which have been prescribed for its prevention."

*52

*53

The badges of fraud urged here are—

1. That the judgment was confessed and entered in another county than that where the defendant, R. G. Ellerbe, resided and where plaintiff's case was pending. The purpose of secresy that is sought to be assumed from this fact is rebutted by the circumstance that R. G. Ellerbe was on a visit to Mrs. Cash at the time; that it was reluctantly given by him upon the urgency of Col. Cash, and that within a month a transcript was entered in Kershaw county.

2. The fact that it was made to his mother and sister.

This is one of the badges of fraud in the Weinges case, but the authority cited above sufficiently shows that here it is not regarded as significant of fraud in itself.

3. That it was not properly enforced against R. G. Ellerbe, and he was allowed to sell some of his property in the meantime. The proof is that he sold one of his race-horses after the judg*ment was given, but it did not appear that Mrs. Cash knew of it. In South Carolina, indulgence after judgment is not a badge of fraud. Adair v. McDaniel, 1 Bail. 158 [19 Am. Dec. 664].

*54

4. That it was taken not for the precise amount, but for sufficient to cover the property of the debtor.

The proof shows that the judgment was entered for less than the amount admitted to be due by the debtor. Had it been for a greater amount it would have been very strong evidence of fraud, but not otherwise. I conclude, therefore, that plaintiff has not established the fraudulency of the judgment of Mrs. Cash.

The next point I shall consider is, as to the sufficiency of the statement upon which the confession was entered. By the second subdivision of Section 400 of the code of procedure, such a statement "must state concisely the facts out of which it (the debt) arose, and must show how the sum confessed therefor is justly due." It must not only state that the money is due, but "the facts out of which it arose." It must also "show that the sum confessed is justly due." In other words, the consideration of the debt must be stated in such manner as to furnish within itself the means of determining that it is justly due. In the language of the court in Chappel v. Chappel, 12 N. Y. 215, "the statute looks not to the evidence of the demand, but to the facts in which it originated"—in other words, "to the consideration which sustains the premises." This rule has been followed in New York in all cases decided since Purdy v. Upton, 10 How. Pr. 494; Bowden v. Johnson, 11 How. Pr. 503; Von Beck v. Shuman, 13 How. Pr. 472; Kendall v. Hodgins, 7 Abb. 309; Dunham v. Waterman, 17 N. Y. 9; Winebrenner v. Edgerton, 17 How. Pr. 363; Claflin v. Sanger, 17 How. Pr. 574; McDowell v. Daniels, 38 Barb. 143; Curtis v. Corbitt, 25 How. Pr. 58; 12 Abb. 403. In these cases it was held that a statement, with particularity of a promissory note, was not sufficient. The statement of a note for $400 and interest and protest fees (giving the date) discounted by the plaintiffs and now owned by them, held insufficient.

So, a statement of liability as endorser of a note stated with particularity. So, of a note particularly stated, with the addi*tion "that said note was given for money had and received by me of the said plaintiff at my request." So, for goods sold and delivered and upon an accounting had, "on the day when the confession was made." So, that the indebtedness was for "goods and groceries, and for one horse and cow, the payment of which, $300, is now due to the plaintiff." So, for lumber and building materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant. So, "for beer sold and delivered and money paid, laid out and expended." So, "for money lent to the defendant to pay off his debts," &c. So, "for money lent to and advanced at various times from December 1st, 1853 to date." So, when the statement was made of various sums or items of money lent or paid, with sufficient particularity as to time and amounts, but without distinguishing between sums lent and sums paid, nor showing to whom paid for use of defendant, was held insufficient in McDowell v. Daniels. There are many other decisions to the like effect, but these are sufficient to show that the statement in this case would not be held sufficient in New York.

*55

The principle is that the statement must be made with such particularity as to furnish on its face the means of testing its accuracy and good faith. The statement here is that the defendant was indebted to Allan E. Cash "on account of the purchase and rental by me (the defendant in the judgment) of lands to which she was entitled to an interest as an heir-at-law of her father's estate, and also to the interest of her mother therein, which she has transferred to the plaintiff," &c.

This does not come up to the requirements of the law, and fails to furnish the means of testing its accuracy and good faith. It does not show how much of the amount was for purchase money and how much for rent. It does not show of what lands the statement is made, nor what the interest of Mrs. Cash and her mother was in such lands; nor does it name the party of whom Mrs. Cash is the heir; nor how much of the amount was due for her share, and how much for her mother's share; nor whether the rents were due upon a contract or for use and occupation; and it is entirely silent as to time. It is fatally defective in form and substance, and the judgment entered thereon is *utterly void as against the other creditors of Robert G. Ellerbe, though it may stand as between the parties.

*56

The only remaining question is as to the validity of the transcripts. They are in the form generally in use in this state, and substantially indicate the judgment. The minor deficiencies and irregularities of form pointed out, like those of the judgment itself, might be amended. I should not incline to pronounce them void if they rested upon a sufficient original judgment. The case in [Harrison v. Southern Porcelain Mfg. Co.] 10 S. C. 278, in my opinion, does not conflict with these views. There is a prayer in the complaint for the appointment of a receiver. The case made does not support such an appointment.

It is adjudged that the defendant, Allan E. Cash, and her agents, be perpetually enjoined from collecting or enforcing the judgment obtained by her by confession from the defendant, Robert G. Ellerbe, until the demands of the plaintiff, Conrad M. Weinges, the plaintiff herein, including the costs of this case, be fully paid and satisfied. And the said judgment is hereby declared void and of no effect as against the said Weinges and all other existing judgment creditors of said Robert G. Ellerbe. It is further adjudged that the plaintiff recover of the defendant, Robert G. Ellerbe, $———, costs and disbursements of this action.

From this decree both plaintiff and defendants gave notice of appeal, upon exceptions which are substantially stated in the opinion of this court. But, as stated in the opinion, the defendants were properly the only appellants, the judgment being in favor of the plaintiff.

Messrs. W. Z. Leitner and R. C. Watts, for appellants.

Mr. W. L. De Pass, contra.

March 23d, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. The object of this action, which was brought by a junior judgment creditor of the defendant Ellerbe, was to set aside a judgment confessed by said Ellerbe to his co-defend*ant, Mrs. Cash. The judgment was originally entered in Chesterfield county, and transcripts thereof were docketed in the counties of Kershaw and Sumter.

*57

The grounds relied upon were: 1. Fraud in the original judgment. 2. That the "statement" accompanying the confession was insufficient to render the judgment valid as against the rights of other creditors. 3. That the transcripts docketed in the counties of Kershaw and Sumter were invalid. 4. That the provisions of the code authorizing a confession of judgment without action, have been repealed. 5. That if these provisions have not been repealed, yet the confession of judgment in question here was of no effect, "because it had not been obtained or read in open court, as required by law."

The Circuit judge held that the plaintiff had failed to establish any fraud in the judgment in question, but that the "statement" upon which it was entered was not sufficient, and, therefore, while the judgment was good between the parties it was void as to the other creditors of Ellerbe. He also held that while there were "minor deficiencies and irregularities of form" in the transcripts, they might be amended, but that he "should not incline to pronounce them void if they rested upon a sufficient original judgment." He therefore adjudged that the plaintiff in the judgment, Mrs. Cash, be perpetually enjoined from enforcing said judgment until the judgment obtained by Weinges, the plaintiff in this case, against Ellerbe, is fully satisfied. From the judgment below both parties have appealed, though the notice of appeal on the part of the plaintiff ought, properly, to have been a notice that if this court should find itself unable to sustain the judgment below on the ground upon which it is rested by the Circuit judge, then plaintiff would insist that said judgment should be sustained on the grounds mentioned in his notice of appeal. For the judgment below being in favor of the plaintiff, it was scarcely his intention to appeal from it, and we will, therefore, assume, for his benefit, that the only object of his notice of appeal was to enable him to discuss the points made in his notice of appeal. The first point which he makes is, that the Circuit judge erred in holding "that the facts and circumstances proven did not establish a legal fraud upon the rights of *the plaintiff." This question has been so fully and satisfactorily disposed of in the decree below, that we deem it scarcely necessary to add anything to what is there said. Indeed, we do not understand that, in the argument here, the plaintiff's counsel impute fraud of any kind to any one except Ellerbe, and as to him only legal or constructive fraud, which is inferred from his acts and declarations, evincing, as argued, an intent to hinder, defeat and delay Weinges in the collection of any amount he might recover in the suit for damages then pending. Even were this the correct inference to be drawn from the testimony, we do not see how it could affect Mrs. Cash. There is no pretence whatever that she participated in any such fraudulent intent, (if any such there was) and, as is said in Smith & Gibson v. Pate & Stubbs, 3 S. C. 208: "It would be inconsistent with every principle of law and morals" to say that she, against whom no imputation of fraud is made, should in any way be affected by the fraudulent motive which, it is alleged, influenced Ellerbe, even if such allegation had been proved. Mrs. Cash's husband, acting as her agent in the whole transaction, does not seem to have done anything more than he had a perfect right, both in law and morals, to do for the purpose of securing a debt due to his wife; for there is no evidence to show that the preference which he obtained for her was secured by any promise or understanding that Ellerbe was to receive any benefit from the arrangement. We are unable to see how this point can be sustained, and, on the contrary, concur fully with the Circuit judge in his conclusion as to the question of fraud.

*58

The second point made by the plaintiff's notice of appeal is: "Because his Honor failed to decide that a confession of judgment taken before the clerk of the court is void at law." The question here raised was not considered by the Circuit judge, doubtless, for the very good reason that, under the view which he took of the case, it was altogether unnecessary to do so. But under the view which we take it will be necessary for us to determine the question. The rule in this court is, that while a Circuit judgment will not be reversed or set aside, except upon grounds taken in the court below, or except upon such questions of jurisdiction as may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, *yet if the judgment below can be sustained upon any ground, whether taken in the court below or not, this court will not only consider it, but base a judgment of affirmance upon it. And, as will be hereinafter seen, we do not think the judgment below can be sustained upon the ground upon which the Circuit judge places it, and, as it could be sustained if the position taken by the plaintiff's second ground of appeal be well founded, it becomes necessary for us to consider the question there raised. The determination of this question depends entirely upon whether Sections 399 to 401, inclusive, of the code, relating to confessions of judgment without action, have been repealed by the twenty-first section of the act of November 25th, 1873. 15 Stat. 495. It is perhaps proper to state here that the repealing act relied upon has been spoken of throughout the argument as the act of March 8th, 1875. 15 Stat. 868. But in the case of Arnold v. McKellar, 9 S. C. 335, it was determined that there was no ground for the doubts which had been previously entertained as to whether the act approved November 25th, 1873, was a valid law, and hence the subsequent act, in totidem verbis, approved March 8th, 1875, was altogether unnecessary, and the true date at which these numerous and important amendments to the code took effect was November 25th, 1873, and not March 8th, 1875. We proceed then to inquire whether the sections of the code providing for the taking of confessions of judgment have been repealed by the twenty-first section of the act of 1873. It is very manifest that they are not expressly repealed, and, if repealed at all, it must be by implication. Repeals by implication are not favored, and "to repeal a statute by implication there must be such a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old that they cannot stand together or be consistently reconciled." Potter's Dwar. on Stat. 155, note 4, and the cases there cited. The title of the act of 1873 is "An act to alter and amend the code of procedure, being Title V., Part III., of the general statutes." In the first section it provides "that the code of procedure * * * be and the same is hereby amended in the several sections thereof as is hereinafter provided," and it then proceeds to provide for amendments to various sections of the code, specifying them by their numbers, though it does not refer *to any of the sections of that chapter of the code which relates to confessions of judgment. But the twenty-first section of the act containing general provisions and not referring to any particular section of the code, is what is relied upon as repealing the provisions of the code relating to confessions of judgment. That section is in the following words: "That after the passage of this act no judgment shall be obtained in the Court of Common Pleas except during term time in open court, and it shall be the duty of the clerk to place all cases filed in his office, in which there is no defence, upon a docket to be prepared by him for the purpose, to be known as Docket No. 6, and they shall be called on the first day of the term, and the order for judgment shall be endorsed on the complaint and signed by the presiding judge, and no execution shall be signed on judgments obtained by default in any other manner than is herein provided." Is there such a positive repugnancy between the provisions of this section and those sections of the code providing for the taking of a confession of judgment without action, as that the two cannot stand together or be consistently reconciled? We confess that we are unable to discover any such repugnancy. They manifestly relate to different things. The sections of the code, from 399 to 401, inclusive, in terms, relate to confessions of judgment without action, while the twenty-first section of the act of 1873 as clearly relates to judgments to be recovered in actions brought in the Court of Common Pleas. It speaks of judgments "obtained in the Court of Common Pleas," and requires the clerk to place "all cases filed in his office in which there is no defence" on a certain docket, showing clearly that it relates to cases or actions brought in the Court of Common Pleas in which a defence might be interposed, all of which would be altogether inapplicable to a confession of judgment without action. Again, it provides that the order for judgment "shall be endorsed on the complaint," which is entirely inconsistent with the idea that there was any intention to refer to confessions of judgment in this section, for in such a proceeding there is no complaint. Finally, it provides, not as argued here, that no execution shall be signed on judgments obtained in any other manner than is provided for in that section, but the language is, "no execution shall be signed on *judgments obtained by default in any other manner than is herein provided." This shows very clearly that the prohibition does not extend to judgments by confession, for, to speak of them as judgments "obtained by default," would be a contradiction in terms—the very term "default" involving, necessarily, the idea that the person to whom it is imputed once had an opportunity to defend the action which he has lost by his neglect to do so in the proper way and at the proper time, and this is manifestly inconsistent with the idea of a confession of judgment without action. The provisions of Section 21 of the act of 1873, in our judgment, relate to Subdivision 1 of Section 269 of the code, and have no application to those sections of the code providing for confessions of judgment without action. The second point made by plaintiff cannot be sustained.

*59

*60

*61

As to the plaintiff's third point, it is quite sufficient to say that we are aware of no law which requires a confession of judgment to be obtained or read in open court. The act of 1821, which did require such confessions to be read in open court, has been repealed by Gen. Stat. 819, and even under that act it was held that a failure to comply with that requirement did not affect the validity of the judgment or the lien which it secured. Stokes v. Cane, 6 Rich. 513.

We come now to consider the grounds of appeal on the part of the defendants. These grounds, though stated in various forms, may be substantially regarded as making the single question, whether the statement accompanying the confession of judgment, assailed in this case, and upon which it was based, was sufficient to give the judgment validity as to third persons. The Circuit judge held that the statement was insufficient, basing his conclusion upon various New York decisions cited in his decree. These decisions, upon examination, will be found, with two exceptions, all to be Supreme Court decisions, and not decisions of the court of last resort, and some of them mere Special Term decisions. They were made between the years 1855 and 1861, inclusive, and it is manifest that there is much conflict in the decisions of the Supreme Court of New York, especially among those made within a few years after the adoption of their code of procedure. This may have arisen, as is suggested in one of the *cases, from the fact that the courts of that state, losing sight of the marked difference in the language of the New York act of 1818, with reference to confessions of judgment, and that employed in their code, based their earlier decisions under the code upon cases which had been decided under the more stringent terms of the act of 1818. That act required "a particular statement and specification of the nature and consideration of the debt," while the New York code, like ours, only requires a "concise" statement of the facts out of which the debt arises. The only decisions of the court of last resort in New York, cited by the Circuit judge to sustain his conclusion, are Chappel v. Chappel, 12 N. Y. (2 Kernan) 215, decided in 1855, and Dunham v. Waterman, 17 N. Y. (3 Smith) 9, decided in 1858. In the former case the statement simply set forth that the indebtedness grew out of two notes particularly described, but did not state what the notes were given for, and in Dunham v. Waterman the statement was that the indebtedness arose upon a note given on settlement of accounts. In both of these cases the statements were held to be insufficient, for the very good reason, that to state, as in Chappel v. Chappel, that the indebtedness arose on notes, is throwing no light whatever on the facts constituting the liability, for the notes are mere evidences of debt and afford no clue to the origin of the indebtedness. One who had given a note under seal, without any consideration, might safely swear that he was indebted in the amount of such note, but if he is required also to say what was the origin or consideration of the debt, he could not truthfully do so unless there was in fact a bona fide indebtedness for which such note was given. In Dunham v. Waterman, the only material difference in the statement from that held to be insufficient in the foregoing case, was the fact that it was there stated that the note was given in settlement of accounts, without saying anything as to the nature of the accounts. This, as the court very properly held, added nothing in the way of information as to the origin and consideration of the indebtedness. The nature of the accounts, upon the settlement of which the indebtedness was alleged to have arisen, should have been stated, so as to give creditors a clue by which they could investigate for themselves the honesty of the trans*action, and without this creditors would have no starting point at which to begin their inquiries.

*62

*63

In Freligh v. Brink, 22 N. Y. 418, decided in 1860, it was held that a statement that the indebtedness arose upon a promissory note given for borrowed money, with the additional statement: "And we hereby state that the sum hereby by us confessed is justly due to the said plaintiff, without any fraud whatever," was sufficient, for the reason that it was not confined to a mere statement of the note, but the consideration of it—borrowed money—was given, and it is difficult to see what more could be required.

In Neusbaum v. Keim, 24 N. Y. 325, decided in 1862, it was held that a statement was sufficient, which, after declaring that the plaintiff had sold and delivered to the debtor large quantities of meat in 1854 and 1855, averred that there was justly due him upon such sales a balance of so much, for which the judgment was taken. In this case it was objected that the statement did not show the amount of meat sold, nor did it show the payments which had been made, nor the prices at which it was sold. But the court said that it was manifest such details were not necessary, and that all the statute required was a concise, not a particular or detailed statement of the facts out of which the indebtedness arose.

In Hopkins v. Nelson, 24 N. Y. 518, decided in 1862, the statement was that "the plaintiff has this day endorsed my notes, payable at bank, for six thousand dollars in all, for my accommodation and to enable me to negotiate said notes." It was objected that the statement should have shown the date, time to run, amount and place of payment of each note so endorsed by the plaintiff, but the court held that such particularity was not required, and that the statement was sufficient.

In Thompson v. Van Vetchen, 27 N. Y. 568, decided in 1863, the statement was that the indebtedness arose on the sale and conveyance by the plaintiff to the defendant of his interest in certain partnership property, and it was held sufficient, though it did not state how the plaintiff was connected with the firm, or what was his interest therein.

Frost v. Koon, 30 N. Y. 442, decided in 1864, again recog*nizes Lanning v. Carpenter and Freligh v. Brink, in holding that a statement that the debt was for money borrowed, without any specification of time or separate amounts, was sufficient.

*64

From this review of the New York cases it is very manifest that the court of last resort in that state does not require that extreme particularity of statement which the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court seemed to exact, but, on the contrary, all that they require is a concise, as contradistinguished from a particular or detailed statement of the facts out of which the indebtedness arises.

In addition to the foregoing cases decided by the Court of Appeals in New York, we desire also to cite one of the cases relied upon by the Circuit judge for the purpose of extracting from it certain language used by the court, which, we think, more accurately expresses the true rule which should govern in the consideration of questions of this kind than we find anywhere else.

In McDowell v. Daniels, 38 Barb. 143, decided in 1861, the motion was to set aside four judgments upon the ground that the statements were insufficient. In two of the judgments the statements were held to be sufficient, while in the other two they were held to be insufficient. An examination of this case will show the very great extent to which the Supreme Court of that state was disposed to go in exacting the utmost particularity of statement instead of the concise statement required by the code. But even in that case the court lays down the rule in the following language: "Other creditors of Daniels are not obliged to take his statement under oath that the debt is justly due or to become due. They have a right to inquire into the honesty of the defendant and of the transaction. To enable them to do so—to get on the track of the fraud, if there is any—the statute requires the concise statement of the facts. This statement gives enough of the transaction, I think, to enable other creditors of Daniels to inquire into its truthfulness and the honesty of the alleged debt. I do not think it can properly be said that the object of the statute was to compel the debtor to state sufficient of the transaction out of which the indebtedness arose, to enable other creditors to form an opinion, from the facts stated, as to the *integrity of the debtor in confessing the judgment. If the debt is questioned, it is not to be presumed that the creditor questioning it will take the debtor's statement, however full. What the creditor wants, and what, I think, the statute intended he should have, is sufficient of the facts to enable him to inquire into the transaction and to form his opinion of the honesty of the judgment from the facts he shall ascertain."

*65

Testing the case now under consideration by this rule, we think the statement upon which the confession was based, will be found amply sufficient and fully sustained by the more recent decisions in New York. The statement here is: "The said judgment arises from the fact that I am indebted to her on account of the purchase and rentals by me of lands to which she was entitled to an interest as one of the heirs of her father's estate, and also to the interest of her mother therein, which she has transferred to the plaintiff and directed me to pay to her, the same not exceeding the amount aforesaid, and the said amount is now justly due to the plaintiff." Here, then, we have a statement of the amount due, the consideration of the debt, the facts out of which such consideration grew, and that the amount was justly due. What more could be required to make it conform to the statute, which only requires the facts out of which the indebtedness arises to be stated concisely? If, as is contended for, the statement had proceeded to set forth in detail the items going to make up the amount sworn to be justly due, it would have been very far from that concise statement contemplated by the statute. It fixed definitely the amount of the debt, and showed clearly the origin and consideration of the indebtedness, and, in our judgment, nothing more was necessary. Indeed, since we have learned from the evidence in this case that the judgment was taken for a less amount than that ascertained by calculation, and admitted by the debtor to be really due, by way of compromise, it is difficult to conceive how it would have been possible to make a more definite statement. As was well said in McDowell v. Daniels, supra, a creditor who was disposed to question this judgment would not, of course, accept the debtor's statement as correct, even if it had been full to the minutest detail. All he would want to know would be what was claimed *to be the origin and consideration of the debt, and he would inquire for himself into the details. Here he is informed that the debt originated in the fact that the debtor had been using land in which the creditor had an undivided interest, and for which he was liable to pay rent, and in the fact that he had purchased another interest in the same land for which he had not paid the purchase money, and that this purchase money had been assigned to the plaintiff in the judgment. With these facts furnished to him by the statement, the creditor would have it in his power, by his own investigations, to ascertain how much ought to be due, and it is not to be expected that his action in the premises would be influenced by any details that might be contained in the statement, but by the result of his own investigations, which the facts there stated enabled him to institute. If a statement is simply to the effect that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a certain amount, without stating the origin and consideration of the debt, the creditor is furnished with no starting point from which to commence his own investigations, and, therefore, such a statement would be insufficient. But where, as in this case, the origin and consideration of the debt are stated, the creditor is furnished with such starting point and may proceed with his own investigations, and there is no necessity for a detailed statement of the various items going to make up the amount of the indebtedness. We are, therefore, unable to agree with the Circuit judge that the statement in this case was insufficient.

*66

As to the objections to the transcripts of the judgment docketed in the counties of Kershaw and Sumter, we agree with the Circuit judge that the slight discrepancies or minor deficiencies and irregularities of form pointed out, might be amended, and are not sufficient to render them invalid.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the complaint is dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. *67

*(Case No. 1009.)

EVANS v. McLUCAS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Fixtures ⇐35.]

A conveyed to a railroad company a right of way over his land, and afterwards A, B & C, a mercantile firm, erected a guano warehouse upon this right of way, by permission of the railroad company. After that, A conveyed to D land which included within its boundaries the site of the warehouse, but before the recording of D.'s deed, A and B, by deed, sold this building to C, who paid his money, having no knowledge of D's deed. In action brought by D against C for the possession of this warehouse —Held, that the action could not be maintained for the warehouse as a fixture, for fixtures go with the land as an incident, and plaintiff was not entitled to the immediate possession of the land.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Watts v. Blalock, 17 S. C. 162.

For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–79; Dec. Dig. ⇐35.]

[2. Fixtures ⇐35.]

The verdict—we find the fee in land for plaintiff, the house for defendant—was substantially a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 67–79; Dec. Dig. ⇐35.]

[3. Fixtures ⇐23.]

Under the facts of this case the warehouse was personal property and did not become a fixture; the builders could sell it, and plaintiff could not recover it from the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Watts v. Blalock, 17 S. C. 162; Ragsdale v. Southern Ry., 60 S. C. 388, 38 S. E. 609.

For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. ⇐23.]

[4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐239.]

If the warehouse had become a part of the realty, plaintiff could not now recover it; and defendant would be protected as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 583–600; Dec. Dig. ⇐239.]

[5. Fixtures ⇐5.]

[Cited in De Laine v. Alderman, 31 S. C. 274, 9 S. E. 950; Padgett v. Cleveland, 33 S. C. 345, 348, 11 S. E. 1069; Hurst v. Craig Furniture Co., 95 S. C. 228, 78 S. E. 960, to the point that where a chattel is annexed to land, and is used for a purpose distinct from that of the occupier of real estate or for carrying on a trade, it is not considered part of the realty.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. ⇐5.]

Before Wallace, J., Marion, April, 1879.

Action by Eliza J. Evans against John D. McLucas, for the recovery of the possession of a warehouse, and for rents and profits. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Townsend & McKerall, for appellant.

Messrs. Johnson & Johnson, contra.

March 23d, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action "to recover the possession of the S. A. Durham & Co. Warehouse," rents and profits, &c., situated in the town of Marion, within sixty-five feet of the centre of the track of the Wilmington, Columbia and Augusta railroad. William Evans originally owned the land, and he *had conveyed it to the said railroad company as a right of way, in accordance with the terms of the charter of the same, granted in 1846, and which provides as to such right of way, that "the said company shall have good right and title thereto, and shall have, hold and enjoy the same as long as the same may be used only for the purposes of the said road and no longer." 11 Stat. 389.

*68

In 1869 the firm of S. A. Durham & Co., which was composed of S. A. Durham, John D. McLucas and William Evans, were doing a large mercantile business in the town of Marion, and, at the suggestion of William Evans, who owned the fee in the land, they obtained from the railroad company permission to erect a warehouse near the track of the road, for the purpose of receiving directly from the cars and storing guano and other heavy freights. The railroad company concurred in the project, and assisted by transporting lumber to build the house, which cost the firm $450, and was used by them for the purposes indicated.

In 1872 William Evans conveyed to his daughter, Eliza J. Evans, the plaintiff, for life, a tract of land, the boundaries of which included the ground on which the warehouse was built, but no reference to it was made in the deed, which was not recorded until February 8th, 1878, a short time before this action was brought.

In 1873 the firm of S. A. Durham & Co. dissolved and sold all their partnership property, including the warehouse, which was purchased by the defendant, McLucas, at the price of $300, for which he accounted in settlement, and took a deed of conveyance from S. A. Durham and William Evans, the other partners, which declares that "for and in consideration of three hundred dollars to us in hand paid by J. D. McLucas, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, have granted, bargained, sold and released unto the said J. D. McLucas, all and each of our joint and several interest, right and title, to a building known as 'S. A. Durham & Co.'s Guano Warehouse,' * * * together with all the rights and appurtenances thereto in any wise belonging, and we, the said Durham and Evans, for ourselves, our executors, administrators and assigns forever, warrant and de*fend the right, title and interest of the said building unto the said McLucas, his heirs and assigns, against us, our heirs and assigns," &c.

*69

William Evans afterwards died, and Eliza J. Evans brought this action for possession of the warehouse, claiming that as she is owner of the fee under her father's deed to her, she is entitled to the warehouse as an incident of such ownership, notwithstanding the easement of the railroad company in the land. The jury found "fee in land for plaintiff, the house for defendant." The plaintiff excepted to the rulings of the judge, and the appeal comes to this court.

The action was not to recover real estate, but "for the possession of the S. A. Durham & Co. warehouse," rents and profits, &c. An action for the land, or the warehouse as "a fixture" of the land, could not now be maintained by the plaintiff, for the reason that she is not entitled to the immediate possession of the land or anything on it as "a fixture" which, as an incident of the land, goes with it. William Evans, previous to his deed to her, had conveyed the land to the railroad company as a right of way, and she holds her fee subject to this right of the company to the possession and use of it. No action for the land or for possession of the warehouse as an incident to it, is now maintainable by any one except the railroad company, who are in possession for all purposes pertaining to their corporate functions, and likely so to remain in possession for an indefinite period. The railroad company is not here complaining, and we can only regard this an action for the warehouse as personal property. We shall not, therefore, consider more at length the second, third, fourth, sixth and tenth exceptions, which, in different forms, make points relating to the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, which, in the view the court takes, has no proper connection with the case.

The remaining exceptions are as follows:

"1. Because the defendant, in his answer, prayed for no affirmative relief, and the court erred in instructing the jury any could be afforded by their verdict.

"5. Because his Honor erred in instructing the jury that as William Evans originally consented to the erection of the *building on the land in controversy, he being at that time the owner of it, the title to the building vested in the members of the firm of S. A. Durham & Co.

*70

"8. Because his Honor erred in instructing the jury that although the house was a fixture the owner of the fee could sell it."

As to the first exception it is only necessary to say that the title to the land was not in issue by the pleadings, and the verdict is substantially a verdict for the defendant.

As a general rule, all things that are annexed to the land become a part of it, but to this there are exceptions, as where there is a manifest intention to use the alleged fixtures in some employment distinct from that of the occupier of real estate, or where the chattel has been annexed for the purpose of carrying on trade, it is not, in general, considered as part of the realty. In modern times, for the encouragement of trade, many things are now considered as personal property which seem to be attached to the freehold. This is particularly true as between landlord and tenant for years. The tenant may take away chimney pieces or a cider mill and press or pump erected by him on the land. It is well settled under the American decisions that this exception (as to fixtures) extends to houses and other structures of a permanent character, and that they may retain their character of personal property and be the subject of a distinct and independant ownership as chattels, apart from any title in the soil on which they are erected. Carliss v. Hoyt, 19 Conn. 154; 2 Kent 343; 2 Bouv. Inst. 163; [Fairis v. Walker] 1 Bail. 540; 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 747, and authorities cited. For the purposes of this case the owner of the fee may be considered as the landlord, and the railroad company in a position analogous to that of tenant for years, having the right to erect buildings, such as depots connected with their business, without making them fixtures for the benefit of the land-owner. The railroad company having a dominant easement in the soil, erected or consented to have erected upon it a warehouse to facilitate their business as an assistant depot. The owner of the soil has no right to this building, and those who built it might without damaging the land-owner, remove it at *any time if it could be done in such way as not to injure the land itself.

*71

But in addition to this view, from the relations of the parties, it was a question of intention whether the house was to be a fixture for the benefit of the land-owner or personal property. The land-owner may waive the question of fixture, or as stated by the Circuit judge, "sell it." Here all the parties, the railroad company and the owner of the fee, consented to the erection of the warehouse. William Evans consented, indeed assisted in erecting it, without saying anything about an ultimate claim as owner of the fee. He encouraged others to put their money into it. He afterwards joined in the sale, with warranty to the purchaser, receiving his part of the purchase money, and all who claim under him are now estopped from denying that the purchaser has good titles.

"When a person tacitly encourages an act to be done, he cannot afterwards exercise his legal right in opposition to such consent if his conduct or acts of encouragement induce the other party to change his position, so that he will be pecuniarily prejudiced by the assertion of such adverse claim." Swain v. Seamens, 9 Wall. 274 [19 L. Ed. 554]; Bollmann v. Bollmann, 6 S. C. 46. As personal property, the plaintiff is not entitled to the warehouse as an incident to land of which she is not now entitled to the possession. She has no higher rights than her donor, who consented to its erection and afterwards joined in the sale of it as personalty and unaffected by his deed to her. She incurred no expense in building the house, and there is no proof that it injures the soil.

But if the warehouse were realty we do not see how it could benefit the case of the plaintiff. She could not now recover the land to which it is attached. Besides, the deed of plaintiff bears date in 1872, and was not recorded until February 8th, 1878. The defendant's title to the warehouse bears date February 1st, 1873, and was recorded within the same month. The defendant swears that when he purchased he had no notice of the deed to plaintiff or that any claim had been set up in conflict with his own until a short time before suit was brought. The judge having referred the question of notice to the jury, and they, by *their verdict, as we must assume, having found that the defendant had no notice, the deed of plaintiff not having been recorded in the time required by law, and not until after the deed of defendant was recorded, was, as to the defendant, void and incapable of barring his rights under the operation of the recording acts. Gen. Stat. 422; Act 1872, 15 Stat. 5.

*72

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 72

(Case No. 1012.)

JOHNSON v. CLARKE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Payment ⇦67.]

Whether one security operates as payment of another, is always a question of intention, the onus probandi resting upon the party affirming it.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Murray v. Witte, 16 S. C. 516; Union Bank v. Wando Min. & Mfg. Co., 17 S. C. 362; Sullivan v. Sullivan Mfg. Co., 20 S. C. 92; Chalmers v. Turnipseed, 21 S. C. 142; McKibben v. Salinas, 41 S. C. 109, 19 S. E. 302.

For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 162, 189–194, 198; Dec. Dig. ⇦67.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇦848.]

Where the issues in a common law case have been referred to a referee, and his findings have been confirmed by the Circuit Court, this court can consider only questions of law raised by proper exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in In re Solomons' Estate, 74 S. C. 191, 54 S. E. 207.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3372–3376; Dec. Dig. ⇦848.]

[3. Appeal and Error ⇦848.]

Concurrent findings of fact by referee and Circuit judge, in such case, set aside, it appearing that error of law was committed in improperly imposing upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that a second note was given as a substitute and not as a payment.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hall v. Hall, 41 S. C. 167, 19 S. E. 305, 44 Am. St. Rep. 696.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3372–3376; Dec. Dig. ⇦848.]

[4. Appeal and Error ⇦848.]

[Although the issues of law and fact were referred to a referee, that alone does not make it a case in chancery. The case being still a law case, it is the duty of the appellate court to consider only errors of law which may be raised by exception.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3372; Dec. Dig. ⇦848.]

[This case is also cited in Moody v. Southern Ry. Co., 79 S. C. 301, 60 S. E. 711, as to burden of proof.]

Before Mackey, J., Kershaw, September, 1879.

Action by Hampton Johnson and John Johnson, trustees of Isabella Joiner, against T. H. Clarke, as executor of Henry H. Clarke, deceased, and against T. H. Clarke. The judgment demanded was against T. H. Clarke, as executor, &c., to be levied of the goods, &c., of H. H. Clarke, &c., "and if none, then of the further goods, &c., of T. H. Clarke." The case is stated in the opinion.

The Circuit decree, after fully stating the pleadings, evidence, report of referee and the exceptions to the report, continues as follows:

There is no evidence whatsoever to show that the reason that *impelled the plaintiffs to take the new note at the increased rate of interest, was to make "an approximation to the par value of gold and currency." Nor is there any proof that the new note was taken under a clear understanding that it was to stand in lieu of the old note. The witness, John Johnson, states that he was not present when the notes were exchanged between his cotrustee, Hampton Johnson, and the defendant, T. H. Clarke, and he professes to recite only what he heard Hampton Johnson say upon the subject.

*73

As this reported conversation between the plaintiffs is not shown to have been held in the presence of the defendant, T. H. Clarke, it was clearly inadmissible hearsay, and should not have influenced the finding of the referee in any degree. On this point the witness, John Johnson, testifies as follows: "I never spoke to the executor in my life about changing the note; I had no conversation with T. H. Clarke about the matter until recently." This witness further testifies that not until "about the time of the commencement of this action did he claim to the defendant, T. H. Clarke, that the new note was against the estate of H. H. Clarke." The new note matured January 10th, 1873, and this action was commenced March 15th, 1876.

On the contrary, the witness, T. H. Clarke, testifies positively that he substituted his individual note, signed as executor, for the old note of testator; and he states, on cross-examination, that nothing was said by the plaintiff, Hampton Johnson, at the time about defendant, the witness, signing the new note as executor.

The defendant, T. H. Clarke, further testifies, and on this point his testimony is uncontradicted, that the increased rate of interest, from seven to twelve per cent., was the only consideration that induced the plaintiff, Hampton Johnson, to exchange the note of testator for defendant's note.

The testimony of T. H. Clarke upon this point is supported by the further fact in evidence, that at the time he executed the note in question he was known to be abundantly solvent, as evidenced by the plaintiff, Hampton Johnson, lending him the sum of $500 on his note without security. At that date the note of the defendant, T. H. Clarke, was manifestly regarded by the plaintiffs as in every respect as good as the note of the deceased. *and it fully appears from the testimony that it was not urged as a demand upon the testator's estate until the defendant was generally reputed to be financially embarrassed.

*74

Moreover, as every man is presumed to know the law, it must be assumed that the plaintiffs well knew that the defendant, T. H. Clarke, as executor, had no legal power or authority to bind the estate of his testator by increasing the rate of interest of the testator's note from seven to twelve per cent., and thus committing a breach of his trust as executor by charging his estate with a rate of interest which was usurious when testator's note was executed. Had the executor applied any of the assets of the estate to the payment of such usurious note, even though executed by the testator, he would have been guilty of a devastavit, as in the case of a bond ex turpi causa, as well against the legatees as creditors. Vez v. Emery, 5 Ves. 142; Winchcombe v. Bishop of Winchester, Hob. 167; 2 Wms. on Ex'rs 1634, 1635.

The mere circumstance, stated in the second exception, that the defendant about the time he signed the note in question "T. H. Clarke, executor," borrowed money from the plaintiff, Hampton Johnson, and gave another note therefor, which is signed "T. H. Clarke" simply, without the affix "executor," is sufficiently explained in the testimony of the defendant, that there was no agreement that he should sign the new note as executor, and that it was so signed through inadvertence. This circumstance is also fully counterpoised, if it has any weight at all, by the fact that in defendant's letters to the plaintiff, Hampton Johnson, (which letters are adduced in evidence by the plaintiffs,) in reference to giving the note in question for the testator's note, and immediately pending the exchange of notes, defendant signed himself "T. H. Clarke," without the addition of the word "executor."

It may be stated generally, as settled law, that a referee's finding of fact has all the weight of a verdict of a special jury, and should not be disturbed unless clearly against the preponderance of the evidence.

The exceptions to the conclusions of the referee, as to the matters of fact herein, are therefore overruled. The remaining *four exceptions, which relate to the findings of law, may, for the sake of brevity, be considered together.

*75

It is well settled that if a person indebted in one right, in consideration of the forbearance of the creditor promises to pay in another right, this convenience will be a sufficient consideration to maintain an action against him in the latter right. Rann v. Hughes, 7 T. R. 346; Forth v. Stanton, 1 Wms. notes to Saund. 211; Sm. on Cont. *87.

In the case at bar the defendant, T. H. Clarke, as executor, was pressed by importunate creditors of his testator to pay a note with interest, long due. He tendered such assets as he held in payment and they were refused. The creditors were urgent, and insisted that they were entitled to demand gold coin in payment of a note in which it was not expressly stipulated that it should be paid in specie.

That demand was made at a period when a gold famine prevailed in the money markets of the country. The executor tendered in payment the lawful currency of the United States, known as "greenbacks," then as now universally recognized as a legal tender in the commercial world, and so declared by law.

In that conjuncture of the affairs of the estate committed to his charge, the defendant, T. H. Clarke, executor, gave the note which is the subject of this action, and received in exchange therefor testator's past-due note, thereby securing the estate against suit for at least one year.

I am fully warranted by the evidence in holding that this was the consideration which moved the defendant to give the note in question, for the creditors, by refusing the lawful paper currency of the country, and demanding gold coin in payment, thereby virtually declared their purpose to bring suit immediately upon their note if a satisfactory arrangement was not made for its future payment, which arrangement was effected by their receipt of a note bearing nearly double the rate of interest of that on which they were pressing payment so inordinately. There is no doubt that such forbearance on the part of the creditors, in agreeing to accept another note payable at a future day, or the preventing of a suit by giving such note, would be a sufficient consideration to bind the executor individually. The authorities *in support of this view may be multiplied indefinitely. Johnson v. Whichcott, 1 Roll. Ab. 24; Davis v. Reyner, 2 Lev. 8; Goring v. Goring, Yelv. 11; 1 Sid. 89; case of Scott v. Stephens. Says the learned author, Williams on Executors, vol. II., *1614: "If an executor be indebted to J. S. in £100, who demands the money, the executor is chargeable only in respect of assets, and not otherwise; but if he promises to pay the debt at a future day the forbearance is a sufficient consideration, and it becomes his own debt and to be satisfied out of his own estate. Said Chief Justice Hale in the leading case of Homer v. Smith, 2 Lev. 122, 'though a bare accounting by the executor with a creditor of his testator will not bind the executor to pay de bonis propriis, yet a promise in consideration of forbearance will.'"

*76

It now remains to determine whether the defendant, T. H. Clarke, by giving the note described in the complaint, and receiving the testator's note therefor, did discharge the estate from the debt and bind himself individually.

The note given by the said defendant was a sealed note, which itself imports a sufficient consideration. The executor is a trustee for all persons interested in the estate, both creditors and legatees, and the law throws around such estate peculiar safeguards to protect it alike from criminal devastavit and an improvident administration of the trust. Hence, it impresses upon the acts of an executor a certain legal character and effect, of which all must take notice who deal with him in regard to the estate. Creditors of the testator who contract with an executor are assumed in law to do so with full knowledge of the legal limitations upon his powers, and to know when the contract binds the estate of the testator and when it binds only the individual estate of the person who holds the executorship.

On this head the following modern case is of the highest authority, and directly in point. Two executors gave a promissory note, for a debt of the testator, to the plaintiff, in the following words: "As executors to the late T. T., we severally and jointly promise to pay to N. C. the sum of £200 on demand, with lawful interest for the same." The Court of Common Bench held that they were personally liable on the instrument, upon the ground that "the promise, from the circumstance of *interest being added, necessarily imported a payment at a future day; and an executor promising to pay a debt at a future day makes the debt his own." Childs v. Monins, 2 Brod. & B. 460; see, also, 2 Wms. on Ex'rs 1613, and cases there cited. In the case now under consideration the executor not only promised to pay at a future day, but entered into a new contract entirely distinct from that entered into by the testator, and which was forbidden by law at the date of the original contract with deceased; such new contract being in the form of a sealed note, bearing interest at an exorbitant rate, far in excess of what the testator had stipulated to pay.

*77

That a new note without a special contract would not, of itself, discharge the original cause of action, is not denied. "But," says Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cranch 253 [3 L. Ed. 215], "if, by express agreement, the note is received as payment, it satisfied the original contract, and the party receiving it must take his remedy on it." This principle appears to be well settled. The note of one of the parties, or of a third person, may, by agreement, be received in payment. See, also, on this point Lord Kenyon's opinion in Barclay v. Gooch, 2 Esp. 571; Cumming v. Hackley, 8 Johns. 202; Witherby v. Mann, 11 Johns. 518.

I have shown, by the authorities cited, that where an executor gives a note payable at a future day, with interest, he thereby binds himself individually, and it follows that the acceptance of such note by creditors, especially when it varies to their advantage the original contract of testator, imports conclusively an agreement on their part to discharge the estate and hold the executor individually liable. This conclusion is strongly reinforced by the fact that the creditors in this case surrendered the testator's note to the executor, and thus enabled him to legally demand and receive credit therefor in the final settlement of his accounts with testator's estate. But we are not left on this point to depend alone on the legal intendment of the transaction between the plaintiffs and the defendant; for T. H. Clarke, the executor, swears positively, and his testimony on this point is not contradicted by legal evidence, that the plaintiffs agreed to take his "individual note."

*78

*I have fully considered the facts recited in the exceptions, that the defendant, T. H. Clarke, credited himself, in his return as executor, with the full amount of testator's note years before he gave his own note in exchange therefor. This is explained in the testimony, the executor having acted therein under legal advice, which, though erroneous, doubtless seem to be warranted by the fact that he had tendered payment in U. S. currency, which had been positively refused, and he regarded himself as individually responsible therefor, intending to protect the estate at least from any liability on said note; and continuing for several years after his final return to pay the interest upon the same.

However this may be, certainly the surrender by the plaintiffs of testator's note to the defendant, enabled him, as executor, to fully support the credit that he had already received therefor in his final return, and deprived the legatees of any right of action against him to recover the amount so credited.

The exception that the referee should have found the debt and interest due against the defendant, T. H. Clarke, individually, if it was not due by him as executor, does not appear to be tenable. Says Williams on Executors: "A plaintiff cannot have an action against a defendant to charge him as executor, and also in his own right, for the judgment in the one case is de bonis testatoris, and in the other de bonis propriis. And such misjoinder of action, as well against an executor as by him, is a defect in substance, and, consequently, bad on a general demurrer or in arrest of judgment, or on error." 2 Wms. on Ex'rs *1754; Jennings v. Newman, 4 T. R. 347; Brigden v. Parkes, 2 Bos. & P. 424.

The exceptions to the referee's findings of law are overruled.

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the report of the referee be confirmed, and stand as the judgment of this court; and that the complaint herein be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to this court.

Argument of the late William M. Shannon was submitted in behalf of the appellants.

*79

*Messrs. Chestnut & Workman, contra.

March 25th, 1880. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action on a note for $1200, given to the plaintiffs as trustees, January 10th, 1872, and signed T. H. Clarke, executor. The note was given under the following circumstances: Henry H. Clarke, in his lifetime, borrowed money from the plaintiffs, as trustees, and gave them his note for the amount, $1200. H. H. Clarke afterwards died, leaving a will, of which T. H. Clarke is the only qualified executor, who made payments of the annual interest on the note for years. The endorsement of the numerous payments covered the back of the note, leaving no room for other credits, and, in 1872, as stated, the note sued on was given. The question was, whether the new note was a payment and satisfaction of the old note against the estate of H. H. Clarke, or was a mere substitution. By consent the case was referred to W. Z. Leitner, Esq., as special referee, who heard the testimony and reported that, in his judgment, the new note was taken in satisfaction of the old note, which was given up; that it was the individual note of T. H. Clarke, and that the estate of H. H. Clarke was discharged.

The Circuit judge confirmed the report, and from his judgment the appeal comes to this court upon the following, among other, exceptions:

"1. That his Honor erred in the statement of the evidence, as reported by the referee, and especially in this, that the consideration for the exchange of notes was only the increase of interest, when the whole evidence and the statement of the witness, and defendant, Clarke, himself, states that the note was full of credits, and that one credit on the old note had to be written on a separate paper.

"That the signature of the defendant, as executor, was an inadvertence instead of a thoughtful act, showing that it was a debt of the estate, and his signing his own note in his own name, about the same time, is pregnant with proof of his intention.

"2. That his Honor erred in law in holding that the mere surrender of the note was equivalent to payment: that it was necessary for plaintiffs to show that there was an express agree*ment that the new note was given as and for a continuation of the old debt by testator. Payment is an affirmative proposition, and the burden of proof rests on the party pleading it."

*80

The main question involved was one of fact: whether by the change of the old note for the new the parties intended to pay and discharge the old note, which was a debt of the estate of the testator, H. H. Clarke, and to take instead the individual note of T. H. Clarke, the executor. Whether one security operates in payment and satisfaction of another, is always a question of intention. Burton v. Pressly, Cheves' Eq. 1; Costelo v. Cave & Bradley, 2 Hill 528 [27 Am. Dec. 404]; Adger v. Pringle, 11 S. C. 527, and authorities cited. Upon the question of intention, there is not much testimony. Hampton Johnson and T. H. Clarke, the executor, made the exchange. Johnson is now dead, and the defendant, T. H. Clarke, is the only living witness of the transaction.

It is not within the province of this court to review the whole case and decide as to the weight of testimony. Although the issues of law and fact were referred to a referee, that alone does not make this a "case in chancery." It is still a law case, and, therefore, it is the duty of this court to consider only errors of law which may be raised by exceptions. This court always hesitates to set aside the judgment of the Circuit Court when it concurs upon facts with the report of the referee. Yet this rule, properly understood, only applies where the facts have been considered upon proper issues, and especially in regard to the burden of proof. It does not apply when there has been error of law in the manner in which the facts were considered as bearing upon the proper issues in the case. The defence of the defendant amounts to the plea of payment and satisfaction, and, as in all other cases, he who affirms must prove. The onus of proof was upon the defendant to maintain his plea. As the court say in the case of Adger v. Pringle, before cited, "whether the debt of the ancestor is discharged by the bond of the heirs, is a question of fact depending upon intention. It is not payment unless so accepted by the creditor, and the burden of proof is upon the party affirming it." The referee held and the Circuit judge sustained him, as follows:

*81

*"The fact that the new note was signed by T. H. Clarke, as executor, does not, of itself, bind the estate of H. H. Clarke, deceased. It could, at best, be regarded only as a link in the chain of evidence to show that the new note was intended as a substitute for the old. But this is destroyed by the fact that the old note was delivered up; the further fact that there was no express understanding that the new should stand for the old, and the still further fact that the new note was based upon a new and distinct consideration."

As we understand it, this substantially affirms the proposition that it was necessary for the plaintiffs to show that there was "an express understanding" that the new note was intended as a substitute for the old note, and that, having failed to do so, judgment for the defendant must follow. This is the reason of the rule, as we understand it. The plaintiffs stood upon their note, and the defendant, whose defence was payment and satisfaction, should have shown affirmatively that the new note was intended to be and was actually received in payment and satisfaction. This might be shown by facts and circumstances, as well as by positive proof. The only witness to the transaction now living, T. H. Clarke, does not say that was the understanding and agreement of the parties. He says "he does not recollect that Mr. Hampton Johnson, in express words, spoke of the substituted note as a release of the original note." There is no positive proof upon the subject. The circumstances under which the new note was given—the cause which made it necessary—the identity of the amount, $1200—the fact that defendant signed as executor, when, about the same time, he signed his own note for borrowed money in his own name without adding executor—his own statement that the note signed by him as executor "was substituted in lieu of the original note," all tend to negative the affirmative allegation which it was incumbent on the defendant to establish. In looking over the testimony we see no fact in the case tending to show that payment was intended, except, perhaps, the change in the rate of interest, from seven to twelve per cent., and this is referred to in the first letter, January 6th, 1872, which the defendant wrote to one of the plaintiffs upon the subject of giving the new note, in these terms: "I will come up to your house *and pay the balance of the interest and change the note to twelve per cent."

*82

We think the onus of proof was on the defendant, and the case should be remanded to the Circuit Court for a new trial, and it is so ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 82

(Case No. 1013.)

HUFF v. WATKINS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Master and Servant ⇦336.]

Under a contract by which the services of an agricultural laborer are to be compensated by a share of the crop made, but he is to work under the exclusive direction of the employer, who is to have the entire control of the laborer's time and services, the relation of master and servant exists, and the master may maintain an action against one who, with knowledge of the prior contract, employs such servant.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Kennedy v. Reames, 15 S. C. 551; Huff v. Watkins, 18 S. C. 511, 512; Carpenter v. Strickland, 20 S. C. 4; Richey & Miller v. Du Pre, Id. 11; Loveless v. Gilliam, 70 S. C. 392, 50 S. E. 9.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1281; Dec. Dig. ⇦336.]

2. Burgess v. Carpenter, 2 S. C. 7 [16 Am. Rep. 643] distinguished and explained.

[3. Jury ⇦135.]

A juror called in place of one removed for cause from the panel presented, may not be peremptorily challenged.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Gunter v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 15 S. C. 443, 448, 449; Burckhalter v. Coward, 16 S. C. 444; Ward v. Charleston City Ry., 19 S. C. 524, 45 Am. Rep. 794.

For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 606; Dec. Dig. ⇦135.]

4. Kleinback ads. State, 2 Speers 418, and Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. 184, recognized and followed.

[This case is also cited in Whaley v. Jacobson & Son, 21 S. C. 54; Charles v. Byrd, 29 S. C. 552, 8 S. E. 1, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Wallace, J., Newberry, February, 1880.

Action commenced May 16th, 1879, by William T. Huff against William Watkins, for $1000 damages for employing Jordan Butler, a servant of plaintiff, under the contract stated in the opinion, the defendant having knowledge of this contract.

At the trial the presiding judge asked if either party had objection to any of the jury presented. The plaintiff's counsel announced that they had none; the defendant's counsel announced that he had no personal objection to any of the jurors, but suggested that if any one of them was related to either party to the suit, by blood or marriage, he should be withdrawn therefrom. Thereupon one juror announced that he was connected with the *plaintiff by marriage. The judge then directed him to withdraw. He did so, no objection thereto being made by plaintiff or his counsel. Then another juror was called in his stead. This juror was objected to by plaintiff's counsel peremptorily. The judge ruled that the plaintiff had no such right of challenge. The plaintiff excepted to the ruling.

*83

Under the charge of the presiding judge the jury found a verdict for defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

[For subsequent opinions, see 18 S. C. 510; 20 S. C. 477; 25 S. C. 243.]

Mr. L. W. Simkins, for appellant.

Butler was a servant. Reeve's Dom. Rel. 482; Schouler on Dom. Rel. 599; Wood on Mast. & Serv. 2, 461; 107 Mass. 555; 70 N. C. 601; 16 Am. Rep. 780; 43 Ga. 331, 601. Defendant, having notice of this relation, is liable for damages. 1 Chit. Bl. 427, note 20; 2 Esp. 646; 1 Pars. on Cont., § 532, note F; 1 Wait's Act. & Def. 407; 2 Add. on Torts, § 1272; Wood on Mast. & Serv. 464. Plaintiff was entitled to his challenge. Gen. Stat. 523, §§ 25, 26.

Mr. J. F. J. Caldwell, contra.

In the matter of the challenge, the Circuit judge ruled correctly. 2 Rich. 184; 2 Spears 418. Butler and the plaintiffs were partners. Pars. on Part. 6, 54, 55; 45 N. Y. 797; 58 Id. 272; 4 Rich. 312; 2 H. Bl. 235; 6 Serg. & R. 259. Butler was certainly not a servant. Wood on Mast. & Serv. 1–3; 2 S. C. 7.

Mr. T. S. Moorman, in reply.

March 29th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This was an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant for enticing one Jordan Butler, who had been employed by the plaintiff as a farm laborer, to leave the employment of the plaintiff. The contract under which the said Butler, with the other farm laborers, had been employed, was not in writing, but is stated in the "case" as follows: "About the first of January, 1879, the plaintiff contracted with Jordan Butler and other persons to work his land during *the year. The plaintiff was to furnish the land, stock and farming implements, and to feed the stock, and to have the entire control of their time and services, and they to have therefor one-half of the crop that remained, after first deducting one bale of cotton, twenty bushels of corn and two hundred bundles of fodder to each horse; and that in consideration therefor they were to work under his exclusive direction and control from sun to sun, and do all things necessary for making and gathering a crop; also, that, in consideration that Jordan Butler agreed to assist the plaintiff in securing laborers and to take the lead in the work, the plaintiff agreed to pay him one bale of cotton extra."

*84

The Circuit judge charged the jury that under the terms of said contract the relation of master and servant did not exist between the plaintiff and Butler, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover; to which charge exception was duly taken. The plaintiff requested the judge to charge the jury that the rule of law giving a remedy for employing the servant of another after notice, is not confined to menial servants, "but extends to all cases where the person is employed to give his exclusive personal service for a given time under the direction of an employer, who is injured by the wrongful act." This the judge refused to do, except with the qualification that it only extends to persons so employed for hire or wages of a definite sum. To this also exception was duly taken.

Most of the points presented in the argument here, have, in our judgment, been definitely settled by the decision of this court in the case of Daniel v. Swearengen, 6 S. C. 297 [24 Am. Rep. 471], and we deem it unnecessary to add anything to what is there said as to these points. In that case it was held: First. That the relation of master and servant exists in this state as at common law. Second. That to constitute such relation it is not necessary that there should be a contract in writing. Third. That one who contracts as a farm laborer may come within the class of servants, menial service not being essential to place one in that class. Fourth. That the statutes of this state do not prescribe the only mode of redress where one entices or persuades a servant to leave the employment of his master, but that in such cases, as at common law, the master is entitled to his action for damages. It did not *appear, however, in that case whether the servants, who were there alleged to have been enticed away from their master's service, had been employed under a contract to pay them a stipulated sum of money as hire or wages, or whether, as in this case, their compensation was to be a certain proportion of the crop made. That case, therefore, furnishes no authority as to the main question presented by this appeal, which is, whether a farm laborer who is employed under a contract by which his services are to be compensated by a share of the crop, and not by a stipulated sum of money, can be regarded as a servant. It would seem, at the very outset, that the manner in which compensation is to be made ought not to have any effect in determining the nature of the relation. Where one person has agreed to give his entire time to the service of another, working under his exclusive direction and control, certainly the manner in which payment for such service is to be made cannot have any effect in fixing the relation of the parties. That must depend upon the nature of the service required by the contract, whether it is exclusively under the direction or control of the employer, or, to some extent, optional or discretionary with the employé, and whether the whole or only a part of his time is to be devoted to the service of the employer. Here the contract required the laborers to work the land of the plaintiff "under his exclusive direction and control, from sun to sun," and gave him "the entire control of their time and services." It would be difficult to conceive what form of contract would create the relation of master and servant if this does not. If, where one binds himself, by contract, to devote his entire time, for a limited period, to the service of another, and to work under the exclusive direction and control of such other person, the relation of master and servant does not arise, we confess we are unable to see what form of contract would be sufficient for the purpose. The fact that, as an incentive, perhaps, to diligent and faithful work, the compensation of the laborer is not a fixed and definite sum of money, but is made to depend upon the amount of the proceeds of his labor, cannot change the relation in which the employé has voluntarily placed himself toward his employer. It certainly cannot, as has been argued, convert the relation into that of partners or joint owner *of the crop. Until the crop is divided it belongs to the employer, and all that the laborer is entitled to is in the nature of a chose in action—a right to demand compensation for his labor, which, by the agreement, is to be measured by the amount of the crop made. Rogers v. Collier, 2 Bail. 581 [23 Am. Dec. 153]; State v. Gay, 1 Hill 364; Holcombe v. Townsend, 1 Hill 399. The doctrine established by these cases seems to be recognized in the statute passed for the protection of laborers. General Statutes, Chapter CIII., Section 11, page 491, which provides that: "Whenever laborers are working on shares of crop or crops, or for wages in money or other valuable consideration, they shall have a prior lien upon said crop or crops in whosoever hands it may be," for if the laborer was regarded as part owner of the crop, either as partner or otherwise, it would be altogether inconsistent to speak of giving him a lien upon what belonged to him. It is true this section proceeds to provide that: "Such of the crop or crops to them [the laborers] belonging, or such amount of money or other valuable consideration due, shall be recoverable by an action in any court of competent jurisdiction." But this language, to make it consistent with the preceding language of the same section, as well as with the provisions of the preceding section, must be construed as applying only, after the division of the crop has been made, and the portion to which the laborers are entitled, has been ascertained in the manner provided for in the tenth section.

*85

*86

The case of Burgess v. Carpenter, 2 S. C. 7 [16 Am. Rep. 643], is not in conflict with these views, because, although the Circuit judge, in that case, did rest his decision upon the ground that a contract to pay a laborer for his services by giving him a share of the crop, constitutes the laborer a partner and not a servant, the Supreme Court did not place its decision upon any such ground, but upon the ground that the common law gave no right of action to the master for any injury done to the servant, except where the servant was a menial one, and as the employé, whose status was there in question, was an agricultural laborer and not a menial servant, the action could not be maintained by the employer. This view, as we have seen, has been repudiated in the subsequent case of Daniel v. Swearengen, supra. It is true that *Moses, C. J., in the latter part of his opinion, where he is attempting to reconcile the case of Daniel v. Swearengen with the previous case of Burgess v. Carpenter, does say that the decision in the latter may be supported upon the ground that the nature of the contract between the employer and the employee, in that case, gave rise to the partnership relation and not to the relation of master and servant. But in addition to the fact of this being a mere dictum, it is very obvious that the Chief Justice entirely misrepresents the decision in Burgess v. Carpenter, in stating as the material ground of that decision, not the ground upon which the majority of the court rested its decision, but the ground upon which the Circuit judge based his conclusion, which seems to have been the ground upon which the minority of the court rested the separate opinion. For it is quite clear that the Circuit judge, in Burgess v. Carpenter, based his conclusion solely upon the ground "that the contract to pay Henry Burgess a share in the crop made him a copartner and not a servant," and if the majority of the Supreme Court endorsed that view, it would have been very natural for them to have said so, as that would have been conclusive of the case. But, on the contrary, we find nothing of the kind in the opinion of the majority of the court, but we do find there an argument to show that the master's right of action only arose where the servant injured was a menial servant, and the conclusion is drawn that "Henry Burgess being exclusively concerned in the cultivation of the soil and proceeds arising therefrom, and there being no domestic caste in the nature of his service, [which seem to have been regarded in the cases cited as a test of menial service,] he does not fall within the class to which the term 'servant' can, in any sense, be applied." We do not think that this dictum in the case of Daniel v. Swearengen, even were it better supported, is sufficient to overthrow the authority of the cases of Rogers v. Collier, State v. Gay and Holcombe v. Townsend, supra, especially when we find that the principle established by those cases has been recognized, impliedly at least, by the legislature in the statute for the protection of laborers, as we have previously shown. We think, therefore, that there was error in the charge to the jury in this case, as well as in the refusal to charge as requested.

*87

*88

*The only remaining question is, whether the Circuit judge erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff to challenge a juror peremptorily who had been drawn to fill the place of a juror removed for cause. The ruling of the Circuit judge is fully sustained by the case of Kleinback ads. State,† 2 Speers 418 which was an action of debt for a penalty imposed by an ordinance of the city council of Charleston, and by the case of Durant v. Ashmore, 2 Rich. 184. The case of State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195, being a criminal case, does not apply.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is set aside, and a new trial is ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

† In the second edition of Speers, the title of this case is City Council of Charleston v. Kleinback.

---

15 S. C. 88

(Case No. 1015.)

FLENNIKEN v. SCRUGGS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Chattel Mortgages ⇐219.]

A being indebted to B by note, secured by a mortgage of a mare, dated April 24th, obtained the verbal permission of B to exchange with C the mare for a mule, provided A should give to B a lien on the mule. The exchange was made May 4th (the condition of the mortgage being then broken,) but C had no knowledge of the mortgage or of the verbal permission. This mortgage was recorded May 24th. A never gave the lien to B, and the mule died. Held, that B was not entitled to recover from C the possession of the mare.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 473; Dec. Dig. ⇐219.]

[2. Trial ⇐234.]

The Circuit judge instructed the jury that if they believed the testimony they must find for defendant. There being no conflict of testimony, this instruction was free from error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 534–538, 566; Dec. Dig. ⇐234.]

[This case is also cited in McClendon v. Wells, 20 S. C. 520; Martin v. Jenkins, 51 S. C. 41, 27 S. E. 947, as to the rights of mortgagees after condition broken.]

Before Hudson, J., Fairfield, September, 1880.

This was an action commenced in June, 1880, by David R. Flenniken to recover from

*89

Clough H. Scruggs a bay mare, of *the value of $150, and for $100, his damages. To the full statement made in the opinion of this court, it is deemed proper to add only the terms of the agreement of April 24th, signed and sealed by D. S. Carter, which was as follows:

"Received this 24th day of April, A. D. 1880, of D. R. Flenniken, permission to trade one bay mare mule, which he has a mortgage on, for one bay mare belonging to F. Elder. The claim on the mule to be transferred to the mare—the said described property to be delivered to the aforesaid D. R. Flenniken or order, whenever demanded. And I hereby agree and bind myself to keep the said property in my possession, subject to the order of said D. R. Flenniken, and pay the full value of same if lost, by death or otherwise.

"Witness my hand and seal the day and year above named."

Verdict for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. J. H. Rion, for appellant.

After condition broken, the mortgagee of a chattel is not absolute owner until foreclosure or its equivalent, but he has a right to the actual possession and control of the property for the purpose of subjecting it to the satisfaction of the debt. Such is the modern doctrine. Herm. on Chat. Mort., §§ 96, 194; Rice's Eq. 300; 1 Strob. Eq. 342; 2 S. C. 283. Carter could sell without plaintiff's permission; but he wanted to have the mortgage lien released. This plaintiff consented to do, only upon a condition which was not fulfilled. Defendant not knowing of this agreement, has not been prejudiced by it. And this agreement could not be carried out, because there was a mortgage to Elliott covering the mare. Unless plaintiff was absolute owner, Carter cannot be called plaintiff's agent.

Mr. A. M. Mackey, contra.

March 29th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. The object of this action was to recover the possession of a certain bay mare found in the possession of the defendant. It seems that one Carter, being indebted to the *plaintiff in the sum of $700, on February 15th, 1878, gave his note to the plaintiff for the said amount, payable on November 1st, 1878, and, to secure the payment thereof, executed a mortgage to Flenniken upon various articles of personal property, amongst which was a certain mule. Carter, wishing to trade this mule, applied for and obtained permission from the plaintiff to do so, and on April 10th, 1880, traded the mule to one Elder for a mare, and on April 24th, 1880, he executed to the plaintiff an instrument in writing in the nature of a mortgage on the mare last mentioned, which instrument was recorded on May 24th, 1880. After the date of this instrument and before it was recorded, to wit, on May 4th, 1880, Carter again wishing to trade, swapped the mare to defendant for a mule, having previously applied for and obtained verbal permission from the plaintiff to do so, upon the condition that he "should give the plaintiff a lien on the mule received for the mare," which he never did. This mule died, but at what time is not stated in the "case," and the plaintiff finding defendant in possession of the mare in question, made a demand for her. Defendant at first agreed to give her up, but after taking legal advice he declined to do so, when this action was brought. It also appeared that the mule traded by defendant to Carter was under mortgage to one Elliott to indemnify him as endorser for defendant, but that when defendant found that the mare which he had obtained from Carter was claimed by the plaintiff, he gave Elliott additional security or indemnity. There was no evidence that defendant knew of the mortgage on the mare at the time he traded for her, or of the condition upon which Carter had obtained permission from plaintiff to make the trade.

*90

The Circuit judge charged the jury, among other things: First. "That when there is a breach of the condition of a mortgage of personal property, the article mortgaged becomes the absolute property of the mortgagee, the possession of the mortgagor being thence merely permissive." Second. That if "the jury believe that the mare was transferred by Carter to Scruggs with Mr. Flenniken's permission, all Mr. Flenniken's right, title and interest in the mare became, upon the consummation of such trade, wholly gone, and he cannot now go upon this defend*ant for the mare." Third. That the plaintiff "allowed Carter, as his agent, to make the trade, and if the agent made a bad trade, whether it arose from defect of title or any other cause, it was Mr. Flenniken's misfortune, and he alone must bear the loss." Fourth. That "the mare became released from any lien upon the exchange," made with defendant. Fifth. That as plaintiff "never had manual possession * * * Scruggs' legal rights remained unaffected by his promise made under a mistake." Sixth. That as there was no conflict of testimony in the case, "if the jury believe the testimony their verdict must be for the defendant." To these several points in the charge exceptions were duly taken as the foundation of this appeal.

*91

Without undertaking to discuss the various exceptions, seriatim, we propose to consider and determine what we understand to be the real questions fairly arising upon the record. Whether it is true as an abstract proposition that the mortgagee of personal property becomes the absolute owner, in the strict sense of that term, after condition broken, may, doubtless, well be questioned, but there can be no doubt that, after condition broken, the mortgagee may seize and sell the mortgaged property in satisfaction of his debt, and there is as little doubt that, while a public sale is the proper mode, yet, with the consent of the mortgagor, he may sell at private sale, and if he can do this, he, certainly, may authorize the mortgagor himself to sell or otherwise dispose of the mortgaged property free from the lien of the mortgage. For these purposes the mortgagee, after condition broken, has all the rights of the absolute owner, and this is, manifestly, what the charge of the judge, properly construed, means. Here the undisputed testimony showed that Carter, the mortgagor, was authorized by the plaintiff, the mortgagee, to trade the animal in question, and when such trade was consummated it was unquestionably true, as the jury were instructed, that all the plaintiff's right, title and interest in the mare was gone, and, therefore, he could not recover in this action. The only persons who had any interest of any kind in the mare were Carter and Flenniken, and if Carter, by Flenniken's consent, traded the mare to the defendant, the rights of both Carter and Flenniken would pass to the defendant, and his right would thereby become indisputable.

It is said, however, that Flenniken's permission to Carter to *trade the mule was conditional, and that the condition was never complied with. To say nothing of the fact that Scruggs was ignorant of any such condition, it will be sufficient to say that the condition upon which the permission to trade was given was of such a character that it could not possibly be performed until after the trade was consummated. The condition was that Carter should give Flenniken a lien on the mule obtained in exchange for the mare, and this he certainly could not do until after the trade was made and the right to the property had passed. Surely the failure of Carter to comply with a private agreement made with Flenniken cannot have the effect of divesting the rights which Scruggs had previously acquired. Suppose, after the trade had been consummated, the mule had been accidentally killed while in the possession of Carter on his way home, before he had an opportunity of giving the lien to Flenniken, would it be said that the effect of this should be to divest Scruggs of his right to the mare which he had acquired by the exchange? Or, suppose that Flenniken had authorized Carter to sell the mare upon condition that he should apply the purchase money in a certain way, could it be said that it was the duty of the purchaser to see that the purchase money was properly applied? If, in the case supposed, Carter should, through fraud, fail to apply the purchase money as directed, whereby loss ensued, could it for a moment be said that such loss should fall upon the innocent purchaser, ignorant of any such private instruction to the agent, or would it not fall upon him who had put it in the power of Carter to commit such fraud. We are unable, therefore, to see how the first four exceptions can be sustained.

*92

The fifth exception does not seem to be relied upon in appellant's argument here, and, manifestly, cannot be sustained.

The sixth exception has not been urged, and cannot be sustained. There being no conflict in the testimony, and the rights of the parties depending solely upon the application of principles of law applicable to the undisputed facts, there was, certainly, no error in saying to the jury that if they believed the testimony the verdict should be for the defendant.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. *93

*(Case No. 1016.)

THOMSON v. SEXTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Trial ⟸251.]

Error may be committed in charging a correct principle of law as governing a case, where such principle is inapplicable to the issues on trial.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Draffin v. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co., 34 S. C. 467, 13 S. E. 427.

For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 587–595; Dec. Dig. ⟸251.]

[2. Sales ⟸343, 344.]

That a sound price warrants a sound commodity is a correct rule, but does not apply where the defendant, after trial of a cotton gin, and with full knowledge of its defects, gave his note for a price agreed upon, relying upon the promise of plaintiff to repair the machine.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Sullivan v. Huff, 24 S. C. 354.

For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 948; Dec. Dig. ⟸343, 344.]

Before Thomson, J., Spartanburg, October, 1879.

Action upon sealed note by H. H. Thomson against F. M. Sexton, commenced January 28th, 1878. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. S. R. Thomson, for appellant.

Messrs. Bobo & Carlisle, contra.

March 30th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. This action was brought to recover the balance due on a note, under seal, for $133.60, dated February 1st, 1876, and payable one day after date, upon which there was a payment by defendant on March 15th, 1876, of $36.60. The defence set up by the answer was that the note was given under the following circumstances: "That in 1875 defendant had contracted with plaintiff to purchase a cotton gin for $207; that plaintiff then furnished him with an old gin to be used without charge until a new gin arrived; that defendant used old gin during the winter of 1875 and 1876; that about January 1st, 1876, defendant paid plaintiff $60; that in February, 1876, defendant offered plaintiff to return old gin to him and let him keep the $60, and end the matter; that plaintiff refused, but promised, at next fall, to send a party to fix up the gin to *defendant's satisfaction, and would deduct $30, or that plaintiff would send and let him have new gin; that defendant thereupon paid $30 and gave his obligation as alleged in complaint; that plaintiff never sent any one to fix up the gin." At the trial the plaintiff testified that he had agreed in 1876 to furnish defendant a new gin; that in February, 1876, defendant agreed to take the gin first furnished, which was nearly new and a good gin; that a settlement of accounts was then had for the gin and belting furnished, and defendant thereupon gave the note upon which this action was brought, and that it was his custom to send out his machinist to fix up gins sold by him, and he would have done so for defendant if defendant had asked him. Defendant testified to the effect set forth in his answer; that the pinion of the gin was worn; that it was not worth more than the money he had already paid on it; that after using it a short time he laid the gin aside and used his old gin that he had been using for years, and has not used the gin he received from plaintiff since; that he gave his note to plaintiff under the distinct understanding that plaintiff would send a machinist to repair the gin to defendant's satisfaction the following autumn or send him a new gin; that the machinist never came to repair the gin, and a new one was never tendered. He also stated that he had "tendered back the gin before the note was given, but not afterwards, until February, 1878," which seems to have been after this action was commenced, as it is stated in the "case" that the summons and complaint were served January 28th, 1878. The defendant also introduced several witnesses who testified to the same effect as to the value of the gin, some of them saying that the gin was not worth $50. The plaintiff, in reply, introduced testimony that the gin was a valuable one, and could be repaired at a very small expense.

*94

The Circuit judge charged the jury "that the rule was that a sound price warranted a sound commodity, and that if the gin sold to defendant was worth no more than had already been paid for it, then the jury should find for the defendant." The jury having found for the defendant the plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which motion was refused, "on the grounds that, although a new contract might have been made in which the *defects of the gin had been considered, yet the rule that a sound price warrants a sound commodity, was the rule by which the case should be governed, and that if the jury believed the statement of the defendant, the verdict could be upheld on the ground that plaintiff had received already the value of the gin." Exceptions having been duly taken to the charge, as well as to the refusal of the motion for a new trial, the case is now brought here by appeal based on these exceptions.

*95

It is undoubtedly true, as a general proposition of law, that a sound price requires a sound commodity, but the real question raised by this appeal is, whether this proposition of law is applicable to the facts of this case. Error may be committed not only by laying down to the jury incorrect general principles of law, but also by applying correct principles of law to cases in which they are not properly applicable. The maxim of the civil law that a sound price calls for a sound commodity, which has been adopted in this state, applies to cases where the defect in the thing sold was unknown to the purchaser at the time of the sale, or where, by fraud or misrepresentation, the purchaser is misled as to the character, extent or probable consequences of the defect known to him at the time of the sale. The object of the rule formulated in this maxim, is to protect the purchaser against latent defects and against fraud and circumvention, and it was never designed to enable persons to get rid of injudicious contracts fairly made, under a full knowledge of all the circumstances relating to the subject matter of such contracts. Whitefield v. McLeod, 2 Bay 384 [1 Am. Dec. 650]; Rose & Rogers v. Beatie, 2 N. & McC. 540; Watson v. Boatwright, 1 Rich. 404; Wood v. Ashe, 3 Strob. 71. Even in the case of Barnard v. Yates, 1 N. & McC. 148, where the rule has been carried as far as, perhaps, in any other case, Gantt, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says, in speaking of this rule, that it "can have no application or bearing where the buyer is correctly informed of the true nature and quality of the thing purchased, whatever may be its defects, or whatever the price agreed to be paid for it." Now, in this case, the defect in the gin was well known to the purchaser at the time he made the contract sued upon—perhaps better known to him than to the vendor, as he had been using the gin for the *season immediately preceding—and the only defect mentioned in the testimony—the wearing of the pinion—was, according to the testimony, slight, and could have been repaired "at a very small expense." It seems to us, therefore, that the maxim that a sound price warrants a sound commodity, had no application to the case made, and that the Circuit judge erred in instructing the jury that the case should be governed by that rule, and that if the gin sold to defendant was worth no more than had already been paid for it, then the jury should find for the defendant. Such an instruction afforded the jury an opportunity to substitute their own estimate, based upon the testimony in the case, of the value of the gin, for that fixed by the agreement of the parties; and it may be that the jury concluded that the price agreed upon by the parties was too large. Be that as it may, however, the testimony shows that the defendant agreed to give a certain price for the gin, knowing at the time of the defect in it, and relied upon the agreement of the plaintiff to have such defect repaired. If the plaintiff failed to do so, then all that the defendant could require would be to be allowed a discount for so much as such repairs would cost, and the plaintiff would be entitled to judgment for the balance of the price agreed upon, whether that price be larger or smaller than what the jury might believe the article was really worth. Suppose the parties had fixed upon $150 as the value of the gin with the defect repaired, and that the cost of such repairs would be $10, then, according to the contract, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the difference—$140. But if the jury, as they may have done under the charge of the judge, substituted their own estimate of the value of the gin for that agreed upon by the parties, and, adopting the views of some of the witnesses, had fixed the value at $50, then the plaintiff could only recover $40.

*96

When parties make a contract in which there is no fraud—and there is none charged here—they must be held to the contract as they have made it, and cannot be allowed to ask a jury to make one for them. The defendant, knowing of the defect in the gin, agreed to give a certain price for it, relying upon the agreement of the plaintiff to have such defect repaired, and he must be held to his part of the contract as he made it, for he took *no steps to rescind the contract, even if, under the circumstances, he would have had the right to do so, until after this action was commenced; and if the plaintiff has failed to perform his part of the contract by having the defect repaired, then the defendant would be entitled to a discount to the amount of the cost of such repairs.

*97

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and a new trial is ordered.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 97

(Case No. 1017.)

ASHLEY v. HOLMAN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Insane Persons ⇨42, 92.]

If the committee of a lunatic become chargeable for profit made to himself by the labor of such lunatic, and then die, the succeeding committee may bring action against the executors of the deceased committee for an account of such profits, without joining the lunatic as a party.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cathcart v. Sugenheimer, 18 S. C. 131; Barnwell v. Marion, 54 S. C. 232, 32 S. E. 313.

For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 66, 161; Dec. Dig. ⇨ 42, 92.]

[2. Insane Persons ⇨48.]

The care of the persons and property of lunatics has always been in this state a branch of equity jurisdiction, and not a duty imposed upon the Chancellor apart from his powers as a judge of the Court of Equity.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cathcart v. Sugenheimer, 18 S. C. 127.

For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 75; Dec. Dig. ⇨48.]

[3. Insane Persons ⇨42, 89.]

An order of the Court of Equity appointing a committee for a lunatic and authorizing the committee to retain the entire annual interest of the lunatic's estate for his support and maintenance, is no bar to an action to require the committee to account for profit subsequently made to himself by the labor of his ward.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. §§ 66, 152; Dec. Dig. ⇨42, 89.]

[4. Insane Persons ⇨74.]

Although one non compos mentis cannot assent to a contract, yet the law raises an obligation on the part of a person benefited by the services of a lunatic to pay for such services; and upon this obligation an action may be maintained in the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 127; Dec. Dig. ⇨74.]

Before Pressley, J., Barnwell, June, 1880.

Action commenced April 13th, 1880, by Joseph Ashley as committee of William Ashley, the younger, a person of unsound mind, against William A. Holman and William A. Bailey, as executors of the will of William

*98

Ashley, the elder, deceased. *The complaint alleged that William Ashley, the younger, was adjudged a lunatic by the Court of Equity, in October, 1854, and that in February, 1855, his father, William Ashley, the elder, was, by an order of said court, appointed committee of the lunatic's estate, which, "having been reported as of the value of $2000," derived by inheritance from his grandfather's estate, "it was provided in said order of appointment, that the annual interest thereon, or one hundred and forty dollars, be allowed said committee yearly, for the support and maintenance of said ward;" that this estate passed into the committee's hands; and that in his returns for twenty years he charged himself with $140, received as interest, and credited himself with $140, paid for support and maintenance, but did not charge himself with any sum for the labor of his ward, which had been regularly rendered by the lunatic to his committee, and was of the full yearly value of $200; that the father died in 1879, and the defendants became the executors of his will; and that in April, 1879, the plaintiff was appointed the committee of the lunatic, and had received from the defendants the $2000, the original estate, but had received nothing on account of the profits realized by the testator from his son's labor and services. Judgment was demanded for the sum of $200 a year for twenty-four years, with interest on each year's wages, as upon the investment which should have been made thereof.

The defendants demurred, upon the ground "that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

This demurrer was sustained by the Circuit judge, who filed the following decree:

The action being for an account, in which title to property is not involved, the plaintiff, as committee, is a necessary party, interested in the cause of action set forth in the complaint, and entitled to sue thereon in behalf of his ward. The latter should properly have been joined as a plaintiff in the action, but any objection on that score could be taken only on the ground of defect of parties, specially assigned as cause of demurrer, and under the present issue could not be considered.

The action is not upon a contract alleged to have been made between the lunatic and defendant's testator, nor upon circum*stances relied on as the basis of an implied contract. It is an action for an account for the value of the services of the lunatic, for which it is claimed that defendant's testator is chargeable as for money received as committee for the benefit of the ward's estate. The question whether an express contract entered into with an adjudged lunatic would be binding on either party, and if not binding, whether a contract would be implied, by law, under circumstances where an express agreement would be void, is therefore not involved in the present issue. For if the lunatic could not contract for wages, his committee could certainly contract for him, and as the committee would undoubtedly be held to account for any wages received from one with whom he had contracted, he would be equally liable to account for the value of his ward's services if he employed him in his own business.

*99

The complaint states that the lunatic's capacity to render services as domestic servant or laborer existed at the date of the order appointing the committee and awarding maintenance. It must be assumed, therefore, that the court was duly apprised of the fact.

It is further stated in the complaint that the allowance was to the committee for the maintenance and support of the ward, not simply that the allowance was for maintenance and support, or to be expended therefor. It must be understood, therefore, as a provision for a fixed compensation to the committee for his care and maintenance of the ward. If the provision had been only for the allowance of a stated sum for maintenance, or to be expended for the support of the ward, the committee would be held bound to account for his disbursements of the fund, and the account would properly include any additional sums of money received by, or chargeable to, the committee for earnings of the ward.

Regarding, then, the allowance as a fixed rate of compensation to the committee, and assuming that the court was informed of the ward's capacity to labor and make earnings, it is apprehended that the court could not have contemplated or intended, that while the entire income of the estate should be retained by the committee by way of compensation, he should nevertheless be held to account for and pay back to the estate the value of *the ward's services—worth more, according to the allegations in the complaint, than the income allowed—the result of which would be to increase the estate. It is considered that the effect of the order, as set forth in the complaint, was to allow the defendant's testator, as committee, as well the services of his ward as the income of his estate, as compensation for maintenance and support of the ward, and in the absence of any charge of fraud in procuring the order, or of other allegations affecting its integrity, the plaintiff is concluded by said order from claiming an account for wages. And upon this ground the demurrer must be sustained.

*100

From this decree the plaintiff appealed, alleging error in "his Honor's conclusion of law, that the order for maintenance, as set forth in the complaint, concludes the plaintiff from claiming an account for his ward's earnings, as presented in the complaint, and hence, that said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

[For subsequent opinions, see 25 S. C. 394, 1 S. E. 13, 60 Am. Rep. 512; 44 S. C. 115, 21 S. E. 624.]

Mr. John J. Maher, for appellant.

Whether the order of February, 1855, concludes this plaintiff, must, under a demurrer, be determined wholly by the matters stated in the complaint. 6 S. C. 49. This is a fair test: If the answer had set up this order in the indentical language of the complaint as a bar to the action, would a demurrer by plaintiff be sustained? There is nothing in the order to show that the court knew that the lunatic had the intelligence and physical aptitude to discharge the duties of a servant, or intended to let the committee have his ward's services as well as income. His Honor assumes that the court knew this fact, and hence his conclusion.

The proceedings under which a committee is appointed (Rich. Eq. Cas. 404; Stock on Non Comp. Ment. 85, 119, 189; Macpherson on Inf. 107, 216; 1 How. 134; 6 Wheat. 117; 5 Rich. Eq. 531,) gives no information to the court, except as contained in the master's report; but the complaint does not intimate that any such fact was brought to the attention of the court. There can be no presumption that it was, when the record, which is not in evidence because of the demurrer, would determine the matter. *The court cannot assume facts on a demurrer, as an estoppel to a plaintiff's claim, as to which its own records, if produced in evidence, would speak definitively. Particularly so, as against a lunatic, and in favor of his committee, whose duty it was then, and at all times afterwards, to bring to the attention of the court his ward's capacity to earn wages. Had this order been asserted in the answer as a defense, the record itself, and not parol testimony, would have been the proof; and the record disclosing only such facts as are stated in the complaint, the defence would have failed. Can the court assume what parol evidence would be inadmissible to prove?

*101

His Honor may have considered that it was the duty of the court to be fully informed concerning this matter, and hence presumed that the court was informed. If the court had made order in regard to these earnings, we must presume that it acted after due investigation; but presumptions can go no further. Judicial acts are susceptible of regular proof; as to them, the maxim omnia presumuntur rite acta has a limited application. Best on Presump., §§ 57, 68, 74; 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 19; 4 Rich. Eq. 152; Rice 232; 13 Rich. Eq. 210; 2 Hill's Eq. 72; 2 Phil. on Ev. (Cowen & Hill) note 298; 12 S. C. 144. The order was dealing only with maintenance and provided it from an income certain, and not from an uncertain source. If there is any presumption at all, it would be that the entire interest would not have been appropriated, without abatement, if the value of the ward's services had been considered.

The distinction drawn between allowance for maintenance and allowance to the committee, is merely verbal, and the inference not well founded. Stock on Non Comp. Ment. 189, 193; Macpherson on Inf. 348; Adams' Eq. 293; Rich. Eq. Cas. 3. There was no special contract with the committee; he was entrusted with a trust fund, appropriated exclusively for the purpose stated.

Whatever was justly due by the committee to his ward was paid by operation of law. 2 Strob. Eq. 206; 6 S. C. 490; 7 S. C. 153. The lunatic was no party to the former proceedings, and, therefore, not bound by what might have been put in issue. Nor does the doctrine of estoppel by matter of record embrace any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment. 1 *Smith's Lead. Cas. 424; 1 Greenl. on Ev., § 528; 1 Stark. on Ev. 201; 6 Wheat. 109.

*102

Mr. Samuel W. Melton, contra.

The decree of maintenance made, it must be assumed upon careful inquiry and consideration, is conclusive, and the matter not having been brought in question during the committee's lifetime, is res judicata, and moreover has been fixed by contract between William Ashley, the elder, and the Chancellor, representing the lunatic, and year by year performed and settled. The infant is a ward in chancery; the lunatic is not. It is a personal trust in the Lord Chancellor, delegated to him under the sign-manual of the King. From his decree an appeal lies only to the King in council. The Chancellor acts not as a court, but as the trustee of his lord the King. 2 Story's Eq. Jur., § 1334; 3 Bl. Com. 427; 19 Ves. 121, 280. In cases of infancy, the nature of the estate may not be changed; not so in lunacy. 2 Bligh (N. S.) 129. Here the state is the King and the Chancellor the agent, and that his administration has taken the form of judicial procedure is accidental.

The purpose of this peculiar jurisdiction is primarily not the preservation of the estate, but the comfort and well-being of the lunatic. With reference to the management of his person and estate, the discretion of the Chancellor is without limit or discretion. The great object in view, generally, is the interest and comfort of the lunatic, and not the interests of his heirs. 1 Ves., Jr., 296, 462; 2 Meriv. 102; 2 Ves., Jr., 72; 6 Ves. 8; 18 Ves. 285, 393; 14 Ves. 182; 19 Ves. 124; 1 Ves., Jr., 463, note 6; 2 Sch. & Lef. 439; Adams' Eq. 297. Everything is included in the idea of maintenance—what he should have and what he should be permitted to do. It must be assumed that the whole duty incumbent upon the court was done; and that whatever was adjudged is right, and is conclusive. Story's Eq. Pl. 782; Herm. on Estop., § 37; 3 P. Wms. 104. But this action is for account. Here, there was no contract between committee and lunatic, and could have been none. The contract between the court and the committee was only for maintenance. The committee was only the agent of the court, charged with a special *and expressed duty. He is no more chargeable with an account for services rendered than would be the superintendent of the asylum who made his patient useful about the premises.

*103

The demurrer is proper, for a committee cannot sue for a lunatic, and if he has no right to sue, then there is no cause of action to him. Bliss' Code Pl., § 414; 28 N. Y. 242; 34 N. Y. 480; 3 Hill 338; Rice 56; Code, § 134. The committee is not the trustee of an express trust. 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 980; Lewin on Trusts 299, 591; Adams' Eq. 295; Bliss' Code Pl., § 54; 8 Rich. Eq. 286. Nor is he a person authorized by statute to sue.

The action at law must be based upon contract. Here contract is not alleged, nor could it be, since a lunatic cannot enter into contract, and where a contract could not be expressly made none can be implied. Pars. on Cont. 383, 386; 2 Kent 450; 15 Wall. 9; 2 Paige 422; 2 Bl. Com. 443; 3 Id. 159. This is not such an action as equity would entertain—it is purely legal. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 459.

Mr. Robert Aldrich, for respondents.

Mr. J. J. Maher, in reply.†

March 30th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. William Ashley, the elder, was appointed committee, after inquisition found, of his son, William Ashley, the younger, then about twenty-five years of age, on February 13th, 1855. It is stated in the complaint that this appointment *was made by an order of the Court of Equity; that the estate of the lunatic, as reported to the court at that time, was valued at $2000; that the order constituted the father committee both of the person and the estate of his son; and that it was provided in the order that the annual interest on the estate, or $140, should be allowed the father, as

*104

† The following matter of practice was determined in this case: Mr. Maher argued only his grounds of appeal. Messrs. Melton and Aldrich, for the respondents, raised in their arguments, other points taken in the court below, to sustain the conclusions of the Circuit judge. Mr. Maher, in reply, read an argument in print, which he had not filed with the clerk of this court. Messrs. Melton and Aldrich claimed the right to submit a printed reply to the points in Mr. Maher's second argument, which had not been discussed in his opening argument; but

The CHIEF JUSTICE ruled that the second argument of Mr. Maher being in reply only to the points made by the respondents, was in order; and that if he so preferred he might print such reply-argument; and that nothing further could be submitted by respondents.—REPORTER.

committee, for the support and maintenance of his son.

William Ashley, the father, died on February 25th, 1879. The defendants, respondents, qualified as executors of his will, and the appellant was afterwards appointed committee of the son.

Upon settlement attempted between the respondents, as executors of the former committee and the appellant as present committee, appellant claimed an accounting for the services of the lunatic, alleged to have been rendered to the former committee. The claim was at the rate of $200 yearly, and was in addition to the capital fund of $2000.

This claim was resisted by respondents, and appellant received and receipted for the capital fund, but without prejudice to his claim for the alleged services and the interest thereon.

This action has been brought for these services, the prayer of the complaint being that an account be taken under the order of the court of the sums received, or which should have been received, by the former committee on account of the wages earned by the lunatic from February 13th, 1855, to February 22d, 1879, and of the interest accrued on each several sum received, or which should have been collected on account of each year's wages, as upon the investment made, or which should have been made thereof.

To this action the respondents demurred, "for the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The Circuit Judge sustained the demurrer, holding that the appellant was concluded by the original order by which respondent's testator was appointed committee, this order, in his judgment, when properly construed, being intended to allow the committee not only the interest on the capital fund, $140, but, also, whatever services the lunatic could render, if any, as compensation for the support and maintenance of the lunatic, which *his relation to him required the committee to furnish or see that he received it.

*105

The appellant excepted to this ruling, and the appeal brings up the single question: "Whether the order, as stated in the complaint, precluded the claim of appellant to an account for the earnings as therein preferred."

The case has been argued before this court with great research and zeal by counsel on both sides, and we are greatly indebted to counsel for the thorough discussion given to the case in all its aspects, and for the very full preparation of the points and authorities with which they have furnished the court, so as to aid the court in reaching a proper conclusion.

There being, however, but a single question raised by the appeal, it will not be necessary to follow the argument into all of the points presented.

It is not the purpose of this court to express any opinion as to the facts; whether the lunatic, in this case, was able or did render any service of value to his committee, or whether the work he did, if any, should be regarded as the necessary and healthful discipline to which he should have been subjected as contributing to his physical comfort and health. If he was able to do steady work, even as a hireling or common laborer, sufficiently so to earn $200 per annum, it seems strange that he should require a committee to take care not only of his estate but of his person. But these are questions of fact which are not involved in this demurrer, and we propose to leave them for future investigation.

If this action was an action in behalf of the lunatic for an unsettled demand on account of wages earned by his labor, then the lunatic himself should have been party plaintiff.

In Sims v. McLure, 8 Rich. Eq. 286 [70 Am. Dec. 196], Chancellor Wardlaw said: "The practice of instituting suits in the name of the committee only is sustained by high authority, but in this state it is certainly better to follow the general rule of pleading, to make all parties to the suit, who are materially interested in the object of it, and not to litigate and adjudge concerning the estate of any person, even a lunatic, who is not before the court."

But this is not an action strictly for the wages of the lunatic. * It is a case "in chancery," by a trustee, against the representatives of a former trustee (as it is alleged) seeking an accounting for the estate of the cestui que trust, which, it is alleged, the former trustee had in his hands, at his death, belonging to the cestui que trust. It proceeds upon the theory that the former trustee having received the benefit of the labor of his ward he thereby became debtor to himself, as trustee, for the value of this labor, and, being both debtor and creditor, under the principle of Schnell v. Schroder, Bail. Eq. 335; Griffin v. Bonham, 9 Rich. Eq. 71; Jacobs v. Woodside, 6 S. C. 498, he is presumed in law to have paid himself, and since such payments he has been holding the amounts so received as trustee, and, therefore, it is a proper subject of accounting between the present committee and his representatives.

*106

This, in the opinion of the court, is a correct principle, and if the facts will sustain the allegations the action would not be obnoxious to objection on account of the manner in which it is brought. William Ashley, the elder, being the committee of the person as well as of the estate, he was authorized to make proper contracts in his behalf, and if the lunatic was capable of service, he, the committee, could contract as an individual, with himself as the committee, in reference to this labor, as well as he could with other persons, either expressly or impliedly. In which case he would occupy the relation, as to such matter, both of debtor and creditor, and the cases referred to above would apply.

All this is based on the idea that the committee was a trustee, and that the custody and control of lunatics is a matter of equity jurisdiction, analogous to and subject to the same rules and principles as are applied to other fiduciary relations, such as guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, &c. Much learning was displayed in the argument upon this branch of the case, and there is no doubt but that in England lunatics and idiots occupy a different position to the courts and in the law from all other cestui que trust. There is no doubt but that the Lord Chancellor, under the sign-manual of the King, was the special custodian of this unfortunate class of society there, and that committees were his agents and responsible to him. It was not a subject matter over which his court had jurisdiction, but it was a power *conferred upon the Lord Chancellor, as the representative of the crown, to be exercised as a special and personal duty. But whatever may have been or may now be the law in England on this subject, or whatever may have been its origin there, this principle has never prevailed practically in this country.

*107

Lunatics and idiots, and the care of their persons and property, are now and have always been with us considered and acted upon as a branch of equity jurisdiction, and the Chancellor who made the original order in this case, in 1855, acted by virtue of this jurisdiction, and not by any special power conferred upon him as an individual, either from the state or any other power as a special duty. Any other Chancellor of the state could have passed the order as well as he.

But this is aside from the question presented in the appeal, i. e., the effect of the original order of appointment. Is that order a bar to this action, as urged by respondents and held by the Circuit judge? The pleadings did not disclose fully the facts upon which the order was passed. It does not appear from the pleadings whether or not the condition of the lunatic (further than simply that inquisition had been found) was made known to the Chancellor, and we have no other guide as to the intent of the order than its terms. There is nothing said in it on the subject of the services and labor of the lunatic, and there is certainly no express contract contained in it permitting the committee to have the benefit of such labor as a part of the compensation to be allowed him for his care and trouble.

It is manifest, from the character of the order, that the Chancellor had no conception that any services could be rendered by the lunatic. Assuredly not that his services could be worth $200 per annum, otherwise he would not have provided so especially for his support and maintenance out of the funds in hand. He expressly set apart the interest on this fund, $140, for support and maintenance. This would have been wholly unnecessary if the lunatic had been regarded able to support himself by his own labor. And we have no idea, on the other hand, that the committee ever dreamed for a moment during his life that his estate, after his death, would be called upon to respond to a claim like this. But, although this may be true, and, also, that the court *in passing the order and the committee in accepting the trust, both acted upon the supposition that the labor of the lunatic could be of no service to any one, and was not to be regarded or provided for, yet we do not think that the order, under the circumstances of the case, amounted to a judgment, final and conclusive, upon that question, in the sense that the question has already once been adjudicated, and that that adjudication must be held as a bar to this claim, whether meritorious or not.

*108

It is said that the lunatic could not make a contract; that, being a lunatic, he was without the power of assent, which is an essential element of all contracts. A contract is an agreement between two or more parties, each being capable of assenting to its terms; and as one devoid of reason cannot assent, of course he cannot make an express contract. But there is a large class of legal obligations, arising out of acts where both parties are silent and no positive assent given on either side, denominated in the books as implied contracts, in which parties are sued and held liable in all of the courts. True, in these cases, this has been done in part on the theory that there was a contract between the parties implied by the law. This, however, is a fiction, as in most of such cases it is well understood that there never has been that mutuality of assent which the law lays down as an essential element of any contract. This idea of an implied contract was a fiction invented by the courts, as Mr. Pomeroy, section 512, says, "in order to bring such obligations under the old action of assumpsit."

We find many such fictions in the history of the old pleadings, (notably in the old action of ejectment,) arising out of and made necessary on account of the stringent rules and forms of practice under the former system.

And Mr. Pomeroy further says, section 540, since the adoption of the code: "That it has been settled by an overwhelming preponderance of authority that it is no longer necessary to aver a promise in actions upon what were known at common law as implied contracts. It is enough to state the ultimate facts from which the law raises the duty or obligation to pay. The courts everywhere, where the code has been adopted, are beginning to deal more directly with the facts and substance, and dispensing *more and more with forms and shadows. And when the true ends and objects of courts are considered, this tendency towards settling controversies upon their real merits, is not to be regretted."

*109

If, indeed, an unfortunate lunatic, bereft of his reason so far as to be unable to assent to a contract, is yet able, physically, to labor and does labor to the profit of another, can it be that he must be deprived of all compensation on the ground that he could not make a contract? and, on that account, there is no form of action suited to his case? This would be a burning reproach to any system of pleading, and a stigma upon any country where such a principle prevailed.

There is no reason why the law should not raise an obligation on the part of a recipient of a lunatic's labor to pay for it as fully as it does in cases where the parties are sane. In fact, inasmuch as sane parties can protect themselves and lunatics cannot, there is a greater reason why the law should be more watchful as to the rights of the latter than the former.

No doubt, in this case, that William Ashley, the elder, took the custody of his son without regard to his labor, and with no purpose to avail himself thereof. The unfortunate son, as it appears, was an incurable lunatic, and it was necessary that some one should take him and his estate in charge. No one was more suitable for this purpose than his father, and he was properly appointed. While it is almost an anomaly in nature to suppose that a confirmed lunatic could be able for any steady work, or be expected to perform it; and while it is not the duty of a committee to put such a ward out to labor, and while it can scarcely be believed that a father, appointed the committee of an afflicted son, with his reason gone, would make a regular domestic, menial servant of him, with the view to make profit and personal benefit out of his enforced services, yet if, in any case, where this relation exists, the facts will sustain an allegation that the committee has thus enjoyed the wages of the ward in the way of valuable services rendered, the doors of the court should not be shut upon the poor unfortunate; he and his friends should have the opportunity of a full and fair investigation of his claim, and *if the facts warrant such a result, to have it established and enforced.

*110

The order sustaining the demurrer is reversed and the appeal sustained. Let the case be remanded.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

15 S. C. 110

(Case No. 1018.)

HELLAMS v. ABERCROMBIE.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Sunday ⇐13.]

There is nothing in the common law or in the statutes of this state, which renders a mortgage, executed on Sunday, void on that account.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Mitchell v. Bates, 57 S. C. 52, 35 S. E. 420.

For other cases, see Sunday, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. ⇐13.]

[2. Pleading ⇐177, 180.]

While a surety may, in equity, compel the principal debtor to pay the debt and so save him harmless (Norton v. Reid & Sitton, 11 S. C. 593,) yet he cannot recover of the principal until he has himself made payment; but where he holds a mortgage given him by the principal as an indemnity, he may have judgment of foreclosure before any payment by him upon the debt.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Beasley v. Newell, 40 S. C. 22, 18 S. E. 224.

For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 354, 355, 358-384; Dec. Dig. ⇐177, 180.]

[3. Principal and Surety ⇐180.]

And in such case, the surety, being liable to the creditor for the payment in full of note and interest, is entitled to foreclose his mortgage for the whole amount of his liability, notwithstanding judgment had been previously obtained by the creditor against the principal debtor for a less sum.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Noble v. Cothran, 18 S. C. 441, 442.

For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. § 523; Dec. Dig. ⇐180.]

[4. Sunday ⇐11.]

[Cited in Mills v. Williams, 16 S. C. 593, 597 to the point that a contract made on Sunday is valid unless made by the defendant in the exercise of the business of his ordinary calling.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sunday, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. ⇐11.]

[This case is also cited in Allen v. Cooley, 53 S. C. 444, 31 S. E. 634, without specific application, and in Eason v. Witcofskey, 29 S. C. 244, 7 S. E. 291, as to the legality of notice by publication in Sunday newspapers.]

Before Fraser, J., Pickens, March, 1879.

This action was commenced April 14th, 1875, by John Hellams, surety, against Elihu W. Abercrombie, principal debtor, to foreclose a mortgage given for indemnity, and upon the death intestate of the plaintiff was continued by his administrator, John R. Hellams.

The liability of plaintiff and defendant was on a sealed note to John Woods for $200, which note was executed November 8th, 1858. The mortgage given by Abercrombie to his surety, Hellams, as an indemnity, bore date September 12th, 1859. Woods obtained judgment against his principal debtor, the defendant here, March 25th, 1869, for $165.33, and no appeal was *taken. Hellams, the surety, was never sued. The judgment against Abercrombie has never been satisfied.

*111

Upon an attempt by Woods to enforce it, defendant claimed his homestead, and pending this claim this action was commenced.

At the trial the defendant testified that the mortgage was executed on Sunday. It was in proof that the mortgaged premises were worth $800, and that the judgment of Woods was the oldest other lien upon the land.

The presiding judge decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the full amount of the note on which his intestate was surety, and ordered a reference to ascertain the amount due. From this decree the defendant appealed.

Mr. A. Blythe, for appellant.

Mr. J. H. Whitner, contra.

The expression dies dominicus et non dies juridicus, relates only to matters of a judicial character; and, at common law, a mortgage executed on Sunday would have been valid. 2 Bay 232; 3 Burr. 1595; 3 Coke *354; 3 Bl. Com. 375; 4 Strob. 491; 2 Pars. on Cont. 757, note n; 5 Wait's Act. & Def. 114; 74 N. C. 187. Nor is it invalid under the only statute we have, as construed by the English courts. 2 Stat. 396; Gen. Stat. 390, § 1; 1 Taunt. 131; 3 B. & C. 232; 5 Id. 406; 7 Id. 596; 2 Man., Gr. & S. 72; 16 Ad. & E. (N. S.) 48; 1 Cromp., Mees & Ros. 422; 5 Wait's Act. & Def. 116. Giving a mortgage is not a part of a man's ordinary calling.

A surety is endangered, damnified and injured whenever the debt becomes due and the principal debtor fails to pay it; and then, i. e., upon the failure of the principal to pay at maturity, he is entitled to enforce his counter-security, (bond or mortgage of indemnity,) if he has one, or, if he has no such security, to proceed upon his naked equity, and require his principal to relieve him from his liability by paying the debt. 4 Des. 44; 4 Id. 227; 2 Bay 145; 2 Rich. 80; Rice's Eq. 275; 3 Strob. Eq. 65; 11 S. C. 593; 2 Brown's Ch. R. 582; Story's Eq., § 327.

The surety is not relieved from his liability on the note by the judgment recovered by the creditor against his principal. *The note, as to him, is not merged in the judgment against his principal; nor could he plead the recovery of said judgment in bar to an action against him on said note. 6 Rep. 46; 1 Bail. 348; 2 Bail. 362.

*112

The creditor's recovery against the principal debtor does not measure or limit the principal's liability to the surety. 1 Hill 234; Cheves 16.

March 31st, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. This was an action brought by the respondent's intestate, in his lifetime, to foreclose a mortgage given by the appellant to the said intestate to indemnify and save him harmless from all loss or damage by reason of his suretyship on a note of said appellant to one John Woods.

The appellant, by his answer, admitted the execution of the note and mortgage, but insisted that inasmuch as the creditor, Woods, had sued him on said note and recovered judgment against him in said suit for the sum of $165.33, which his property was amply sufficient to pay, that the condition of his mortgage had never been broken, and the respondent's intestate, therefore, could not maintain this action; but even if he could maintain the action he was only entitled to a judgment of foreclosure for the amount recovered by the creditor, Woods, against him as principal debtor; that the said mortgage was executed on Sunday, and was, therefore, illegal and void.

His Honor, T. B. Fraser, who heard the case, adjudged and decreed that the respondent, as the personal representative of the surety, John Hellams, was entitled to have judgment of foreclosure for whatever amount might then be due upon the note to Woods, and ordered a reference to ascertain that amount. The defendant, Elihu W. Abercrombie, appealed from that decision.

Three questions are presented in the appeal in this case:

1. Is a mortgage executed on a Sunday illegal and void on that account?

2. Can a surety who holds a mortgage of indemnity on the principal, enforce it before he pays the debt for which he is surety?

3. If so, can the surety recover from the principal a greater *sum than the creditor has reduced to judgment against the principal?

*113

Whatever may be our opinion as to the moral or religious aspects of the first question above, yet this case cannot be decided upon considerations of that character. The question is strictly a legal question and must be determined upon legal principles. As was said in the case of State v. Ricketts, 74 N. C. 187, "what religion and morality permit or forbid to be done on Sunday, is not within our province to decide. In different Christian countries and in different ages in the same country, very differing opinions have prevailed upon these questions." So that in all matters of this kind, when the judgment of a civil court is invoked in reference to a special act, the only question to be considered is, is the act obnoxious to any established principle of the common or statute law?

A contract may be briefly defined to be an agreement between two or more parties to do or not to do some act founded upon a sufficient legal consideration. The two principal elements are—first, the act to be done; and, second, the consideration. If these be both legal, then the contract is binding, unless there is something external to the contract itself which forbids enforcement.

The contract in this case is an ordinary contract between principal and surety, by which the principal undertook to indemnify and save harmless the surety, as to the debt of the principal, in consideration of obtaining the credit and name of the surety in contracting the debt. The benefit of this credit of the surety the principal has enjoyed for near twenty years, and he now seeks to repudiate his contract, founded upon this as a consideration, on the ground that it was obtained originally on a Sunday. Even if the law allowed him to avoid his responsibility on the ground suggested, the same high morality which prompts him to invoke the law should also prompt him to save his friend harmless. But to return to the question. Is there anything external to this contract which renders it void? In other words, is a contract of this character illegal, either by the common or statute law, because made on a Sunday?

The argument of the respondent's attorney has gone very fully and learnedly into this question. The case of Swann v. Broome, *3 Burr. 1595, referred to by him, seems to be the leading case on the subject. In that case it was held by Lord Mansfield that at common law a Sunday was not dies juridicus; that at first, among the ancient Christians, all days were used alike for hearing causes in the courts, "not sparing, as it seemeth, the Sunday itself;" but afterwards certain canons, reaching back to the year 517, were made, taken notice of in Spellman's Original of the Terms, which forbid the use of Sunday for hearing causes or holding pleas. These canons were confirmed, says Lord Mansfield, by William the Conqueror and Henry II., and so became a part of the common law of England. This inhibition of the common law did not, however, extend to fairs, markets, sports and pastimes; these were left to be regulated by statutes.

*114

How far the common law, as thus recognized and announced by Lord Mansfield, has been observed in this state is not material to this case, as the question here is not one involving the powers of the court on a Sunday, but one involving the validity of a contract made on a Sunday.

Parties who may be curious as to the powers of the court in this respect, will find the law in the cases of Shaw v. McCormick and Hiller v. English, the first in 2 Bay 232, and the second in 4 Strob. 488, in the last of which Judge Wardlaw delivered a very interesting and learned opinion, Judge O'Neall dissenting in a masterly argument from the opinion of the majority of the court, thus pronounced by Judge Wardlaw.

It is true that in the case of Shaw v. McCormick this expression is used: "That Sunday is not a day in law—dies dominicus non est dies juridicus—consequently, all temporal business transacted on that day is null and void."

Upon examination of the facts of that case it will be seen that the reporter was not warranted in supposing that the decision reached the conclusion announced in the above extract; on the contrary, this was an inference of his own, not sustained by the facts.

Under these cases, then, it appears there is nothing in the comomn law which renders this contract void. In 2 Pars. on Cont. 757, it is said: "But as to the making of contracts, and *all other acts not judicial, the common law made no distinction between Sunday and any other day."

*115

Is the contract void by virtue of any statute of the state? The act of 1712 is the only act on the subject. That act forbids tradesmen, workmen, laborers, &c., from exercising any worldly labor, business, or work in their ordinary calling upon the Lord's day under a certain penalty.

The execution of the mortgage now under consideration does not fall within the penalty of this act, and therefore void. It was not an act done within the ordinary calling of the parties. It was a casual and exceptional act, and in no way violated the act of 1712.

The first section of 29 Charles II. was very similar in its terms to the act of 1712. This section was construed in the cases of Drury v. De Fontaine, 1 Taunt. 131, and in Bloxsome v. Williams, 3 B. & C. 232, not to embrace contracts made outside of the ordinary calling of the party. True, in one case decided since a different doctrine was held, the construction above being regarded as too narrow and contrary to the spirit of the act; but in the subsequent decisions, especially in the case of Rex v. Inhabitants of Whitnash, 7 B. & C. 596, the decision in the case of Bloxsome v. Williams, supra, was re-affirmed, and a contract of hiring between a farmer and a laborer for a year, made on a Sunday, was held valid. Such, in our opinion, is the proper construction of the act of 1712, incorporated in the General Statutes, page 390.

2. Can a surety sue the principal before he pays the debt of his principal?

It has been settled as a principle of equity that upon the falling due of the debt a surety is entitled to go into equity and compel payment by the principal, to his relief. Although the surety may not be sued, nor, as yet, has been disturbed, yet as long as the debt of his principal remains unpaid there is a cloud hanging over him, and this he is entitled, in equity, to have cleared away; which right Courts of Equity have always enforced—in the application of remedial justice—by proceedings in the nature of bills quia timet.

In the case of Norton v. Reid & Sitton, found at the end of 11 *S. C., this doctrine was fully recognized and applied, and it may be regarded as sufficiently settled in this state, without reference to other authority.

*116

But this does not touch the question under discussion, i. e., as to the right of a surety to sue and recover from the principal the amount of the debt for which he is liable as such surety before he has actually paid the debt himself.

The two questions stand upon different foundations and are governed by different principles. In the one case the object is to enforce payment by the principal of a debt which he contracted to pay. In the other it is to require the principal to pay the surety before any liability attached, and before any cause of action has accrued to the surety. No action can be had until a cause of action has accrued, and the only cause that can ordinarily exist between a principal and his surety, growing out of the suretyship, is payment of the debt by the surety. Until this is done the surety has no basis upon which to stand in court and demand payment to himself. Until this is done his remedy is in equity, as in the case of Norton v. Reid & Sitton, supra.

In De Colyar on Principal and Surety, page 308, it is said: "The most important right which a surety possesses before any payment by him is, that after the debt has become due he may come into a Court of Equity and compel the debtor to exonerate him from his liability by at once paying the debt." "At law, the surety must pay the debt before he can have an action against his principal, but not so in equity. After the debt is due the surety may resort to chancery to compel the principal to exonerate him and pay the debt." Story's Eq. 322, § 327; 2 Id. 35, § 730; King v. Baldwin, 2 Johns. Ch. 554. "As a general rule, as soon as the surety has paid anything for the principal debtor the latter becomes chargeable to him." De Colyar 311.

Though as just stated, the surety must have first paid something for the principal, in order to make the latter chargeable to him, yet it appears "that by express contract the surety may, before payment, be entitled to recover damages." Id. 312. And while it is the general rule that a surety cannot proceed against his principal until he has paid the debt, either in money or by taking it up through the substitution of his own note, as established in many cases—Elwood v. Diefendorf, 5 Bart. 398 *Brandt on Suretyship 235; Stinson v. Brennan, Chev. 16; Peters v. Barnhill, 1 Hill 234—yet it has been held, where the cause of action between them arises out of a bond of indemnity or other collateral security, involving an independent contract, that action may be instituted on that, on its breach, even before payment.

*117

In this case the action is to foreclose a mortgage. The mortgage is not set out in the record; but it is stated to be a mortgage of indemnity and to save harmless.

In the case of Bellune v. Wallace, 2 Rich. 80, where a mortgage had been given of a slave by a principal to his surety to indemnify and save him harmless, it was adjudged by the court that a failure to meet the obligation by the principal was such a breach of the condition of the mortgage as authorized the surety to sue for the slave at once without payment of the debt. Also, in Brandt, Section 193, it is said: "A surety or guarantor who holds a mortgage on the property of the principal, may, after maturity of the debt and before paying it, have the mortgage foreclosed and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of the debt."

Under this principle this action may be sustained and the judgment below affirmed, in so far as the right of action on the part of the plaintiff is involved before payment of the debt.

The next and last question is, as to the amount to be recovered. The judgment of the creditor against the principal is less than the notes sued on. Why this was so is not explained; but there was no appeal from this judgment, and it is the measure of the debt established against the principal. Can the surety foreclose his mortgage for more?

In the case of United States v. Allsbury, 4 Wall. 186 [18 L. Ed. 321], suit was commenced against the principal and one surety on a paymaster's official bond, and judgment for $10,000 recovered. Afterwards suit was brought against another surety on the bond, claiming a greater recovery. The court held, as the liability of the principal had been fixed at $10,000 by the first judgment, the surety in the last suit could not be held liable for more, otherwise the surety would be held for a greater liability than his principal.

And in the case of Lang v. Brevard, 3 Strob. Eq. 64, Chancellor Dargan said that "the prominent and well-defined distinction that pervades all the cases is that the surety will be *discharged by any acts on the part of the creditor of a positive character, whereby the remedy against the principal debtor is lost, so that payment cannot be enforced against him. The case now under consideration would seem at first to fall under the principle of these cases, and but for contra decisions in our own state, which we must regard as authority, I would be disposed to determine this question by that principle."

*118

But in the case of Treasurer v. Bates, 2 Bail. 362, and in other cases in this state, it was decided that a judgment against a principal could not be pleaded in bar to a suit against the surety. And in Day v. Hill, 2 Speers 628 [42 Am. Dec. 390], in an action on a joint and several note, where one of the parties had been previously sued, and, by some mistake, judgment rendered for a less amount than was due, the balance was recovered from the other parties. Peters v. Barnhill and Stinson v. Brennan, supra, were cases where the sureties were held liable, though the creditor had failed to recover judgment against the principals on suit brought against them, and the sureties were allowed to recover against the principals.

These cases were adjudicated in our own courts, and they are so nearly in point that we cannot but yield to their authority.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

15 S. C. 118

(Case No. 1019.)

ANCRUM v. WEHMANN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐216.]

Exceptions to the omission by the Circuit judge to charge legal propositions, which he was not, at the time, requested to charge, cannot be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. ⇐216; Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 627, 628, 629, 630–641, 660, 662–676.]

[2. Sales ⇐179.]

A steam yacht having been sold at auction as in perfect running order, in action brought for the purchase money, it was error to charge that "if defendant accepted the boat, that was his own construction of what was meant by perfect running order, and he would be bound by that construction."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 460; Dec. Dig. ⇐179.]

*119

*Before Pressley, J., Charleston, February, 1880.

Action commenced January 5th, 1880, by John L. Ancrum against F. Wehmann, for $620, with interest, for a steam yacht, which had been sold to plaintiff at public auction, December 16th, 1879, and purchased by defendant; and that plaintiff had tendered and was still ready to tender the possession and a sufficient bill of sale.. Defendant answered, alleging that the yacht was represented and warranted as in perfect running order, but that it was not in perfect running order, and that no such steam yacht had even been tendered to him.

Evidence was offered by plaintiff at the trial to show that defendant, after inspecting the boat, agreed to accept it. The defendant objected, but the presiding judge overruled the objection upon the ground that plaintiff might introduce such testimony for the purpose of showing that defendant had accepted the vessel, and thus given his own construction of what the contract was, and waived his objections to the vessel's not being in perfect running order.

Other facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Isaac Hayne, for appellant.

Mr. J. A. Simons, contra.

March 31st, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by SIMPSON, C. J. This was an action brought to recover the purchase money of a steam yacht. The yacht was sold by plaintiff at public auction under this advertisement: "This day, December the 16th, at 11 o'clock, will be sold, at post office, a steam yacht, in perfect running order, measuring," &c., &c. The defendant was the purchaser at $620.

The charge of the judge was as follows:

"Gentlemen of the jury, if there was an acceptance of this boat by the defendant, then that was his construction of what the contract was. And, having put that construction upon it, he is bound by it; and, being bound by it, Dr. Ancrum had the right to notify him that the boat was there at the wharf at his risk, *and he would be entitled to recover the amount of the purchase money, with interest. You will, therefore, address your inquiry to that point first.

*120

"If he actually accepted the boat, that acceptance would suffice to transfer the title, without the preliminaries in the custom-house, and the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the purchase money, with interest. Dr. Ancrum says that, after several disputes, it was agreed that the boat should be drawn up on the ways; that he explained to Mr. Wehmann that the equipments were put away for safe keeping, and that Mr. Wehmann told him that if he would draw up the boat and the hull was all right he would be satisfied; that she was drawn up, that the hull was examined, and that he (Dr. Ancrum) said there was another person who wanted to buy her, and that thereupon Mr. Wehmann said he was satisfied and would take her, and gave an order for the painting of the boat. Mr. Wehmann says he did not do so—that he never waived any of his objections to the boat being in perfect running order—but that he did say that if the boat was drawn up he would say what was necessary to be done to her, and he gave it as his opinion that she should be cleaned and painted; but Mr. Wehmann says he never waived his objections to the other matters and never accepted the boat; that is his statement; and that he never saw the equipment and never passed upon their sufficiency whatever.

"It is further contended by the defendant that the letters that are before you corroborate the statements of Mr. Wehmann; that those writings nowhere say 'you have accepted the boat;' that they tender the boat and acknowledge his refusal to accept. These are matters of testimony, and it is your duty to reconcile them. You are to consider the testimony of both sides and answer first the question: Did he accept the boat that morning? I simply charge you upon the law that if he did accept it, that was his own construction of what was meant by 'perfect running order,' and he would be bound by that construction. If he did not accept the boat that morning, he is entitled to stand on the advertisement, which is his contract. If you come to the conclusion that he did not accept this boat as being in perfect running order, then you will see whether she was in perfect run*ning order, and you will be governed by the testimony on that point.

*121

"Capt. Varden says she was in good running order; Capt. Foley says she was not in good running order. Capt. Kirkwood says that she was not in perfect running order; that the bell wire was missing; that the tiller wouldn't work; that the rail was broken, and that the bow was stove in, and that she wouldn't have been given a certificate by him as United States inspector as being a boat in perfect running order. Mr. Hewes says the same thing. It is a question of fact for you to decide. If she was in perfect running order, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover, whether he accepted her or not. If Mr. Wehmann did not accept the boat, then, if she was in perfect running order, the plaintiff is limited in his damages—he can only recover damages for breach of contract, and that is the difference between the bill of sale and what he can get for her now; that you must judge of by the testimony before you; if she was not in perfect running order, then your verdict must be for the defendant, unless he accepted her as in perfect running order."

The jury found for the plaintiff the full amount, with interest from date of sale.

The defendant appealed on the grounds attached:

"1. That testimony was admitted on behalf of plaintiff, after objection thereto by defendant, tending to show that defendant was estopped from denying that the vessel was in proper running order, according to the advertisement, by reason of his acceptance of her after the sale.

"2. That his Honor erred in charging that if the evidence showed that defendant accepted the vessel after the sale he was estopped from denying that she was in proper running order, according to the advertisement.

"3. That his Honor erred in not explaining to the jury what state of facts must have existed to constitute an acceptance by defendant, and estop him from showing that the vessel was not in proper running order, according to the advertisement.

"4. That his Honor erred in not charging that, upon the pleadings and evidence in this action, the jury should find for *the defendant if the evidence showed that the vessel was not in proper running order, according to the advertisement.

*122

"5. That his Honor erred in not charging that the plaintiff was estopped by the allegations contained in the complaint from showing that defendant had accepted the vessel.

"6. That his Honor erred in not instructing the jury that the evidence did not show facts sufficient to constitute an acceptance and delivery of the vessel."

It has been decided in several cases in this state, that exceptions assigning error to the presiding judge on account of omission to charge legal propositions claimed by the appellant to be involved, without a request to do so, cannot be considered on appeal to this court. The foundation for these decisions needs no examination at this time. The cases involving this question seem to have been well considered and the judgment of the court deliberately pronounced, and they are binding and conclusive as to this point when invoked by the respondent. Madsden v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 1 S. C. 24; Abrahams v. Kelly & Barrett, 2 S. C. 238; Fox v. Railroad Co., 4 S. C. 544.

This disposes of exceptions of appellant from three to six, inclusive, as in each error of omission is alleged without any request to charge the propositions embraced.

Exceptions one and two present the same question in substance and effect. The judge charged the jury as a matter of law, "that if the defendant accepted the boat, that was his own construction of what was meant by 'perfect running order,' and he would be bound by that construction." The main point in the case, as appears from the pleadings, was whether the vessel sold by the plaintiff was in "perfect running order." The vessel was sold at public auction under an advertisement, stating that it was "in perfect running order." The defendant purchased with this advertisement as descriptive of the property and containing the warranty of its condition. After the sale he declined to comply, on the ground that the yacht did not come up to this description and warranty, and hence the writ. Whether the vessel was in perfect running order was the matter in issue between the parties, and, if found for the defendant, entitled him to decline to receive the property, or, if he had already taken *possession, to a reduction in the price, as the proof might require; but the main question was the one stated, and this was a question of fact for the jury.

*123

The judge charged that if defendant accepted the vessel as in perfect running order, then he was bound, and the verdict should be for plaintiff for the full amount. This was changing the issue from that made by the parties themselves, i. e., unsoundness, so to speak, to a new issue, i. e., accepting the vessel by defendant. So that the jury, if they were guided by the judge, could not have felt called upon to examine into the question of "perfect running order" at all. The moment they found that defendant had accepted, under the instructions from the judge they had nothing to do but to find for the plaintiff the full amount, whether the vessel was as described and warranted or not. The defendant, relying upon the advertisement, might have well taken possession the moment the vessel was knocked down to him; but it would be a very stringent law that would preclude him on that account from setting up defects warranted against, which he subsequently discovered, and which, perhaps, he could only discover by taking possession.

The charge of the judge in the main is correct; but we think that the portion excepted to was error. It may have misled the jury, and we think the judgment below should be reversed, especially as the judge, in his order refusing the motion for a new trial, says "that the testimony in the case satisfied him that the steamer sold to defendant was not in proper running order, according to the advertisement." If this be so, the defendant ought not to be required to pay the full amount. Another trial may effect substantial justice.

The judgment below is reversed and a new trial ordered.

McIVER and McGOWAN, A. J.'s, concurred.

---

15 S. C. *124

*(Case No. 1020.)

CITY OF CHARLESTON v. BLOHME.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Judicial Sales ⇐50.]

While there is no warranty at a judicial sale, the rule of caveat emptor does not apply to the same extent as to sales under execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judicial Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 90–94, 96; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 50.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐537.]

One desiring to purchase land at a foreclosure sale, examined the records and found a prior mortgage marked satisfied; she then became the purchaser, but afterwards learning that the entry of satisfaction was a forgery and that the prior mortgage was still open, refused to comply with her bid. Upon rule to show cause—Held, that she could not be compelled to comply, unless the validity of the title was established under proper proceedings instituted for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1558; Dec. Dig. ⇐537.]

[3. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐112.]

[Cited in Davenport v. Latimer, 53 S. C. 573, 31 S. E. 630, to the point that a purchaser knowing at the time of sale that title to property is defective, or has means of knowing so, cannot refuse to comply with the terms of his contract.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 199, 200; Dec. Dig. ⇐112.]

[This case is also cited in City Council of Charleston v. Ryan, 22 S. C. 340, 53 Am. Rep. 713, as to facts.]

Before Pressley, J., Charleston, April, 1880.

This case, brought up on appeal under the title of City Council of Charleston v. Dorothea Blohme, was a rule upon Mrs. Blohme to show cause why she had not complied with her bid of $2500 for a lot of land in the city of Charleston, purchased in October, 1879, under a decree of foreclosure rendered in the case of City Council of Charleston v. Mary A. Ryan. She made return as stated in the opinion, the prior mortgage having been given to secure a bond for $3500, dated September 17th, 1866. The Circuit judge discharged the purchaser, as stated in the opinion, saying that it had been the practice in Charleston for forty years and doubtless longer, to allow purchasers at such sale a reasonable time to examine titles and to make objections; and the objections, if valid, were always allowed. Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. G. D. Bryan, for appellant, cited 9 S. C. 197; Jones on Mort., § 1646; 93 U. S. 424; Bank v. Vidal, Charleston, January, 1839, by Chancellor Harper—MSS. Decree Bk. 131.

Mr. J. Ancrum Simons, contra, cited, Rorer on Jud. Sales, §§ 1–68, 155, 190; 2 Jones on Mort., §§ 1608, 1645; 9 S. C. 287; 2 Daniell's Ch. Pl. & Pr. *1276; Thomas on Mort., 358; 8

*125

How. *548; 63 N. Y. 268; 7 Paige 550; 45 N. Y. 234; 6 Bush 553; 2 Sandf. Ch. 533; 2 McC. 167; 13 S. C. 212.

April 11th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. Under proper proceedings to foreclose a mortgage, a certain house and lot in the city of Charleston was offered for sale by the master and bid off by the respondent. She declined to comply with the terms of sale, and a rule was issued requiring her to show cause why she should not be required to comply. In the return to the rule the respondent stated that after she had bid off the property she was informed that a prior mortgage on the property, upon the record of which there was an indorsement of satisfaction, had not, in fact been satisfied, and was still a lien upon the property; the allegation being that the entry of satisfaction on the record, though purporting to be signed by the mortgagee, was a forgery. This return was supported by an affidavit of the person whose signature to the endorsement of satisfaction was alleged to have been forged.

The Circuit judge discharged the rule and ordered that respondent "be discharged from her said purchase unless proceedings be instituted, with proper parties, to test the validity of the title."

From this decision the plaintiff appeals, upon the ground "that the rule of caveat emptor applies to judicial sales under foreclosure of mortgages."

While it is true that there is no warranty at a judicial sale, (Commissioner v. Thompson, 4 McC. 434; Mitchell v. Pinckney, 13 S. C. 203,) it is equally true that at such sales the rule of caveat emptor does not apply. (Tunno v. Fludd, 1 McC. 121; Commissioner

v. Smith, 9 Rich. 515; Bolivar v. Zeigler, 9 S. C. 287.) at least not to the extent which it does at sales under execution. At a sale under execution the sheriff only sells the interest of the defendant in execution, whether it be much or little, or whether it be anything at all, but at a judicial sale the court orders and the officer sells the property which is the subject matter of the suit; and the interest of all parties to the action, but none others, are concluded by such sale. Hence, under an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage of real estate, which is *covered by prior or by subsequent mortgages, the holders of which are not made parties, the property which is the subject matter of the suit—the thing sold—is, in the one case, the equity of redemption, and in the other is the mortgaged property, subject to the right of the subsequent encumbrancers to redeem. If, therefore, these encumbrancers are not made parties, the purchaser at such sale takes the property subject to the lien of the prior mortgage, or subject to the right of the junior mortgagees to redeem, provided he has notice, either actual or constructive, of such encumbrances.

*126

Still, while there is no warranty at a judicial sale, yet if, when the purchaser is sued for the purchase money he can show that at the sale there were misrepresentations as to the thing sold, whether willful or not, he may set up such misrepresentations as a defense to the action. State v. Gaillard, 2 Bay 11 [1 Am. Dec. 628]; Means v. Brickell, 2 Hill 657; Adams v. Kibler, 7 S. C. 58; Mitchell v. Pinckney, 13 S. C. 203.

The real question, however, in this case is, not whether the purchaser at a judicial sale can set up defects in the title, or encumbrances upon the thing sold, as a defence to an action for the purchase money, but whether one who has bid off property at such a sale will be compelled by the court to complete the contract of sale and accept a title to property encumbered by a prior mortgage, when the records showed at the time of the sale that such encumbrance had been removed.

Even in Rorer on Judicial Sales, where the rule of caveat emptor is applied to such sales much more vigorously than in this state, it is said in Section 150 that a purchaser at a judicial sale cannot be compelled to complete the sale if the title be defective, and the defect be discovered before the sale is consummated, "and, therefore, if a rule be made against him with a view to enforcing compliance with his bid, he may, on appearance thereto, have an order of reference to inquire into and report the state of the title to the property, and if the title prove to be doubtful and incurably defective, he will not be coerced into completion of the purchase." So, in 2 Jones on Mort., § 1645, it is said: "If there be a defect in the title, unknown to the purchaser at the time of the sale, the court will not ordinarily compel him to *take a deed and complete the purchase." Again, in Section 1648, this author says: "While the purchaser under a judicial sale submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court and may be compelled to carry out his contract, he is also entitled to the protection of the court in respect to the avoidance of the purchase, if, by reason of imperfection in the title or otherwise, he is freed from his agreement. He may apply for a reference to inquire into the title. * * * If the report be against the title, the purchaser may move to be discharged and for a return of his deposit and for costs." And again, in Section 1651: "Judicial sales must be conducted with the utmost fairness and * * * it will be set aside where the purchaser thought he was buying an absolute title to the land and not one subject to the first mortgage." If, however, the purchaser, at the time of the sale, knows of the defects in the title, or has the means of knowing of them, and fails to avail himself of such means, he cannot, afterwards, refuse to comply upon the ground of such defects. 2 Jones on Mort., § 1646.

*127

Applying these principles to the case under consideration, we think it clear that the Circuit judge was not in error in discharging the rule. The purchaser had a right to suppose from an examination of the records, and the respondent says under oath that she did suppose that the property was free from any encumbrance, and if, afterwards, it was made to appear that a prior mortgage, which appeared upon the records to be satisfied, was not, in fact, satisfied, it is manifest that the purchaser was misled by a resort to the very source of information to which the law invited her to look, and made her bid under a misapprehension induced by the misrepresentations spread upon the record. In such a case there is no ground upon which the powers of a Court of Equity could be invoked to compel her to complete the purchase, but, on the contrary, it would be altogether inequitable to require her to do so.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. *128

*(Case No. 1021.)

ADICKES v. LOWRY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Execution ⇐53; Judgment ⇐787.]

Land in possession of a vendee under a valid contract to purchase, cannot be sold as the property of the vendor under judgments which did not obtain liens until after the contract was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 129; Dec. Dig. ⟸53; Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1361; Dec. Dig. ⟸787.]

[2. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⟸50.]

Quere: If a debtor puts his land beyond the reach of his creditors by a contract which binds the vendee to apply the proceeds to the debts of the vendor, can the vendor rescind this contract without the consent of his creditors?

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. §§ 180, 488–490; Dec. Dig. ⟸50.]

[3. Execution ⟸280.]

L., in possession of land under bond for titles given by B., became the purchaser of B.'s interest in this land at sale under execution, and paid in part his bid, but failing to pay balance, the land was re-sold by the sheriff as the property of B., and purchased by A. In action by A. against L. for recovery of this land—Held, that L. was not estopped from claiming his rights under his contract with B.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 809; Dec. Dig. ⟸280.]

[4. Vendor and Purchaser ⟸232.]

Possession of land for four years and forbidding a sale, are sufficient to charge a purchaser with notice of claim to the land, and, no inquiry being made, of the nature of the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 540–545, 548–562; Dec. Dig. ⟸232.]

[5. Judgment ⟸252.]

Under a complaint which demands recovery of real property purchased at sheriff's sale, no judgment can be given for the unpaid balance of purchase money due at the date of the levy to the execution debtor under a contract by the defendant to purchase—the pleadings raising no issue as to the time when the purchase money was paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 441, 442; Dec. Dig. ⟸252.]

[6. Judgment ⟸779.]

The judgments could acquire no lien upon the land which was in possession of the vendee under his contract to purchase, nor could the unpaid balance of the purchase money be reached, as, before notice of any claim thereto, it had been paid out by the vendee under his contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1340, 1342; Dec. Dig. ⟸779.]

[7. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⟸7.]

The vendee being bound to apply the purchase money to the individual debts of the vendor, the contract operated as an equitable assignment in favor of the vendor's separate creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. ⟸7.]

[8. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⟸314.]

Quere: Would not separate creditors be entitled, in equity, to the separate assets of the debtor, and be preferred to creditors of a partnership of which the debtor was a member?

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hutzler Bros. v. Phillips, 26 S. C. 149, 1 S. E. 502, 4 Am. St. Rep. 687; Blair v. Black, 31 S. C. 358, 9 S. E. 1033, 17 Am. St. Rep. 30.

For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. §§ 921–925; Dec. Dig. ⟸314.]

Before Wallace, J., York, November, 1879.

Action for recovery of land commenced June 17th, 1876, by H. F. Adickes, William McGill and Thomas McGill, against John T. Lowry and Fenton Diggs. The case may be found *reported in 12 S. C. 97. At the second trial the defendant was allowed to amend his answer, so that it might set up the defence of possession since January, 1872, under a contract then made for the purchase of the land in dispute here.

*129

To the case, as stated in the opinion, it is not necessary to add anything, except as follows: The receipts of Sheriff Glenn to J. T. Lowry, in December, 1873, were expressed to be "in part payment of J. R. Bratton's interest in a tract of land sold by me." William McGill testified that "Lowry told witness that he had paid, or would pay, $400, and come back in two weeks and he should have the last dollar of it." This witness was a plaintiff in one of the judgments against Allison & Bratton, and is also plaintiff here. Lowry testified that he might have said to McGill that he would get his money, as Allison had promised to pay $1000 on the judgments in the sheriff's office.

After the testimony was closed, the following special issues of fact were submitted to the jury, whose findings are given at the end of each question:

1. Was there a contract of purchase and sale of the land in dispute between J. R. Bratton and J. T. Lowry? Answer. Yes.

2. If there was a contract of purchase and sale, was there an agreement to rescind? Answer. Yes.

3. What amount of money was paid by J. T. Lowry for J. R. Bratton up to the sale of the land by the sheriff in 1873? Answer. $369. And what was the whole amount paid? Answer. $769.

4. What was the amount of the value of the yearly rent of the land? Answer. $40 per annum.

5. Was notice of claim to the land given by Lowry at the first sale in 1873? Answer. No.

The points raised by the exceptions, so far as they were considered by the court, are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. E. Spencer and J. S. R. Thomson, for appellants.

Messrs. J. F. Hart and G. J. Patterson, contra.

*130

*April 11th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McIVER, A. J. This was an action to recover possession of a tract of land, the title to which was claimed by both parties, through one J. R. Bratton, who was conceded to have been, at one time, the legal owner. The plaintiffs claimed as purchasers at sheriff's sale under executions against Bratton, and the defendant, Lowry, under a contract to purchase from Bratton, under which he went into possession and paid a part of the purchase money, prior to the time when the executions through which the plaintiffs' claim were levied on the land in question, the balance of the purchase money having been paid and a deed executed to Lowry after those executions had been levied, but before the sale by the sheriff. These executions were issued to enforce judgments obtained after the adoption of the code and prior to the amendment giving judgments a lien on real estate before levy.

A brief statement of the facts of this case will be necessary to a proper understanding of the questions arising under this appeal, referring to the "case" as prepared for argument here, for a full statement of the facts.

On October 15th, 1871, Bratton, being about to leave the state, requested Lowry to collect such claims as were due to him, pay his debts, amounting to some $1500, and, in the event of his not collecting enough to pay his debts, to sell the land in controversy. He afterwards, in the month of November or December of that year, wrote to Lowry proposing that he should take the land and pay the debts. This offer was accepted by Lowry, and, accordingly, on January 1st, 1872, he went into possession and has ever since remained in possession, making considerable improvements on the land. In June, 1872, Lowry, having paid a part, but not all of the debts, Bratton gave him a bond to make titles when all the debts should be paid. Subsequently, to wit, on April 30th, 1875, Bratton, having been furnished with satisfactory evidence that the debts above referred to had been taken up by Lowry, executed to him a deed for the land. It seems that Bratton, in addition to these debts, which were his individual debts, was also liable as one of the firm of Allison & Bratton for the debts of that firm, but as he had seen a statement, made out and certified by Allison, showing that the *partnership assets were more than sufficient to pay the partnership debts, he made no provision for them, and the arrangement with Lowry was made solely for the purpose of providing for his individual liabilities. Bratton also gave to Lowry on January 1st, 1872, a general power of attorney, which, among other things, provided that he should settle all claims against him in his individual capacity, but, doubtless for the reason above indicated, made no provision for his partnership liabilities. It turned out, however, that the partnership assets proved insufficient for the payment of the partnership debts, and various judgments were recovered against Allison & Bratton, among which are the judgments through which the plaintiffs claim, which were levied on the land in dispute in September and November, 1873. Under these levies the land was offered for sale in December, 1873, and bid off by Lowry at the sum of $1405. He, however, only paid $400 on his bid, and the land was resold by the sheriff in July, 1875, and bid off by the plaintiffs for $1000, who, having complied with the terms of sale, received a deed from the sheriff. It also appeared that at the time when the land was first offered for sale by the sheriff, Lowry had written to Bratton, asking him to release him from his agreement to purchase the land, on account of the proceedings against it by the sheriff. After the sale he got a letter from Bratton, saying: "If you will not carry out the contract, don't let the land be sacrificed." But there was no other evidence tending to show a rescission of the contract.

*131

All the issues in the action were, by consent, referred to the judge for trial, who, being informed that there would be conflict in the testimony, empaneled a jury to aid him in his findings of fact, as in cases of chancery. Various issues of fact were submitted to the jury and their findings are set out in the "case." The Circuit judge held that there was a valid contract of purchase and possession under it by Lowry prior to the time when the executions through which the plaintiffs claim were levied; that this contract had never been rescinded, and that Lowry had thereby acquired such an interest in the land in question prior to any liens that could have attached to it as prevented it from being taken under executions against Bratton. He, therefore, dismissed the complaint. To this judgment various exceptions *were taken which we do not propose to consider in detail, inasmuch as we think that the real issue in this case lies within a very narrow compass.

*132

It is too clear for argument under the authority of Massey v. McIlwain, 2 Hill's Eq. 421, which was recognized and affirmed when this case was heard in this court before, (Adickes v. Lowry, 12 S. C. 97,) that if Lowry was in possession of the land under a valid contract to purchase before the judgments through which the plaintiffs' claim became a lien, the plaintiffs cannot recover the land unless this contract had been rescinded prior to the time when the sale under which the plaintiffs' claim was made, or unless there is something in the case to estop Lowry from setting up his equity.

The Circuit judge has determined, and we fully concur with him, that there was no rescission of the contract. The most that can be said is, that there were negotiations looking to that end, but the possession was not surrendered by Lowry, nor was that part of the purchase money which had been paid, refunded. But even were the evidence of rescission stronger, it would be a very grave question whether the parties could rescind the contract without the consent of the creditors of Bratton, for whose benefit it was manifestly made. If Bratton, by this contract, had put this land beyond the reach of his creditors, with the declared purpose of applying the proceeds of the sale to the payment of his debts, and had contracted with the vendee so to apply the purchase money, it might admit of serious question whether he could, afterwards, without the consent of such creditors, annul the contract which was really made for their benefit.

We will next inquire whether there is anything in the case by which Lowry is estopped from setting up the defence relied upon by him. The fact that Lowry bid off the land at the first sale by the sheriff cannot operate as such estoppel, for the plaintiffs, so far from being injured, were rather benefited by this act of Lowry's, inasmuch as the amount paid by him on his bid was applied to the reduction of the liens upon the property, to which they looked for the payment of their debts. It seems to us, therefore, that aside from the fact testified to by Lowry, that he bid off the land at the sale in 1873 under a mistaken idea that *he could not hold it under the bond for title, his bidding off the land at that sale cannot have the effect of estopping him from setting up his rights under the bond for title after he was better informed. So, too, as to the receipts taken from the sheriff on account of his bid, stating that the money paid was for Bratton's interest in the land. The sheriff can only sell the interest of the defendant in execution, and if the defendant has no interest then the purchaser takes nothing. It does not, by any means, follow that, because a person bids off at sheriff's sale property to which he has a claim, he thereby waives or abandons his previous claim. He may do this for the purpose of quieting his title and avoiding litigation, and in pursuit of this purpose he may, as in Davis v. Hunt, 2 Bail. 412, buy his own land and be compelled to pay for it.

*133

Nor do we think that what occurred between Lowry and McGill, after the first sale, can operate as an estoppel; for it is susceptible of the explanation given by Lowry, and while it is true that there is conflict of testimony as to this matter, we certainly cannot base a judgment of reversal upon a fact about which there was a conflict of testimony. But in addition to this, McGill, though examined as a witness, does not pretend to say that he was induced by what had passed between himself and Lowry in 1873, to buy the land at the sale in 1875.

Neither can it be said that Lowry is estopped by his failure to give notice of his claim at the last sale, for the Circuit judge has found, as matter of fact, that "Lowry gave public notice of his purchase and claim," and while the evidence is somewhat conflicting as to what exactly occurred at the sale, we think we are bound to adopt the conclusion reached by the Circuit judge, as there certainly is evidence to sustain it. But in addition to this, Lowry's possession for more than four years was sufficient notice. Besides, Lowry forbid the sale, and this, as was held in Reeves v. Sims, 10 S. C. 308, was sufficient notice. Even if the fact be, as testified to by the sheriff, that Lowry claimed the land under his deed, and said nothing about the bond for titles, that does not negative notice to the purchaser that Lowry claimed the land. If it had appeared that the plaintiffs, upon receiving notice of this claim, which they were bound to inquire into, had *made inquiry, and Lowry had concealed from them the facts that he made a contract to purchase the land more than four years before, under which he had, ever since, retained possession, had received a bond for titles, and, having paid all of the purchase money, had obtained the deed which the sheriff says he exhibited to him, then the case would have presented a very different aspect. But there is not the slightest evidence that the purchasers made any inquiry at all, and they must take the consequences of their failure so to do; for, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we are bound to assume that, if they had prosecuted such inquiry, they would have learned all these facts and saved themselves from buying property to which they could get no valid title. It is very clear, therefore, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the land sued for.

*134

It is contended, however, that if the plaintiffs cannot recover the land, they have an equity to subject, to the payment of their judgments, so much of the purchase money as remained unpaid at the time their executions were levied on the land, whereby, as they claim, they acquired a lien on the land.

The first difficulty which the plaintiffs must encounter in endeavoring to maintain this position is, that unless their pleadings are framed in such a way as to enable them to demand this kind of relief, they cannot obtain it. The complaint is not set out in the "case," but, from what is said of the nature of it, we infer that it is in the ordinary form of a complaint to recover possession of real estate, and that it does not state such facts as would be necessary to entitle the plaintiffs to a judgment that the unpaid portion of the purchase money should be subjected to the payment of their debts. For while it is true that a plaintiff is not confined to the particular relief demanded in his complaint, yet he can only obtain such relief as is appropriate to the case made by his pleadings and sustained by his proofs; and if, as we understand the fact to be, the complaint in this case contains only the usual allegations of a complaint to recover possession of real estate, it does not state such facts as would entitle the plaintiff to a judgment subjecting the unpaid purchase money to the payment of their claims. Nor do we see how the defence set up by the answer can, in this respect, supplement the allegations of *the complaint; for the answer, as amended, sets up title in defendant under a deed dated prior to the sale under which plaintiffs claim, though subsequent to the levy of the executions under which such sale was made, which deed was, however, made in pursuance of a contract of sale and possession thereunder, prior in date to the levy of the executions. Whether the purchase money had been fully paid prior to the levy of the executions, does not appear from the pleadings, and no issue as to that fact is presented, either in the complaint or answer, or in both combined, and this, unquestionably, is an issue, the determination of which would be essential to this claim on the part of the plaintiffs.

*135

But even if this difficulty were out of the way, it seems to us that the plaintiffs would encounter several obstacles to the successful maintenance of their position. The first obstacle is, that if there was a valid contract of sale by Bratton to Lowry, under which the latter went into possession and paid a part of the purchase money, the plaintiffs could not acquire a lien upon the land as against Lowry. All that they could do would be to assert their equity to subject the unpaid purchase money in the hands of Lowry to the satisfaction of their debts, or reach the unpaid purchase money in the hands of Lowry by proceedings supplementary to the execution, under the provisions of the code. But if Lowry, before notice of such claim, had paid over the purchase money to Bratton, or applied it according to his order to the payment of his debts, even this remedy of the plaintiffs would be lost. In this case there certainly was no evidence of any notice to Lowry of any such claim before he had paid over the purchase money, for the plaintiffs were making a totally different claim against Lowry—a claim for the land—and no claim of this kind seems ever to have been asserted by the plaintiffs until the case reached this court.

Another obstacle would be that, under the contract between Bratton and Lowry, the latter was bound to apply the purchase money to the payment of Bratton's individual debts, and that this operated as an equitable assignment in favor of that class of Bratton's creditors, and placed the purchase money beyond the reach of other creditors, is, we think, fully shown by the cases *cited by the counsel for the respondent. Prime v. Yates, 2 Tr. Const. R. 770; Dargan v. Richardson, Cheves 197; Shubar v. Winding, Cheves 218; Tennant v. Stoney, 1 Rich. Eq. 222 [44 Am. Dec. 213]; Walker v. Arthur, 9 Rich. Eq. 397.

*136

But even if this were not so there would still remain the very important and interesting question, whether the separate creditors of Bratton would not have, in equity, a preference over the partnership creditors to the separate assets of Bratton. From what is said in the case of Kuhne v. Law, 14 Rich. 26, this question seems yet open in this state, notwithstanding the decisions in Wardlaw v. Gray, Dud. Eq. 112; Fleming v. Billings, 9 Rich. Eq. 149; Gadsden v. Carson, 9 Rich. Eq. 257 [70 Am. Dec. 207]; Wilson v. McConnell, 9 Rich. Eq. 510; which, however, seem to have ignored the previous cases of Woddrop v. Ward, 3 Desaus. 203; Sniffer v. Sass, reported in a note to 14 Rich. 20.

But inasmuch as this question was not raised in the court below and has not been argued here, we do not propose to enter upon a consideration of it now, as it is not necessary to the decision of this case that it should now be determined.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 136

(Case No. 1022.)

SMITH v. GRANT.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Appeal and Error ⇐1008.]

Where a jury case is submitted by consent to the Circuit judge to be decided by him, his judgment, dismissing the complaint, is, in effect, a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3955–3960, 3962–3969; Dec. Dig. ⇐1008.]

[2. Appeal and Error ⇐1176.]

If, in such case, this court finds error of law in the decision of the Circuit judge, it will declare the error and remand the case for correction, but cannot order an original judgment for the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Kennedy v. Adickes, 37 S. C. 178, 15 S. E. 922.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4588–4596; Dec. Dig. ⇐1176.]

[3. Wills ⇐836.]

A devisee is the legal owner of the lands devised, and has as full power of alienation as had the testator himself, subject only to the rights given to creditors by the statutes 3 and 4 W. & M., c. 14, and 5 Geo. II., c. 7. These statutes and the cases thereunder considered.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Small v. Small, 16 S. C. 71; Earle v. Harrison, 18 S. C. 337; Galloway v. Galloway, 76 S. C. 526, 57 S. E. 528.

For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2139, 2140, 2150–2155; Dec. Dig. ⇐836.]

*137

[4. Bankruptcy ⇐196.]

*After judgment obtained by A against executors upon a debt of their testator, a devisee of land under the will, who was also one of the executors, filed his petition in bankruptcy and included in his schedules this land, and also as debts for which he was liable, the judgment of A and a debt due by his testator to B. By order of the Bankrupt Court but without notice to B this land was sold and the proceeds applied to A's judgment. Held, that the bankruptcy proceedings were a bona fide alienation, and the sale thereunder transferred a good title, notwithstanding B had recovered judgment against the executors before such sale was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 308; Dec. Dig. ⟸196.]

[5. Wills ⟸836.]

The alienation must be bona fide and before action brought against the devisee to charge the lands devised, but knowledge by the devisee of a debt of his testator does not invalidate the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Warren v. Raymond, 17 S. C. 197.

For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 2139, 2140, 2150–2155; Dec. Dig. ⟸836.]

[6. Deeds ⟸17.]

Payment of debts for which the devisee, as such, is liable, is a sufficient consideration to support an alienation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 26–37; Dec. Dig. ⟸17.]

[7. Descent and Distribution ⟸126.]

[Cited in Fogle v. St. Michael Church, 48 S. C. 94, 26 S. E. 99, to the point that at common law the heir was not liable for the debts of the ancestor, except by bonds and specialties, wherein there was a stipulation binding the heirs, and then only to the extent of the lands descended, but the devisee was not liable even to the extent of lands devised.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 466–469; Dec. Dig. ⟸126.]

[8. Trial ⟸162.]

[Cited in Summer v. Kelly, 38 S. C. 512, 17 S. E. 364; Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co., 52 S. C. 226, 29 S. E. 655, to the point that there is no particular time in the trial of a case when a motion for nonsuit must be made.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 370; Dec. Dig. ⟸162.]

[This case is also cited in Stackhouse v. Wheeler, 17 S. C. 91, and distinguished therefrom, and in Hendrix v. Seaborn, 25 S. C. 485, 60 Am. Rep. 520, as to definition of "alienation."]

Before Fraser, J., Georgetown, March, 1880.

This action was commenced March 8th, 1879, by E. B. Smith against James E. Grant, for the possession of a tract of land known as Richmond Hill, and for damages. The answer was a general denial. By consent a trial by jury was waived and all issues of fact and law were to be tried by the court, "whose decision shall be given in writing, and have the full force and effect of a verdict by a jury."

The following is the judgment of the Circuit Court:

This case was heard by me at the term of the Court of Common Pleas for Georgetown county, held in March, 1880. It is an action for the recovery of real estate, and, by consent of counsel in writing, was heard by the court without a jury. The facts are these: The action was brought for the recovery of a tract of land, described in the complaint as situated in Georgetown county, "on Waccamaw river, known as Richmond Hill Plantation," containing two hundred acres of rice land, more or less, and six hundred acres of upland, more or less, bounded, &c. Both parties claim through John D. Magill, the elder, who died in the latter part of 1863, leaving a will, in which John D. Magill, the younger, and William J. Magill, were appointed executors, and by which will the said plantation was devised to John D. Magill.

The testator owned, at his death, other real estate and some *personalty. There were two specialty creditors of the testator—the Bank of Charleston and Charles Betts—whose claims were sued to judgment against the executors. The Bank of Charleston recovered judgment on April 3d, 1868, for $7009.50, and costs. Charles Betts recovered judgment June 29th, 1869, for $1120, and costs. Execution was issued on the first of these judgments at its date; on the other, June 30th, 1869. There were also two creditors of the testator by simple contract, but their claims were not put into judgment. At this point the Bank of Charleston and Charles Betts pursued different remedies for the collection of their claims. The plaintiff claims under the latter, the defendant under the former. On September 16th, 1868, John D. Magill, the devisee of the Richmond Hill plantation, and one of the executors of testator's will, was, on his own petition, adjudicated a bankrupt. About this time William J. Magill, the other executor, was also, on his own petition, adjudicated a bankrupt. Robert E. Fraser was appointed assignee of both estates. In the schedule of John D. Magill is included the Richmond Hill plantation, with the remark, "inherited from my father, the late John D. Magill." In the schedule of debts of John D. Magill is included the two specialty debts of the testator, and three debts due by the bankrupt; one of which is a bond for $5000, due to Susan and Caroline Shields, secured by a mortgage of Richmond Hill plantation, executed by the bankrupt. In reference to the debt due by the testator to the Bank of Charleston, it is stated in the schedule that the same is in judgment against the executors; and in reference to the other debts of the testator, it is stated that the bankrupt is presumed to be liable as one of the executors of the estate. After these proceedings in bankruptcy were commenced, a petition was filed in the Bankrupt Court by the Bank of Charleston for the use of E. M. Beach, assignee, in the matter of the bankrupt estate of John D. Magill and William J. Magill, asking the court to set up the judgment above referred to obtained against the executors as a lien on Richmond Hill plantation and other property of the testator.

*139

After reference the register in bankruptcy made a report, that the said judgment was "a valid and subsisting lien" on all the property of testator, and that it had priority over all others. On *this report an order of sale was made on June 18th, 1869, for the sale of all the property included in the schedules, and known as a part of testator's estate, and for the payment of this judgment of the Bank of Charleston. Two orders were subsequently obtained in the Bankrupt Court, one by Messrs. Simonton & Barker, and one by Messrs. Porter & Conner, attorneys for "other creditors," modifying the terms and time of sale. There is no evidence before me to show who were those "other creditors;" and there is no evidence before me to show that either Charles Betts or Susan or Caroline Shields were made parties to this petition of the Bank of Charleston, or in any way consented to the proceedings. Four creditors of the testator were named in the schedule of John D. Magill and four of his individual creditors, and the receipt of the marshal for eight notices served by him, may be taken as notice of the application of the bankrupt for his adjudication as a bankrupt and discharge, as to all who were named in the schedule as creditors. Under the order of sale and modifications above referred to, a sale was made by the assignee, R. E. Fraser, after due advertisement, of Richmond Hill plantation and other property, on November 15th, 1869. At this sale the Richmond Hill plantation was purchased by Robert Chisholm, and conveyed to him the same day by the assignee. Upon the assignee's report of sales the same was confirmed, and an order passed that the net proceeds be paid to the judgment of the Bank of Charleston. Charles Betts purchased at a sale in May, 1869, from the assignee, one gray horse at $75; but it does not appear by any evidence that he received from the assignee anything on account of his claim against the testator's estate. Robert Chisholm conveyed to William J. Magill February 13th, 1872. William J. Magill conveyed to James E. Grant, the defendant, in July, 1874. After these proceedings in the Bankrupt Court, under which defendant claims, Charles Betts issued a summons, had the same served on W. J. Magill, one of the defendant executors in his judgment, and obtained from the Court of Common Pleas for Georgetown county, of date April 4th, 1878, an order "that the execution set forth in the summons be renewed, revived and continued against the defendants, according to the force, form and effect of the former *recovery."† Under this order an execution was issued, dated April 18th, 1878, in which the judgment of Charles Betts against the executors was properly recited, except as to the date of the judgment, which was June 29th, and not June 30th, 1869; and the sheriff was commanded to "satisfy the said judgment and his fees out of the personal property of the defendant within his county, or if sufficient personal property cannot be found, then out of the real property in his county belonging to such defendants, in whose hands soever the same may be." In reciting the judgment, it is described as a judgment rendered between Charles Betts, plaintiff, and W. J. Magill and John D. Magill, executors of John D. Magill, deceased, defendants, in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, for the sum of $1120, as appears by the judgment-roll. On the original execution was endorsed, "Renewed by order of court April 4th, 1878." On the renewal execution above described was endorsed, "Levied on Richmond Hill plantation 11th Nov. 1878," which was signed by the sheriff. On January 6th, 1869, Richmond Hill plantation was, after due advertisement, sold by the sheriff and bid off by E. B. Smith, the plaintiff, executor of Charles Betts, for $1120. E. B. Smith paid the costs, and gave receipt for the balance of the purchase money, and on January 14th, 1879, the sheriff conveyed to him Richmond Hill plantation. It was admitted that James E. Grant went into possession in July, 1874, and has continued in possession until the commencement of this action. The rental of the premises was worth $100. These are the facts which seem to me to be material to the case.

*139

*140

The plaintiff in this case must show that his chain of title is good, and also that the defendant, who claims by an older title from the common source, is not in under a good title. The plaintiff, so far as the facts have been made to appear to me, has proceeded regularly until the issuing of the execution of April 18th, 1878. The first execution in this case was dated June 30th, *1869, and the judgment under which it issued was dated the day before, viz., June 29th, 1869. The execution had, therefore, lost its active energy, and could not be renewed as a matter of course, when the proceedings were instituted, under which the execution was issued under which the land was sold. Under the practice before the code, it was allowable either to bring an action of debt on the judgment or to revive by scire facias. In either there was a judgment, and under this judgment a new writ of execution was issued. The proceedings did not, in either case, give new life and energy to the old execution, but a new precept to the sheriff was necessary. By Section 306 of the code, all executions on judgments then existing, or thereafter to be obtained, are to be issued in conformity to the code. By the act of 1873, page 499, Section 15, the mode of renewing executions is prescribed, and, as I construe the section, upon failure to show cause after service of a summons,

*141

† It should be noted here that Charles Betts and John D. Magill, the bankrupt, both died before the proceedings for renewal of the Betts execution, which was renewed at the instance of E. B. Smith, the executor of the estate of Charles Betts, against William J. Magill, the surviving executor defendant, of the estate of John D. Magill, the elder.

the plaintiff may obtain an order to renew the execution. While this section seems to operate directly on the execution, and not indirectly by reviving the judgment, as formerly, I do not see how it can be so construed as to give new life and energy to an old execution which had become dormant. The meaning of the word "renew," I take it, is to issue a new execution under the seal of the court, under the authority of the order to renew, and that the mere entry of the word "renewed" on the old execution cannot have the effect of giving it new life and active energy, though its lien may be preserved. If this view is correct, then the only authority of the sheriff to sell was derived from the execution issued under the order to revive, and under which the sale was made. The well-established rule is, that the judgment must authorize the execution or it will be void. Freem. on Executions, § 43. The original judgment in this case authorized the collection of the debt out of the assets of the testator. The execution under which the sale was made authorized the collection out of the individual property of the executors. The execution said nothing about the levy on the goods or lands of the testator. Subdivision 2 of Section 312 of the code, directs that when a levy is to be made of real and personal property in the hands of personal representatives, * * * it shall require the officer to satisfy the judgment out of such prop*erty. If an execution issued against property of individuals under Subdivision 1, could authorize a levy of property of a decedent under Subdivision 2, I do not see any reason for these distinctions in the different Subdivisions of that section, or why an execution against the property under Subdivision 1 would not justify an arrest of the person under Subdivision 3. It is true that the defendants are styled "executors," but this has been held, time and again, to be a mere "descriptio personæ." Beazley v. Dunn, 8 Rich. 346; Ab. Forms 140, note; Olmstead v. Vredenburgh, 10 How. Pr. 217.

*142

There may have been a good reason for establishing such a rule, though I cannot see now any valid reason for retaining it, and it seems to be against the whole spirit of the code. It is not the practice in these days to add any words of description to the names of parties to an action who are sued individually; and it seems to me that such words ought to be held to show the character in which the defendant is sued. Yet I do not think that I am at liberty, in the face of these cases, to hold this to be any other than an execution against the executors individually.

Besides this, the judgment described in this execution bears date June 30th, 1869; and the judgment offered in evidence as the foundation of these proceedings, bears date June 29th, 1869, and may or may not be the same. If these views be correct, then the plaintiff's case fails.

I will therefore dispose very briefly of the defendants' title, as it is perhaps better to rule on all the points which may be material to the case.

It is claimed that John D. Magill, who was adjudicated a bankrupt, and who puts this tract of land on his schedule, was a devisee of the testator; that the debt under which the land was sold by order of the Bankrupt Court constituted a lien, and that court had a right to sell it for the purpose of extinguishing the lien; and that the transfer of title to the assignee in bankruptcy amounted to an alienation, such as is contemplated by 3 and 4 W. & M., and which is sufficient to protect the purchaser who holds under it. I take it to be law that the heir or devisee holds real estate descended or devised as assets of the deceased, and subject to the payment of his debts, with full power of bona fide *alienation before action, which belonged to the executor or administrator before the power of sale was restrained by statute. If the sale was for value, and without any circumstances to show a misapplication of the fund, the purchaser is protected and the fund may be followed. The presumption is, when a fair sale is made or money raised on mortgage which is foreclosed, that it is for the purpose of the trust. This does not give a right to use it for the payment of individual debts of the heir, devisee or personal representative, or to execute an assignment to another, who is to assume his duties on the payment of the decedent's debts. There should be not only a complete conveyance of the legal title, but there should be some such new consideration passing to the heir, devisee or personal representative as will, of itself, raise the presumption that the transfer of title is for the purpose of the trust. 2 Bl. 244; Richardson v. Chappell, 6 S. C. 158; Rhame v. Lewis, 13 Rich. Eq. 296; Warren v. Raymond, 12 S. C. 9; Lanier v. Griffin, 11 S. C. 566.

*143

Now, the transfer of title to the assignee in this case was for no new consideration, such as would impress upon the transaction the character of a sale for the purposes of the trust. If I am correct in this view, that the land was held as a trust with a power of sale, the devisee, John D. Magill, had no power to transfer this power, either directly or indirectly, to another; and in this respect his power over the assets is analogous to the power of the personal representative over the choses in action which he may sell or alien bona fide. Rhame v. Lewis, supra. If, then, the devisee stood in relation to this land as a trustee, there was no such lien as the Bankrupt Court had a right to foreclose by sale. In this view there was no more jurisdiction over the subject matter than there would be over the choses in action of an estate which a personal representative should see fit to include in his schedule in bankruptcy. In one aspect of this case, perhaps the Bankrupt Court could have ordered a sale and made good title under it. The bond of Susan and Caroline Shields for $5000, which was the individual debt of John D. Magill, the devisee, was secured by a mortgage of the "Richmond Hill Plantation;" and I am not prepared to say that a sale under this mortgage, by the Bankrupt Court, would not have perfected the *title. But the only party known to this proceeding under which the sale was made, was the Bank of Charleston. There is nothing to show who were the "other petitioners" or other creditors, represented by Messrs. Porter & Conner, and Simonton & Barker. There is no evidence that Charles Betts was in any way made a party to this proceeding, or that Susan and Caroline Shields were served with notice or were in any way represented in the case. The assignee had no power to sell property under lien without an order of the court, made at the instance of or with due notice to the lien creditor. As no such notice appears in the case, I do not think the title of the defendant is in any way strengthened by the fact that Susan and Caroline Shields, who were individual creditors of the bankrupt, held a mortgage of the Richmond Hill plantation. I have already said, however, that in my view of this case the plaintiff has failed on account of the insufficiency of the execution under which he holds, to connect him with the judgment on his sealed note against the testator.

*144

It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the complaint be dismissed, with costs.

Plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Joseph T. Walsh, for appellant.

Mr. Richard Dozier, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action for the possession of a plantation in Georgetown county, known as "Richmond Hill." A trial by jury was waived, and the case was heard and decided by Judge Fraser. The facts are somewhat complicated, but are so clearly stated in the Circuit judgment that it is unnecessary to repeat them here, except so far as to make this opinion intelligible. The plantation originally belonged to John D. Magill, Senior, under whom both parties claimed. He died in the latter part of 1863, leaving a will, in which John D. Magill, Junior, and William J. Magill were appointed executors, and by which the said plantation was devised to John D. Magill, Junior, and, *we suppose, went into his possession, soon after his father's death. Two judgments upon debts of the testator were afterwards recovered against the executors.

*145

On April 3d, 1868, the Bank of Charleston recovered judgment for $7009.50.

On June 29th, 1869, Charles Betts recovered judgment for $1120.

The plaintiff claimed Richmond Hill under a sale by the sheriff January 6th, 1879, by virtue of a renewed execution in the case of Charles Betts, insisting that Charles Betts, as a creditor of John D. Magill, Senior, by judgment obtained against his executors after his death, had the right to sell the land devised by the debtor, the father, to his son, wherever the officer might find it, in the possession of the son, or of any other person.

The defendant claimed under a sale made in bankruptcy in the manner following: In 1869 John D. Magill, devisee in possession of Richmond Hill, went into bankruptcy, and included the plantation in his schedule. The assignee in bankruptcy sold it. The sale was confirmed, and the proceeds paid to the judgment of the Bank of Charleston, which had been proved as the oldest lien against John D. Magill, Senior, in the bankrupt proceedings in the matter of John D. Magill, Junior. In the schedule of debts of John D. Magill are included the two specialty debts of the testator above referred to. In reference to the debt due the Bank of Charleston, it is stated in the schedule that the same is in judgment against the executors. At the assignee's sale, Robert Chisholm purchased Richmond Hill and conveyed it to W. J. Magill, and he to James E. Grant, the defendant, February 13th, 1872, who is still in possession. The defendant insisted that a creditor having recovered judgment against the executors of John D. Magill, Senior, after Richmond Hill had gone into the absolute and exclusive control of John D. Magill, Junior, the devisee, could not buy and sell it without an action against him as devisee; but that if he could, the assignment and sale in bankruptcy amounted to a bona fide alienation by the devisee before action brought against him, and Charles Betts could not follow the land thus alienated by the devisee. He also insisted that the renewed execution upon the judgment *of Charles Betts, under which the plaintiff purchased, was fatally defective, and for that reason the sheriff's deed conveyed no title.

*146

Judge Fraser held that the plaintiff could not recover, the execution under which he purchased being fatally defective, and ordered the complaint dismissed; but he went on and held the other questions for the plaintiff, who, conceiving that the merits had been decided in his favor, filed no regular exceptions. He seeks now to correct the judgment as to the alleged irregularities in the form of the execution and to obtain from this court an order to enter judgment for him, the plaintiff, upon the following "questions made by plaintiff's appeal:"

"1. When a case, strictly a jury case, is submitted by consent to be heard by a judge as by a jury, can the judge, in the absence of a motion to that effect at the close of the plaintiff's testimony (and after the defendant has submitted his testimony), dismiss plaintiff's action or order nonsuit?

"2. Was the renewal execution in this case so materially defective as to render the sale and deed under the sale to the plaintiff void as being made without authority?

"3. Having found the material points of law and fact in favor of plaintiff, acting as a jury as well as judge, should he not have rendered a verdict for plaintiff?

"4. If the Supreme Court holds that the defects in the renewed execution are not fatal to plaintiff's title, can it not reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court wherein it dismisses the action only on account of said defects, and order judgment to be entered for plaintiff?"

In addition, however, to these interrogatories, there is an agreement in the case that all the questions made below may be heard in this court. We shall, therefore, consider the interrogatories as regular exceptions.

1. We do not know that there is in the trial of a case any particular time at which a nonsuit must be moved for. In a trial before a jury it is usually done when the plaintiff closes his testimony. This case was heard by the court. When the plaintiff closed his evidence the defendant made no motion for a nonsuit. The judge took the papers, and afterwards delivered his judgment, in which he ordered the complaint dismissed.

*147

If *the judge's decision must be regarded as strictly the verdict of a jury, it was, in effect, a verdict for the defendant; and the form in which it was made does not alter the case.

2. All the authorities agree that a purchaser at sheriff's sale is not required to look closely for mere irregularities in the forms of process under which property is sold, and the court is always reluctant to decide a case involving valuable rights upon such grounds. But, from the view taken of other questions, it will not be necessary to consider the alleged defect in the renewed execution.

3. An execution in proper form to authorize sale by the sheriff was necessary, especially in a case like this, where land in the possession of one man was to be sold to pay the debt of another. If the judge conceived that the sheriff held no such process, he could not have rendered a verdict or judgment for the plaintiff.

4. The appeal court in a law case has only authority to consider alleged errors of law, and has no right to order an original judgment for plaintiff. If the Circuit judge committed error in reference to the execution or otherwise, this court would perform the whole measure of its duty by declaring the error and remanding the case for correction below.

5. Judge Fraser decided that a devisee holds his devise as a trustee with power of sale for the creditors of the testator, and can make no bona fide alienation of the devise without new consideration, which must enure to the benefit of the testator's creditors; and that, therefore, the assignment and sale in bankruptcy of Richmond Hill for the benefit of the creditors of the devisee, including those of the testator, for which he had become liable, was not a bona fide alienation so as to place it beyond the reach of a judgment recovered against the executors of the testator. Was this error?

We do not think that, as a rule, the devisee holds his devise as a trustee for the creditors of the testator. He is the legal owner of the land, which is not charged with the testator's debts, and has the same right to sell as had the testator himself, subject only to the rights given to the creditors, by the statutes 3 and 4 W. & M., c. 14; Gen.

*148

Stat. 463; and that of 5 Geo. II., *c. 7; 2 Stat. 570. By the common law land was not liable at all for debts. Fieri facias only reaches goods and chattels. Levari facias reaches the profits of lands. A debt of itself gave the creditor no right to take land; but if the debtor made a specialty, and stipulated to bind "his heirs," &c., the heir was bound as by his own obligation. He was not answerable at all under an execution against the executor, but as of his own obligation he was bound to the extent of lands he inherited; the plea of riens per descent, if true, excused him. If he took land and aliened bona fide before action brought he was released, and stood as if he had received nothing by descent. This rule of making the heir liable for the obligation of his ancestor to the extent of lands received by descent did not include the case of a devisee. After the statute of wills it was competent for any one seized in fee to devise land, but the devisee was not bound to pay the debt of testator, even to the extent of lands received, for the double reason that he was not named in the bond of the debtor, and because the devise was in the nature of a direct conveyance; 3 Bl. Com. 418; Shep. Touch. 369; Hurls. on Bonds 103; 2 Jarm. on Wills 509; Drayton v. Marshall, Rice's Eq. 387 [33 Am. Dec. 84].

The law stood in this way for two hundred years, when a desire to enlarge the rights of creditors induced the statute of W. & M., putting a devisee on the same ground with an heir. This statute makes a devisee liable "in the same manner as the heir-at-law, notwithstanding the lands, tenements and hereditaments to him or them devised shall be aliened before action brought." By the fifth section the heir, as in regard of lands descending, which he has sold before any process was issued against him, such heir shall be accountable for such debt to the value of said lands so aliened, "saving that the lands bona fide aliened before action brought shall not be liable to such execution."

There was no other law upon the subject from W. & M., A. D. 1682, to 5 Geo. II., 1732, when parliament passed a law for the colonies, styled "An act for the more easy recovery of debts in the colonies," by which lands were made assets for the payment of debts. This statute provides that land shall be liable *to, and chargeable with, all just debts, and shall be assets for the satisfaction thereof, in like manner as real estate in England is liable for bonds, &c. It gives as to land "the like remedy and process" as before existed in reference to chattels.

*149

Under these statutes necessarily construed together important questions soon arose. It was difficult to reconcile the statute 5 Geo. II., with the doctrine that land descended to the heir or went direct to the devisee and was not assets in the hands of the executor for the payment of debts. The courts for a time hesitated, as will be seen by reference to the old rule of court as to what was necessary in a plea of plene administravit. 22d Rule of Court; Miller 414, 422; Ashe v. Drennis, 2 Bay 329. The most important of these questions were the following: As to when an execution against executors could levy and sell land devised or descended; and as to what was and what was not a bona fide alienation before the action brought, so as to place the lands beyond the reach of a judgment against the executors of ancestor.

It was early held that under the statute of 5 Geo. II., executors, whose duty it is to provide for debts, must have some qualified right to control lands, so far as creditors are concerned, and in that view it was decided "that under a fi. fa. against the executor lands in his possession to be administered might be sold, provided the fi. fa. directed levy of the lands, goods and chattels of the testator in the hands of the executor to be administered." D'Urphey v. Nelson, 1 Brev. 289; Martin v. Latta, 4 McC. 128; Gregory v. Forrester, McC.'s Eq. 318; Jones v. Wightman, 2 Hill 579; Rogers v. Huggins, 6 S. C. 359. It will not be necessary to consider this question here, for the reason that Richmond Hill had been transferred by the devisee, John D. Magill, Junior, before Charles Betts recovered his judgment; and possibly, for the additional reason that he was one of the executors of the testator's will. It has been held by this court that a devise to one who is also executrix, is leviable while it remains in her possession. Simons v. Bryce, 10 S. C. 354.

The important question in the case is, whether the proceedings in bankruptcy—the assignment and sale thereunder and the *application of the proceeds to the judgment of the Bank of Charleston—amounted to a bona fide alienation before action brought, under the statute of W. & M., so as to place Richmond Hill beyond the reach of the Betts judgment. In 1863, John D. Magill, Junior, got possession of his devise, when, probably, the personal property was sufficient to pay all the debts. The end of the war, with its disastrous results, came on. In March, 1866, he mortgaged Richmond Hill to the Misses Shields to secure a debt of his own. In April, 1868, after he had been in exclusive possession for some five years, upon his own application he was adjudged a bankrupt. In his schedule he included Richmond Hill, as "inherited from his father;" and among the debts were included that of Charles Betts and the judgment of the Bank of Charleston against the executors of his father.

*150

On February 6th, 1869, the assignment was made to R. E. Fraser, assignee; and on April 18th an order for sale was made in the Bankrupt Court. All this occurred before the judgment of Betts was rendered against the executors of John D. Magill, Senior; but the actual sale was not made until November, after Betts had recovered judgment.

Was this an alienation within the meaning of the statute? An alienation is the conveyance of an estate. The legal definition of the term is "the act by which the title to an estate is voluntarily resigned by one person and accepted by another, in the forms prescribed by law." 2 Bouv., § 1992; Simons v. Bryce, supra. John D. Magill, Junior, voluntarily went into bankruptcy and Richmond Hill was assigned for the payment of his debts, and those of his testator for which Richmond Hill was liable. As to the effect of that act, the bankrupt law declares "that as soon as said assignee is appointed and qualified, the judge, or when there is no opposing interest, the register shall, by an instrument under his hand, assign and convey to the assignee all the estate, real and personal, of the bankrupt, * * * and such assignment shall relate back to the commencement of said proceedings in bankruptcy, and thereupon, by operation of law, the title to all such property and estate, both real and personal, shall vest in said assignee, * * * and all his rights of action for property or estate, real and personal, and all his rights of redeeming such *property or estate shall, in virtue of the adjudication in bankruptcy and the appointment of an assignee, be at once vested in such assignee." Bump (6th ed.) 352. This was a transfer of all the title to the land which was in John D. Magill, Junior. If not so considered, the immediate result would be a conflict of jurisdiction. Southern v. Fisher, 6 S. C. 346.

*151

Was this transfer bona fide in the sense of the statute? No action had been brought against John D. Magill, Junior, as devisee; and we think the mere fact that the alienation was made through the forms of the Bankrupt Court, cannot change its character. He transferred property which was his own, not impressed with the character of any trust, but subject only to the rights of creditors given by statute. The defence of the purchaser from a devisee under the statute of W. & M., differs in several important particulars from the equitable defence of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. To sustain the latter plea according to principles of equity, the purchaser must be without notice, and the consideration must be valuable and actually paid. But under the statute of W. & M., which created the liability of the devisee, and must, therefore, be looked to as measuring its extent, the only conditions are that the alienation must be bona fide and before action brought.

"If the devisee shall alien or make over" the land without fraud, it may be with notice and upon a good consideration, such as marriage. Sprackman v. Timbrill, 8 Sim. 253; (11 E. Ch. 424); Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 124; (29 E. Ch.) In both these cases the settlement was made in consideration of marriage, and in both there was actual notice of the debts; but the provision made for their payment proved inadequate. Held, not sufficient to make the settlement fraudulent. In the latter case, Lord Langdale, master of the rolls, said: "I am of opinion that these circumstances thus barely appearing, do not afford any proof of fraud, or a want of bona fides in the execution of the settlement. The point decided is thus stated: 'A devised land to his son. The son, upon his marriage, settled the land upon his wife and children. Held, that the statute of 3 and 4 W. & M. does not charge the real estate descended or devised *with the creditor's debts, but makes the heir or devisee personally liable to the value of the land.'"

*152

No new consideration was necessary to support the alienation other than the payment of the debts for which the devisee, John D. Magill, Junior, was liable.

In our own late case of Warren v. Raymond, 12 S. C. 9, it was held that a mortgage to secure a debt of the devisee was a conveyance competent to work an alienation under the statute of W. & M., when the mortgagor was out of possession. In discussing this case, Willard, C. J., took occasion to explain the cases of Haynsworth v. Bischoff, 6 S. C. 159, and Richardson v. Chappell, Id. 146. In regard to the case last named, he says: "This court held that bona fide alienation by the devisee defeated the claims of creditors of the testator against the land devised; but the referee is inaccurate in stating that case as deciding that the alienee must show that the alienation was for valuable consideration and without notice, in order to come within the statute of 3 and 4 W. & M."

We may add another feature of that case analogous to this. One of the devisees who aliened was a qualified executor of the will of the testator, yet it was held that he conveyed as devisee, and that it was a bona fide alienation.

We conclude that the assignment of Richmond Hill in bankruptcy, by John D. Magill, Junior, as a devise to him by his father before judgment was rendered on the debt of Charles Betts and before action was brought against Magill as devisee, was an alienation in the sense of the statute: and that it was bona fide, notwithstanding he had notice of the debt of Betts, and there was no other consideration than the payment of his debts, including those of his testator, for which Richmond Hill was liable. This view is confirmed by the fact that the purchase money of the sale made by order of the Bankrupt Court, was applied to the judgment of the Bank of Charleston, which was the oldest lien upon the estate of John D. Magill, Senior, the deceased debtor, and had been recovered before alienation by the devisee.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. *153

*(Case No. 1023.)

STATE v. HOPKINS.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Criminal Law ⇨918.]

The statement of a juror on his voir dire in the hearing of the jury that "he had said he thought the prisoner was guilty and ought to be hung," and the volunteered opinion of a witness for the state from the stand that he would not believe the prisoner on his oath, are no grounds for a new trial of one convicted of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2163; Dec. Dig. ⇨918.]

[2. Clerks of Courts ⇨6; Criminal Law ⇨264.]

The prisoner was arraigned in open court, in the presence of the clerk, by one who had been appointed deputy clerk and was acting as such, although he had not formally complied with all the requisites of a legal appointment. Held, that the arraignment was valid.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. McGraw, 35 S. C. 289, 14 S. E. 630.

For other cases, see Clerks of Courts, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. ⇨6; Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 618; Dec. Dig. ⇨264.]

[3. Homicide ⇨286.]

While the law presumes malice from the mere fact of intentional killing, yet when all the facts are brought out, there is no room for presumption, and the state, who affirms the malice, must prove it. State v. Coleman, 6 S. C. 185, approved.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 235, 7 S. E. 296; State v. Ariel, 38 S. C. 224, 16 S. E. 779; State v. McDaniel, 68 S. C. 312, 47 S. E. 384, 102 Am. St. Rep. 661; State v. Rochester, 72 S. C. 201, 51 S. E. 685.

For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 590; Dec. Dig. ⇐286.]

Before Mackey, J., Chester, March, 1880.

Indictment against Scott Hopkins for murder. The case is fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Hamilton and J. J. Hemphill, for appellant.

Mr. Solicitor Gaston, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. The defendant, Hopkins, was indicted for the murder of James R. Stroud. C. C. Macoy was clerk of the court for the county of Chester, but the prisoner was arraigned and called upon to plead, and the jury were sworn and charged by G. W. Curtis, who was acting as deputy of the clerk, but, as it is alleged, without proper authority to perform these duties. Macoy had been clerk for more than one term. In May, 1876, he had appointed Curtis his deputy, but he had ceased to act as such. On March 8th, 1880, shortly before the trial of Hopkins, Macoy again appointed him deputy, and at the trial he acted as *deputy clerk, although the written appointment made had not been communicated to him, approved by the judge, or recorded. Macoy, the clerk, was present, superintending the arraignment, which was conducted by Curtis, acting as deputy.

*154

During the arraignment a juror, Lewis Burdett, was presented to the prisoner, and the solicitor had him to stand aside without peremptory challenge—the challenges allowed the state being exhausted. To this the prisoner objected, and the objection being overruled, he excepted. The juror was afterwards recalled and sworn by the prisoner.

J. F. Green, a juror, on his examination on his voir dire, said, in the presence of the panel, that he had said "Scott Hopkins was guilty and ought to be hung." The juror was excluded.

The facts, shorts and simple, were about as follows: Defendant went to Chester, to sell cotton. He sold to Gunhouse & Co. After the money had been placed upon the table for defendant, and he was in the act of putting it in his pocket, deceased, Stroud, came up and said: "You owe me $5.50, but I will take $5, and call it square;" and, retaining $5, moved towards the door. Defendant denied the debt, and protesting against deceased taking his money, caught him by the lower part of his vest. They then took hold of each other by the lapel of the coat. Deceased said twice, "let me loose;" and the second time he said this he struck defendant in the face, and about the same time the pistol was fired. The defendant claimed that the pistol was discharged from his pocket accidentally. The homicide occurred on the first Monday in March, 1880, and in a few days the prisoner was tried. The jury found a verdict of guilty. The prisoner's counsel moved for a new trial, and that being refused, he appeals to this court, upon the following exceptions:

"1. Because J. F. Green, one of the jurors of the panel, presented to the prisoner and examined upon his voir dire, if he had 'expressed or formed any opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner at the bar,' said, in presence of the whole panel of the jury, that 'he had said Scott Hopkins was guilty, and ought to be hung.'

"2. Because William McAlily, a witness examined in reply by the state, volunteered to say from the stand 'that he would *not believe Scott Hopkins on his oath,' when the character of said Scott Hopkins for truth and veracity was never put in issue. And, as matter of law outside the motion for a new trial, the said Scott Hopkins makes the following exceptions:

*155

"1. Because the said Scott Hopkins was arraigned for trial by George W. Curtis, an unauthorized person, and not the clerk or deputy clerk of the court, but being, at the time of such arraignment, the Probate judge of Chester county.

"2. Because his Honor charged the jury as follows: That if they found that Scott Hopkins caused the death of the deceased by the use of a deadly weapon, that they might infer malice from that fact, when the situation of the parties, the shortness of time and the circumstances occurring at the time of the killing rebutted every presumption of malice, and the charge of his Honor tended to mislead the jury on that point.

"3. Because, in the presentment of the juror, Lewis Burdett, the solicitor ordered the juror to stand aside without peremptory challenge or challenge for cause, which was objected to by accused and objection overruled by the court."

The first two exceptions are not well taken. On being examined on his voir dire the juror, Green, stated in emphatic terms, that he had formed and expressed an opinion, and, of course, he was excluded. The witness, McAlily, simply volunteered the statement that he would not believe Scott Hopkins on his oath.

The first exception as "to matter of law," charges that the prisoner was arraigned for trial by George W. Curtis, an unauthorized person, and not the clerk of the court. The law does not indicate any particular person to conduct an arraignment, the purpose of which is simply "to take care that the prisoner do appear to be tried, and hold up his hand at the bar for the certainty of the person, and plead a sufficient plea to the indictment." In practice it is usually, but not always, done by the clerk. The whole proceeding is under the immediate direction of the court. The plea is the important matter, and that is the act of the party himself.

The clerks' act (Gen. Stat. 174) provides that the "clerk may appoint a deputy, to be approved by the Court of Common Pleas, *a record of whose appointment shall be made in the clerk's office." George W. Curtis had been an old deputy of the clerk and was familiar with his duties. He was reappointed deputy for the March Term of the court for Chester, 1880, and in that capacity conducted the arraignment of the prisoner, Hopkins. The written appointment had not been given to Curtis, or approved by the judge, or recorded, but he acted as deputy in good faith, and the fact that all the requirements had not been complied with did not make void the acts done by him as deputy.

*156

"One in office and transacting its duties is supposed to be rightfully there, and, so far as third persons are concerned, that presumption legalizes his acts." State v. Hill, 2 Speers 160; McBee v. Hoke, Id. 138; Kottman v. Ayer, 3 Strob. 92.

"The authority of a judge de facto cannot be called in question collaterally. His title to the office can be considered only in some proceedings instituted for that purpose." State v. Anone, 2 N. & McC. 27.

Besides, the arraignment was, in fact, the act of Macoy, the clerk. Both Curtis and Macoy state that the latter was present. Macoy swears that "during the whole of the arraignment of the said Scott Hopkins for murder, the said Charles C. Macoy, as clerk aforesaid, was present conducting the said arraignment, and the said George W. Curtis, as deputy as aforesaid, only assisted the said clerk in the arraignment."

The second exception makes the objection that the judge committed error in charging as to the presumption of malice. He charged the jury, among other things, as follows: "In every case of intentional homicide the presumption of malice arises, and the fact of killing intentionally by the use of a deadly weapon being shown in any case, the burden of proof is thereby imposed upon the defendant to rebut such presumption, unless the facts and circumstances shown in the testimony in behalf of the state incidentally rebut it." There is no doubt whatever of the isolated proposition that the law presumes malice from the mere fact of homicide, but there are cases as made by the proof to which the rule is inapplicable. When all the circumstances of the case are fully proved there is no room for presumption. The question becomes one of fact for the jury, under the general prin*ciple that he who affirms must prove, and that every man is presumed innocent until the contrary appears. We cannot distinguish this case from that of State v. Coleman, 6 S. C. 185. In that case the facts were not contained in so small a compass nor as fully proved as they were in this. In that case the judge's charge was substantially, indeed almost identically, the same as in this, viz.: "That all homicide is presumed to be malicious and amounting to murder until the contrary appears from circumstances of alleviation, excuse or justification, and that it is incumbent on the prisoner to make out such circumstances to the satisfaction of the court and jury, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him." In that case the court set aside the verdict, and in the judgment express the view which we adopt as applicable to this case. The court says:

*157

"This presumption is not applicable when the facts and circumstances attending the homicide are disclosed in evidence so as to draw a conclusion of malice or want of malice, as one fact, from the evidence. Presumptions of this class are intended as substitutes in the absence of direct proof, and are in their nature indirect and constructive. The best evidence of the state of mind attending any act is what was said and done by the person whose motive is sought for. The motive that impels to the taking of human life is no exception to this rule, and the importance of the consequences that depend on the accurate ascertainment of its nature in such cases, affords the strongest ground for limiting indirect and constructive proofs to the narrow grounds within which they belong. * * * It appears, from the record before us, that the proofs embraced a statement of the origin of the difficulty between the parties: their conduct towards each other down to the time of the killing, and, to some extent, the subsequent conduct of the prisoner. When the evidence is of such a character, it must be presumed to be sufficient to enable the jury to draw from it a conclusion of fact one way or the other. Under such circumstances there was no necessity, and, therefore, no propriety, in resorting to any general presumption arising by operation of law. * * * When the circumstances preceding and attending an act of this character are full, as in the present case, the prisoner is entitled to the *benefit of any doubt that may arise, and cannot be deprived of such benefit by any presumption of guilt arising by operation of law from the naked fact of homicide. A charge may be erroneous, although the propositions of which it is composed may severally be conformable to recognized authority, if in its scope and bearing in the case it was likely to lead to a misconception of the law."

*158

The judgment below is set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 158

(Case No. 1024.)

PHINNEY v. JOHNSON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Dower ⇐63.]

Under judgment against an administratrix, who was also widow, the unimproved lands of the intestate were sold, and the purchaser erected thereon valuable buildings, after which the widow brought her action for dower. Held, that she was entitled to her dower of the lands so improved, and that it should be estimated according to the value of the premises at the time of assignment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 202; Dec. Dig. ⇐63.]

2. The question of the widow's estoppel by her laches to claim dower in the value of the improvements was adjudicated in her favor on the former hearing of this case. 13 S. C. 25.

[3. Dower ⇐56.]

But the widow being practically in possession of the bare lot until the sheriff's sale, and having forborne for a long time to assert her claim, interest was allowed only from the date of the possession by the last purchaser—the defendant here.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. § 179; Dec. Dig. ⇐56.]

Before Mackey, J., Fairfield, February, 1880.

Action commenced in the Court of Probate by Mary T. Phinney against William Johnson, for dower. The opinion states the case.

*159

*Mr. J. H. Rion, for appellant.

Mr. John S. Reynolds, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McGOWAN, A. J. James Phinney, the husband of respondent, died intestate May 31st, 1862, seized of a lot in the town of Winnsboro', containing one half acre. The widow administered upon the estate and sold the personal property. March 13th, 1868, the sheriff levied upon this lot under a fi. fa., on a judgment obtained against the administratrix, upon a debt of the intestate, January 21st, 1868. The sheriff sold the lot April 6th, 1868, for $400, and conveyed to Seigler March 8th, 1869. Seigler sold to W. R. Robertson for $600, and in May, 1869, he built on the lot a fine double storebuilding and other improvements, costing at least $3500. W. R. Robertson conveyed to Thomas R. Robertson, who sold February 2d, 1877, to William Johnson, the defendant, for $5000.

April 5th, 1878, this action was commenced in the Probate Court, which decreed dower. An appeal was taken to the Circuit Court and thence to the Supreme Court, where the judgment was affirmed and the case remanded to the Probate Court to determine the measure of respondent's dower.

It was admitted that the lot could not be divided, and that respondent's dower must be one-sixth in money. It was also agreed that the Probate judge, instead of commissioners, should allot dower. He assigned dower upon the value of the lot at the time of assignment, including all improvements ($4200), with interest from date of defendant's possession, February 2d, 1877. From this decision of the Probate judge both sides appealed. Judge Mackey affirmed the decree of the Probate Court, so far as related to the value upon which dower should be assessed; and modified the same as to the matter of interest, holding that respondent was entitled to interest upon the sum assessed from the date of her husband's death, 1862. From this decree the defendant appealed and submits several exceptions, which present to this court the following propositions: First. That the demandant is not entitled to dower in any improvements put upon the *land since the sale by the sheriff; but it should be assessed upon the value of the land either, 1st, at the time of the husband's death; or, 2d, at the time of the sale by the sheriff. Second. That she is estopped by her conduct, laches, delay, negligence, course of conduct as administratrix, and her silence while the improvements were being placed on the lot, from now claiming any share in said improvements. Third. That in any event the defendant is liable only for rents and profits (or interest in lieu thereof) only for the time he has been in possession.

*160

1. Is the demandant entitled to dower in the improvements placed upon the land after the sale by the sheriff? The general rule certainly is that a dowress is entitled to dower in the land as found at the time of assignment. This results from the very nature of the right, which is to be put in full possession of one-third part of the land itself, which carries everything on the land. The principle is not changed where a sum of money is assessed in lieu and bar of dower under the act which declares "when the same cannot be fairly and equally divided, without manifest disadvantage, then they shall assess a sum of money to be paid to the widow in lieu of her dower by the heirs-at-law, or such other person or persons who may be in possession of the said land." Gen. Stat. 530. This view is fully supported by authority as against the heir. In the case of Stewart v. Pearson, 4 S. C. 7, the court says: "The seizin in the premises by the husband during the coverture, and his death being admitted, we concur with the Circuit judge in holding that the dower is to be estimated according to the value of the land at the time of assignment. If, in lieu of the assignment to her of land, a sum of money is substituted or its value, we cannot perceive the reason which would refer such value to the time of his death." In 2 Scrib. on Dower 557, the authorities are cited, and the result stated, as follows: "It seems to be settled that if the heir, after the husband's death, improves the land and its value is thereby enhanced, the widow will be entitled to her dower of the lands so improved, without any allowance to the heir on account of his expenditures or labors."

But, admitting the general rule, it is insisted that there is an important exception, and that this case, in principle, falls within it. That exception is, "that the widow is not entitled to dower *according to the improved value of the land, in case of alienation by the husband." In such case there is a general concurrence of the authorities, that as to improvements the principle of betterments should be applied in favor of the purchaser. This just modification of the rule is as well-established as the rule itself, and in our state it has been embodied into the law of 1824, which provides "that on all assessments of dower against a purchaser in behalf of a widow of a former owner, the value of the land at the time of alienation by the husband, with interest from the accrual of the right of dower, shall be taken and received by the courts of this state as the true value on which to assess the said dower." Gen. Stat. 530.

*161

It is earnestly urged, and with much force, that this is not a case against the heir but a purchaser; that the purchaser here does not hold the title of the heir, but of the executor, which is paramount to that of the heir; and although the land was sold by the sheriff after the husband's death, the sale was substantially an alienation by the husband, not, of course, strictly and literally, but within the spirit and meaning of the act of 1824. At the time of the husband's death he was seized of the lot, and, upon that event, the title was cast upon his heirs, subject, however, to the payment of his debts. He was then in debt, and it was afterwards sold by the officer of the law as his property, under a judgment recovered upon a debt of his, without regard to the nominal title of the heirs. If the sheriff's sale had been in the lifetime of the husband, it would have been considered an alienation by the husband. "A purchaser under execution occupies the same position in regard to improvements made by him as if the premises had been conveyed by deed directly from the husband." 2 Scrib. on Dower 579, and authorities cited. It is not clearly perceived in what particular, as to improvements by the purchaser, a sale by the sheriff to satisfy a debt of the husband, made after his death, differs from one made for the same purpose before his death. But the words of the act are "alienation by the husband," and we cannot, in its face, extend the remedy it provides so as to include a case not within its terms, the sale by the sheriff being after the death of the husband. The court may desire to prevent a hardship, but its duty is plain not to *make but to declare the law. It is the province alone of the legislature to amend the law so as to make the terms include all cases which fall within the mischief intended to be remedied. This case not being within the terms of the act of 1824, it was not error to assign dower in the land as it was found at the time of the assignment.

*162

2. It is further contended that the plaintiff is estopped by her laches, conduct, delay, negligent course of administration and her silence, while the improvements were going up, from now claiming dower in those improvements. The doctrine of estoppel applies to claims for dower, (2 Scrib. on Dower 251–253); but we regard this question as res adjudicata by the former judgment of this court, which declared the right to dower. The same question was made there, "that the plaintiff, by her conduct, course of administration of her husband's estate, retaining the personal property and her silence while the improvements were being erected, is estopped in equity from claiming dower in the value of such improvements."

The judge of probate held that the petitioner herein has not, by any conduct upon her part, estopped herself from setting up her claim of dower, and that judgment was affirmed by this court, which declared that "the foundation of equitable estoppel is the ignorance of the party asking its benefit, induced by the conduct of the party against whom it is asserted. The Probate judge has found that the purchasers who successively took titles under the sheriff's deed, had knowledge of the existence of the petitioner's claim of dower in the land sold. In addition to this finding it must be assumed that the parties knew of the nature of the title they held, and consequently that the lands held by them were those of which the decedent died seized. Knowledge of the demandant's claim of dower is presumable from this fact. * * * The possession of the personal estate unadministered is immaterial to the present question. The appellant has no concern in the administration of the estate, as far as appears, and it is of no importance to him whether the estate was well or ill administered." We have held that the improvements go with the land, and the widow gets her share of their value as an incident to her right of dower. The whole question of estoppel, not only as to *the right of dower, but also as to the improvements, has been adjudged.

*163

3. It is still further contended that the plaintiff is not entitled to interest from the death of her husband upon the value of improvements not in existence until years after. We have seen that the widow is entitled to dower in the land as it is found at the time of assignment, because she is entitled to a third of the land itself. For the same reason she is entitled to the rents and profits of that land for the time she has been deprived of its use. Keith v. Trapier, Bail. Eq. 64; Mey v. Mey, Rich. Eq. Cas. 379; Woodward v. Woodward, 2 Rich. Eq. 23. But, as we understand it, that does not mean theoretical rents and profits upon the basis of the improved condition in which the land may be when dower is assigned, estimated retrospectively over the whole period back to the time of the husband's death, but the actual rents and profits for each year according to its then capacity to produce rents as to a portion of which the statute of limitations might be applied. When the widow is in possession of the land she is allowed one-third of rents, but must account for the other two-thirds. Gordon v. Stevens, 2 Hill's Eq. 429. When interest is given it is as a substitute for rents and profits, and it would seem to follow that the amount should be as nearly as possible in conformity with what an actual accounting for the different years would produce. But this is not practicable, and interest is adopted as a convenient substitute, but interest being the same each year, the Court of Equity (rents and profits are not given at law) being bound by no positive law on the subject, does not adhere to any fixed rule as to the time interest shall run, but gives interest according to the equities of the case. In Henagan v. Harllee, 10 Rich. Eq. 288, Chancellor Dunkin says: "In this court the widow, when right of dower is established, is also entitled to an account of the rents and profits. But the extent of the right may be modified and restricted, according to the circumstances of the case. In Bullock v. Griffin, 1 Strob. Eq. 60, the account was limited to the filing of the bill." Also, in the case of Henagan v. Harllee, supra, the court limited the account to the filing of the bill, partly, at least, as stated, upon *the ground that "the widow forbore to set up her claim until more than a year after testator's death." In the case at bar the widow forbore to set up her claim for fifteen years after intestate's death, and nearly ten years after the sale by the sheriff. From the death of her husband, in 1862, until it was sold by the sheriff, in March, 1868, the bare half-acre lot, in no condition to yield rents and profits, was practically in the possession of the widow administratrix as assets of her intestate, "to be administered," and we concur with the judge of probate, that she has no equity to have interest as a substitute for rents and profits of the improved value of the lot, charged against the defendant beyond "the time he has been in possession," viz., February 2d, 1877.

*164

As to the interest, the decree is modified according to the views herein expressed, and in all other respects it is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 164

(Case No. 1025.)

BEARD v. STANTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Trusts ⇐104.]

A married woman being entitled, under her father's will, to a certain sum of money for life, with remainder over, in the hands of B., executor, she and her husband petitioned the Court of Equity for the appointment of S. as trustee. S. was so appointed, "upon his giving bond, &c., and that upon the execution of said bond, the executor, B., be authorized to deliver to such trustee" this trust fund. S. never gave such bond, but received the trust money from B., and at once paid it over to the life-tenant, who was then on the eve of removing to Florida, where she died, in 1863. Held, that S. was not the trustee of an express trust, but was a trustee by construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 155; Dec. Dig. ⇐104.]

2. This case distinguished from Chaplin v. Givens, Rice's Eq. 154.

[3. Limitation of Actions ⇐102.]

The statute of limitations runs in favor of a trustee of a trust raised by operation of law, or a constructive trust, and is, therefore, a bar to this action, brought in 1878 by the remaindermen to recover from S. the money received from B.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 502; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

*165

[4. Limitation of Actions ⇐102.]

*If it were an express trust, the statute would be a bar, the office of trustee having been disavowed by the act of parting with the trust properly, and the cestuis que trust having knowledge of such disavowal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 505; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

[5. Limitation of Actions ⇐102.]

[Cited in Montgomery v. Cloud, 27 S. C. 191, 3 S. E. 196, to the point that an administrator is as to assets a quasi trustee, and as between him and the distributees the statute of limitations does not apply, except where he does some act purporting to be an execution of the trust.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 494–505; Dec. Dig. ⇐102.]

Before Hudson, J., Fairfield, September, 1880.

Action by James M. Beard, George F. Beard, Sarah E. Beard, Joel A. Beard, and

James M. Beard, administrator of W. W. Beard, against John D. Stanton. The case is fully stated in the opinion of this court.

Mr. J. H. Rion, for appellant.

Messrs. A. S. Douglas and H. A. Gaillard, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. About January, 1846, James Beard, late of Fairfield county, died, leaving a will, of which James M. Beard is the surviving executor. The legatees under the will were his children, James M. Beard, George F. Beard, Joel A. Beard, Sarah King, and W. W. Beard, deceased, the plaintiffs, and Elizabeth C. Stanton, deceased. The shares of the daughters, respectively, were limited to their sole and separate use for life, and, in default of issue, "to be equally divided among his other children." In 1851 Elizabeth C. intermarried with one Isaac Stanton, and January 12th, 1852, Isaac Stanton and Elizabeth, his wife, petitioned the Court of Equity for the appointment of John D. Stanton as trustee of the petitioner, Elizabeth. It does not appear that either the proposed trustee or any of the "other children," were made parties. The court passed an order that John D. Stanton be appointed trustee of the petitioner, upon his giving bond to the commissioner of the court, &c., conditioned for the faithful execution of the trust, and that upon the execution of said bond the executor, James M. Beard, be authorized to deliver to such trustee the portion in his hands to which the petitioner is entitled."

This order was never complied with, and the Circuit judge finds as a fact "that John D. Stanton never became, by order of *the court, trustee of said property, he having failed or refused to give the required bond and accept the office."

*166

But, notwithstanding such non-compliance, Stanton and wife being anxious to remove to Florida, James M. Beard, the executor, paid Mrs. Stanton's share of money (no question is made as to the negroes) to John D. Stanton, her husband's father, on November 24th, 1852, and took his receipt therefor in the words following:

"$1,314.91. Received of James M. Beard, executor of James Beard, deceased, the slave Esther, specifically bequeathed to Elizabeth C. Stanton by the will of James Beard. I have also received of said James M. Beard one thousand three hundred and fourteen 91-100 dollars in full of the balance due Elizabeth C. Stanton as legatee of the estate of James Beard, deceased.

(Signed) "John D. Stanton." [L. S.]

This money was received, it seems, with the view of paying it to Mrs. Stanton, the life tenant, who was, as stated, on the eve of removing to Florida, and a few hours after its receipt was so paid to her.

In 1863 Mrs. Stanton died without leaving issue, and September 4th, 1878, this action was commenced by the plaintiffs, remaindermen under the will, against John D. Stanton to account as trustee for the corpus of the legacy paid to Mrs. Stanton. Respondent answered, denying that he ever accepted the appointment of trustee, admitting that he received about $700 for Mrs. Elizabeth Stanton, but that he received the same as agent, and at once delivered it to her, and pleading the statute of limitations.

The case came on to be heard before Judge Hudson, who held that, although he never complied with the order of court appointing him trustee, John D. Stanton having received the property, with the knowledge that it was the legacy of his daughter-in-law, became trustee by operation of law and liable to account for the same, yet, as no disability existed on the part of the plaintiffs at that time or since, they were barred by the statute of limitations, Stanton having committed a breach of trust, as *far back as 1852, by paying to the life-tenant the whole corpus, and permitting her to carry it beyond the jurisdiction of the court; that this was an abandonment of his trust, of which the plaintiffs had notice, and for which they could have sued, certainly, at any time after 1863, when the life-tenant died. He dismissed the complaint.

*167

The plaintiffs appeal to this court upon the following exceptions:

"1. For that his Honor held that the act of John D. Stanton, in paying to the life-tenant the whole corpus of the estate, money and negroes, and permitting her to carry the same beyond the jurisdiction of this court, was a clear abandonment of his trust.

"2. For that his Honor held that plaintiffs have slumbered too long over their right of action against the defendant, and are barred by the lapse of time."

Upon the receipt of the legacy of his daughter-in-law by John D. Stanton, what relations existed between him and the plaintiffs, who had a remainder in the same, contingent upon the death of Elizabeth without issue? By receiving that legacy, did he become trustee for them as to that contingent interest, and if so, was that an express, or an implied trust? He did not accept the appointment of trustee, nor give the bond, upon the execution of which he was to be trustee and entitled to receive the legacy. He was then certainly not trustee under the appointment of the court. The executor, Beard, had no right to pay the money to Stanton until he had executed the bond and clothed himself with the trust. It does not change the legal effect of the transaction that Stanton, as the executor states, promised to perfect the appointment, and that the money was paid to him upon the faith that he would do so. The bond was not given. Stanton was not trustee by the appointment of the court, and his receipt was no discharge to the executor, who committed a breach of his trust when he paid the legacy of his sister, Elizabeth, to one not authorized to receive it, and which he knew would be immediately paid to her, then on the eve of removing to Florida. Clark v. Smith, 13 S. C. 585.

But, whilst John D. Stanton was not trustee under the appointment of the court, he received the money with the knowl*edge that it was part of the legacy of his daughter-in-law under the will of her father, James Beard, and that fixed upon him the responsibilities of trustee—not trustee by the act of the parties, but by operation of law—not an express, but a constructive trustee.

*168

It is laid down that "a person may also become a trustee by construction of law, where a trust is created, but if no trustee is appointed, or the trustee named is incapable of taking, or refuses to act, or dies, or the office becomes vacant in any other way, in all such cases every person to whom the trust property comes, by reason of there being no trustee, will be treated as a trustee, and may be ordered to account. * * * A person may become a trustee by construction, by intermeddling with and assuming the management of property without authority." Perry on Trusts, §§ 217, 240, 245.

Chancellor Dunkin states the doctrine clearly in the case of Joyce v. Gunnels, 2 Rich. Eq. 259: "Express trusts are those which are raised and created by the act of the parties, and implied trusts are those raised and created by act or construction of law. Express trusts are declared either by word or writing, and those declarations appear either by direct and manifest proof, or by proof of circumstances creating a violent and necessary presumption that such declarations were made either by word or writing, though the plain and direct proof thereof be not extant."

The trust imposed upon John D. Stanton by his receipt of the money, being in its nature an implied or constructive trust, constitutes no exception to the operation of the statute of limitations. "To cases of express or declared trusts the statute of limitations is inapplicable, but implied trusts constitute no exception to the operation of the statute." Joyce v. Gunnels, supra, and authorities. In that case it is said that an executor is an express trustee. He holds an express or declared trust, and as between him and the cestui que trust the statute is inapplicable. Not so of a purchaser from an executor. He, also, to certain intents, is a trustee, but this is an implied or constructive trust.

In Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 95, Lord Eldon said: "It is certainly true that no time bars a direct trust as between cestui *que trust and trustee; but if it is meant to be asserted that a Court of Equity allows a man to make out a case of constructive trust at any distance of time, I am not aware that there is any ground for a doctrine so fatal to the security of property as that would be." John D. Stanton stood like a purchaser from the executor. He was affected by an equity. It was necessary for the parties to pursue that equity in a reasonable time, and the court adopts the statute of limitations as a convenient rule of restriction. The plaintiffs being under no disabilities, and their right of action having certainly accrued in 1863, upon the death of the life-tenant, about fifteen years before the commencement of the action, we agree with the Circuit judge that they were barred.

*169

It is urged for the plaintiffs that this is the case of an express trust, for the reason that after John D. Stanton knew that he had been appointed trustee he received the subject matter of the trust, which will be considered as evidence of an acceptance of the appointment by the court, under the authority of Conyingham v. Conyingham, 1 Ves. 522, followed by our case of Chaplin v. Givens, Rice's Eq. 154, holding the doctrine "that a trustee, with notice of his appointment as such, interfering with the subject matter, cannot repudiate the trust and say he acted merely as a factor or agent." We do not consider this case as like that of Chaplin v. Givens. In that case Charles Givens was appointed trustee in a deed inter partes, executed by his brother, John Givens. He was not required to give bond before he assumed the office of trustee, and he had acted as trustee in applying to the court for certain orders then made with his sanction and concurrence. In this case the appointment was by the court, and by the terms of the order could not take effect until the bond was executed, and the bond not being given, John D. Stanton could not be trustee or have title to the property. In such case a refusal or neglect to qualify, by giving bond, will be considered a refusal or disclaimer of the trust. 1 Perry on Trusts, § 262.

If the act of John D. Stanton in receiving the money, although he did not give bond or receipt for the money as trustee, made him a party to the appointment by the court and an express trustee, what was the trust?

*170

The terms of such trust usually *appear in the condition of the bond; but here no bond was given, and the precise character of the trust proposed does not appear. It seems that the petition was ex parte—the prayer was for the appointment of "trustee of separate estate of Elizabeth Stanton." None of the plaintiffs were made parties or reference made to remainder or remaindermen. From all that appears the trust contemplated may have been only to protect the separate estate of Mrs. Stanton from the marital rights of her husband, without undertaking to provide for the payment over to the remainder-men on the falling in of the life estate. At the death of the life-tenant the rights of the plaintiffs, attached discharged of all trust. Jones v. Cole, 2 Bail. 330.

But, even in the view that John D. Stanton, by his act, made himself a party to the appointment of the court, and an express trustee for the remaindermen, we think the plaintiffs are barred. It is true, as a general rule, it takes twenty years to bar an equity, but the court often applies the bar of the statute in cases of demands analogous to legal demands, although the remedy may be only in equity. The possession of a trustee is not adverse, but is the possession of his cestui que trust, and the statute will not run. But the trustee may determine that character. When he does an act purporting to be an execution of his trust he shakes off the character of trustee and thenceforward stands in an adverse relation. If the cestui que trust supposes that the trust has not been faithfully and fully performed, he is put upon the assertion of his right. Moore v. Porcher, Bail. Eq. 195; Roberts v. Lesly, S Rich. Eq. 35; 1 Wait's Act. & Def. 271; Perry on Trusts, 864; Clarke v. Boorman's Ex'rs, 18 Wall. 493 [21 L. Ed. 904].

In the case of Clarke v. Boorman's Ex'rs, supra, it is said:

"When a trustee has closed his relation to the property, and parted with all control of the property, the statute of limitations runs, notwithstanding it is an express trust." The Circuit judge found that "as far back as 1852 John D. Stanton had committed a clear breach of trust by paying to the life-tenant the whole corpus of the estate—money and negroes—and permitting her to carry the same beyond the jurisdiction of this court, viz., to the State of Florida. This was certainly known to Beard, the executor, and must have been likewise known to his brothers and *sisters, the co-plaintiffs. Under the circumstances, I hold that the plaintiffs have slumbered too long over their right of action, and are barred by lapse of time." We cannot say that this was error.

*171

The judgment below is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 171

(Case No. 1027.)

WILLIAMS & CO. v. PAYSINGER.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⇐564.]

Land was mortgaged by A to B for the purchase money, B assigned his notes and mortgage to C, and C assigned to D. This mortgage was duly recorded, but not the assignments. Afterwards, A not knowing of the assignment to D gave new notes of same amounts, and payable at same time and new mortgage to C, in satisfaction of the original notes and mortgage, which were not surrendered, C saying they were at his home. Failing to pay the first note to C at maturity, A gave up possession of the land to C, and C afterwards mortgaged it to other parties. The land having sold for enough to pay the first mortgage only—Held, that D was entitled to the entire proceeds of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1627; Dec. Dig. ⇐564.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐231.]

An assignment of a mortgage is not required by law to be recorded.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Singleton v. Singleton, 60 S. C. 235, 38 S. E. 462.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. ⇐231.]

Before Wallace, J., Newberry, May, 1880.

Action by George W. Williams & Co. against Thomas M. Paysinger, David H. Wheeler, David B. Werts and James M. Sanders. The case is fully stated in the opinion. The facts appear only in the report of the referee. He reports that at the time the new notes and mortgage were given by Sanders to Paysinger, these securities were intended to satisfy the old mortgage, and that the clerk of the court was requested to mark the former mortgage satisfied; but it nowhere appears in the brief whether such entry of satisfaction was ever made.

*172

*Mr. T. S. Moorman, for appellant.

Mr. L. J. Jones, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This action was commenced against Thomas M. Paysinger alone for the purpose of foreclosing a mortgage of a tract of land known as the "Santee Place." Before sale, D. H. Wheeler and D. B. Werts, who claimed to hold other mortgages on the same tract of land, were made parties. It appears that one Stephens sold the land to James H. Sanders for $1550, November 22d, 1869, and took from Sanders three notes and a mortgage to secure the purchase money. The mortgage was recorded January 19th, 1870. Stephens assigned the notes and mortgage to Paysinger, and he assigned them to defendant Wheeler January 20th, 1870, as collateral security for a debt due by Paysinger to Wheeler. The mortgagor, Sanders, wished to cultivate the place in the year 1870, and, to enable him to do so, Paysinger stood as his surety for supplies, and, on February 3d, 1870, in consideration thereof, Sanders executed new notes and mortgage to Paysinger, the notes being for the same sums and payable at the same times as the originals assigned to Wheeler, which were not taken up, (Paysinger stating that they were at his house, which seemed to satisfy Sanders,) but they were to have the original mortgage satisfied.

This second mortgage was recorded February 15th, 1870. Sanders failed to make the first payment on these new notes, and in satisfaction of the debt delivered to Paysinger the title deed for the land which he had received from Stephens and also surrendered to him possession, but did not make a deed to Paysinger. There is no evidence that Sanders had notice of the assignment of the first mortgage to Wheeler. Having taken possession, Paysinger, March 22d, 1871, mortgaged the land to D. B. Werts, and, June 23d, 1871, executed another mortgage to George W. Williams & Co., and it was under this last mortgage that these proceedings were instituted and the land sold as stated.

The issues were referred to Thomas M.

*173

Lake, as special *referee, who held that the second notes and mortgage given by Sanders to Paysinger did not operate as a satisfaction of the first notes and mortgage assigned to Wheeler, and that Paysinger did not have such title in the land as to enable him to give a legal mortgage to Werts or George W. Williams & Co., to the detriment of the claim of Wheeler, who was entitled to the proceeds of sale on the mortgage assigned to him.

Judge Wallace confirmed the referee's report, and Sanders and Werts appeal to this court on the following exceptions:

"Because the presiding judge erred—

"1. In overruling the exceptions of these defendants to the report of the referee herein and confirming said report.

"2. In deciding 'that the proceeds of the sale of the tract of land covered by D. H. Wheeler's mortgage be paid over to him,' when it appeared that Sanders had made satisfaction to Paysinger of said mortgage without notice of its assignment to Wheeler, and that Werts, knowing of such satisfaction, accepted from Paysinger a mortgage of this land.

"3. In refusing to order, as a part of his decree, that the said mortgage and the notes thereby secured be canceled and delivered up to Sanders, while, as the presiding judge held, Sanders was fully discharged from them when, for the express purpose of paying them, he surrendered to Paysinger, without notice from Wheeler, the land, with possession."

When Paysinger, for valuable consideration, assigned to Wheeler the first notes and mortgage of Sanders, he transferred the title and placed it beyond his control. He could not, afterwards, receive payment on the notes or enter satisfaction on the mortgage. "An entry of satisfaction by a mortgagee after he has parted with his interest in the security, will not discharge the mortgage in favor of one who has acquired an interest in the land before the discharge was made." 2 Jones on Mort. 957; Hill. on Mort. 517; Muller v. Wadlington, 5 S. C. 346; Lynch v. Hancock, 14 S. C. 66.

But it is said that Sanders had no notice of the assignment to Wheeler; that at least he is an innocent party who had the right to deal with Paysinger as the owner of the first mortgage, and he must be protected. If it is meant by this that in order to protect *the rights of Sanders the second notes and mortgage must stand as against Wheeler, it is difficult to understand how this transaction can be good as to Sanders while it is bad as to Paysinger. Notice to the mortgagor of the assignment is not necessary to its validity. There is no law requiring the assignment of a mortgage to be recorded, and if it had been put on record it would not have amounted to constructive notice. "The doctrine of constructive notice by recording, is not to be extended to all papers which are, in fact, recorded, but only to those which are authorized or required to be recorded." 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 404; Harper v. Barsh, 10 Rich. Eq. 149. Besides, if it had been necessary to record this assignment, the time for recording had not expired when the new notes and mortgage were executed—only fourteen days after the assignment was made.

*174

Although there is no proof that Sanders had actual notice, we do not consider him as without fault in the matter. The circumstances were enough to put him on the inquiry. The first mortgage had been given by Sanders to Stephens, who had assigned to Paysinger, and he to Wheeler. Neither the notes nor the mortgage were before the parties at the time of the execution of the new notes and mortgage. * * * Sanders knew that it was an unusual proceeding to replace old notes secured by mortgage by others for precisely the same amounts, and another mortgage by the same party on the same tract of land, and that should have suggested inquiry as to the purpose. As was said in the case of Lynch v. Hancock, supra: "Common prudence would have suggested the propriety of an inquiry as to whether all the bonds had been paid or the lien to secure their payment properly released."

Sanders executed the new notes and mortgage in the place of the old ones, without taking up the latter, or, indeed, seeing them. The referee states that Paysinger said "they were at his house, which seemed to satisfy Sanders." It seems to us he was too easily satisfied. "On making a payment upon a mortgage, the debtor should always require the production of the note or bond secured by it, otherwise it may turn out that this evidence of the debt has been assigned." 2 Jones on Mort. § 956. "Where a recorded mortgage is discharged by a person other than the *mortgagee, the person paying the money, and all subsequent purchasers as well, are bound to inquire what authority he had to discharge it, and are chargeable with the notice of such facts as, by proper inquiry, might have been ascertained." 2 Jones on Mort. § 959; Sworthout v. Curtis, 5 N. Y. 301. Paysinger was not the mortgagee. There was enough to put Sanders on the inquiry, and he must be held to have had notice of everything that due diligence would have discovered. But if he had no notice, actual or constructive, as he paid nothing, we do not see how he can be injured by the order directing the proceeds of the tract of land to be paid towards satisfaction of the original notes given for the purchase money. It seems to be conceded that this is all that will be realized.

*175

The second notes and mortgage of Sanders, given for the purpose of discharging the original notes and mortgage after they were assigned to Wheeler and without his knowledge, are without consideration and void; and the original notes and mortgage assigned to Wheeler being unaffected thereby and the oldest lien, must be first paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the land.

It appears that it will require the whole net proceeds of sale to satisfy the mortgage assigned to Wheeler. It will, therefore, be unnecessary to consider whether Paysinger had such title as to enable him to execute good and legal mortgages to Werts and George W. Williams & Co.

The judgment below is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 175

(Case No. 1028.)

REEDER & DAVIS v. DARGAN.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⇐199.]

A mortgagor died in possession of the mortgaged land, which continued in possession of his widow and son, as his heirs-at-law, until sale under foreclosure of two mortgages, the older of which was assigned for value to the widow after her husband's death, and received

*176

all of the proceeds of sale. *The junior mortgagees, by amended complaint served some time before the sale, demanded an accounting by the widow for rents and profits, without allegations that the land was insufficient to pay this mortgage, or that the mortgagor was insolvent, and without prayer for the appointment of a receiver or other like relief. Held, that this demand for rents and profits could not be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Hardin v. Hardin, 34 S. C. 80, 82, 12 S. E. 936, 27 Am. St. Rep. 786.

For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 513; Dec. Dig. ⇐199.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐3.]

The difference between a mortgage at common law and under the act of 1791 (5 Stat. 170), stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. ⇐3.]

[3. Adverse Possession ⇐43.]

[Cited in Blackwell v. Ryan, 21 S. C. 123; McSween v. McCown, 23 S. C. 351, to the point that when there is no new entry, but the heir is in as of his ancestor's possession, the possession of the heir is that of the ancestor.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. §§ 213–224; Dec. Dig. ⇐43.]

[This case is also cited in Warren v. Raymond, 17 S. C. 200, without specific application.]

Before Hudson, J., Darlington, March, 1880.

Hon. A. P. ALDRICH, judge of the Second Circuit, sat in the place of Mr. Associate Justice McIVER, who had been of counsel.

The case is stated in the opinion, and other facts will be found in the Circuit decree.

The amended complaint was as follows:

"The plaintiffs, by way of further amendment to their complaint herein, by permission of the court, allege—

"That the defendant, Ann D. Flinn, has remained in possession of the mortgaged premises described in the complaint since the death of her husband, H. K. W. Flinn, early in the year 1872, and has received the rents and profits therefor and applied them to her own use and behoof, and has also permitted the turpentine trees to be boxed and used for the making of turpentine, stave timbers and small wood to be cut for the making of hoops and staves, and has received and applied to her own use the rents, incomes and profits arising therefrom. And plaintiffs allege that said defendant is responsible to them as mortgagees for all such rents, profits and incomes since the death of the mortgagor, the said Henry K. W. Flinn.

"Wherefore plaintiffs demand judgment that the said Ann D. Flinn do account for said rents, profits and incomes, and for the costs hereof."

The answer admitted the facts stated, but alleged that the possession was retained and the acts done as heir-at-law of her husband, and denied accountability for rents and profits. She further alleged that she was not the mortgagor, and had never been the tenant of the mortgagor.

The Circuit decree was as follows:

The history and character of the main contention in this action *is fully set forth in the case as reported in 6 S. C. 216, and a new recital is unnecessary here. Under that judgment all questions are put at rest except the right of Ann D. Flinn, widow of H. K. W. Flinn, to dower in the mortgaged premises, and the question of her liability for rents and profits.

*177

By a subsequent decree of the Circuit Court, her right to dower has been adjudged to her, an assignment made, and the mortgaged premises sold under a decree or order conformable to the judgment of the Supreme Court. The only remaining question to be adjudged is that of her liability to account to the plaintiffs for the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises.

To sustain this claim much stress is laid by plaintiffs' counsel upon the fact that, pending the suit to foreclose this mortgage, Ann D. Flinn, during the life of her husband and subsequent to his death, claimed the lands adversely to the plaintiffs' mortgage. In this claim her husband acquiesced, and, to support it, had executed a declaration of trust in favor of his wife. It is insisted that by this course of conduct, H. K. W. Flinn became a mortgagor out of possession; and that being such, the fee vested in the plaintiffs under the proviso of the act of 1791; and that the mortgage thenceforth became as a mortgage at common law, conferring upon the mortgagees the right of possession, and the right to sue for the rents and profits.

To this it is sufficient reply to say that during the lifetime of H. K. W. Flinn, he remained in undisturbed possession of the mortgaged premises, and, after his death, his widow and child continued in possession until sale made under judgment of foreclosure. They were thus actually in possession, and cannot be said to have been ever constructively out of possession.

The claim of the wife to a title paramount to that of the mortgagor, her husband, and to the right of the mortgagees, does not and cannot change the fact of actual possession and occupancy. This remained in Flinn until death, and continued in his heirs-at-law until sale made. The claim of Mrs. Flinn was decreed invalid by the Supreme Court, and the land was sold as the property of her husband. In answer to the claim for rents and profits, Mrs. Flinn admits that she received the same, but alleges that she did so as heir-at-law of her husband, and is not account*able to plaintiffs therefor. And upon this issue thus presented, we think the decision of the question must turn, regarding the mortgage, not as one at common law, but the usual statute mortgage under the act of 1791, a mere security for the debt.

*178

Under this view we are to answer this question: Has a mortgagee, after condition broken, and pending action to foreclose, a right to demand of the mortgagor or his heirs-at-law compensation for their use and occupation, or rents and profits?

In England, and those of the United States which retain her law of mortgages, the mortgagee could, under proper proceedings and sufficient allegations pending foreclosure, obtain the appointment of a receiver empowered to collect of tenants the rents and profits of mortgaged premises to be accounted for at the termination of the suit. But even under that law, if the mortgagee suffered a decree of foreclosure and a sale to be had without this precaution, his remedy was gone.

Much of the learning appertaining to the law of mortgages, and the relative right of mortgagor and mortgagee, and especially relating to rents and profits, found in text books and judicial decisions, is inapplicable to mortgages in this state, because the nature and legal effect of the conveyance is radically changed by statute. A mortgage with us is a mere security for debt, and the mortgagee is, as against the mortgagor or his heirs in possession, never entitled to possession upon forfeiture, but only by becoming a purchaser at a foreclosure sale. The right to possession and entry is, under the common law, the foundation of the claim to rents and profits.

This fundamental basis of the claim does not and cannot exist under our statute, which gives the right to the use and occupation, rents and profits, to the mortgagor, in whom remains the legal estate, and to the mortgagee is given the right to the money and interest. Yet under our law a case may arise where a mortgagee might subject the rents and profits to the payment of his debts. For example, if the premises be actually let to rent by the mortgagor, and the plaintiff allege that the land is inadequate for the payment of his debt, upon a proper showing made, he might have a receiver appointed to collect the rent from the tenants; but it will be difficult to find a single case in which it *is held that a mortgagee has been allowed in his foreclosure action to demand against a mortgagor in possession an account for rents and profits, and to recover judgment therefor after foreclosure and sale.

*179

This would be equivalent to a recovery for use and occupation against the mortgagor, which use and occupation is guaranteed to him by our law, unless otherwise stipulated for in the instrument of conveyance. Until sale made, the land and usufruct is the property of the mortgagor, whilst the debt and interest belong to the mortgagee.

In the present case the mortgage has been foreclosed and the land sold; the rents and profits, if any, have been received by the heir-at-law, Mrs. Flinn, whilst the plaintiffs omitted to make the proper allegations in the complaint upon which to found a rightful claim to rents, and failed also to take proper steps to arrest the payment of rents by the tenant to their landlord. Under this state of things we do not think a judgment can go against the widow, Ann D. Flinn, for the value of the rents. She is not accountable.

We think we are fully supported in this view of the law by the doctrine of Mathews v. Preston, reported in note to Boyce v. Boyce, 6 Rich. Eq. 307; and by the law as laid down in Jones on Mort., vol. 1., §§ 669, 670. This judgment might be enlarged by copious extracts from these authorities, but we deem it sufficient to point to the source of doctrine.

We deem these authorities conclusive of the question.

It is therefore adjudged that Mrs. Ann D. Flinn is not accountable to the plaintiffs for the use and occupation, rents and profits of the mortgaged premises; and that this cause of action in the complaint be dismissed.

Plaintiffs appealed.

Mr. B. W. Edwards, for appellant.

1. From the time of the execution of the trust by H. K. W. Flinn in favor of his wife, Ann D. Flinn, she held adversely to the title of the mortgagee: and the issue raised in her answer was that of adverse title and adverse possession. And the plaintiffs having prevailed in the issue, are entitled to recover rents and *profits. 1 Jones on Mort., § 710; 1 Strob. Eq. 354, 355; 5 Rich. Eq. 268.

*180

2. When Flinn declared himself in possession of the mortgaged premises as his wife's separate estate, by the solemn formalities of a deed, he declared himself out of possession as mortgagor, and holding as tenant of the trust estate: and Mrs. Flinn, holding the possession after his death under the adverse claim, was liable to suit for the possession by the mortgagees, and also for rents and profits. 1 Jones on Mort., § 672; 1 Hill's Eq. 497, 499; 11 Rich. 686; Rice's Eq. 387; 2 S. C. 483.

And though at law this principle only enures to the benefit of the first mortgagee, yet, while she held adversely to all the mortgagees, the plaintiffs have a right, in equity, to demand rents and profits in payment of the first mortgage for the relief of the land, which was the only source from which they could receive payment. 6 Rich. Eq. 307, 321-2.

3. After Ann D. Flinn became the purchaser of the Edwards mortgage, she was a mortgagee in possession, and had a right to rents and profits in extinguishment of her mortgage; and, having two funds from which she could satisfy her mortgage, plaintiffs could require her first to resort to the rents and profits in relief of the lands. 1 Hill. on Mort. 335, 344, 439, 442, 444; 1 Jones on Mort., § 728; 2 Id., §§ 1114, 1119.

And having received the entire amount of her mortgage, principal and interest, from the sale of the lands and the administrator of the mortgagor, she must account to plaintiffs for rents and profits received by her and not applied to her mortgage, upon the principle of subrogation. McM. Eq. 13; 1 Hill. on Mort. 338; 1 Jones on Mort., § 725; 2 Id., § 1118.

4. By every act of Ann D. Flinn she has claimed adversely to the heir-at-law—first, claiming the fee under the declaration of trust and independent of it; second, claiming as mortgagee while the mortgagor was out of possession; and again, claiming dower concurrent with her answer claiming to hold as heir-at-law. And, by all rules of equity, she is liable to account to the plaintiffs—the rule in equity being different from the rule of law in respect to the right of a junior mortgagee to claim an account *of rents and profits. 1 Hill. on Mort. 170, 326, 329, 464; 2 Bail. 103; 4 Rich. 516; 13 S. C. 174.

*181

5. And this action is sufficiently formal for the recovery. It meets all necessary requirements; and all necessary parties are before the court. Ann D. Flinn brought herself into the cause, seeking of the court equitable relief. She had notice of our demand years before she abandoned the claim of holding adversely to the mortgagor, and she does not profess to have paid the incomes to the mortgagor. Her receipt of them makes her a trustee of a fund applicable to the mortgage creditors' claims. 1 Hill. on Mort. 446, 467, 469; 1 Jones on Mort., § 775; 2 Id., §§ 1115, 1516, 1517, 1523.

She voluntarily interposed the only obstacle to the plaintiffs' recovery of foreclosure six years before the sale was made; gets the interest on her mortgage debt that was running during that period; actually commits waste; and appropriates all incomes from the land to her own use, without giving credit upon her mortgage. And she cannot be permitted in a Court of Equity to gain this double advantage, and inflict upon the plaintiffs double injury, by shifting positions and double resorts. 6 Rich. Eq. 308, 309; 1 Hill. on Mort. 223, 227, 230, 465; 1 Jones on Mort., §§ 671, 684, 687, 696; 2 Id., §§ 1120, 1121.

Mr. R. W. Boyd, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. On April 23d, 1870, H. K. W. Flinn executed a mortgage of twenty-four hundred acres of land to the plaintiffs to secure a debt of $5500. In 1871 Ann D. Flinn, the wife of H. K. W. Flinn, having set up some claim to the land, was made a party to the complaint for foreclosure which had been instituted. A. F. Edwards held a prior mortgage, and he also was made a party. Pending action H. K. W. Flinn died, January, 1872, and the suit was continued against his administrator, T. George Dargan. Soon after the death of Flinn, Ann D. Flinn became the owner of the Edwards mortgage. The plaintiffs amended their complaint November 5th, 1873, claiming of Ann D. Flinn rents and profits of the mortgaged premises.

*182

*The case came up on appeal, and this court decided that the land mortgaged belonged to H. K. W. Flinn, the mortgagor, and decreed foreclosure against him; but the right which had been set up for rents and profits from Mrs. Flinn was reserved. Reeder & Davis v. Flinn, 6 S. C. 242.

The sale under the decree of foreclosure was made December, 1877, and the proceeds of sale paid to Mrs. Flinn, the owner of the Edwards mortgage, but they were not sufficient to satisfy the mortgage. From the death of her husband, in 1872, Mrs. Flinn and her infant son continued to reside on the land and received the rents and profits thereof until the sale under the order of foreclosure, 1877, and the plaintiffs, junior mortgagees, claim that she should account for the rents and profits towards satisfaction of her mortgage. The case was heard by Judge Hudson, who decreed that Mrs. Flinn was not bound to account for the rents and profits prior to the sale under the order for foreclosure, and the appeal comes to this court upon the single question of her liability.

The points made, arising out of the fact that Flinn and his wife in the litigation claimed that the latter was really the true owner of the land mortgaged, will not be considered. Claims set up and not established cannot alter the rights of the parties. This court decided that the land belonged to H. K. W. Flinn, and had never been the property of his wife. That fixed the relative positions of the parties from the beginning, and their respective rights must be determined only upon that view. H. K. W. Flinn was the mortgagor in actual possession, and Ann D. Flinn was his wife, living with him until his death, in 1872. After his death she and her son simply remained as heirs-at-law of the deceased mortgagor. When there is no new entry, but the heir is in as of his ancestor's possession, the possession of the heir is that of the ancestor. King v. Smith, Rice 15; Dillard v. Philson, 5 Strob. 215. So that the single point is whether a mortgagor (or, after his death, his heirs) in possession of the mortgaged premises, is liable to the mortgagee for rents and profits upon a complaint for foreclosure which makes no allegation that the land is insufficient for his security without resort to the rents and profits, or that the mortgagor is insolvent, and *which contains no prayer for the appointment of a receiver or other relief of that character.

*183

At the common law a mortgagee was, immediately after the execution of the mortgage deed, seized of an estate in fee, and the mortgagor was considered in the language of some of the cases as his tenant at will. The mortgagee was deemed the absolute legal owner, and had the right to enter, and could maintain a possessory action against the mortgagor. If there were covenants in the mortgage deed, by which the mortgagor was entitled to retain the possession, the Court of Equity would protect him in the enjoyment of such right.

But under our act of 1791 a mortgage in this state is a very different thing from the mortgage at common law. That act declares "that no mortgagee shall be entitled to maintain any possessory action for the real estate mortgaged, even after the time allotted for the payment of the money secured by mortgage is elapsed, but the mortgagor shall still be deemed owner of the land and the mortgagee as owner of the money lent or due, and shall be entitled to recover satisfaction for the same out of the land," &c. Gen. Stat. 536. The effect of this act was to change a mortgage from being a conveyance on condition to a mere lien as a security for a debt. State v. Laval, 4 McC. 340; Mitchell v. Bogan, 11 Rich. 703. It is not stated that the mortgage of plaintiffs has any special stipulation upon the subject of rents and profits. Assuming it to be in the usual form and subject to the act of 1791, we do not see upon what ground the plaintiffs can claim to have any legal right either to the possession of the premises or rents and profits thereof before the sale under the decree in foreclosure. Such claim rests upon the right of entry and possession at common law, and, if allowed, would be in the very face of the act that "the mortgagor shall still be deemed owner of the land."

But it is urged that upon this subject the doctrine of equity is different, and that this is a proceeding in the nature of a bill in equity on the part of mortgages whose security is not adequate to make the mortgagor account for rents and profits as auxiliary to the land in paying the debt. The general rule certainly is that equity follows the law, and we suppose that the *authorities relied upon to support the alleged equity doctrine are taken from those states where the mortgage still retains all its common law characteristics. The case cited from our own reports of Stoney v. Shultz, 1 Hill's Eq. 499 [27 Am. Dec. 429], was a case falling under the exception in the act of 1791, where "the mortgagor was out of possession." Johnson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "I take it, therefore, as clear, that Shultz, the mortgagor, being out of possession, the rights and powers of Brooks as mortgagee, in respect to the purchases of the lots in possession under Shultz must be determined according to the rules of the common law, and according to that he had a right to receive and retain the rents, having given notice of the mortgage to the tenants in possession." It is true that in the case of Matthews v. Preston, note to Boyce v. Boyce, 6 Rich. Eq. 307, something is said which would seem to indicate that under some circumstances the Court of Equity might decree rents and profits in the land as incident to, and part of, the security given. The court says: "The mortgagee in this court [equity], claiming an account of the rents and profits must stand upon the general doctrine laid down by Coote on Mort. 342, that although in equity the mortgagor remains the actual owner of the land until foreclosure, entitling him while in possession to the receipt of the rents and profits without account, yet equity regarding the land, with all its produce, as a security for the mortgage debt will restrict the right of ownership within those bounds which may not operate to the detriment or injury of the mortgagee." Yet in the same case the view we entertain is expressed in terms which we are content to adopt. "The mortgagor in possession is not liable to the mortgagee on account of the rents. There is no case that goes so far, and the authorities establish a contrary doctrine, and I should have no difficulty in adopting the conclusion that the purchaser of the equity of redemption in possession occupies the same relations to the mortgagee and upon the same principle must be equally exempt. No tenancy in either case exists or can be implied. In such a case the rent as an auxiliary fund to aid in the satisfaction of the debt is beyond the reach of the mortgagee, though his security from the corpus of the estate may be inade*quate. At least it is so in the form of proceeding which has been adopted in this case."

*184

*185

Jones on Mort. § 771, states the principle as we understand it: "A mortgagee has no specific lien upon the rents and profits of the mortgaged land unless he has in the mortgage stipulated for a specific pledge of them as part of his security. He has no claim upon them until he has the right to take possession of the premises under his mortgage."

The Circuit decree is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and ALDRICH, A. A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 185

(Case No. 1030.)

COOKE v. PENNINGTON.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Mortgages ⇐449.]

Where the two plaintiffs alleged that they were executors of the mortgagee, and the answer did not properly deny this allegation, and the original letters testamentary of one executor were put in evidence by consent, and a certified copy of the letters of the other executor were introduced without objection, the court will not consider the objection made at a late stage of the case, that there was no proof of the plaintiffs' capacity to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1313; Dec. Dig. ⇐449.]

[2. Mortgages ⇐489.]

Where action to foreclose a mortgage is brought after default in the payment of interest due, but before the principal debt is payable, and such principal debt becomes due before decree rendered, the judgment should be for the whole amount of debt and interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1429; Dec. Dig. ⇐489.]

[3. Taxation ⇐788.]

He who claims title under a tax deed must prove his title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1555, 1557, 1559–1569; Dec. Dig. ⇐788.]

[4. Taxation ⇐761.]

The recitals in a tax deed for five hundred and eighty-six acres, stated that the land had been sold two days before the time advertised for sale, and that only one acre was bid in by the purchaser. Held, that the deed which was prima facie but not conclusive evidence of good title, showed on its face that there had been no valid sale or transfer of title.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in State v. Pinckney, 22 S. C. 509; Shell v. Duncan, 31 S. C. 560, 572, 10 S. E. 330, 5 L. R. A. 821; Dixon v. Hockady, 36 S. C. 64, 15 S. E. 342; Heyward v. Christensen, 80 S. C. 149, 61 S. E. 399.

For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1510; Dec. Dig. ⇐761.]

[5. Taxation ⇐739.]

One made a party defendant to an action for foreclosure, as a claimant of the land under tax titles, cannot be required to account for the rents and profits while he was in possession of the mortgaged premises, the complaint making no such demand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1476; Dec. Dig. ⇐739.]

[6. Costs ⇐13.]

This court refused to disturb the order of the court below as to the costs of this action on Circuit and former appeals—costs in an equity case being largely in the discretion of the Circuit judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. ⇐13.]

[7. Taxation ⇐819.]

[There is no warranty in tax sales, and the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to such sales in its fullest extent.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1619; Dec. Dig. ⇐819.]

*186

*Before Mackey, J., Richland, November, 1879.

To the case as stated in the opinion, it will be necessary to add very little. The complaint alleged the death of the mortgagee, that he had left a will appointing the plaintiffs executors, and that they had duly qualified, &c. Neither the will nor any copy of it was offered in evidence, and the only evidence submitted of its existence and proof, is that contained in the recitals in the letters testamentary.

The tax deed is as follows:

State of South Carolina, Richland county. Whereas, by the provisions of Section 17, Chapter XIII, Title III., General Statutes of the said state, the county auditor of each county in the said state is authorized and required, annually, to cause the list of delinquent lands in his county to be published weekly for two weeks in one newspaper in his county, and to which list there shall be attached a notice in the following form, to wit: Notice is hereby given that the whole of the several parcels, lots and parts of lots of real estate, described in the preceding list, or so much thereof as will be necessary to pay the taxes, penalties and assessments charged thereon, will be sold by the treasurer of Richland county, South Carolina, at his office in said county, on the 7th day of May, A. D. 1873, unless said taxes, assessments and penalties be paid before that time; and said sale will be continued from day to day until all of said parcels, lots and parts of lots of real estate shall be sold or offered for sale.

And whereas, there appeared on the tax duplicates of Richland county, for 1872, lot, buildings, five hundred and eighty-six acres of land, valued at $1500, assessed in the name of John M. Pennington, the tax, cost and penalties on the same being $34.29. And whereas, the above John M. Pennington neglected to pay to C. H. Baldwin, treasurer of Richland county, the above tax, cost and penalties as prescribed by law, and in accordance with an act of the general assembly, "providing for the extension of time for the payment and collection of taxes for the fiscal year commencing November 1st, 1872, approved January 16th, 1873," the above real estate was duly advertised as de-lin*quent, in the Daily Union and Herald, to be sold as above required.

*187

And whereas, at the aforesaid sale, so held by C. H. Baldwin, treasurer of Richland county, on May 5th, 1873, one William Price promised to and did pay to said C. H. Baldwin, county treasurer, the sum of $34.29, being the tax, cost and penalties on the above-described property, and assessed in the name of the said John M. Pennington, for the least quantity bid by any person then and there present, viz., one acre, and to whom a delinquent land certificate was issued, specifying the above fact.

And whereas, in accordance with an act of the general assembly entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for the assessment and taxation of property,'" passed September 16th, 1868, and all acts amendatory thereto, approved March 12th, 1872, it is the duty of the county auditor to make and deliver to any purchaser, his heirs or assigns, a deed of conveyance for real estate so sold, and not redeemed in accordance with law by the party in whose name it was assessed, or any other person interested therein, within ninety days from date of said sale, on payment of the legal fee and surrender of the aforementioned delinquent land certificate.

And whereas, the real estate so sold as aforesaid has not been redeemed within the time and in the manner so as aforesaid prescribed by law. Now, therefore, I, A. L. Solomon, county auditor of the county of Richland, in the state aforesaid, in consideration of the premises, and in further consideration of the sum of $2, good and lawful money of the United States, to me in hand paid by the said William Price, for and in behalf of the State of South Carolina, have granted, bargained, sold and released, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell and release unto the said William Price, all that certain lot, tract or parcel of land, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Five hundred and eighty-five acres in Lower township; all the plantation or four several tracts of land, viz., tract "G," containing one hundred acres; tract "H," containing one hundred and fifty acres; "I," containing three hundred acres; and "K," containing thirty-six acres. Four said tracts contain, in the whole, five hundred and eighty-six acres, more or less, as is more fully described in a *plat made thereof in April and May, A. D. 1843, by John N. Barrillon, deputy surveyor, to which reference is hereby made, and to be taken as part of these presents; said land being bounded on the north by lands of William Braddy, formerly owned by Moses Braddy, south by the Congaree river, east by the New Congaree river and the Old Congaree river, separating it from Butler's island, and on the west by the Congaree river. The same being situate and lying in the county of Richland, in the state aforesaid.

*188

Together with all and singular the rights, members, hereditaments and appurtenances to the said premises belonging or in any wise incident or appertaining.

To have and to hold all and singular the premises before mentioned unto the said William Price, his heirs and assigns forever.

And I, A. L. Solomon, county auditor as aforesaid, do hereby bind the State of South Carolina to warrant and forever defend all and singular the said premises unto the said William Price, his heirs and assigns, against the said State of South Carolina, and against every person and all persons whomsoever, lawfully claiming or to claim the same or any part thereof.

Witness my hand and the seal of the state, August 23d, in the year of our Lord 1873, and in the ninety-seventh year of the independence of the United States of America.

A. L. Solomon.

A. R. C.

T. H. Blackwell.

E. J. Terry.

This deed was duly probated and recorded.

Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendants appealed.

Mr. J. E. Bacon, for appellants.

Messrs. Baxter & Seibles, contra.

April 18th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was an action by Thompson H. Cooke, executor, and Jane M.

*189

Zeigler, executrix of Daniel *Zeigler, deceased, against John M. Pennington and William

Price, for foreclosure of a mortgage of real estate, given by John M. Pennington to the testator and to the said Jane M. Zeigler, bearing date February 26th, 1872. Price was made a defendant, on the ground that he claimed to have purchased the land at a sale for taxes in May, 1873, and was in possession. The case has been to this court twice before upon preliminary questions as to the effect of admissions and the manner of taking the testimony, &c. 7 S. C. 385; 9 S. C. 83.

After the case was remanded the last time it was heard by Judge Mackey, who overruled the defences; held that the alleged tax title set up by the defendant, Price, was absolutely null and void, and that he should account for rents and profits, pay costs, &c., and decreed against the defendant, Pennington, foreclosure and sale of the premises towards satisfaction of the debt, $2385.53.

The defendants appeal to this court. The exceptions are long and numerous, and will not be considered seriatim, but according to subject matter.

1. It is urged that the plaintiffs had not legal capacity to sue, neither the will of Daniel Zeigler nor the qualification of the executors having been proved. It appears in the case that the attorney for the defendants consented that the original letters testamentary of Jane M. Zeigler, as executrix of the will of Daniel Zeigler, deceased, issued by the judge of probate for Orangeburg county, August 12th, 1872, might be regarded as in evidence. It also appears that a certified copy of the letters testamentary of Thompson H. Cooke, as executor of the will of Daniel Zeigler, was offered in evidence without objection at the time. These correspond, in all respects, except that one stated that the will was proved at Orangeburg, August 12th, 1872, and the other August 12th, 1873. This was manifestly a clerical mistake. The answer of defendants did not deny, in terms, that the plaintiffs were, as they claimed to be, executors, but stated that they "knew nothing of the will or the appointment and qualification of the plaintiffs as executors thereof." That was not such a denial as the code requires of "each material allegation controverted by the defendant." Besides, this litigation has *been going on for years, and this objection, so far as we can see, is now made for the first time.

*190

2. The objection is made that no right of action had accrued to the plaintiffs at the date of the summons and complaint; that at that time they had no right to elect the whole mortgage debt to be due, and sue for and recover the same. The bonds were due and payable January 1st, 1876, with interest from January 1st, 1872, "to be paid annually." The interest for the year 1872 had been paid, but the interest for the year 1873, $105, was in arrear on January 23d, 1874, when the complaint was filed, which prays judgment for the whole debt, as follows: "That as more than twenty days has elapsed since said interest became due and payable, the plaintiffs elect the whole principal sum to be immediately due and payable," and demand judgment for the whole principal and interest. When the final decree of foreclosure was rendered, April 15th, 1880, both bonds were past due, and the judge rendered his decree for the whole amount of principal and interest. Was that error?

Usually the terms of the mortgage itself determine when the right to foreclosure accrues. No copy of this mortgage is in the case; but assuming that it was in the usual form, failure to pay a year's interest, which was payable annually, was a default upon which a right to foreclose, at least for the year's interest in arrear, accrued, and all the bonds being due at the time of the final hearing, it was not error to give judgment for the whole then due. "When a mortgage or trust deed authorizes a sale to be made upon the happening of any default, a failure to pay interest when due is a default within the meaning of the deed, although this does not show when the interest is payable, or what the rate of it is, except by reference to the note secured. * * * Unless so provided, the foreclosure can extend no further than to enforce satisfaction of such part of the debt as is due at that time, and for that purpose to sell as much of the mortgaged property as may be necessary. Courts of Equity, without the aid of any statutory provision to that effect, may generally retain jurisdiction of the case until the subsequent installments become due and then decree a further sale; and, under the general doctrine and practice of equity, may direct a sale of the whole mort*gaged estate. * * * If other installments become due after the suit is commenced and before final hearing, these may be included in the decree without filing a supplemental bill if they are set out in the original bill and are included in the prayer for decree." 2 Jones on Mort., §§ 1174, 1181; Magruder v. Eggleston, 41 Miss. 284.

*191

3. The defendant, Price, set up what purported to be a tax deed of the mortgaged premises, "as a complete bar to the plaintiff's claim." A copy is in the case. From the deed itself and its recitals, the Circuit judge finds, among others, the following facts, which, from a careful inspection of the paper, we think are well sustained.

8. "That if said list was free from the defects mentioned, the 'notice' attached thereto declared that the land therein described would be sold on May 7th, 1873, whereas the only proof before the court shows, and the court so finds, that the alleged sale, under which the defendant, William Price, claims, was held on the fifth day of May, 1873.

9. "That at said alleged sale only one acre of land was bid off by and knocked down to the defendant, the said William Price.

10. "That a certificate for said acre of land was issued by A. L. Solomon, auditor of Richland county, to said defendant.

11. "That on August 23d, 1873, the said William Price surrendered his certificate to said A. L. Solomon, auditor of Richland county, and applied for a deed of the real estate alleged to have been sold as aforesaid.

12. "That thereupon, to wit, on the said August 23d, 1873, the said A. L. Solomon, auditor of Richland county, signed and delivered to the said defendant an instrument purporting to grant, bargain, sell and release unto him, with the usual covenants of warranty, a tract of land therein described, as follows, to wit: 'Four said tracts, embracing in the whole five hundred and eighty-six acres.' And that said instrument was duly made, signed and delivered by said Solomon, county auditor as aforesaid, but that he omitted to seal the same."

From these and other defects, apparent on the face of the deed, the judge held, as matter of law, that the alleged sale by C. H. Baldwin, treasurer of Richland county, on May 5th, 1873, was *not a delinquent land sale, and was illegal and void. It is charged that this was error, principally upon the terms of Section 116 of the act of 1874, (15 Stat. 773), which declares that "the deed so made by the county auditor for any real estate sold at delinquent land sale, shall be prima facie evidence of a good title in the grantee," &c. It is insisted that this changed the rule of evidence and thereby shifted the onus upon the plaintiffs to show irregularity in some of the proceedings anterior to the sale; that it was incumbent on the plaintiffs to prove something dehors the deed in order to defeat it. The general rule, certainly, is that he who claims title must prove it. This is, for many reasons, especially true as to tax titles. "The party claiming under this power [to sell land for taxes] is chargeable with notice of every irregularity in the proceedings of the officers. He purchases at his peril, the maxim caveat emptor being rigidly applied to him. The reasons are obvious. The law imputes to every purchaser knowledge of all facts appearing at the time of his purchase upon the muniments of title, which it was necessary for him to inspect in order to ascertain the sufficiency of it. More especially is this doctrine applicable to the purchaser at a tax sale. For, knowing the land to have been sold under color of an authority given by law to a public officer, who is not the proprietor thereof, he is bound to inquire and take notice whether that officer, and all others whose agency is required by the law in the conduct of the proceedings, have proceeded with regularity in the discharge of their duty." Blackwell 66.

*192

The provision in the act of 1874 means no more than what it says, that the deed shall be prima facie evidence of good title; that is, good until the contrary appears, and we know of no reason why the contrary may not be made to appear by recitals in the deed itself as well as from other proof. The deed must be of land "sold at delinquent land sale." The fact that it was so sold cannot be assumed from the existence of the deed itself, but must appear before the law can apply or the party have the benefit of the presumption. It would be intolerable if a bare deed, purporting to be given by an auditor, conveying the land of one man to another, could not be shown, by its own terms, to *have no connection with a delinquent land sale, but, on the contrary, to have been executed without proper authority.

*193

The courts have given strict construction to laws of the character of the provision in our act of 1874, and have not extended their operation beyond the very words of the statute. In Illinois an act declared that the deed should "vest a perfect title in the purchaser unless the land should be redeemed according to law or the former owner shall show that the taxes for which it was sold had been actually paid according to law, or that the land was not legally subject to taxation." The Supreme Court of that state, in giving construction to this statute in the case of Garrett v. Wiggins, 1 Scam. 335, "deny that the statute will, by any fair construction, warrant the opinion that the auditor, selling land without authority, could, by his conveyance, transfer the title of the rightful owner. They say that to consummate his authority the law imperatively requires him to publish notice of the time and place of sale; that the publication of this notice is not one of the facts which can be inferred from his conveyance, and, without proof of the fact, the auditor's deed is not evidence of the regularity and legality of the sale, and, consequently, conveyed no title to the purchaser." Blackwell 88.

Without going into the various defects found in this alleged tax sale, it is enough to state that the deed itself contains evidence that the notice of sale was for the seventh, and the actual sale was on the fifth of May, 1873. Speaking of the power of the officer appointed by law to make the sale, the Supreme Court of the United States say: "He may not do anything of himself, and must do all as he is directed by the law under which he acts. He may not, by any misconstruction of it, anticipate the time for sale, within which the owner of the property may prevent a sale of it by paying the demand against him and the expenses which may have been incurred from his not having done so before. This the law always presumes that the owner may do until a sale has been made. He may arrest the uplifted hammer of the auctioneer when the cry for sale is made, if it be done before a bona fide bid has been made." Early v. Doe, 16 How. (U. S.) 610 [14 L. Ed. 1079].

At the sale Price purchased one acre and paid the taxes, costs *and penalties, $34.29, and received his certificate as purchaser of one acre, but on August 23d, 1873, he surrendered his certificate and received title, not for the one acre but for the whole lands, "five hundred and eighty-six acres, more or less." There is no evidence whatever that any of this land, except the one acre, was ever sold at all at delinquent land sales or any other, or offered for sale after the one acre was sold. It would be a reproach to the administration of justice if a deed, executed under these circumstances, should be held to prove itself conclusively, and to transfer the title of one man's property to another.

*194

The complaint did not ask an account for rents and profits, and although the defendant, Price, according to the view taken, was a mere trespasser, we think he cannot be held to account for rents and profits in this proceeding.

In equity suits costs are largely in the discretion of the court. One-half the costs and expenses of the action was directed to be paid out of the proceeds of sale. In the exercise of the discretion vested in him, the Circuit judge directed Price to pay the other half, and we cannot say that this was error.

So far as the decree orders an account for rents and profits, it is reversed, and in all other respects it is affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 194

(Case No. 1031.)

EASON v. MILLER & KELLY.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Judgment ⇐256.]

Defendants purchased at a foreclosure sale a foundry, in which were certain patterns which the mortgagor claimed, and brought action to recover, alleging and proving their value to be $5000. Defendants claimed that they were embraced in the mortgage and in the foreclosure sale. The trial judge charged the jury that defendants were the purchasers of only such "patterns" as were on the premises at the date of the mortgage. The verdict was: "We find for plaintiff patterns the value of $100."

*195

*Plaintiff entered up judgment and issued execution for the patterns which were on the premises on the day of sale, or $100 damages. Held, that the judgment should be vacated as not being in conformity with the verdict. McIver, A. J., dissenting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 446; Dec. Dig. ⇐256.]

[2. Trial ⇐136.]

[Cited in Hume, Small & Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 23 S. C. 200, to the point that where a pleading raises questions of law and of fact the questions of law must be decided by the court.]

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 318, 320, 321, 323–327; Dec. Dig. ⇐136.]

[This case is also cited in McMakin v. Fowler, 34 S. C. 287, 13 S. E. 534, as recognizing the right to resort to the judge's charge to ascertain the issues submitted to the jury, and cited and followed in Duren v. Kee, 41 S. C. 171, 19 S. E. 492.]

Before Thomson, J., Charleston, July, 1880.

The case is stated in the opinion, to which should be added the decision of the Circuit judge, which, after a statement of the facts, was as follows:

It is to be observed that it does not appear that any objection was made to the complaint, on the ground that the description of the articles sued for was indefinite, or that any motion was made requiring amendment in this particular.

It has been held, in an action of replevin, to be certain enough to declare for fourteen skimmers and ladles, without saying how many there were of each. Bourne v. Mattaire, 2 Strange 1015, and in the note to this case, referring to other cases, it is said the principle is this, "that the pleading had supplied the defect, because the avowant having avowed the taking, had thereby taken upon himself the knowledge of what the goods were."

Late cases have been decided upon the same principle. In a declaration in replevin, an insufficient description of the goods taken, or of the locus in quo, is cured by the defendants avowing or making cognizance; and it makes no difference that the plaintiff has demurred to the avowry or cognizance. Banks v. Angell et al., 34 E. C. L. 241.

The reason for a definite description is given in the following case, in which it was declared "that in replevin it is extremely material the declaration should inform the sheriff what goods were taken. That a count for taking, quandam parcellam lintei et quandam parcellam papyri, was good, inasmuch as it guided the party as to the nature of the goods taken." Pope v. Tillman, 2 E. C. L. 243.

No damages were given under the instructions of the judge, but patterns described by the plaintiff and admitted by the defendants, were found for plaintiff the value of $100.

*196

This is not *a verdict for patterns and $100, but a verdict stating the articles and their value.

In this case it was not necessary, as in Bardin v. Drafts, 10 S. C. 497, that an alternative should be stated, from which to imply a value. Here the verdict contains, though in condensed language, an answer to all the issues made; right in the plaintiff to recover the patterns and their value. It is not to be taken as admitted from the above, that the description of the patterns in the complaint, and the findings of the verdict, are regarded as defective and insufficient. Cases have been quoted in the argument, which support the verdict as sufficient. 10 Mass. 66; [Graff v. Smith's Adm'rs] 1 Dall. 485 [1 L. Ed. 232]; [Laber v. Cooper] 7 Wall. 570 [19 L. Ed. 151].

The verdict, which is but an answer to the issues made, certainly need not be more certain than the description in the pleadings, and in construing a verdict, the court will keep in mind the issues in the pleadings. 3 Wait's Pr. 197.

The case of the City Council against Weikman presents this principle; the opinion of the court states the connection between the issues and the verdict. 2 Spears 375.

The conclusion of the court is, that the verdict in connection with the pleadings, gives the answer required from the jury, in cases of claim and delivery of personal property.

There is no doubt but in the present case the court had the right to direct the jury to find a special verdict. But was the verdict special in fact, or special according to the code? Though called special, it is the common verdict in cases of claim and delivery, when the property is claimed by a defendant.

The instruction of the judge who tried the case, was that, if they, the jury, found for the plaintiff, they should find for the return of certain patterns, assess the value thereof at so much money. The judge then explains what he means in the next sentence, "that gives," he says, "the defendants the right to return the patterns, and pay nothing but costs, or if they think it will be best to keep, they will do so, and pay for them at your assessment."

The verdict answered to his charge, and no exception thereto was taken by any party. When a special verdict is found, the jury submit a statement of facts to the court, formally or sub*stantially, as follows: "Upon these facts, the jury respectfully leave the 'judgment to the court,' and in a verdict subject to the opinion of the court, the jury state the facts found, subject to the opinion of the court, at a ——— term, upon the questions of law." 3 Comm'rs Code 179.

*197

Nothing of this kind appears in the case, or was required by the charge of the judge. The verdict is special only in the sense that it is peculiar to the actions of detinue replevin, or claim and delivery. In these actions it is required that the verdict for plaintiff should state the property found and its value, instead of a simple finding for plaintiff or defendant, as is the case generally in other actions. The practice for such mode of finding in replevin is old. In detinue, says Tidd, the language of the judgment being in the alternative, that the plaintiff "do recover the goods or the value of them, it is incumbent on the jury to find their value." 2 Tidd's Pr. 887; Impey's Pr. 765.

But where a special finding is required by the judge, it may be waived. The rendering of a general verdict by the jury, and its reception by the court, without objection, either by the judge or the parties, is good, notwithstanding the failure of the jury to find upon certain special questions of fact, upon which the court, in the course of its charge, directed them to find. 3 Wait's Pr. 190; Moss v. Priest, 19 Abb. 314.

The conclusion of the court is that the verdict was general as given in actions of claim and delivery, and that the clerk of the court was not in error in entering and docketing in this case, the judgment according to the verdict.

The statement of the defendants in their answer, lead to the conclusion that the commingling of property was their act, if, in fact, there was commingling. They state the patterns were a part of the property which came into their possession with other goods, and which they kept. In their answer there is no objection that they could not distinguish between the plaintiff's patterns and their own. If the commingling of goods were the act of the plaintiff, it might be a defence to a recovery, unless the plaintiff identified his goods, but such a fact could have little weight in vacating a judgment.

The motion to set aside the judgment and entry thereof, made by the clerk, and quash the execution, is dismissed.

*198

*Defendants appealed.

[For subsequent opinion, see 18 S. C. 381.]

Mr. J. P. K. Bryan for appellants.

Mr. S. Lord, Jr., contra.

April 25th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

SIMPSON, C. J. The plaintiff, James M. Eason, brought this action (claim and delivery of personal property), and alleged—

1. That he was "owner of —— patterns, of the value of $5000, which goods were, on May 11th, 1879, stored on the premises known as Eason's foundry, Columbus street, Charleston, S. C."

2. That on April 24th, 1879, the defendants, Miller & Kelly, purchased the premises, and on May 11th, 1879, entered into possession of the same, and took possession of said patterns.

3. He alleges unlawful detention, &c.

And prays judgment for recovery of the said patterns, or $5000, their value, in case a delivery cannot be had.

The defendants, Miller & Kelly, answering—

1. Deny ownership of plaintiff.

2. Admit, as alleged, that they purchased premises, and took possession of the patterns mentioned in complaint, and have refused to deliver them.

3. They deny unlawful detention.

They further allege, as new matter, the source of their title: that the patterns mentioned in complaint are their property, through purchase at foreclosure sale, on April 24th, 1879, of Eason's foundry, together "with all the working implements, machinery and tools connected therewith now thereon," the mortgage bearing date April 2d, 1866. And they allege that the patterns mentioned in complaint were a part of the tools and working implements on the premises on the day of sale, April 24th, 1879, and they hold the same through such sale by virtue of the deed of the master.

The case was tried February Term, 1880, Judge Pressley presiding. After evidence was heard and argument, the judge charged the jury in brief, that it was his duty to construe the mortgage. That in law, he held, a pattern was a "tool or work*ing instrument;" and that the mortgage did cover the patterns used in the foundry when the mortgage was given. And the defendants, Miller & Kelly, bought under the foreclosure sale all the patterns under the mortgage, and those patterns are their property. Further, the court held, as matter of law, that the patterns put on premises after date of mortgage are Mr. Eason's (plaintiff) property.

*199

After deciding these issues of law raised in the pleadings, the judge submitted to the jury the issue for them, as follows:

"The question, therefore, is, how much of the property of this plaintiff, which was not mortgaged, is now in possession of Miller & Kelly. Mr. Kelly says that he values those patterns at $5000. Mr. Lambley (plaintiff's witness) says he values them at $5000. What portion of that $5000 applies to the patterns which Mr. Eason has a right to claim? He has no right to claim any which were there prior to the making of the mortgage. What portion of that $5000 belongs to Mr. Eason? The testimony is conflicting. Mr. Lambley (plaintiff's witness) says the greater proportion of the patterns and the greater proportion in value were there at the time of the execution of the mortgage. Mr. Eason (plaintiff) differs from him and says that the greater portion were put there afterwards. You must decide for yourselves which of these witnesses you will follow. Your verdict must be a special one, as follows: If you find for the plaintiff you will say: 'We find that the plaintiff is entitled to the return of such of the patterns claimed as were not on the premises at the date of the mortgage, and we assess the value thereof at so much money.' That gives the defendants the right to return those patterns and pay nothing but the costs or, if they think it will be best to keep them, they will do so, and pay for them at your assessment. In making your assessment you will settle the matter according to the testimony. You will have to reconcile the testimony of Mr. Eason and Mr. Lambley."

The jury rendered the following verdict: "We find for plaintiff patterns the value of one hundred dollars.

"W. Preston Dowling, Foreman."

*200

*There was no objection to verdict by court or counsel. No action was taken by either party until the court adjourned, when the plaintiff entered up judgment for "the possession of the personal property described in the complaint, to wit, the patterns which were on the premises on the north side of Columbus street in the city of Charleston, and known as Eason's foundry, on the 11th day of May, 1879, or one hundred dollars in case a delivery cannot be had." An execution was issued for the delivery of possession to James M. Eason of "the patterns which were on the premises, &c., on the 11th day of May, 1879, or one hundred dollars in case a delivery cannot be had."

The defendants thereupon moved, before Judge Thomson, to set aside judgment and quash execution on the grounds—

1. That the judgment was not entered in conformity with the verdict.

2. That the judgment was entered up and execution issued by the clerk without authority of law.

Judge Thomson dismissed the motion, on the grounds stated in his decision.

The defendants appeal to this court on the grounds that his Honor, the Circuit judge, erred—

1. In deciding that the judgment herein was entered in conformity with the verdict.

2. In deciding that the clerk had authority of law to enter up the said judgment on said verdict.

3. In dismissing the motion to set aside judgment and quash execution.

The appeal of the defendants raises, substantially, but one question, and that is: Was the judgment entered by the clerk in conformity with the verdict? If so, then the clerk had authority of law to enter it, (Lynch's Code, § 288,) and the judge would have erred had he set it aside and quashed the execution. If not, then the judge was in error in refusing appellant's motion.

The word "conformity" means agreement —congruity with something else—and, as applied to cases of this kind, its use was intended to convey the idea that the judgment should carry out the intent of the verdict.

*201

In fact, no other judgment but one *in conformity with the true intent of the verdict would be legal.

The conclusion to be reached, then, in this case, involves the examination of three questions:

First, What does the judgment mean? Second, What does the verdict mean? and, Third, Is there conformity between the two? If so, then this appeal must be dismissed, otherwise the order of the judge must be reversed.

The meaning and intent of the judgment seems to be very clear. Its language is plain and unambiguous. It declares that the plaintiff shall recover the possession of the personal property described in the complaint, to wit, the patterns which were on the premises on the north side of Columbus street, in the city of Charleston, known as Eason's foundry, on May 11th, 1879.

There is no division of the patterns into classes, or numbers, or portions, or as to the different times when these patterns reached the premises, but the whole is embraced—the patterns, which were on the premises on May 11th, 1879. This covers all that were there. There can be no doubt about this; and if the verdict was as unambiguous as the judgment, the case would be free from difficulty.

Now, did the jury intend by their verdict to give to the plaintiff all of these patterns, which, according to the undisputed testimony, were worth, in the aggregate, $5,000? The verdict is very concise and compact in its terms; it is very short, and is in these words: "We find for the plaintiff patterns the value of one hundred dollars."

Now, when we find by the complaint that the plaintiff instituted his action to recover patterns of the value of $5000, and that the testimony offered on the trial proved that the patterns on the premises at the time mentioned, viz., May 11th, 1879, were worth that sum, and yet the verdict limits the recovery of the plaintiff to patterns of the value of $100, it would be difficult to believe that the jury intended by their verdict that plaintiff should recover all of the patterns on the premises, as is expressed in the judgment. The very fact that the jury fixed the value of the portion which they intended the plaintiff to recover at $100, shows, conclusively, as an independent fact, that they did not *intend that plaintiff was entitled to the whole, which, according to admitted proof, was worth $5000.

*202

But can this intent of the jury be reached by a legal construction of the verdict, or will such a construction lead to a conclusion contrary to this manifest purpose of the jury, and give to the plaintiff the entire patterns, in violation of the justice of the case, the evident intent of the jury and the charge of the judge?

A verdict is the finding of the facts of a case by the jury. It may be either general or special. In either case it is the response of the jury to the issues of fact submitted to them by the court. To ascertain, then, the intent and meaning of a verdict, we must look back to the issues submitted.

Generally, the issues of fact involved in a case will be found contained in the allegations of the plaintiff in his complaint, and the denials or other statements of the defence as stated in the answer, and where there is nothing more in the complaint and answer but questions of fact, then an examination of these pleadings will present the true issues submitted to the jury, and to which their verdict will be understood to be responsive. But the pleadings, in addition to questions of fact, may also raise questions of law. In such case the questions of law do not go to the jury, but must be decided by the court before the case is submitted to the jury. In other words, in such case it would be the duty of the judge to eliminate from the pleadings the questions of law, and to submit to the jury only the questions of fact. And in such case the charge of the judge (subject, of course, to appeal,) and not the complaint and answer, would contain the real issues of fact, by which the verdict, should any doubt arise as to its true intent and meaning, ought to be construed.

Now, in this case, the plaintiff instituted suit for the recovery of patterns of the value of $5000, stored on the premises in question on May 11th, 1879. The answer of defendants admitted that they took possession of the premises on the day mentioned, and, also, of the patterns then on the place; but they claimed that these patterns were embraced in a mortgage under which they had bought these premises, and that therefore the title was in them.

This answer raised two questions, one of fact and one of law. *The question of fact was that all of the patterns on the premises at the time mentioned were embraced in the mortgage, and the question of law was, that, being so embraced, they, as purchasers under said mortgage, were the legal owners.

*203

The Circuit judge decided at once the legal question, and held, no doubt correctly, that such portion of the patterns as were on the premises at the date of the execution of the mortgage belonged to the defendants, and such portion as was placed there after the execution of the mortgage belonged to the plaintiff. And he submitted to the jury, as the true issue for them to pass upon, what portion of the patterns described in the complaint had been placed there after the execution of the mortgage.

The plaintiff, in his complaint, had claimed all of the patterns in the place at the time mentioned. The charge of the judge, however, as he had the right to do, in deciding the legal question raised, limited the claim to only a portion, and the amount of this portion was the real issue to the jury. How, then, can the verdict be construed to embrace all, when it was admitted that a portion had been withdrawn by the charge of the judge, and only the remainder was involved; and when the jury was instructed by the judge in his charge that it was as to this remainder only, and its value, that they were to inquire?

We do not think that the jury intended by their verdict to declare title in the plaintiff to all the patterns, and inasmuch as the judgment covers all, that the judgment is not in conformity with the verdict and should be vacated, and the execution issued thereunder quashed.

The order below is reversed and the appeal sustained.

McGOWAN, A. J., concurred.

McIVER, A. J., dissenting. Being unable to concur in the conclusion reached by a majority of the court, I propose to state briefly my views of the questions presented by this appeal.

The action was brought to recover possession of certain personal property, and in case a delivery could not be had, then for the value thereof. The complaint, in the first paragraph, alleged that the plaintiff "was and still is the owner of ——— patterns of *the value of five thousand dollars, which goods were then stored on the premises * * * known as Eason's foundry." In the second paragraph the allegation is, that the defendants, on April 24th, 1879, purchased the premises where the said patterns were stored, and on May 11th, 1879, entered into possession of the same and took possession of said patterns, and although demand has been made upon the defendants to deliver said patterns to the plaintiff they have refused so to do, but, on the contrary, still unjustly detain them, to the damage of the plaintiff $5000. These allegations are followed by a demand for judgment, "for the recovery of said patterns, or for the sum of five thousand dollars, the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had." The answer sets up two defences: First. A denial of the allegations in the first paragraph of the complaint, with an admission of all the allegations in the second paragraph, except the allegation that the defendants "unjustly detain the said patterns from the said plaintiff, to his damage five thousand dollars." For a second defence the defendants set up a claim to "the patterns mentioned in the complaint," derived from a sale under a mortgage given by plaintiff to one Hannah Euston. The issues thus presented by the pleadings came on for trial before the Hon. B. C. Pressley and a jury, when the following verdict was rendered: "We find for plaintiff patterns the value of one hundred dollars." Upon this verdict judgment was entered "that the plaintiff recover of the defendants the possession of the personal property described in the complaint, to wit, the patterns which were on the premises * * * known as Eason's foundry, on the 11th day of May, 1879, or one hundred dollars in case a delivery of the said property cannot be had," and an execution issued conforming to the judgment. On the day after the entry of the judgment the defendants, by their counsel, gave notice that they would move before his Honor Judge Thomson to set aside the judgment and quash the execution on the following grounds, to wit:

*204

"1. Because the judgment was entered not in conformity to the verdict in said cause.

"2. Because the judgment was entered up by the clerk of said court without authority of law.

"3. Because the execution on said judgment was issued without authority of law."

*205

*Judge Thomson dismissed the motion, and from his decision this appeal now comes up.

The code (§ 288) provides: "If a different direction be not given by the court the clerk must enter judgment in conformity with the verdict;" and as it appears that no directions were given by the court in this case, I agree with the majority of the court that the real question in this case is, whether the judgment entered is "in conformity with the verdict." It will not be denied that it is generally, if not universally, true that the same amplitude and exactness of phraseology is not to be found in a verdict as in the judgment entered upon it. The fact, therefore, that in this case the judgment gives a more detailed and specific description of the property referred to than is found in the verdict can have but little weight in determining the question. The real inquiry is, does the verdict, properly construed, relate to the same property more particularly described in the judgment? It seems to me that a verdict must be regarded as responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings, and that to determine its scope and effect, it is oftentimes, if not always necessary—certainly permissible—to resort to the pleadings. The object of all pleadings is to shape and define the issues which arise between parties litigant, and when these issues present questions of fact, it is the province of the jury, by their verdict, to decide them. Hence, to ascertain exactly what a verdict does mean, there can be no better resort than to the pleadings. Testing this verdict in this way, it seems to me clear that the only construction which can be given to it is that found in the judgment. What were the issues presented by the pleadings in this case? First. Whether the plaintiff's allegation of ownership of the property described in the complaint was true; for that allegation was distinctly made in the complaint and expressly denied in the answer. Second. What was the value of said property; for the plaintiff alleged, in the first paragraph of the complaint, that the value of the property was $5000, and this was denied in the answer. These, so far as I can see, were the only issues presented by the pleadings, for there was no issue raised by the defendants as to their taking and retaining possession of the patterns. On the contrary, that was expressly admitted and *justified under a claim of right. The second defence set up in the answer did not, in fact, present any new issue, but only gave the real ground upon which the denial of plaintiff's title rested. It is true that the allegation of the complaint is indefinite as to the number of the patterns sued for, but there was no issue raised between the parties as to the number of the patterns—the only dispute being as to the title or ownership of the articles sued for. These being the issues presented by the pleadings, to wit, whether the property sued for belonged to the plaintiff or to the defendants, and what was its value, how ought the verdict to be construed? It certainly has not found the property in question, or any part of it, to be the property of the defendants, and, with equal certainty, it may be said that the verdict does find certain property to be the property of the plaintiff. But what property? Undoubtedly that about which the parties were litigating—that which is claimed in the complaint by the plaintiff and in the answer by the defendants. It will be observed that, while the plaintiff in his complaint claims ——— patterns on the premises referred to, without giving the number which he claims, the defendants likewise set up in their answer a claim to all the patterns on the premises, without giving the number which they claimed, upon the ground that they were all covered by the mortgage under which they bought. There is nothing, therefore, in the pleadings which would suggest to the jury that they were to discriminate, in their verdict, between some of the patterns and others.

*206

It is argued, however, that for the purpose of determining the proper construction of this verdict, it is necessary to consider the charge of Judge Pressley, in which he stated to the jury what were the issues which they were called upon to try; and that this will show that no such construction can be placed upon the verdict in this case as will support the judgment entered by the plaintiff. Conceding, for the sake of argument, that the proper construction of the verdict may be thus tested, I do not see how this test can advance the view contended for by the appellants. As I have stated before, there can be no doubt but that, by their pleading, and doubtless, in their argument, both parties claimed the right to all of the patterns on the premises—the plaintiff *contending that "patterns" were not embraced within the terms "working implements, machinery and tools," used in the mortgage, while the defendants contended that they were. This is obvious from the language used by Judge Pressley in the commencement of his charge: "It is my duty to construe this mortgage under the evidence offered before me, and I do not hesitate to say, from the evidence I have heard and the learned arguments of counsel, that my conclusion is very clear that a pattern used in connection with a foundry establishment is either a working instrument or a tool connected therewith." He therefore instructed the jury that the mortgage did cover the patterns used in connection with the foundry at the time the mortgage was given; but, inasmuch as the mortgage, by its express terms, only covered such articles as were on the premises at the time it was executed, only those patterns which were on the premises at the date of the mortgage passed under the sale for foreclosure to the defendants, while those which had been placed there since were the property of the plaintiff; and after telling the jury that it was for them to decide, from the evidence adduced, what portion of the patterns belonged to the plaintiff and what to the defendants, the judge gave them very clear and explicit directions as to the form of their verdict. It is quite manifest that the jury either disregarded or misunderstood the charge of the judge, for the uncontradicted evidence being that a portion of the patterns were on the premises at the date of the mortgage, while another portion had been placed there subsequently to that date, the jury were bound, under their instructions, to have found only a portion of the patterns as belonging to the plaintiff, designating what portion they so found; but their verdict is generally for the plaintiff, and contains no word indicating an intention to find only a portion of the patterns as belonging to the plaintiff. It is possible that they may have come to the conclusion that the question whether patterns were included within the terms used in the mortgage was a question of fact rather than of law, and, if so, that it was a question for them, not for the court; and they may have concluded from the evidence that the terms used in the mortgage did not embrace patterns. Be that as it may, however, it is quite certain that the jury either ignored or mis*understood the instructions of the judge, and, if so, the remedy was by a motion for a new trial, and not by the motion submitted in this case.

*207

*208

The appellants do not contend that the verdict was too uncertain and indefinite to authorize the entry of any judgment, because, if so, their remedy would have been by motion in arrest of judgment, but their contention is that the only judgment which can be entered on this verdict is a judgment for the amount found to be the value of the property in question. But in the case of Robbins v. Slatterly, MS. No. 712 decision, filed April 15th, 1879, this court has held that in a case of this kind the verdict and the judgment must be in the alternative, and that a judgment for the value of the property only must be set aside. This rule seems to be recognized in Bardin v. Drafts, 10 S. C. 493, and is understood to be in accordance with the decisions in New York. Dwight v. Enos, 9 N. Y. 472; Fitzhugh v. Wiman, 9 N. Y. 563. In the case of Boley v. Griswold, 20 Wall.

486 [22 L. Ed. 375], a somewhat different view is taken, but that case is not sufficient to overrule our own decisions, supported, as they are, by the cases in New York, as well as the true intent and meaning of the code; for a judgment which, in effect, deprives a party of the right to return the property in dispute, and forces him to pay such value as the jury may see fit to put upon it, is not in accordance with what is conceived to be either the spirit or letter of the code. If, therefore, a judgment for the value only could not be entered upon the verdict in this case, then it follows either that the verdict is too indefinite and uncertain to authorize the entry of any judgment, and, if so, a motion in arrest of judgment and not the motion submitted in this case would be the proper remedy, or that the verdict does authorize the entry of a judgment for the property claimed in the complaint, or in case a delivery of it cannot be had for the value as assessed by the jury, and either of these views would be fatal to this appeal.

It is quite true that the verdict in this case is informal and technically insufficient, but as is said in Bardin v. Drafts, supra: "Every reasonable presumption must be in favor of the verdict, and that would render it necessary to construe it as conformable to the requirements of the law where such construction is possi*ble;" and in Boley v. Griswold, Chief Justice Waite says: "In a court of error every presumption is in favor of the validity of the judgment brought under consideration." Looking at the verdict and judgment in this case in that spirit, I can come to no other conclusion than that the verdict must be regarded as finding the issue presented by the pleadings in favor of the plaintiff, and, as such, it authorized the entry of the judgment which is here sought to be set aside.

*209

Again, it is argued that the description of the property in the complaint is insufficient. But it seems to me that the cases of Kimpton v. Nelson, referred to in 8 Bac. Ab., tit. "Replevin," H; Bourn v. Mattaire, 2 Strange 1015; Banks v. Angell, 34 E. C. L. 241, with the other authorities cited in respondent's brief, abundantly show that after avowry such description is sufficient. The defendants here admit that they took and retained possession of the property mentioned in the complaint, and it is now too late to raise the objection that the property is not definitely described. If the defendants regarded the averments of the complaint as too indefinite and imperfect, they should have made a motion before the trial to require the plaintiff to amend by making his averment more definite and complete. Childers v. Verner, 12 S. C. 5, 6. Not having done so, but, on the contrary, having answered admitting the taking and retention of the property sued for, they cannot now be permitted to say that the description of the property sued for is too indefinite to warrant the entry of a judgment for its recovery.

I think, therefore, that the order of the Circuit judge dismissing the motion to set aside the judgment and quash the execution should be affirmed.

Appeal sustained.

---

15 S. C. *210

*(Case No. 1034.)

Ex parte DUCKETT.

(April Term, 1881.)

[1. Criminal Law ⇐1216.]

A prisoner was sentenced to imprisonment "in the state penitentiary at hard labor, for the term of two years from this date, February 27th, 1879;" but, by reason of his appeal, was not transferred from the county jail to the penitentiary until July 31st. Held, that the time for the commencement of the punishment was not of the essence of the sentence, and that the prisoner's term in the penitentiary was for two years from July 31st, 1879.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3310; Dec. Dig. ⇐1216.]

[2. Convicts ⇐10.]

By the terms of this sentence, interpreted in the light of the laws then in force, this convict might be hired out, by the directors of the penitentiary to work on a railroad.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Convicts, Cent. Dig. §§ 19, 20, 22–29, 32; Dec. Dig. ⇐10.]

Original application to this court, heard April 18th, 1881. The case is stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. C. Watts, for petitioners.

Mr. Youmans, Attorney-General, contra.

April 25th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. This was a petition for writ of habeas corpus, representing that the petitioners were illegally imprisoned and restrained of their liberty by Thomas J. Lipscomb, superintendent of the state penitentiary, heard by the Chief Justice and reserved for the determination of the full court on the facts, agreed substantially, as follows:

The petitioners, Henry Duckett and Griffin Duckett, were convicted of grand larceny in the Court of General Sessions for Laurens county, in February, 1879, and Judge Aldrich pronounced the following sentence: "The sentence of the court is that you, Henry Duckett, and you, Griffin Duckett, be each imprisoned in the state penitentiary, at hard labor, for the term of two years from this date, February 27th, 1879."

The petitioners appealed to the Supreme Court, which appeal *was pending until July 28th, 1879, when this court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the judgment of the Circuit Court. The petitioners were in jail at Laurens at the time of their trial, and, pending the appeal, remained there. After the appeal was dismissed, July 31st, 1879, the sheriff of Laurens county delivered said petitioners to Thomas J. Lipscomb, Esq., superintendent of the state penitentiary, who afterwards, to wit, on October 1st, 1879, under an order of the board of directors of the penitentiary, hired them out to work on the Air-Line railroad. The petitioners now claim their discharge on the following grounds:

*211

1. That their term of sentence expired on February 27th, 1881, two years from the date of their sentence, February 27th, 1879.

2. That they were sentenced to two years' hard labor "in the penitentiary," and in hiring them out, the directors transcended their powers.

As to the first ground for discharge. The petitioners were delivered to the superintendent of the penitentiary, July 31st, 1879, under the sentence that they should be "each imprisoned in the state penitentiary, at hard labor, for the term of two years." Two years from the time they reached the penitentiary will not have expired until July 31st, 1881, so that it is clear that the petitioners have not served out the time in the state penitentiary to which they were sentenced.

But in framing the sentence these words were added: "From this date, February 27th, 1879," and it is urged that this being a matter touching the liberty of the citizen, the sentence should be construed literally, and that the two year's imprisonment in the penitentiary must be considered to have commenced at the date of the sentence, February 27th, although the parties were not actually lodged in the penitentiary until July 31st, 1879.

The judgment, though pronounced by the judge, is not his determination, but that of the law, which depends not upon the arbitrary opinion of the judge, but the settled and irreversible principles of justice. The substance of the sentence was that the petitioners should be "imprisoned in the state penitentiary, at hard labor, for the term of two years," and the date of the sen*tence, as also the time when it was directed to be carried into effect, was not of the essence of the sentence, but merely directory. Mr. Bishop lays down the law as follows: "Though the sentence to imprisonment ought properly to specify at what time it is to be carried out, yet time is not of the essence of such a sentence. Therefore, a defendant who had been convicted of an assault, was sentenced to imprisonment for two calendar months, 'from and after the 1st day of November next,' but did not go into prison according to the sentence, and, at a subsequent term, it was decided that the sentence for two months' imprisonment be immediately executed; the proceeding was held to be correct." 1 Bishop on Cr. Proc., § 878; Kelly v. State, 3 Smedes & M. 518; State v. Cockerham, 2 Ired. L. 204. In the case last cited, Judge Gaston, with great clearness said: "The time at which a sentence shall be carried into execution forms no part of the judgment of the court. The judgment is the penalty of the law as declared by the court, while the direction with respect to carrying it into effect is in the nature of an award of execution. In this case the judgment was that the defendant be imprisoned two calendar months, and the words which follow in the record, 'from and after the 1st of November next,' direct the time of executing the judgment. The entry, indeed, would have been more formal, had the judgment and the mandate for carrying it into effect been separate and distinct. But, however informal, it can be understood in conformity to the law as consisting of distinct parts, and, therefore, ought to be so understood."

*212

So, in this case, the sentence was that the petitioners should be "imprisoned in the penitentiary, at hard labor, for the term of two years," while the direction with respect to carrying it into effect is in the nature of a mandate of execution.

This doctrine applies most appropriately to the case at bar. The absence of these parties from the penitentiary after sentence and before July 31st, 1879, was the result of their own act. They cannot say that they were undergoing part of their sentence during that time. They had the right to appeal, and the delay of five months was caused by their exercising their right of appeal to this court for the purpose of arresting the judgment, which had to be pronounced before their appeal could be heard. *State v. Rankin, 3 S. C. 438 [16 Am. Rep. 737]. During the time the appeal was being prosecuted the sentence was practically suspended, for it was proper not to enforce it pending appeal, the result of which might have been to reverse the judgment. The time spent in jail at Laurens, after sentence, cannot be considered as in part execution of the sentence to "imprisonment in the penitentiary." It would have been false imprisonment to have detained them there under that sentence. They were there when they were convicted, and simply remained there awaiting the final determination of their trial, which was not ended until their appeal was dismissed. They did not commence to carry out the sentence until that time, July 28th, 1879, when, for the first time, it was proper to enforce the sentence. The delay was as much their own act as if they had escaped confinement during the intermediate time. In Dolan's case, 101 Mass. 222, the prisoner asked his discharge, although the period of his actual confinement had been less than that for which he was sentenced, by reason of his escape for nearly a year during the term. The court say: "We are of opinion that the sentence of the law is to be satisfied only by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or by some legal authority. The punishment is imprisonment, the period of which is expressed only by the designated length of time. * * * Expiration of time, without imprisonment, is in no sense, an execution of sentence." We do not think the petitioners have served out "in the penitentiary," their full sentence of two years.

*213

As to the second ground for discharge, that the petitioners were sentenced to two years' hard labor "in the penitentiary," and in hiring them out the board of directors transcended their powers. If it were true, as claimed, that the directors of the penitentiary have no right to farm out the convicts, we do not see that the result would be to entitle the prisoners to their discharge. On the contrary, they would be returned at once to the four walls of the penitentiary to serve out the remainder of their sentence. By an act of the general assembly, approved December 23d, 1878, (16 Stat. 727), it is declared "that from and after January 1st, 1879, the directors of the penitentiary, in their discretion, are hereby authorized and instructed to employ in the *institution or hire out all the convicts in that institution, under the regulations in such cases already made and provided for the employment of a portion of the convict labor," &c. We cannot say that this act is unconstitutional, and it was the law on February 27th, 1879, when Judge Aldrich sentenced the petitioners "to be imprisoned in the state penitentiary, at hard labor," &c.

*214

This sentence must be construed with reference to the laws then of force, as to the power of the directors as to convicts. We do not see that the directors have transcended their powers, or placed the petitioners in any condition not allowed by their sentence, interpreted in the light of the laws in force at the time.

The motion for the discharge of the petitioners is refused, and they are remanded to the custody of the superintendent of the penitentiary.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McIVER, A. J., concurred.

---

15 S. C. 214

(Case No. 1036.†)

WALLACE v. FOSTER.

(November Term, 1880.)

[1. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐ 268.]

An assignee, who was also entitled to a beneficial interest under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, deposited with his attorney for safe keeping all papers connected with the assigned estate, and removed into another state; afterwards, upon ex parte proceedings by a creditor of the estate, in the Court of Common Pleas, the assignee was removed from his office and the plaintiff was appointed trustee of the creditors, and, as such trustee, plaintiff brought action upon a sealed note, an asset of the estate, payable to the assignee. Held, that plaintiff had no right to bring action upon the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. §§ 804–839; Dec. Dig. ⇐268.]

[2. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐ 212.]

The order removing the assignee and appointing the trustee was an absolute nullity, and may be so declared in any subsequent proceeding, as the court never acquired jurisdiction of the person of the assignee.

[Ed. Note.—Cited in Cone v. Cone, 61 S. C. 523, 39 S. E. 748.

For other cases, see Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, Cent. Dig. § 702; Dec. Dig. ⇐ 212.]

Before Hudson, J., Lancaster, September, 1880.

*215

*Action commenced November 23d, 1877, by Joseph F. Wallace, trustee for the creditors of J. Leroy Davis against J. H. Foster and J. C. Foster, upon a sealed note, given by defendants December 8th, 1857, for $618.59, payable to L. H. Massey, assignee of J. L. Davis, twelve months after date, with interest payable annually.

The case was referred to J. J. Hemphill, Esq., as special referee for final determination and report. Omitting his statement of facts—which are sufficiently stated in the opinion here—and his conclusions upon matters not considered by this court, his report was as follows:

The defendants contend that the court had no power in an ex parte proceeding to remove Massey and appoint this plaintiff trustee in his stead; the plaintiff contends, that however this may be, that the Court of Common Pleas, being a court of general original jurisdiction, and having appointed this plaintiff trustee, the question of the mode or manner of his appointment cannot be inquired into in this, a collateral action. While the mode or manner in which the judgment of a court is obtained, i. e., the regularity of the proceedings, cannot be attacked collaterally, it is nevertheless true that the power or jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment may be inquired into in any subsequent cause in which the judgment of the first court is a necessary part of the plaintiff's case in the action pending.

The question then is, had the Court of Common Pleas of York county the power to appoint Wallace and remove Massey? The jurisdiction of the court over the subject matter—i. e., its power to remove an assignee and appoint a trustee, has not been questioned; but the defendants contend that the court had no jurisdiction over the person of Massey—he being a non-resident and the proceedings appearing on their face to be ex parte.

†Case No. 1035, Ex parte Dial, will be found in 14 S. C. 584.

The question of the want of power of the court to appoint this plaintiff a trustee in the place of Massey in an ex parte proceeding has been strongly pressed by the defendants, but I think they have not sustained their position. There seems to be no case exactly similar to this in the books, or, at least, I have not been referred to it, nor have I discovered it myself, though a very near approach to it is found in McLaurin v.

*216

Thompson, *Dud. 335. Another case, probably more like the present one, is that of Ex parte Galluchat, 1 Hill's Eq. 148.

These cases seem to me to establish the doctrine that the courts will appoint a trustee for an estate upon the ex parte application of the beneficiaries of the estate in a case where the first trustee had abandoned his trust and left the state. If I have read these cases correctly, then the motion for a non-suit should be overruled; for from the defendants' own witness, Massey, it is established that he had removed from the state, had abandoned his trust and had placed the papers in the hands of an attorney to be held by him until the creditors should appoint an agent to take charge of and administer the estate.

But in addition to the above, the defendants, to sustain their motion, should not only show that the proceedings were in form ex parte, but should go further and show that Massey did not appear in the proceedings, or at least did not assent to the appointment of Wallace. The voluntary appearance of Massey in the proceedings would be as effectual to bind him as if he had been made a defendant and served with a summons; and while we might, in general, presume that in proceedings of this form, there were no defendants, still, this presumption is, in this case, overreached by another one, that I am bound to make, to wit, that all things were done that ought to have been done, and that the proceedings were regular until the contrary be shown by positive, not presumptive, proof.

Massey was examined by the defendants both by commission and personally, and he was not questioned upon nor does he deny that he assented to the proceedings by which plaintiff was made trustee.

I have examined the cases quoted by the defendants' counsel that were accessible, and though the language used in some of the opinions seems broad enough to cover their position, the circumstances of the cases are so different from this one that I do not consider them as direct authorities here.

I find and report as matters of law—

That the plaintiff, Wallace, was properly appointed trustee, and can maintain this action.

*217

*Upon exceptions by defendants to this report, the case came up before the Circuit Court. The presiding judge, upon the matter determined by this court, decreed as follows:

After hearing the pleadings, testimony, report of referee, and very full argument upon the questions raised and presented for consideration, I am constrained to differ with the referee in some of his conclusions.

I think the proceedings by which the assignee, Massey, was removed and a trustee appointed to take charge of the estate, was not only irregular but utterly void, in so far as it attempts to vest in the present plaintiff title in and to said estate.

There is no doubt but that a Court of Equity has full power, under proper proceedings, to remove trustees of all kinds, whether appointed by deed, will or order of court, upon good cause shown and when the exigency requires; and to substitute another instead of the one removed, and to invest him with title to and control over the trust estate. According to the practice in England, so solemn and so important a step was accomplished by bill filed, and a full hearing allowed to all parties in interest, so that the judgment of removal and substitution of the trustee and transfer of the estate became binding upon all parties interested, and who were invariably brought before the court. In South Carolina a less cautious and more objectionable course was at an early day countenanced; and trustees were occasionally removed upon proceedings by petition, and sometimes, though rarely, upon ex parte petitions. Ex parte Galluchat, 1 Hill's Eq. 148; Ex parte Knust, Bail. Eq. 489.

But an examination of the cases will show that our Court of Equity always preferred the proceedings to be, as in England, by bill; and while upholding the authority of this court to act on petition even ex parte, yet in each case it based its action upon the exigency of the estate and the peculiar circumstances of the case. But it is to be observed that our Court of Equity is abolished; and although full equitable jurisdiction is conferred upon the Common Pleas, and its powers are as large as were the powers of the extinct Court of Equity, yet these powers and this jurisdiction are exercised under and regulated by a greatly altered system of pleading and practice.

*218

*We take it that under the code the proceedings in the Common Pleas by which a party is to be divested of his property, and that property transferred to another, is entitled to an action, to be begun by summons, and that the party against whom the remedy is sought, whether resident or non-resident, must be made a party to the action. The note in suit is the property of L. H. Massey—being the proceeds of the sale of property conveyed to him by J. Leroy Davis, upon trust, it is true, but the trusts are coupled with an interest of a very important character, to wit, the right to pay off and discharge debts of Davis for which Massey is personally liable as surety. To remove him from this trust, and to divest him of this property and invest another with all his rights and functions upon an ex parte petition of an alleged creditor of Davis, upon the allegation that Massey is insolvent and has left the state without making him a party thereto, or any one in interest, we think entirely beyond the power of the court, and at variance with the rules of pleading prescribed in the code. The proceeding should be by action, commenced by summons, and to which the assignee, though a non-resident, should be made a party as one absolutely necessary to a determination of the action. We do not think that the proceeding by petition in such cases is any longer recognized by the new pleadings.

In special proceedings and applications for extraordinary remedies—mandamus, quo warranto, habeas corpus, &c.—the proceeding by petition is not irregular, but in all cases other than special proceedings, the action is the only remedy. But even if proceeding by petition be admissible, we think the assignee a necessary party.

In our judgment the plaintiff has no title to this note and no authority to bring the action. The order of court appointing the plaintiff, we deem not merely irregular, but null and void, as is any judgment against one who is not a party to the action. The fact that Massey was examined as a witness in the cause and made no complaint at being removed, does not alter the case. He had no right to complain or to object, not being a party to the proceedings. The present plaintiff has been, in argument, styled a receiver, and it is contended the court can, on ex parte *application, appoint a receiver. But such an officer is only appointed pending action either before or after judgment, and even then rarely without notice to the defendant.

*219

It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the complaint be dismissed, and that the defendants have their costs.

From this decree plaintiff appealed.

Messrs. Allison & Connors and J. F. Hart, for appellant.

Messrs. Ernest Moore and Wylie & Hough, contra.

April 30th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by McIVER, A. J. On February 28th, 1857, J. Leroy Davis made an assignment to L. H. Massey for the benefit of his creditors. The deed of assignment provided that the judgments against Davis should be first paid; next, sundry debts for which Massey was liable as surety for Davis; and lastly, creditors generally. Massey accepted the trust, sold all the property and proceeded with the discharge of his duties as assignee until some time in 1861. After the close of the war Massey became insolvent, and, in 1869, was adjudged a bankrupt, and in 1876 removed to the State of North Carolina, where he has ever since resided. Before leaving the state Massey deposited with his attorney in York county the papers belonging to the assigned estate, including the uncollected assets. In January, 1877, William I. Clawson, claiming to be a creditor of Davis, as assignee of one of the judgments against him, filed an ex parte petition in the Court of Common Pleas for York county, stating, among other things, that the petitioner had frequently applied to Massey to obtain his consent to the collection of the assets, but had been unable to do so, and praying "that the said L. H. Massey may be removed from his trust, and that a suitable person be appointed in his place to take charge of and settle up the said estate." Upon this petition the judge of the Sixth Circuit, within which the county of York is embraced, endorsed the following order: "Upon hearing the petition, and on motion of C. E. Spencer, attorney pro pet., it is ordered that L. H.

*220

Massey be, and he is *hereby removed from the office of assignee of J. Leroy Davis, and that J. F. Wallace, Esq., [the plaintiff herein] be and he is hereby appointed the trustee of the creditors to settle the estate of the said J. Leroy Davis." It not only does not appear that Massey was ever served with any notice of this proceeding, or made a party thereto, either by publication or otherwise, but it is manifest from the frame of the petition, that it was not contemplated that he should be a party, as there is no prayer to that effect, and no demand that he should answer. Under this order the plaintiff, having obtained possession of the uncollected assets of the assigned estate, brings this action on one of the notes under seal, taken at the sale and made payable to L. H. Massey, assignee of J. Leroy Davis or order.

One of the defences set up by the defendants is a denial that the plaintiff is the legal owner and holder of the note sued upon. The only evidence adduced to show plaintiff's title to the note was the ex parte order above referred to removing Massey, the payee of the note, from the office of assignee, and appointing the plaintiff "trustee of the creditors to settle the estate of the said J. Leroy Davis." The Circuit judge holding that this order "was not only irregular but utterly void, in so far as it attempts to vest in the present plaintiff title in and to said estate," sustained this defence, and exception was duly taken. So that the fundamental question raised by this appeal is, whether an assignee can be removed from office and the legal title to the assets of the assigned estate transferred to another by a mere ex parte proceeding, of which the assignee has no notice.

Upon general principles, well recognized and founded in reason as well as supported by the highest authority, it would seem to be clear that an order or judgment which purports to deprive one man of the title to property and vest it in another, is an absolute nullity, unless such order is made or judgment rendered in some action or proceeding to which the person whose title is thus divested has been made a party and has had an opportunity to be heard. The fact that Massey was a trustee can make no difference. He had the legal title and could not be deprived of it by a proceeding to which he was not a party, and of which he does not appear to have had any notice what*ever. But in addition to this he was not a mere naked trustee, for, under the assignment, he was entitled to a beneficial interest, inasmuch as by one of the provisions of the assignment he was authorized to apply the assets to the payment of debts for which he was liable as surety in preference of the general creditors. It would require the strongest and most conclusive authority to induce us to sustain an ex parte order of this character. The cases relied upon for this purpose do not, in our judgment, furnish such authority. In McLaurin v. Thompson, Dud. 335, one McBryde had been appointed administrator of Colin McColl's estate, and upon his removal from the state the Ordinary granted letters of administration to one McIntyre. In a proceeding before the Ordinary for the purpose of obtaining an account of Colin McColl's administration of the estate of Duncan McColl, to which the defendant was a party as surety on the administration bond of Colin McColl, the question was raised whether the appointment of McIntyre was valid without a formal revocation of the letters of administration previously granted to McBryde, and all that the court decided was that the granting of administration to McIntyre was equivalent to a judgment of revocation of the previous grant to McBryde, and, as he was not contesting the new grant of administration, the court would regard it as a revocation. This case, therefore, does not decide the question now under consideration. The next case relied upon is Ex parte Galluchat, 1 Hill's Eq. 150. In that case an executor, having partially administered the trusts imposed upon him by the will, removed from the state, and having requested that he should be released from his office as trustee, the court, upon the ex parte application of the cestui que trust, appointed a receiver and discharged the trustee. It is very clear that this case furnishes no authority for the proposition contended for here. No question was raised as to the want of notice to the trustee, and in fact could not be, as the proceedings were instituted at his request. So, too, in the case Ex parte Knust, Bail Eq. 489, the point here made did not and could not arise, for there the trustee not only had notice but resisted the application.

*221

It is argued, however, that even conceding that the order removing Massey from the office of assignee and appointing the plaintiff *trustee was erroneously granted, the defendants in this case cannot take advantage of it, and that such order must stand until it is vacated by a proper proceeding for that purpose. If the objection to the order was merely a want of regularity in granting it, then, possibly, there might be good ground for this position. But where the order is absolutely void the rule is different. Where an order has been passed or a judgment rendered by a court in a case in which the court has no jurisdiction either of the subject matter or of the parties, such order or judgment is an absolute nullity, and may be so declared in any subsequent proceeding. In this case there is no doubt but that the court had jurisdiction of the subject matter, but that is not sufficient, it must also have acquired jurisdiction over the person to be affected by the order in question. "Jurisdiction over the person is obtained by service of process, or in some other manner authorized by law, as by the voluntary appearance of a party during the progress of a cause." Freem. on Judg., § 119. In this case the record not only fails to show that the court had acquired jurisdiction over the person affected by the order by service of process or otherwise, but it does not even purport to make any one a party, being strictly an ex parte proceeding; and there is, therefore, no room for the presumption that the court had, in some way, either by voluntary appearance or otherwise, acquired jurisdiction over the person whose legal rights were sought to be divested. The order was manifestly granted under the theory that it was not necessary that Massey should be made a party, and we cannot presume that any steps whatever were taken to bring him under the jurisdiction of the court.

*222

The order removing Massey and appointing the plaintiff cannot be sustained, as has been argued here, under Section 3 of Chapter XCVII., General Statutes, page 477. That section only provides for the appointment of an agent by the creditors in case the assignee neglects or refuses to assemble the creditors within ten days after the execution of the deed of assignment for that purpose, and that the agent so appointed may apply to the judge of the Court of Common Pleas for an order authorizing him to take into his possession the property assigned, and sell or dispose of the same according to the terms of the deed of assignment. But *that does not apply to this case. There is no pretence that the plaintiff was ever appointed by the creditors as their agent, nor is there any evidence whatever that the assignee failed to call the creditors together within ten days after the execution of the deed of assignment. On the contrary, the evidence is that Massey did call a meeting of creditors before the sale, though it is not stated what was the purpose of such meeting. In addition to this we are not prepared to say that a judge would be justified in granting such an order without notice to the assignee and an opportunity afforded him to be heard.

*223

The plaintiff's title to the note resting solely upon the ex parte order above referred to, which, we think, was an absolute nullity, his right to bring this action cannot be sustained.

Under this view of the case the other questions suggested by this appeal cannot arise and need not, therefore, be considered. Indeed it would, perhaps, be improper now to do so, for if, as we have seen, the plaintiff has no right to bring this action, any adjudication of those questions now would not bind the legal owner of the note, who is not a party to this case, and his rights ought not to be passed upon until he has the opportunity to be heard.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

SIMPSON, C. J., and McGOWAN, A. J., concurred

---

15 S. C. *224

*(Case No. 1037.)

LOST BONDS CASE.† GIBBES v. GREENVILLE AND COLUMBIA RAILROAD COMPANY. STATE ex relatione ATTORNEY-GENERAL, v. SAME.

(November Term, 1880.)

[Compromise and Settlement ⟸17.]

Certain persons holding ten first mortgage bonds and thirty-seven non-mortgage bonds of a railroad corporation, all of which were alleged to have been destroyed, but there was difficulty in establishing the loss, made, through their attorney, with the corporation, an agreement by which, in settlement of their claims, they received interest-fund bonds to the amount of $8600 for their first mortgage bonds and state guaranteed bonds to the amount of $16,000, and interest-fund bonds for $6725 for their non-mortgage bonds; and upon such bonds they collected interest for four years. The corporation afterwards became insolvent, and, upon sale, realized enough to pay its first mortgage and state guaranteed bonds in full, but the non-mortgage and interest-fund bonds proved to be worthless. These parties, retaining their state guaranteed bonds, offered to return their interest-fund bonds of $8600, and to establish their ten lost first mortgage bonds, claiming the lien of the first mortgage, and that the substituted bonds were ultra vires. This court concurred with referee and Circuit judge, in holding that the intention of the settlement was payment and not substitution, and, for that reason, and because it was a compromise of a doubtful right, made with full knowledge of the facts, and an arrangement which was a unity, refused to permit the petitioners to establish the ten lost bonds, or to claim for the substituted bonds the lien of the first mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. ⟸17.]

[This case is also cited in Whaley v. Gaillard, 21 S. C. 562, and distinguished therefrom.]

Before Kershaw, J., Richland, June, 1880.

It will not be necessary to repeat the facts which are set forth in the opinion, but it will not be amiss to state some of the matters more fully.

*225

*Jacob Burriss, as administrator of Milford Burriss, brought suit against the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company for a recovery upon thirty-two lost bonds, of which four were first mortgage, the others non-mortgage. Judge Orr, by decree of February, 1872, gave judgment upon three of the non-mortgage bonds, but dismissed the action as to the others, without prejudice to plaintiff's right to sue thereon thereafter, stating that the circumstances to prove their destruction were strong, but not sufficient fully to establish it. In April, 1873, J. P. Reed wrote to W. J. Magrath, president of the railroad, in relation to the claim of Burriss, and cited parts of Judge Orr's decree, and, as attorney for Burriss, and also for Dr. B. F. Brown and one Daniel Brown, who owned several bonds, suggested negotiations for an arrangement by which these lost bonds might be funded on the same terms as if the papers were produced, stating that, in his judgment, the ownership, identity and loss of these bonds could now be satisfactorily established. No further correspondence appears in the brief, until the agreement of April 29th, 1874, which is copied in the opinion. Soon afterwards the treasurer wrote as follows:

Columbia, S. C., May 6th, 1874.

J. P. Reed, Esq., Anderson, S. C.:

Dear Sir: We hand herewith bonds for account of the following named persons in settlement of claims of the respective parties, as per statements accompanying, which accord with the agreement of the 29th ultimo:

†There were so many appeals in the cases of Gibbes v. Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company and the State, ex relatione the Attorney-General, against the same defendant, four of which appear in this volume, that, for the sake of distinction, I have given to them the nick-names by which they were designated at the bar.—REPORTER.

For account of Jacob Burriss, administrator, interest fund bonds		$ 5,200
For account of Jacob Burris, administrator, guaranteed bonds	$11,000
For account of Jacob Burris, administrator, I. F. bonds	4,625	15,625
For account of Benjamin F. Brown, I. F. bonds		3,400
*226
*For account of Benjamin F. Brown, guaranteed bonds	$ 5,000
For account of Benjamin F. Brown, I. F. bonds	2,100	$ 7,100

Please send receipt for same.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. H. Manson,

For G. & C. R. R. Co.

Received May 12th, 1874, from the G. & C. R. R. Co., the bonds named herein.

Reed & Brown,

Per J. P. Reed.

In the above statement, the $5200 were for six first mortgage bonds, $3000, and interest for ten years and six months at seven per cent., $2200; and the $3400 were for four first mortgage bonds, $2000, and interest $1400; the other figures represent amounts due on non-mortgage bonds. The interest fund bonds of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company were issued in July, 1873, and their payment guaranteed by the South Carolina Railroad Company, a connecting line, and the owner of a majority of the stock in the Greenville road. In June, 1872, the action by Gibbes and the State, ex rel. the attorney, had been commenced, and an order was then passed, declaring that the property of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company should continue in the possession of its president and directors, under the order of the court, and subject to its control; and creditors were called in. Burriss and Brown drew interest on their new bonds from January, 1873, to July, 1877.

The claim of Burriss and Brown was presented, and the first reference was held in March, 1880. In April, 1880, the road was sold.

Mr. J. S. Muller, for appellants.

Mr. James Conner, contra.

*227

*April 30th, 1881. The opinion of the court was delivered by

McGOWAN, A. J. In the cases above stated the court passed an order calling in those claiming to be creditors of the defendant corporation to present and prove their demands.

Under this call it appeared that one Milford Burriss owned, among other bonds of a different class, six first mortgage bonds of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company, $500 each, viz., Nos. 904, 920, 921, 924, 925 and 985, and, also, that one Benjamin F. Brown owned four bonds of the same class, viz., Nos. 952, 1424, 1556 and 1557, all of which bonds were destroyed at Anderson Court House by the federal army, about the close of the late war (1865), and the claim was made that said lost bonds should be established as if they had been produced and proved.

The claim was resisted, and the following facts appeared: In 1873 J. P. Reed, Esq., as attorney of the parties, B. F. Brown and the administrator of Milford Burriss, deceased, wrote to W. J. Magrath, president of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company, upon the subject of these lost bonds, saying: "I beg that you will consider the matter and be prepared to negotiate with me for these arrangements without further controversy. I have full authority in the premises, and am prepared to do what is right."

To this letter the president replied, submitting propositions which became the basis of settlement, as follows:

"City of Columbia, S. C.

"In order to settle the claim of Jacob Burriss, as administrator of Milford Burriss, Benjamin F. Brown and Daniel Brown, for lost bonds of the Greenville and Columbia Railroad Company, and as a basis of settlement, it is agreed as follows, to wit:

"1. That for the first mortgage bonds, ten in number, the company will issue the new bonds which are being issued in funding the past-due interest according to the plan recommended by the bondholders' committee, for the entire sum of the principal and interest up to the 1st day of January last inclusive.

"2. For the non-mortgage bonds, there being thirty-seven in number, the company will deliver its bonds, guaranteed by the *state, issued during President Hammett's administration, for the principal sum, dollar for dollar, and for the interest, to be counted from the 1st day of January, 1868, to the 1st day of January, 1874; it will deliver the new bonds hereinbefore mentioned as being issued for funding the past-due interest."

*228

This plan of settlement was accepted. The bonds described were delivered to Mr. Reed as attorney of the parties, who gave the following receipt:

"Received, May 12th, 1874, from G. & C. R. R. Company, the bonds named herein." [Giving the numbers and dates.]

"Reed & Brown."

The parties received the interest on the new bonds for several years, but, under the call aforesaid, produced the new bonds which had been issued in settlement of the ten first mortgage bonds before the master, and offered to surrender them, and claimed the right to prove their lost first mortgage bonds, in settlement of which these had been received.

The company resisted the claim, and insisted that the settlement in April, 1874, included non-mortgage as well as first mortgage bonds lost or destroyed; that the thirty-seven non-mortgage bonds were utterly worthless, for which the claimants received bonds guaranteed by the state, now worth par, and that they cannot claim the benefit of part of the settlement and repudiate the remainder of it; that the settlement was an entirety, accepted by the parties and final. The issues were referred to the master, N. B. Barnwell, Esq., who took the testimony, and held that the claimants "are not now entitled to renounce their position of parties claiming to have lost their first mortgage bonds; and as there are no new facts developed of which they cannot be presumed to have had full knowledge at the time of their compromise, and they had the advice and assistance of learned counsel in the matter; and, further, as for several years they regularly received the interest on their new bonds, they have no equitable ground on which to claim relief from their bargain; and, moreover, as I am of the opinion, the bonds they hold are, though not secured by mortgage, valid obligations of the corporation, I *see no ground whatever for now making a new and different arrangement from the one they made for themselves."

*229

The cause was heard by Judge Kershaw, who confirmed the master's report, and from his decree the appeal comes to this court upon the following exceptions:

"1. Because the master erred in finding that Jacob Burriss, the former administrator of Milford Burriss, received the said funded interest bonds Nos. 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, each for $500; Nos. 206 and 255, each for $100, in full satisfaction of the claim of his said intestate, Milford Burriss, deceased, against the said corporation under his lost first mortgage bonds, Nos. 904, 920, 921, 924, 925, 985.

"2. Because the master should have found that the said funded interest bonds were received merely as a substitute for the said lost first mortgage bonds; that the estate of the said Milford Burriss has never lost or relinquished its interest in the first mortgage of the said company's railroad as security for the debt due the said estate by the said company, and that John W. Daniels, the present administrator, is now entitled to have the said debt paid out of the proceeds of the said first mortgage.

"3. Because the master erred in not finding that the said funded interest bonds in the hands of the administrator of said estate were void and of no legal value as obligations of the said corporation.

"4. Because the master erred in not finding that the guaranty of the South Carolina Railroad Company, purporting to be endorsed upon the said funded interest bonds, was void and of no legal value.

"5. Because the master erred in finding that the said John W. Daniels, administrator of Milford Burriss, was not entitled to surrender the said funded interest bonds and be restored to his rights and the rights of his intestate under the said lost first mortgage bonds and the said first mortgage.

"6. Because the said master erred in not finding that the arrangement between the said corporation and Jacob Burriss, former administrator of Milford Burriss, ought to be rescinded and the parties restored to their former rights and conditions.

"7. Because the said master erred in not finding that Jacob *Burriss, administrator of Milford Burriss, had no right or power to make such a settlement of a debt due his intestate's estate, and that such settlement ought therefore to be rescinded and the parties remitted to their former rights and conditions."

*230

It is insisted that the new bonds received in the settlement made by the claimants with the defendant corporation did not amount to payment or satisfaction of the lost first mortgage bonds, but were merely substituted for those bonds; and that the first mortgage covers and secures the evidence of the indebtedness substituted in the place of those—the lost bonds—for which they were substituted. If the question were substitution or payment, that was a matter of intention and made an issue of fact. The referee decided that question against the claimants, and the Circuit judge concurred with the referee. In case of such concurrence, this court, by a well-established practice, will not reverse the finding except "on clear or overbearing evidence." Reporter's note, 12 S. C. 612. We agree with the Circuit judge that "the testimony well warrants the finding of the fact of payment. The proposal was made to deliver the new bonds for the first mortgage bonds in order to 'settle' the claims. The new bonds were accepted 'in settlement' of claims of the respective parties. Settlement of a debt or claim is payment, according to Bouvier, as well as in common parlance."

But the facts of the case make something more than a simple question of substitution or satisfaction. The idea of substitution is excluded by the fact that the mortgage was executed to secure certain bonds, particularly described and numbered, and the bonds now in possession of the claimants and proposed as substitutes for those originally secured by the mortgage are not mortgage bonds at all, but funded interest bonds of a particular issue, and secured, not by mortgage, but by the guaranty of the South Carolina Railroad Company. The first mortgage cannot reasonably be made to cover and secure such bonds. The claim made is really not to substitute the new bonds for the lost mortgage bonds, but to vacate the agreement altogether on the ground of mistake, and to set up now, as proved, not the new bonds as substitutes but the identical old lost mortgage bonds.

*231

